J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

Frequently we run onto an article that was written by a man who knows what he is talking about and who has the nerve to get right out in the open and tell it. We saw such an article written by D. S. Lawler, director of publicity and advertising for the Fox Midwest Theatres of Kansas City. In this article Mr. Lawler replies to the Chicago theatremen who are claiming that the screen is not receiving proper publicity.

If there is anything, outside of radio publicity, that is receiving its share of publicity it is the screen. Here in this little cow town there are three important places carrying screen publicity and the greater part of their magazine racks are filled with "Fan" magazines that appeal, very largely, to the Dizzy Lizzies and the Hairoil Charlies, which give us "the lowdown" on our favorite stars and an insight into their private lives, to which the public has come to apply Ripley's slogan of "Believe It or Not" and to which they have arrived at the "Not" end of the slogan.

We turn on the radio and we get a gasoline or face powder program and we note that our favorite star is appearing on the program with a jazz orchestra and a lovesong crooner, and immediately we breathe a violent cuss and turn the radio off and light another cigar.

Mr. Lawler said, among other good things, "Songs from pictures are plugged over the air by dance bands from hell to breakfast. Everything from bellyache medicine to Rolls-Royce cars is endorsed by this or that film celebrity." Mr. Lawler might have gone on and said that the fan magazines and radio broadcasts carried everything from ballyhoo to bellyache which had any connection with the screen.

Coming, as this does, from one of the cornhusker boys, it probably won't meet with 100 per cent endorsment from the boys carrying the bass drum in the fan magazine. However, as the Dutchman said "It macht nicht aus" to us. If you haven't read Mr. Lawler's article you better get the December 28th issue of the HERALD and turn to page 73 and read it; it will be much more interesting than this could be to anybody.

A Mouthful

Mr. Lawler infers in his article that when they do away with the glamour that surrounds the screen and screen players they largely do away with the public's interest in the cinema. Had Mr. Lawler swallowed a bullfrog he couldn't have coughed up a bigger mouthful, and some day the producers will come to realize that.

Had we the ability to express our convictions as Mr. Lawler did his, it would be necessary for the HERALD to put this in the refrigerator for safe keeping, but as it is, it probably will be placed in the wastebasket.

Anyhow, when we note that "Rawhide Rosie" the "Screen Idol" and indorsed a certain face lotion for the complexion, it makes us wonder why people still use cold water, and if the Chicago boys still think they are not getting enough screen publicity they should induce some of the dealers to put in a rack of fan magazines in the lobby.

We turned on the radio a while ago and we heard an orchestra playing what was announced, as a musical selection, and we were reminded of Bill Smith's calf pen. To us, music that doesn't have harmony, and what you might call "a tune", isn't music at all. We can hear the boiler factory every time we drive down by the stock yards. Then we heard someone singing an aria—whatever that is—it seemed a pity that a good hog caller should waste his talents in that way.

We trust that the boys around the state won't be disappointed that we didn't call on them when they remember that the whole state has a blanket of snow on top of a coating of ice which makes travel very hazzerdous, and we are not such a good driver. Be patient, boys, "Wait till the sun shines Nellie, and the clouds go drifting by", then we hope to go and call on you.

A report in the press says that there is to be a Russian city built out in Hollywood, which inclines us to wonder if Hollywood is going Soviet. We'll bet our skyoodle pup that if they attempt to establish a Stalin colony out there, Hollywood will get sore about it.

We hope that all of you exhibitors who made New Year's resolutions have stuck to them better than we have. We made three brand new resolutions and have broken those and three old ones already.

A Welcome Crowd

Last night we went to the Moon theatre and saw two pictures, "Thunder Mountain" and "Pursuit", two very worthwhile pictures for a week end show. When we came out of a packed house it took us at least five minutes to worm our way through a crowded foyer to the cloak room to get our mackinaw and silk hat, although we didn't have any silk hat (Jevver see anybody wearing a mackinaw and silk hat?) and when we finally got on the street we thought we were at the Rose Bowl game. The business that the Moon was enjoying was evidence that the public mind still turns to the movies.

The last meal brought us two letters from exhibitors, Walter Hohlfeld of Greenleaf, Kansas, and W. R. Pickard of Faith, South Dakota, enclosing checks and asking us to have their subscriptions to the HERALD renewed for them. Thanks, boys, we'll do it. That's part of our business. It is very satisfying to know that exhibitors can't very well get along without the HERALD, for "It covers the field like an April shower".

A fellow said to us the other day, "Say Colonel, I expect that I am going to get into a lot of trouble", and we said "Why, What's the matter now"? And he said, "Well, a government agent said to me a few days ago that I would have to reduce the number of acres of wheat on my farm by one-fourth, and I told him I wouldn't do it," and he wanted to know why, and I told him because I didn't have any farm. Then we replied to him, "Oh well, don't let that worry you, Charlie, for probably that agent hadn't finished high school yet".

His case reminded us of the colored brother who was continually requesting his pastor for some kind of a donation until the pastor finally got tired of it and wrote him and told him not to send him any more requests. To which the colored brother replied—

Dear Pastor—

Dis haint no request, dis am a fact, Ah haint got no pants.

The Moon is playing the Marx Brothers in "A Night at the Opera" and the main street of this metropolitan cow town is so full of cars it is hard to find a parking place, notwithstanding the streets are covered with ice and snow, which indicates one of two things, either people went to see a good show or else they have run out of coal at home, maybe both.

If any of you exhibitors want to trade for a "Shelterbelt" we've got one we will trade for a one-handled wheelbarrow, and if it has two handles, we'll throw in six blue pelicans and a lovesong crooner. This snow and ice is just terrible. Doggone the doggone luck anyhow.

"ROSE MARIE I LOVE YOU!"

BOX-OFFICE SWEETHEARTS! JEANETTE MacDONALD and NELSON EDDY!

There were cheers in the M-G-M Home Office Projection Room at the conclusion of the "Rose Marie" screening this week. We knew from Coast reviews and word-of-mouth that another great M-G-M hit was on the way. We sincerely believe it is even greater than "Naughty Marietta," the triumph that introduced MacDonald-Eddy, the screen's greatest singing sweethearts. And now as "Rose Marie" leaps into the box-office headlines we lift our hats to its stars, its director, W. S. Van Dyke, and its producer, Hunt Stromberg. Together they made "Naughty Marietta." And now they have repeated! And the M-G-M torrent of hits rolls merrily on!

POLITICS IN NEWSREELS

THE curse of the word is upon the newsreels in the current protests, made particularly articulate by the resolutions of Pennsylvania exhibitors, against the presentation of material bearing on political issues.

No such problem importantly arose in the pre-sound era when the newsreels were limited to pictures of what politicians looked like, with scant attention to what they had to say. And there were plenty of pictures of politicians, usually made up as statesmen. It is to be remembered that the late President Warren G. Harding in his days of candidacy, ably advised by Mr. Will H. Hays, made himself remarkably available, on the side porch, to the newsreel cameramen, and was the first candidate who knew what screen publicity was. President Woodrow Wilson's kindest comment on the newsreel was "I do not walk like that."

The resentments that arise from political matters on the screen have their origin in what the microphone brings to the theatre, not the camera.

The newsreel, it would seem, could be on surer ground of broad public interest by devoting its footage to showing persons eminent in the political news without at the same time affording them a rostrum.

By the printed page and the radio the public knows what the politicians have to say before they become important enough to be pictorial subjects. There is no necessity or service in having them say it again while being photographed.

It is clear enough that the motion picture audience seeks entertainment, and that, being of the great careless commonality, it is wary and resentful of the slightest suggestion that it is to be told anything about anything. It ought not to be necessary to set this down in 1936, but it is an axiom of showmanship that the customer is never properly and profitably to be called upon consciously to think. He just wants to feel and anything else is a waste of effort, destructive of patronage. Shirley Temple is not the Number One box-office star of the industry because she carries any message.

RUDYARD KIPLING

MR. RUDYARD KIPLING, dying in the same week as his King, has been committed to the twilighted peace of the poets' corner in Westminster, and time has come to consider a moment the somewhat curious status of the author with respect to the screen. So far, despite Mr. Kipling's tremendous world fame, he has come into little significant in the way of motion picture interpretation. The idea now occurs that those patriots of Wardour street, who have been a shade resentful of America's attentions to various British classics, might now find occasion to consider again the great treasure trove of Kipling material, which would seem to promise large international, world market, possibilities.

An early effort, marked by only mild success, was made by the American Pathe company with "Without Benefit of Clergy" and "The Light That Failed" in the early 1920's. Mr. Kipling was so pleased with Pathe's advertising that he wrote a letter to Mr. P. A. Parsons about it, but it is not recorded that he said quite as much for the art of the screen. Also for a while, rather more recently, Miss Maude Adams considered a project to produce "Kim," that being in some way related to her experiments in color photography of which much was heard and little seen. Hollywood production announcements have recently included the titles of "Gunga Din" and "Captains Courageous." Meanwhile Gaumont-British has "Soldiers Three" in the making, with the exteriors already completed in India. This may all promise a period of Kipling drama and an awakening of the audience of the modern screen to an enthusiasm kindred to that which swept the readers back at the turn of the century, in days when reading was a major entertainment.

Strangely there has indeed been a conveyance to the screen of that which was essentially Kipling and Kipling's India in the Hollywood story, done there under another author's title, "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," with marked success. There was directly nothing of Kipling in it, but the impress of his works was deep upon it.

HISTORY

MISS MOLLIE MERRICK, who writes about the motion picture from Hollywood for an important national syndicate, was on the air the other night with some historical notes, in the course of which she informed the radio world that the first motion pictures to be made in Hollywood were by Mr. Cecil B. DeMille and his associates in the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. Miss Merrick was in error by some five years. In Hollywood today she might interview William N. Selig about his activities in those parts in 1907 and she might look into the records concernng the period when Mr. Al Christie went to work in Hollywood. Let's get the record straight.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

U. S. Drops Case

The Government's campaign to obtain relief for motion picture exhibitors claiming oppression by the large interests failed for the second time Wednesday when Judge Joseph West Molyneaux, on the Government's motion, dismissed the equity action in its fourth week in the federal district court in St. Louis.

The door was left open for a retrial, if the Government should elect to continue its move against Warners, Paramount and RKO and company officials on charges of alleged conspiracy complained of by the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres.

From Washington came word that the Department of Justice was planning a new action.

The story begins on page 13.

87,300 Theatres

Motion picture theatres throughout the world now total some 87,300, of which 51,700 are wired, reports the United States Government. Europe leads all other geographical divisions with 60,150 theatres; the United States has 15,378; Far East, 5,185; Central and Latin America, 5,044; Canada, 905; and Africa and the Near East, 637.

There were 27,000 more theatres at the end of 1935 than in 1934, and 11,000 more wired theatres. A statistical survey of the world's motion picture theatres in 1935, compared with the three previous years, starts on page 30.

Mexican Peace

by JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

The four months strike by employees in Mexico City against eight American distributors, which started September 27, has ended. The settlement finally restores to Mexican exhibitors the sorely needed better grade American product, which has been completely shut off since the strike began. Immediately the distributors declared they would have an ample supply of pictures ready this week.

By the terms of the settlement, the distributors agree to meet the strikers' demand for a 25 per cent wage increase, effective last Monday, and to pay the strikers 80 per cent of their wages for the time they were out. Some $18,000 is due, half of it to be paid on the day of the strike settlement and the remainder in three equal monthly installments. A payment of $1,500 was made yesterday as "strike costs." Distributors are forbidden to create employes' unions and they must recognize the Cinematographic Employes' Union as the sole labor organization.

The settlement followed a long series of conferences under Government supervision. It is understood the settlement will help to straighten out the controversy on import duties and income taxes between the distributors and the Government.

To RKO

All Reliance pictures after "The Last of the Mohicans" will be released by RKO instead of by United Artists, it was stated in Hollywood late last week after the closing of a deal by Harry M. Goetz, president, and Edward Small, vice-president of Reliance, and RKO officials.

In the future all production of Reliance pictures will be done at the RKO Radio studio, where Mr. Small will become an associate producer as well as handle his own pictures. Among the new Reliance films to be made at Radio are Robert Donat in "The Robber Barons," "Gunga Din," "Son of Monte Cristo" and a series of Jack Oakie starring vehicles.

Goodwill

Quietly the industry has been building up goodwill for the motion picture as an institution by placing at the disposal of educational, religious and sociological groups a series of short subjects to aid in raising the character of American youth. These films, excerpts culled from outstanding feature productions, are distributed gratis and already have reached educational screens in 24 states, immediate plans calling for expansion to embrace the rest of the country.

Some 21 well known pictures have been so treated to date, the abbreviated forms reaching out, through eight central distribution points, to some 123 organizations of all kinds in the field, which today are using 46 program units for 739 regular weekly discussions. The plan in detail, its aims and accomplishments and the reactions brought thereby both to the box office and the field it is serving are outlined on page 15.

Harley Director

Francis L. Harley has been appointed managing director for Twentieth Century-Fox in London by Walter J. Hutchinson, foreign manager of the company. The appointment follows conferences in Paris, where Mr. Harley has been managing director since last April. The new appointment is effective February 17.

Mr. Harley was born in North Wales and graduated from the University of Pennsylvania. He served in the war and joined Fox in 1926 as a salesman under Mr. Hutchinson in London. He was successively assistant to the managing director at Paris, Near East manager at Athens and managing director in Brazil before his Paris appointment.

Probes Ahead

Motion picture company attorneys in New York heard this week that an investigation of the score charge and music seat tax would be undertaken by a Congressional committee later this session. An inquiry into copyrights involved in the motion picture business has been announced by the House Patents Committee.

Action on the Duffy bill also is expected at the present session, and the MPTOA learned that the Government's suit to declare ASCAP an illegal monopoly would be resumed "in the near future."

Meanwhile Warners continue to bring infringement actions against unlicensed radio stations, 16 such suits having been filed by this week. The story is on page 22.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Duals' Fate

Double bills, dormant for months as a subject of industry controversy, took on new life this week when large distributors decided to extend their fight for the right to effect a ban by contract to the United States Supreme Court.

This caused Carl Laemmle to call on all companies to effect a truce. He suggested they admit that they have been licked in the courts.

The MPTOA considers the defeat of the distributors in the Perelman case to be a setback for all owners, inasmuch as it prevents the large companies from outlawing the practice by anti-dual clauses in contracts.

The double bill situation as it stands in its new form, together with the complete text of the important Perelman decision by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, are told beginning on pages 23 and 36.

U.S. Censorship

Theatre and Washington circles were agitated this week over the issue of Government censorship, raised in the federal theatre project in New York.

Exhibitor Elections

Lewen Pizor was re-elected president of the Philadelphia MPTO at a meeting attended by 75 exhibitors representing 190 independents and 18 affiliates.

Plans to merge the MPTO with IEPA were quashed by unanimous vote. Members also went on record as opposing triple featuring and the inclusion of political propaganda as a part of newsreels.

At the meeting the following officers were elected in addition to Mr. Pizor: Mike H. Egnal, A. R. Boyd, George T. Gravenstine, vice-presidents; George P. Aarons, secretary; Al Fisher, treasurer.

The board of managers includes: Abe Sablosky, Ed Jefferies, Ted Schlanger, Norman Lewis, Joseph Schwartz, Abe Rooner, John Monroe, Jake Fox, Ben Amsterdam, J. F. Corbett, Oscar Steifel, Louis Felt, William Hassner, Herman Coane, Max Korr, E. M. Connelly, Luke Farrell, Nate Sablosky, Luke Ring, Sam Kinto and Ben Bache.

Nominees who are to be voted upon at the annual election of the Connecticut MPTO February 4 are: President, Arthur H. Lockwood, Adolph G. Johnson, Harry L. Lavietes and Peter Parokas; vice-president, Adolph G. Johnson, Lawrence O'Neill, Ralph Pasho and Maurice Shulman; treasurer, Edwin S. Raffile; secretary, Edward G. Levy and Joseph Shulman.

Maurice Fleischman is expected to be the candidate to succeed Harry Brandt as president of the New York Independent Theatre Owners. Mr. Brandt has definitely announced his retirement from the post, but will continue activity in the organization.

Nominations will be made February 27th. Mr. Fleischman has been one of the most active members in the ITOA under Mr. Brandt. He operates a number of theatres in Brooklyn.

Option Extended

Carl Laemmle announced this week that an extension of six weeks on the option granted to Standard Capital Company, headed by J. Cheever Cowdin, and Charles R. Rogers to allow them the necessary time to complete their investigation and examination of Universal.

It is understood that the contemplated loan of $2,000,000 from British capital is not forthcoming because the latter wanted to be partners in the company instead of accepting debentures for the loan. Mr. Cowdin is currently in New York negotiating for a loan of the same amount.

Universal is reported as financially able to finish the present crop of pictures and to put three in work in February. Mr. Rogers is making his headquarters at Universal pending the close of the negotiations.

AMPA Approves

Plans for the presentation of annual awards to men in the advertising, publicity and exploitation departments of various home offices in New York for the best results as decided upon by a special committee were formally adopted last week at the regular weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at Jack Dempsey's Restaurant off Broadway.

The plans adopted, however, will in no way conflict with the annual Quigley awards which are limited to theatre personnel. It was further pointed out at the meeting that the Ampa awards will center about the importance of merchandising pictures. The first prizes will cover the work done for the year ending December 31, 1935.

Independent companies as well as major ones are to be embraced in the consideration of the awards.

Soviet Mission

In advance of large-scale orders to be placed here for motion picture studio and theatre euipment, three film engineers attached to the All-Union Motion Picture Trust of Soviet Russia are in New York to study American motion picture technic.

They are Gregory Irsky, Sergei Soloviev and Alexander Kalishkin, from Moscow. With Vladimir I. Verlinsky, president of Amkino Corporation, the Soviet film liaison organization here, they will confer with American manufacturers and technicians, and later may go to Hollywood.

While the Soviet film industry has been increasing its equipment purchases in this country, the present mission probably will pave the way for still larger orders, said Amkino. The purchases will be made on the basis of the delegation's report.

The delegation particularly will observe laboratory equipment and processes as well as recording and projection apparatus, and will gather ideas on improved methods.

Word came from Moscow this week that a 4,000-seat theatre, the largest in the Union, will be constructed there, incorporating the most modern design.

The second Soviet cinema festival, scheduled for next spring in Moscow, has been postponed until 1937.

Nathan Vidaver

Nathan Vidaver of the law firm of Vidaver, Loria and Martinson of New York, died late last week at his home in Pelham, N. Y., of a heart attack. He was born in Boston 64 years ago. Surviving are the widow, Mrs. Nellie Ruth Vidaver; a daughter, Mrs. Robert C. Buttolphe; a brother, Dr. Maxwell Vidaver, and five sisters.

In 1905 Mr. Vidaver was a candidate for the supreme court bench on the Murphy-Hearst fusion ticket and in 1907 the Independence League-Republican forces nominated him for general sessions. Early in 1908, as a Special Deputy Attorney General of the State, he prosecuted the Kissena Park investigation before the Queens County Grand Jury.

In later years Mr. Vidaver did not take part in politics or hold public office, but he continued to practice law, specializing to a large extent in theatrical cases. He had been, at various times, attorney for the World Film Corporation, the Thomas H. Ince Corporation, William A. Brady, David Belasco, Oscar Hammerstein and David Warfield. He also represented the photographers at the hearings in Washington during the formation of the motion picture code under the National Recovery Administration.

U. S. DROPS ST. LOUIS SUIT BUT PLANS NEW ACTION

Prosecutor Charges That 'Great Generic Conspiracy' Among Distributors Will Require Calling of Many More Witnesses

The Government's second attempt since last fall to declare a conspiracy existing in connection with the film product situation in St. Louis exploded in the federal district court there on Wednesday when Judge Joseph West Molyneaux sustained the Government's motion to dismiss the equity proceedings without prejudice, halting the trial before the end of its fourth week.

The motion was urged by Russell Hardy, assistant United States attorney general in charge of the prosecution, in order, he said, that the case may be refiled naming many additional "individual actors in the conspiracy."

While Mr. Hardy had said that the case would be retried in the same jurisdiction, on Wednesday Government counsel was undecided when, where or how the new suit, if any, will be brought.

Thus came to a probable conclusion the campaign of the Department of Justice to hold Warners, Paramount and RKO and their subsidiaries and corporate officials, in violation of the anti-trust laws. The action was brought on complaint of Fanchon and Marco-Harry C. Arthur theatre interests that the defendants were illegally withholding from them first-run pictures. The Government had sought an injunction to prevent a continuation of the alleged conspiracy.

The same defendants were acquitted last November of criminal conspiracy charges involving identical issues.

Sees "Great Conspiracy"

The dismissal followed rejection by Mr. Hardy of an offer of Frederick H. Wood, of Warner counsel, on behalf of all defendants, to allow the Government to amend its petition to include as co-defendant all the company officials who were parties to the former criminal case. Mr. Wood urged that if this was not sufficient to allow the Government to proceed, then the defense should be permitted to give an immediate answer whether it would enter the appearance of any other defendant the Government might chose to name.

Mr. Hardy replied this offer would not meet the situation confronting the Government in "combating this oppressive combination," adding that this case involved "only a small segment of a great generic conspiracy" and that in order to obtain the relief the public and the motion picture industry are entitled to, it may be necessary to name 40 or more individuals as defendants.

Judge Molyneaux ruled the law left no discretion to the court as his study of existing cases and the arguments of counsel made the procedure plain that the plaintiff may, if he choose, dismiss at any time prior to a final decision without prejudice. The judge pointed out that this was the decision of the law, not of the court.

Mr. Wood had agreed the court could exercise discretion whether to allow dismissal, contending there never had been a similar situation in any of the cases decided previously and that the defendants should not be brought into court again in the same case.

Mr. Hardy's request took the defense attorneys by surprise at Tuesday morning's session. Judge Molyneaux indicated he might grant the motion, but gave the defense until 2 o'clock Wednesday to present its opposition.

Affidavits submitted by defense counsel pleaded for a continuation of the trial until judicial determination, showing hardships and injustices which they said would be imposed on the defendants if the Government is permitted to drop the case and start anew under an amended petition either in St. Louis or some other federal jurisdiction.

In granting the request of defense attorneys for further time to study court decisions bearing on the Government's motion, Judge Molyneaux said: "I am of the opinion that they (the Government) have the absolute right to dismiss. But, of course, I will hear you."

The court asked attorneys to make their arguments as brief as possible, because "if I do grant the request for dismissal I want to catch the 2 o'clock train."

Frederick H. Wood of Warner counsel informed the court that his study of authorities indicated there was no absolute right of dismissal, but that whether such a request should be granted with or without prejudice rested entirely within the court's discretion.

Mr. Hardy's request came at a point where the proceedings had taken a turn decidedly unfavorable to the Government's cause and followed a series of rulings by the court which were considered to have boosted the defense materially.

Evidence Narrowed Down

Judge Molyneaux on Monday eliminated a number of statements attributed to various officers of the defendant companies and virtually narrowed the conspiracy evidence down to correspondence that had passed when RKO and Paramount committed their 1934-35 product to Warner Brothers for St. Louis. By these rulings Judge Molyneaux removed from admissible evidence several important conversations between Harry C. Arthur and Jack Allen Partington, officials of Fanchon and Marco, and important executives of the defendant companies.

In presenting the motion to dismiss Mr. Hardy said:

"After serious and mature consideration of the rulings of the court yesterday I wish to state with the greatest deference and respect to the court that we feel an adequae and complete exposition of the facts in this matter requires that many individual actors in the conspiracy must be made defendants in the case.

"Therefore, I move the court to dismiss this case without prejudice, so that a new suit may be filed joining these individual actors as defendants."

Defense counsel indicated they had no objection to taking the case out of court, provided the Government would not be permitted to bring new proceedings based on the same facts and circumstances.

Mr. Hardy indicated, however, at that juncture, that the Government may institute a new suit against the same defendants. He said that if the case is refiled under an amended bill of complaint, it would be brought in the federal district court at St. Louis, since the affected properties are located there.

Witnesses En Route

Anticipating that Mr. Arthur would be the last Government witness, and that his cross-examination would end Tuesday, defense attorneys telegraphed for numerous out-of-town witnesses, and some were en

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT PLANNING NEW SUIT

By FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Correspondent

Moving to get into the record testimony which Judge Joseph West Molyneaux refused on Monday to permit as evidence, Department of Justice officials, following the dismissal without prejudice of the equity suit against distributors in St. Louis, immediately prepared at Washington to bring a new suit, naming a number of additional defendants.

The Washington announcement by department officials of their determination appeared effectually to quash rumors that the dismissal of the suit, asked by Russell Hardy, special assistant attorney general, was sought as a way out of a "difficult situation."

No dissatisfaction with Judge Molyneaux was voiced by the department at Washington, where it was said the new suit probably would be brought before him. Mr. Hardy is remaining in St. Louis to work out details.

U.S. CIVIL SUIT ENDS IN FOURTH WEEK

route to St. Louis when the prosecution filed its surprise motion.

In support of his motion, Mr. Hardy admitted none of the cases he had cited probably had proceeded as far as this one toward a final determination of the issues by the court. He added he could not believe that could alter the fundamental universal rule that the plaintiff retains the right to dismiss without prejudice, except under extraordinary circumstances, until the time the court passes on a suit.

The prosecutor contended that in the absence of many of the protagonists in the alleged conspiracy, he felt the Government would be precluded, largely for technical reasons, from obtaining the relief to which it was entitled "from this oppressive gigantic combination," and that it would encourage an act in restraint of trade. He insisted the defendants would lose none of their rights if the Government were permitted to bring entirely new proceedings.

Irving Lesser on Stand

Irving Lesser, managing director of the Roxy theatre in New York, under Howard S. Cullman, trustee, testified for the Government last Wednesday. Over objection of defense counsel he was permitted to tell of a conversation with Roy Haynes, Eastern district salesmanager for Warner Bros., relative to booking "Alibi Ike" for exhibition in the Roxy, and testified that he had read, after several delays, that the picture had been booked into the Cameo.

Milton Arthur of Los Angeles, president and general manager of Cabart Theatre Corporation, which has a number of theatres in California, Arizona, Nevada and Utah, and a brother of Harry C. Arthur, Jr., on Thursday told of difficulties in obtaining Warner pictures for his houses, and said his proposals for Paramount Pictures were rejected by that company's home offices.

Charles Caballero, Milton Arthur, Marco Wolff and Harry C. Arthur and his wife each own one-fourth interest in the Cabart Company.

Cross-examination by Frederick H. Wood, Warner attorney, revealed that Cabart eventually had obtained Warner pictures for the 1935-36 season on substantially the original terms submitted by Milton Arthur, though the houses were without these pictures from August 1 to December 24, 1935.

He testified that his company had to give up the Studio theatre, Prescott, Ariz., because of its inability to obtain Warner pictures at an early date in the 1935-36 season. He also said that Jules Levy, RKO general sales manager, had told him, "You had better interest yourself in that situation (St. Louis) if you know what's good for you."

Says Contracts Were Rejected

Mr. Arthur said he had signed a Paramount contract application but had been told later that the contracts had been rejected.

He gave the result of a conversation with John Otterson, president of Paramount at that company's Los Angeles studios on August 15 or 16 last. He said that he went to Otterson in an effort to get Paramount Pictures, and advised him that Peacock and Louis had both told him that they could not do business with him, and of how he needed the pictures to keep his houses in operation, and that Paramount had refused to sell him solely because of his brother's connection with the St. Louis cases, and he could see no reason why Paramount should refuse to sell him.

He quoted John E. Otterson, Paramount president, as saying, "If all that you say is true it would seem to me that you are entitled to the pictures." After a Government counsel question he added that he had never heard further from Mr. Otterson and hasn't obtained Paramount pictures.

Asked by Frederick H. Wood, Warner counsel, if he didn't know that the reason why Warner Bros. had insisted that his proposals for pictures be in writing was because they had found it was not safe for any of their executives to carry on a conversation with a representative of Fanchon & Marco unless somebody else was present, Mr. Arthur replied with some heat: "That's not true. Nothing of that kind was ever suggested to me by any Warner representative. On the contrary, the fact is that they always told me that they had no objection to me and wanted to do business with me if they could."

The cross-examination by Wood revealed that after the Government obtained its indictment against Warner, Paramount and RKO the Roxy theatre played four Warner pictures and rejected five other pictures.

Both sides were able to count up a few victories, more or less important, on Friday.

The Government scored when Judge Molyneaux allowed introduction of evidence in the form of income tax reports to show the assets of the Warner Bros., Paramount and RKO groups and their affiliated concerns.

The first point won by a defendant came when RKO counsel successfully argued that the evidence of Milton Arthur concerning the conversation with Jules Levy should be excluded on the grounds that at the time Mr. Levy was not engaged in company business.

When Mr. Hardy attempted to get into the record a list of the theatres owned by the Radio-Keith-Orpheum interests, Warner Bros., and Paramount, Judge Molyneaux in turn sustained objections by Jacob M. Lashly for RKO, Wood for Warners and Louis Phillips of Paramount counsel.

Hilles Testifies

It was then revealed that in response to a request from the Government Charles D. Hilles, who was trustee in bankruptcy for Paramount-Publix at the time that Marco Wolff and his sister Fanchon Simon had their conversation with Adolph Zukor at the Paramount studios in Hollywood concerning the St. Louis picture situation, voluntarily had come to St. Louis Friday morning.

Mr. Hardy had called Mr. Hilles to St. Louis in an attempt to show that at the time of the conversation with Fanchon and Marco, Adolph Zukor did have the authority to sell pictures for Paramount, but when Mr. Hilles completed his testimony Friday afternoon Judge Molyneaux stuck to his original ruling that this conversation could not go into the record.

Just prior to adjournment for the day Mr. Hardy reopened the argument on whether Judge Molyneaux should permit the goverment to present evidence touching on the profits and losses of the Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum theatres.

Saturday's session was called off when Judge Molyneaux informed the interested attorneys through the clerk of the court that he was being annoyed by a tooth and had found it necessary to visit a dentist.

Limited to Correspondence

The question of whether Warners, Paramount and RKO had conspired to violate the anti-trust law was almost entirely confined to correspondence between officials of the various companies involved in connection with commitments and actual contracts for Paramount and RKO films to the Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum for the 1934-35 season, by a series of rulings from the bench Monday.

The court sustained a defense objection to Government introduction of documentary evidence on the financial operations of the Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum under Warner management since March 31, 1934.

Judge Molyneaux sustained defense objections later, ruling out conversations with Herman Starr, Gradwell Sears and Abel Cary Thomas of Warners by Harry C. Arthur, F. & M. executive, and the Government's star witness.

Harold F. Collins, a special assistant to the attorney general, is assisting Russell Hardy. He replaced Walter Rice, who returned to Washington.

ST. LOUIS TRIAL COST UP IN THE MILLIONS

That the Government's equity suit at St. Louis against Warner Bros., Paramount and RKO, and subsidiaries and individual officers of the companies, will require an expenditure of $1,500,000 by the defendant companies in fighting this case, as well as the companion criminal proceedings in which they were acquitted, and the socalled Koplar suits against Skouras Bros. Enterprises and the St. Louis Amusement Company in 1932 and 1933, is the estimate of lawyers.

The $1,500,000 will include the fees for attorneys, loss of their time from other duties in the companies, their hotel expenses, railroad and plane fare, and the like.

Discuss New Films At Columbia Meet

Columbia product for 1936-37 was outlined and discussed at the company's regional sales meeting in San Francisco at the William Taylor Hotel over last week end. Abe Montague, general sales manager, and Jerome Safron, western division manager, presided. Managers and salesmen from Salt Lake, Los Angeles, Portland and Seattle attended. Arrangements were in charge of L. E. Tillman, branch manager in San Francisco, and Mel Klein, office manager.

Columbia is spending more than $1,000,000 in the building of new stages, offices and technical buildings at the studio in Hollywood.

INDUSTRY GOODWILL PLAN TO KEEP YOUTH WILL EMBRACE ALL OF U.S.

Subjects in "Secrets of Success" Series Shown in 114 Gatherings of Religious and Educational Leaders in 24 States

Free distribution by corporate members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America of short subject excerpts from outstanding pictures for the purpose of elevating the character of American youth has met with such success in winning over critics of the value of motion picture entertainment that the plan will be extended immediately to embrace eventually those states not now included among the 24 which have been serving as the field ground of a test.

Climaxing six years of effort—four spent on formulation, two on practice—the industry now feels that it has found in the character education series, known as the "Secrets of Success" series, a most effective implement for creating new attitudes toward the industry, breaking down many prejudices and establishing new friendly contacts among educational and religious leaders who have been adamant. The goodwill thus created stands to aid box offices.

From a large number of features examined periodically, certain ones are selected as containing life situations which would be conducive to constructive discussion among educational, religious and community groups. Pictures of these subjects are made available in abbreviated form, without cost, to institutions interested, but at no time may admission be charged.

Who Prepare Subjects

The subjects are prepared under the direction of the Committee on Social Values in Motion Pictures, set up through educational, sociological and industry effort, and constituted as follows: Dr. Howard M. LeSourd, dean of the Graduate School of Boston University, chairman; Dr. Florence Hale, editor of The Grade Teacher; Dr. Mark A. May, director of the Institute of Human Relations at Yale University; Dr. Miriam Van Waters, nationally known penologist; and Dr. Frank N. Freeman, professor of psychology at the University of Chicago.

From the cutting continuities of the selected pictures, scenes are selected which will show the desired situations for improving child character. Lavender prints are made from the original negatives of the scenes selected, and duplicate prints are then made from the lavenders after they have been edited to the desired footage (less than 1,000 feet each).

Prints are made from the duplicate negatives for use in the selected organizations in eight established zones, the dupe negatives remaining the property of the industry, and are deposited at the laboratories. The prints are also the industry's property, but remain in the various zone distribution offices where they are deposited.

Pictures finally accepted for treatment as part of the series are no longer being shown in theatres, the subjects of the series to date, in the order of their treatment, comprising the following:

HUCKLEBERRY FINN, Paramount, released August, 1931.
*BROKEN LULLABY, Paramount, February, 1932.
SIGN OF THE CROSS, Paramount, February, 1933.
CRADLE SONG, Paramount, November, 1933.
SKIPPY, Paramount, April, 1931.
SOOKY, Paramount, December, 1931.
TOM SAWYER, Paramount, November, 1930.
TOM BROWN OF CULVER, Universal, July, 1932.
LUCKY DOG, Universal, April, 1933.
ALIAS THE DOCTOR, Warners, March, 1932.
THERE'S ALWAYS TOMORROW, Universal, September, 1934.
WEDNESDAY'S CHILD, RKO, October, 1934.
HER SWEETHEART, CHRISTOPHER BEAN, MGM, November, 1933.
*YOUNG AMERICA, Fox, April, 1932.
GENTLEMEN ARE BORN, Warners, November, 1934.
NO GREATER GLORY, Columbia, April, 1934.
THE BAND PLAYS ON, MGM, December, 1934.
ONE NIGHT OF LOVE, Columbia, September, 1934.

Two subjects each were made from "Broken Lullaby" and "Young America."

Only five of the pictures treated were Box Office Champions as compiled by MOTION PICTURE HERALD from theatre admission grosses, indicating, perhaps, that through the use of the "Secrets of Success" subjects, distributors seek further to widen the appeal for the type of production selected.

These subjects are not specially prepared, but actually are excerpts from theatrical releases. Since the subjects are excerpts—never a complete story—it was felt that there are always large numbers among those who see the films who are moved to see the whole picture, thus stimulating the business of revivals. Too, "The Secrets" are said to have proved to have favorable effect on the current showings of pictures of similar value—all of which is important to the exhibitor in the community where the plan is working.

Subjects of the series have been shown to 114 assemblies of religious and educational leaders. These have been representative gatherings in 24 states, with delegates present from many others. This includes summer sessions at many leading universities, summer assemblies of clergymen and lay leaders, and showings in churches, school rooms and auditoriums, social service agencies, educational and women's conventions and the like. Some 123 organizations now are regularly using the series, involving thousands in the subsequent discussions.

There are 46 such program units in operation at the present time, with unknown thousands enrolled in 739 discussion groups, each group receiving their pictures on a regular schedule of bookings, holding the picture from one to three days, depending upon the number of showings demanded by their program. Since the opening of the school year this season, 236 additional bookings have been made, with a total of 658 new showings.

Typical of the types of leaders who have expressed interest in the plan are the following: Walter S. Bell, in charge of special services, Board of Education, Atlanta; Dr. A. N. French, director of the Institute of Juvenile Research, University of New Hampshire, Durham, N. H.; Dr. Edward D. Grant, executive secretary of publication, the Presbyterian Church of the United States, Richmond, Va.; Helen C. Davis, director of student teaching, Colorado State Teachers' College, Greeley, Colo.; Dr. John A. Thackston, dean, College of Education, University of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tenn.; Guy H. Purdy, secretary-treasurer, Albany Cathedral Summer School, Albany, N. Y.; W. S. Mills, president, Clements Paper Company and superintendent of the Sunday school of the First Presbyterian Church, Nashville, Tenn.; F. Ernest Johnson, executive secretary, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, New York; Dr. Paul H. Vieth, Yale Divinity School, New Haven; Theodore F. Lentz, director of Character Research Institute, Washington University, St. Louis; Mrs. C. O. Cromer, president, Parent-Teachers' Association, State College, Pa.; Reverend John H. Kenne, rector, St. Thomas's Episcopal Church, Newark, N. J.; Professor Frederic M. Thrasher, associate professor of education, New York University, New York; Alan S. Hacker, Lower West Side Motion Picture Council, New York; W. T. Bolger, YMCA, Little Rock, Ark; Frank S. Hackett, headmaster, Riverdale Country School, Riverdale, N. Y.

Without regard to the ultimate value of the "Secrets of Success" series in accomplishing its objective, two additional significant aspects to the program are these: The series offers a very practical test of the use of motion pictures in education; it also constitutes a practical approach to character education through the motion picture.

HUTCHINS JIBES DRIVE FOR ALLEGIANCE OATH

If School teachers are to be required to take the oath of allegiance, so should motion picture players, radio performers and others who have equally great influence on the young, believes Dr. Robert Maynard Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago.

"Let us include newspaper men, and especially the designers of the comic supplements," he said. "Let us line up all the movie stars. Let us insist on an oath of allegiance from radio performers.

"If teachers are to take an oath, Amos and Andy should be compelled to salute the Flag and sing the 'Star-Spangled Banner' twice a day."

Increasing Interest of Community Leads in MPPDA's Free Subjects Culled from Releases Found Removing Prejudices

THIS MR. ADVERSE MORE DYNAMIC THAN IN BOOK

Translators of Allen novel give its passive hero a nip from the showman's flask

Fredric March and Olivia de Havilland

IN explaining why his company had chosen to make "Anthony Adverse," Jack L. Warner, production head of Warner Brothers, spoke the language of the exhibitor: "There are certain things that every audience wants. They are an absorbing story, lots of action, drama, romance, adventure and unusual settings. We found all this in 'Anthony Adverse,' so we decided to make it."

To make it has proved a big undertaking. Two years were spent in preparing the voluminous novel by Hervey Allen for shooting, which is now in progress.

Sheridan Gibney, who did the scenario, spent five months on the actual writing after a staff of a dozen research men had spent 21 weeks gathering authentic data. Gibney's attitude is indicated in this comment by him on the method pursued.

"In the novel, Anthony was a passive character," he pointed out, "yet everything happened to him. For the purposes of drama it was necessary to show him as a man who sought adventure, rather than a man to whom adventure came. He had to be made more dramatic, more active, more positive."

There is always the danger that in a production like "Anthony Adverse" its director may go "arty" and that in his attempts to do a class picture he will forget the good old principles of down-to-earth entertainment. Mervyn LeRoy, however, has been in the box-office lists for a long time. Pictures like "I Am a Fugitive," "Little Caesar," "Five Star Final," "Gold Diggers of 1933," "Oil for the Lamps of China" and "I Found Stella Parish" prove that he keeps his eye on the customers out front. However, declares Mr. LeRoy:

"This is the toughest picture I ever made, mainly because, for once in my career, instead of wondering if I have enough story, I have to be very careful not to neglect any part of my overabundance. I cannot understand why people speak of 'Anthony' as being so long. After all, 600,000 people bought the novel and an estimated 3,000,000 people read it, so length could not have mattered. It had popular appeal, and that's the best reason I know for making any story. After all, the only measure of a picture is whether the girl who works in a box factory in Kankakee and the boy who jerks soda at the corner drug store will like it."

Before a picture is made, the studio always prepares a "gross plot." Take the one on "Anthony Adverse" in LeRoy's office. It is a ruled chart with a list of sets and the order of their shooting across the top. Along the sides is a list of characters. By placing a check in the proper intersection of lines, it shows at a glance when and where each character works. According to this, there are 131 sets in "Anthony Adverse," more than double the number in the usual big feature.

This necessitated an extensive building program. The African stockade, for instance, covers some 12 acres, including its approaches. There is an opera performance in Italy and one in Paris. An entire theatre interior was built for each, including stage sets, boxes, auditorium and foyers. Then there are the big docks and warehouses of Leghorn, Italy, a dock at Havana with a quarter-mile of business street; an African jungle covering about half an acre, to mention only a few of the larger sets. In addition, there is a monastery and wall built on the Warner ranch, a big chateau built at Busch Gardens in Pasadena, a snow-covered Alpine trail built on the lot, an American clipper ship built on the studio lake, and a Spanish tramp steamer erected at the Vitagraph pier.

Casting the picture was a three-month job, with nearly a hundred roles to be filled and every type, size and nationality needed. The selection of Fredric March for the title role is generally considered a good piece of casting. He proved himself as a dashing romantic type.

Olivia de Havilland, whose first big chance was in "A Midsummer Night's Dream," showed her versatility in "Alibi Ike," "The Irish in Us" and "Captain Blood." Claude Rains and Edmund Gwenn seem very sound selections also. As the old libertine, Don Luis, Rains should be at his best. Gwenn, in "The Bishop Misbehaves," "Sylvia Scarlett" and "The Walking Dead," demonstrated that he is one of the best character actors London has sent us. Gwenn has the role of Bonnyfeather. Louis Hayward plays the part of Dennis Moore, Anthony's father.

Others in the cast are Luis Alberni, Donald Woods, Pedro de Cordoba, Marjorie Gateson, Henry O'Neill, Ralph Morgan, Akim Tamiroff, Frank Reicher, Fritz Leiber, Joe Crehan, Clara Blandick, Mathilde Comont and J. Carroll Naish.

Leo Forbstein did the scoring and says it was a stimulating task because he had a variety of themes with which to work. In addition to five different national backgrounds, there are the first acts of two different operas, "L'Orpheo" and "La Duchessa de Farrara."

More than one million dollars already have gone into this production.

WPA CENSORSHIP BRINGS CHARGE OF "SHABBY POLITICS" FROM RICE

Washington "Broke Word" in Deletions by Hopkins' Assistant in "Ethiopia" Script, Says Director, Resigning

Government censorship became a paramount issue this week when, climaxing months of discord, Elmer Rice, playwright, resigned as New York regional director of the federal theatre project.

Mr. Rice submitted his resignation when he learned that his first production, a topical presentation of the Italo-Ethiopian war, was to be censored. Charging "partisan politics," he raised the issue of freedom of speech and said that "Washington has broken its word."

The order to delete certain subject matter from the production, which was to have opened this week at the Biltmore, New York, was given by Jacob Baker, assistant to Harry L. Hopkins, WPA administrator. Washington officials felt the censoring was necessary in order to avoid international complications. The show was to have inaugurated "The Living Newspaper" unit, based on the same idea as "The March of Time" of radio and screen.

Philip Barber, who had served as assistant to Mr. Rice, was appointed acting regional director, and Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, national director, announced she would spend at least half her time in New York.

Trouble in Hollywood

Meanwhile, repercussions were expected in Hollywood where the screen guilds also have been questioning phases of the federal theatre project. Mr. Rice is an official of the Dramatists' Guild, closely allied with the Screen Writers' Guild through the Authors' League of America.

One of Mr. Rice's last official acts before resigning was to announce that admission prices for the WPA productions in the New York region would range from 15 cents to $1 top, with a 50-cent top for most shows. The federal admission tax will be added to all tickets over 40 cents, indicating, said Mr. Rice, that the Government will not eliminate its policy of taxing amusements even though the theatre is operated by the Administration. The thousands on the relief rolls will be admitted free Monday nights.

It was announced too, that the federal theatre in New York has 36 plays in rehearsal, 13 of which are original scripts representing the work of both known and unknown playwrights.

Seven Theatres Leased

Seven theatres have been leased in New York City and 12 halls and auditoriums engaged by the federal Government for the staging of these plays, in the production of which 4,017 actors, stage hands and technical workers will participate.

When appointed last October 11, Mr. Rice made known that in attempting to revive enthusiasm for the legitimate stage he would seek especially to create interest among the younger generation, "in order to let them know that there is a form of amusement other than motion pictures." His public pronouncements were critical of the dominant place won by the screen.

Mr. Rice's resignation came as the climax of a long series of wrangles over Uncle Sam's theatrical experiment. Postponements of productions have been repeated, the result of red tape and Government regulations, according to Mr.. Rice, who repeatedly denounced WPA bureaucracy.

CALLS U. S. PROJECT FUTILE "SIDESHOW"

Commenting on the federal theatre project controversy in New York, Brooks Atkinson, drama critic of the New York "Times," observed:

"The episode, which is silly in itself, shows how futile it is to expect the theatre to be anything but a sideshow under government supervision. . . . The first crisis shows what many of us foresaw, that a theatre paid for out of public funds cannot enjoy the freedom normal in private ventures. . . . What we all know now is that a free theatre cannot be a government enterprise."

It was learned that the dispute leading to the split had resulted from a letter by Morris Watson, managing producer of "The Living Newspaper," to Stephen Early, one of the President's secretaries, asking for a full transcript of the President's neutrality speech and permission to use it on the stage as part of the "Ethiopia" script.

The letter was turned over to the WPA which, in turn, investigated "The Living Newspaper" and made its ruling. Mr. Baker, acting for the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, directed that "no issue of 'The Living Newspaper' contain any representation of the head or one of the ministers of the cabinet of a foreign state."

Mr. Rice thereupon sent a telegram to Administrator Hopkins protesting the censorship and saying that the production was a "factual representation of actual news events containing no criticism or satire of any foreign power or official."

Mr. Baker came to New York last Thursday to see for himself. After attending a rehearsal of "Ethiopia" at which actors impersonated Mussolini, Emperor Haile Selassie, Premier Laval of France and others, Mr. Baker directed that "no one impersonating a ruler or cabinet officer shall actually appear on the stage." He intimated foreign nations may misconstrue the true intentions."

The order was given to Mrs. Flanagan. At the same time Mr. Baker wrote Mr. Rice as follows:

"When difficulties have arisen in the past in connection with the operation of the federal theatre project within the framework of the governmental structure, you have proposed either to resign or to take the difficulties to the press. Now that a problem has arisen in connection with a dramatization that may affect our international relations, you renew your proposal of resignation in a telegram to Mr. Hopkins. This time I accept it, effective upon receipt of this letter."

Mr. Rice hit back at a press showing of "Ethiopia" at the Biltmore on Friday. He said:

"The implied charge that a carefully documented factual presentation of public events could conceivably affect our international relations is absurd on its face and doubly ludicrous to anyone who has read the script or seen a rehearsal of the production. Mr. Baker is merely trying to raise a smoke screen to conceal the real issue. That issue is free speech. When I took this job last fall, I did so upon Mr. Harry Hopkins' emphatic and explicit assurance that Washington would not attempt in ny way to censor the productions of the federal theatre project. At my first interview in October, I informed the reporters that any attempt at censorship would be followed by immediate resignation. Washington has broken its word; I have kept mine."

Outburst from Screen Guilds in Hollywood Also Awaited; Philip Barber Succeeds Rice; Chicago Play Dropped

Chicago Play Pulled Off

The final decision to censor the production, continued Mr. Rice, did not come until after he had outlined to Mr. Baker some of the other productions, which included a play dealing with unemployment and another on conditions in the South, "in other words, hitting the Democratic party where it lives." Mr. Rice charged that Mr. Baker "has already called off one federal theatre project play in Chicago, because in the opinion of Mayor Kelly it was uncomplimentary to the Administration and to the Democratic party."

Mr. Rice said he regretted having to resign at this time "when so many of the carefully-laid plans of the federal theatre project are nearing fruition." Pointing out that for 15 years he has actively fought censorship in every form, he added, "I cannot conscientiously remain the servant of a Government which plays the shabby game of partisan politics at the expense of freedom and the principles of democracy."

Foreign News Dramatizing Dropped

Mr. Watson, an official of the New York Newspaper Guild, which staged the production with WPA actors, announced that unless the order were countermanded there would be no further dramatization of foreign news, and future shows would deal with domestic events. The next production will be on the farm situation, he said later.

Workers' groups connected with the theatre project and other WPA activities protested to Mr. Hopkins, asking him to repudiate Mr. Baker's acceptance of Mr. Rice's "enforced resignation" and demanding freedom from censorship. The City Projects Council, consisting of WPA workers, held a protest mass meeting Tuesday night.

Authors' League Joins Fight

With a telegram to Mr. Hopkins, the Authors' League of America joined the fight. Signed by Elmer Davis, vice-president of the league, the telegram asked whether Mr. Hopkins approved the action and "whether you have endorsed the policy that only such plays as your administration approves are to be presented."

Another telegram protesting censorship and upholding Mr. Rice went to Mr. Hopkins from the federal theatre project locals.

Meanwhile another theatre has been leased by the Government in New York. It is the Culture House theatre, seating 299, where German productions will be given.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

How It Goes

Among the news items is the Paramount announcement that Eddie Sutherland will direct W. C. Fields in "Poppy." Therein is a story. Years ago, at the old Astoria studio in New York, some one decided to make a silent titled "The Old Army Game," with Fields as its star and Sutherland, who was just an ambitious kid, as the director. At the time Fields was one of the big features of a Ziegfeld "Follies." The picture was a flop and Fields disappeared from the screen.

Years later, Fields was making shorts for Mack Sennett and Eddie was was quite a way up the directorial ladder. They met on the golf course. The old "Army Game" feud was rehashed, with the result that a warm friendship sprang up. When Paramount decided to make "International House," Sutherland was assigned as director. Revamping the story, he insisted that Fields carry the comedy lead which, particularly in the desert scenes with Peggy Joyce and the tiny auto dashing wildly through the hotel, brought general commendation.

Hunters

The autograph hounds who dog Hollywood restaurants and previews have an ear close to the box-office, and sometimes are a step ahead. A case in point is that of Fred Stone, who has just completed a picture that will not be released for several weeks. Though a figure on the stage for almost a generation, Stone was passed up by the collectors here for several months. Then the word got out that "The Farmer in the Dell" has unusual promise. At once they started going after Stone.

A new group of younger players became the center in excitement when they appear at the luncheon spots, such as Julie Haydon, Errol Flynn, Nelson Eddy, Rosalind Russell, Luise Ranier, Ross Alexander, Robert Taylor, Fred MacMurray, who were unknown as recently as eight months ago. Not that the standbys, the Crawfords, Harlows, Gables and Colberts are ignored now. It's just that they have more company in their misery.

Ten Films Start

Ten new productions got underway in the past week and four others were completed.

Two companies, Paramount and Republic, each put three pictures in work. At the first named studio "Brazen," a Walter Wanger production, and "Reunion" started, while work was resumed on "I Married a Soldier." In "Brazen" the cast is headed by Mary Ellis, Walter Pidgeon, Phyllis Barker and E. E. Clive. Edward Ludwig is directing. "Reunion," which Robert Florey is directing, will feature Herbert Marshall, Gertrude Michael and Lionel Atwill. The completely revamped "I Loved a Soldier" stars Marlene Dietrich with Charles Boyer and includes in the supporting cast Walter Catlett, Victor Killian, Samuel Hinds, John Miljan, Ted Oliver, Siegfried Rumann and Harry Cording. Henry Hathaway is directing.

At Republic studios work began on "Laughing Irish Eyes." The cast lists Phil Regan, Walter C. Kelley, Herman Bing, Evalyn Knapp and J. M. Kerrigan. Joseph Santley is directing. "House of a Thousand Candles" will present Mae Clarke, Phillips Holmes, Fred Walton, Bela Lugosi, Hedwiga Richer, Olaf Hytton, Rosita Moreno, Frederick Vogeding, Rafaela Storm and Mischa Auer. Arthur Lubin is directing. A third picture, "Red River Valley," features Gene Autry, Frances Grant, George Cheseboro, Smiley Burnette, Jack Kennedy and Eugene Jackson. B. Reeves Eason is directing.

Two pictures started at Warner Bros. "I Married a Doctor" will present Josephine Hutchinson, Pat O'Brien, Margaret Irving, Grace Stafford, Ray Mayer, Louise Fazenda, Guy Kibbee, Ross Alexander and Willard Robertson. Archie Mayo is directing. Also underway is "The Gentleman from Big Bend," with the cast headed by Warren William, June Travis and Barton MacLane. William McGann is directing.

With Robert Montgomery returning to the screen after a long absence, MGM started "Petticoat Fever," in which Montgomery is featured with Myrna Loy and Reginald Owen. George Fitzmaurice is directing.

Radio started "The Puzzle of the Briar Pipe," in which Helen Broderick and James Gleason are the featured players. Edward Killy and William Hamilton are co-directing.

Probably the most important picture in the completed group is "Little Lord Fauntleroy," first effort of newly formed Selznick International Productions and starring Freddie Bartholomew and Dolores Costello. The supporting cast lists Mickey Rooney, C. Aubrey Smith, Henry Stephenson, Jackie Searl, Una O'Connor, E. E. Clive, Ivan Simpson, Gilbert Emery, Walter Kingsford, Mary Beatty, Roger Imhof, Elsa Buchanan and Joe Tozer. John Cromwell directed.

"Everybody's Old Man" was completed at 20th Century-Fox. The cast numbers Irvin S. Cobb, Rochelle Hudson, Johnny Downs, Norman Foster, Sara Haden, Alan Dinehart, Maurice Cass, Warren Hymer, Donald Meek, Charles Coleman, Ann Moultry, Hilda Vaughn, John Miltern, Walter Walker, Frederick Burton and Hal K. Hall. James Flood directed.

Paramount finished "Sky Parade." The cast includes Jimmie Allen, Robert Fiske, Billy Lee, Benny Bartlet, Kent Taylor, Katherine DeMille, Dean Jagger, Betty Jane Rhodes, William Gargan, Grant Withers, Sid Saylor, Pat O'Malley, and Myra Marsh. Otho Lovering directed.

"G-Man of the Nineties" finished at Republic. Directed by Joseph Kane, the cast features John Wayne, Ann Rutherford, George Hayes, Al Bridge, Tom Brown, Lane Chandler, Greta McDaniels, Tom London and Snowflake.

New Paramount House Record

"Collegiate," at the Paramount on Broadway, broke the house record for first day attendance with 8,000 tickets claimed to have been sold by theatre officials. Mae West's "I'm No Angel" held the former record, with 6,000 admissions sold.

CONGRESSIONAL PROBE OF SCORE CHARGES, MUSIC TAX IS SEEN

House Patents Committee Announces Investigation of Copyrights; Duffy Bill Deferred for Major Legislation This Session

A Congressional investigation of the score charge, which exhibitors have been protesting as an exorbitant exaction by film companies, is probable this winter, attorneys for motion picture companies in New York heard this week.

At the same time, the investigation will center on the music taxes paid for both recording in film and reproduction in theatres, it was said.

This information came on the heels of an announcement by the House Patents committee in Washington that it would soon launch a searching inquiry into copyrights involving every phase of the motion picture business. This committee has in hand the Duffy copyright bill, through which exhibitors and other music users hope for relief from the burdensome music fees collected by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to the extent of about $4,000,000 annually.

Other major developments in the music situation were:

Warner Brothers brought to 16 this week the number of federal suits filed against the radio stations and networks for unlicensed use of its music.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America said Tuesday: "The Government's suit against ASCAP as an illegal monopoly, we understand, is going forward in the near future." The suit recently was postponed indefinitely, after previous delays.

Meanwhile, from Seattle it is reported that the threatened move of ASCAP in the state of Washington to take the state's injunction to the federal court of appeals, and to the United States supreme court if necessary, has failed to materialize.

In that state, ASCAP has been declared a monopoly and has been estopped from doing business by the superior court, and the federal district court has rejected ASCAP's appeal for want of jurisdiction.

Tracy Griffin, Seattle attorney and receiver for ASCAP, said that further moves in the state of Washington will hinge on developments in the Warner-ASCAP controversy. Meanwhile, music taxes in that state are being collected by the receiver.

No Exhibitor Suits

Whether Warners will require a seat tax from exhibitors will be determined after Herman Starr, Warners vice-president and president of Music Publishers' Holding Corporation, its subsidiary, returns from the Government's equity trial in St. Louis. Meanwhile exhibitors may continue to use Warner music, by orchestras or other means, without fear of litigation.

Warner's policy with respect to hotel performances also has not been formulated, awaiting conferences with counsel for the American Hotel Association. Warners have demanded a fee amounting to 40 per cent of what the hotels pay ASCAP, but this is subject to further negotiations, it was indicated. However, should the hotels refuse to enter the Warner fold, infringement suits will follow, the company said.

Action is being held in abeyance against night clubs, as well, although the Rainbow Room in Rockefeller Center, New York, is the only club of any prominence known to have signed for a license.

Having filed eight complaints against radio stations by last Wednesday, Warners since have brought eight additional actions, all in the federal district court in New York, and others are in preparation. A second suit was to be filed in Philadelphia late this week.

The actions filed by midweek aggregate $95,000, and ask $5,000 for each use of a number and injunction to prevent further infringements. Where a commercial sponsor is involved, an accounting of profits is also sought. Two such suits have been brought.

List of Suits

Wattenberg and Wattenberg, Warners counsel in music matters, announced these suits filed last Thursday:

Remick Music Corporation vs. National Broadcasting Company, Inc. (WEAF). For use of "Memories."

Harms, Inc., vs. National Broadcasting Company, Inc. (WEAF). Use of "Where Am I?"

M. Witmark and Sons vs. National Broadcasting Company, Inc. (WJZ). Use of "Painting the Clouds with Sunshine."

Remick Music Corporation vs. Knickerbocker Broadcasting Company, Inc. (WMCA), and Sally's Studio, Inc. (the sponsor). Use of "Avalon."

Additional filings on Monday were:

Remick Music Corporation vs. Bamberger Broadcasting Service, Inc. (WOR). Use of "My Isle of Golden Dreams."

Harms, Inc., vs. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. (WABC). Use of "Chansonette." A total of $15,000 is sought for three uses of the number.

M. Witmark and Sons vs. National Broadcasting Company, Inc. (WJZ). Use of "Blue Nights."

Remick Music Corporation vs. National Broadcasting Company, Inc. (WJZ). Use of "Congratulate Me." The same complaint names WEAF, for use of "Then You've Never Been Blue."

After weeks of compiling, Warners have sent to licensees, including some 250 independent radio stations, a catalogue comprising 25,000 of its numbers. These do not include all titles to the different arrangements, which would increase the figure to about 32,000. Such a list of Warner music has been demanded by CBS and NBC, for identification of the music over which Warners claim to exercise licensing rights. Warners' attitude is they are under no obligation to furnish this information to non-licensees.

From Washington came word that fate of the Duffy copyright bill is uncertain at this session, since major legislation sponsored by the administration must first be disposed of.

Late last week it was reported that the Senate indicated no desire to expedite action on the measure when, being called up in the regular course of business, it was passed by. However, action and probable passage later in the session is confidently anticipated by the motion picture industry.

ASCAP Fights Bill

Another factor is the extent to which Secretary of State Hull will push this legislation, and this in turn hinges on the urgency he feels for entry in the Berne copyright convention. Sponsored by the state department, the bill eliminates the minimum penalty of $250 now provided for unlicensed performance of music. Chiefly for this reason, ASCAP and the Music Publishers' Protective Association are exerting tremendous pressure to have the bill killed or weakened by amendments.

While favoring the legislation from an exhibitor standpoint, motion picture companies have not unanimousy decided to support it, and there is a difference of opinion as to whether the changes provided would bring about sufficient benefits in the broad copyright situation, which is extremely complicated.

WARNERS DENY SALE OF MUSIC FIRMS

Warner Brothers this week denied reports current in New York that it was negotiating for the sale of its music subsidiaries, thus paving the way to healing the breach with ASCAP.

No negotiations could be under way, it was pointed out, because Harry M. Warner, president of the company, and Herman Starr, vice-president in charge of music, have been in St. Louis under subpoena in the Government's civil suit.

It is known, however, that prior to the Warner-ASCAP split, Columbia Broadcasting System negotiated for the purchase of a half interest in the music companies, but the network was unwilling to meet the demanded price. The deal fell through, and Columbia now claims the right to broadcast Warner music regardless.

MPTOA Says Anti-Trust Suit on ASCAP Will Be Resumed; Warners File 16 Suits for Infringements by Broadcasting Chains

FATE OF DUAL BILLS MAY REST IN HANDS OF SUPREME COURT

Highest Tribunal Will Be Asked to Settle Issue for All Time If Appeals Court Refuses Plea of Distributors for Rehearing

Large distributors will call upon the Supreme Court of the United States to determine for all time the fate of double bills—for years the subject of bitter controversy in and out of the industry—in the event that they fail to move the United States Circuit Court of Appeals to rehear their previously denied plea for the right to contractually prohibit exhibitors from engaging in the practice.

Determination of their persistence to fight the issue to the highest tribunal in the land, after having been flatly defeated last week in the Perelman case in Philadelphia, caused Universal Pictures on Tuesday to broadcast, over the signature of Carl Laemmle, president, an appeal to all producers who oppose duals to call a truce on the controversy and admit that the independent exhibitor and independent producer proponents have "licked" them on the issue in the courts. (Complete text of Perelman ruling starts on page 36.)

The right of an independent owner to show two features on a single program without interference by large distributors seeking to restrict them contractually, was upheld in the Perelman case by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in the Philadelphia district. This was the second time within a year that the federal courts ruled distributors may not effect contractual prohibitions against the practice.

Decision a Setback, Declares MPTOA

Arriving almost simultaneously with Carl Laemmle's protestation against a continuance of the fight came a bulletin from national headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Ed Kuykendall, president, declaring that the court's decision "for the promoters of double billing handed the exhibitors of the country a setback" and "placed another legalistic obstacle in the way of constructive plans."

Directly involved in the outcome of the court fight are, as estimated, 7,000 exhibitors now pursuing the dual policy; indirectly involved are most of the remaining 8,000 competitive theatres.

Sustaining the findings of the lower court, the three appellate judges in Philadelphia decreed that the distributors' clause in the rental license agreement binding exhibitors not to dual feature was in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. The large distributors—excluding Columbia, Republic and Universal, which have not been set against duals—had pinned their hopes on this court test to effect a national contractual ban on the practice with a resultant increase in rental revenue—all other strategy having previously failed.

Following a study of the decision, the large distributors this week concluded that the Circuit Court of Appeals did not clarify the question of double bills, but rather ruled on the question of the majors' alleged attempt to put independent producers out of business, or at least those independents depending on duals for bookings.

"The language of the decision is entirely too loose; there are too many implications," declared a distributor spokesman on Tuesday. "The decision does not answer the question of what a distributor can and can not do in laying down conditions for a limited license on a copyrighted product. The theory of the court was that the independent producer is entitled to protection, and not that large distributors act illegally or legally when they attempt to halt duals by inserting clauses against the practice in their contracts."

In order to obtain a rehearing of the case before the Circuit Court of Appeals, it was pointed out, the distributors must convince two of the three presiding judges that the case was not thoroughly heard. In the event that the Philadelphia appeals division refuses their motion, or, in rehearing the case, again rules against them, the issue will be taken to the United States Supreme Court. It would mark the first time in industry history that the high tribunal was asked to rule on such motion picture practice.

Last week's Circuit Court decision upheld the original finding of Federal Judge George A. Welsh in the Perelman case against large distributors, and was written by 82-year-old Judge Joseph Buffington, who declared the contract clause against duals is not only illegal, but amounts to restraint of trade on both independent exhibitors and independent producers.

The effect of the distributors' clause is to seek to prohibit the showing of a second feature on the same program with the pictures covered by the specific contract. Clauses of this nature were embodied in the contracts of Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Twentieth Century-Fox, RKO, Warner-Vitagraph and United Artists.

Mr. Laemmle's "open letter to motion picture producers" frankly admits that "double features hurt Universal just exactly as much as they help," but, it adds, "the court upholds double features," and "why quibble about it? why quarrel about it? why not be decent about it?"

"You have tried to lick the independent theatre by gobbling up all the first runs. He licked you with double features. Then you tried to lick him by running double features yourself. In many cases you amazed yourself with excellent results. In others you 'flopped'. Then you tried to get help through the courts and you tried to outlaw double features. Why not admit that the other fellow has as much right to live as you have?"

That was the message Mr. Laemmle sent to competitive distributors, "especially those who own and operate theatres."

"Lick your competitor if you have brains enough, but don't rely on brawn," Mr. Laemmle told the managements of the large corporations. "Play fair," he urged them, because, "in these days the courts won't stand for anything else. Don't lead with your chin. Don't be too darned smart."

Continuing, Universal's president urged the heads of the distributing companies to "forget your hatred of certain exhibitor organizations—and I mean even such organizations as are headed by men who make a fat living out of stirring up trouble between producers and exhibitors.

"Practically, you realize that there is no real argument against the use of double features. If the movie fans want them, they are going to get them, no matter what the court says. If the movie fans don't want them, they won't live, still regardless of court decrees," Mr. Laemmle added.

Courts Unable to Comprehend?

"While we do not intend to criticize the court's legal reasoning," the MPTOA bulletin declared that its decision "seems to be another striking example of the inability of the courts to fully comprehend, appreciate or understand and determine economic problems of any particular industry.

"Perhaps they could not be expected to realize the harm and destruction such a decision ultimately leads to, as from the evidence presented in a case such as this they get only a fraction of the facts involved," the MPTOA bulletin pointed out, adding, "It again significantly shows the futility of trying to solve economic problems by litigation.

"The court apparently assumed that because several of the producers of the more expensive pictures did not want their choice productions cheapened by double feature billing in conjunction with inferior pictures, thereby forcing the public that wants to see them to endure an equal dose of second or third rate entertainment in order to do so, that there must be an actual conspiracy between these distributors to put the independent distributors out of business," the bulletin continued.

"The court ignores the essential structure of

PATRONS VOTE FOR DOUBLES

The latest expression on the subject of double features to be voiced by the paying public—always the last word in determining theatre policy—is in favor of the practice.

In Detroit, patrons of six Ben and Lou Cohen theatres, in widely scattered sections of the city, are voting heavily in favor of a continuation of double features, according to Ben Cohen.

Mr. Cohen said the vote in favor of duals probably would exceed three to one, upsetting predictions of both producers and exhibitors in diagnosing the public's true attitude toward the bargain policy.

runs in a metropolitan center whereby succeeding runs are enabled to show exactly the same attraction at gradually reducing retail (admission) prices, securing them at corresponding reductions in film rentals, thus finding an expanding market for the same 'merchandise' as the price goes down, and jumps to the conclusion that 'theatres which are operated by persons who lack connections or resources to display "first run" motion pictures are able to exist only by offering to the public something other than novelty. A common means of attracting audiences has been to offer an exhibition of two full length motion pictures at one performance and for one admission.'

"This in the face of the innumerable subsequent run theatres who have existed for years and years without using any double feature programs, and the considerably larger number of subsequent run theatres that use double bills only part of the time, but do right well with the better pictures on single feature bills," commented the MPTOA.

"We gather that the court was under the impression that the right to double and triple feature was the exclusive privilege of the small theatres playing last run, that this decision would protect them in a competitive advantage over the larger prior run theatres charging a relatively higher admission for single feature programs, and that in some mysterious way the larger theatres would be prevented from using double or triple features.

"To an intelligent exhibitor this is stupid," observed the MPTOA. "Experience in innumerable cities and towns shows that double feature competition in the absence of any control or restrain inevitably and quickly spreads from the smaller theatres to the larger theatres, that exhibitors who fully realize the demoralizing influence of such cutrate competition are forced to retaliate with the same practice in self-defense regardless of their own objections and their alleged 'right to determine their own theatre policies.'

"After all or most of the theatres are forced to adopt double features, where does the advantage lie? Certainly not with the little fellow, whose competitor now offers two better pictures than he can afford for one admission, and clearly not with the larger independent who divided the product with a circuit house, and who now is squeezed back into a later run on the best pictures. And certainly not with the independent exhibitor whose more powerful competitor buys and uses all of the major product to feed the double feature bookings.

Cites "Fallacious Conclusions"

"But the primary reason for the decision (of the court) seems to be not any particular concern for the exhibitor but to protect the alleged interests of the independent or state rights distributor and producer. Instead of relying on the merit of their productions to secure business, it seems they must rely on this scheme to give an artificial circulation to their pictures, not justified by their box office or entertainment value. Frankly, we don't believe this and think the independent producers make a mistake in tacitly insisting that their pictures are always inferior. In many instances they are the best money makers for the exhibitor.

"As everyone inside the industry well knows, the facts do not justify the belief that double featuring increases the number of independent features made. Before the widespread practice of double featuring in recent years, several times as many independent features were made, and such producers prospered, as evidenced by the fact that they grew to be major companies. Even today in zones where double featuring is not prevalent, independent distributors do relatively just as well, if not better, than in solid double feature territories.

"We all know that the major studios can turn out cheap features for double featuring just as easily as the independents, perhaps easier, and certainly in greater volume.

"Short Subjects Cheapened"

"The court ignores the fact that the spread of double feature competition tends to destroy the market for producers of short subjects, comedies, travelogues, novelties, scientific and educational subjects. The short subject producers, many of whom owned their own studios and maintained a year-round payroll, have all but been wiped out by double features. Have they no right to exist?

"We contend that the management of the theatres in each city or competitive area should be allowed to determine for themselves whether they should use double and triple features or not. If a substantial majority of such exhibitors desire double features without restraint, they should not be interfered with. But if a substantial majority should want it restrained, they should be allowed to voluntarily cooperate with each other for the best interests of their business without interference of selfish promoters of double feature competition.

"We do not favor the unrestrained and arbitrary control of this matter by the producers. But this decision (of the court) places an obstacle in the way of a distributor who wants to cooperate with the local exhibitors in such matters. We are inclined to believe that the distributors should use some judgment and discrimination in their contract clauses. Every company has some pictures that may not be worthy of single billing," the MPTOA's bulletin concluded.

DUALS LOSE GROUND IN TWO PLACES

In contrast to the vote by Detroit patrons expressing an overwhelming preference for two features on a single program, the practice is losing ground in certain locations in Kansas City and Seattle.

After dual billing for three months, Kansas City's first run Fox Uptown last week returned to singles and lowered admissions, because duals did not produce enough additional business to justify the added rental expense. On the other hand, duals have not gotten the hold in Kansas City that they have in some other cities.

In Seattle, the Hamrick-Evergreen circuit is beginning to waver on its recently announced dual bill policy for every one of its properties. The length of programs under the new order is understood to be causing concern.

Kennedy Submits Recapitalization Plan to RCA Board

A plan for recapitalization of Radio Corporation of America was formally presented to the members of the board of directors at a regular meeting late last week.

President David Sarnoff said another meeting of the board would be held at an early date to study Mr. Kennedy's recommendations and that until then no details would be given out.

Mr. Kennedy, however, said that in his study of the capital structure and the various plans submitted to deal with dividend arrears on the Class B preferred stock and the general situation with respect to recapitalization, he had carefully considered the status, rights and nature of each class of stock, which comprise one common and two preferred issues.

Wall Street reports, on the other hand, were to the effect that the proposed plan suggests an offer of cash and a new five per cent preferred issue to holders of the present seven per cent cumulating Class A preferred, which is callable at $55, and the issuance of four per cent preferred and $7 cash to an exchange for the $5 Class B preferred and accumulated dividends, which amounted to $11.50 on January 1.

Preferred A is now selling at about a half a point over its call price of $55. The Class B, on which no dividends are being paid, has been selling around $88. It is callable at $100.

Edward Schnitzer Joining Republic

Edward M. Schnitzer, at present Columbia Pictures branch manager in New York, has resigned to become eastern district manager for Republic Pictures. Mr. Schnitzer will assume his new duties within the next few weeks.

Before joining Columbia, Mr. Schnitzer was affiliated with Fox and other major companies. His appointment fills the vacancy created by the recent resignation of Budd Rogers, who is now vice-president and general manager of Alliance Films, the British International Pictures subsidiary in New York.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

"Old Faithful" is a piano, a piano that has had the longest active war service on record. It was in the training camp at New South Wales when the World War was declared; it then went aboard the troopship Ceremic, and was used by the various regiments carried in her, being moved from deck to deck for religious services, concerts, singing accompaniment and the like, as needed. Next it was landed in Alexandria, and saw a year's service in Egypt. In 1916 it traveled across the Mediterranean, narrowly missing a sea grave from a German torpedo. Then it stayed three years in France, doing double duty in rest camps and improvised concert halls for the military. She's now serving the Australians and is ready for service in Africa on a moment's notice if Mussolini does not believe John Bull is in earnest.

Kenneth Force, Quigley Publications correspondent, writes from his post in Kansas City about the three young men, who, considerably under the weather because of too many libations, dashed frantically through the Union Station a few afternoons ago and down through the train sheds toward a train about to depart Californiaward.

They ran breathlessly to climb onto the steps of the observation car, which had been winking its read tail light goodby to them. Two of the inebriates made the steps, and rode on, but the third stumbled and sprawled along the right of way.

Up dashed two burly redcaps who picked up the unfortunate chap, brushed him clean of clinkers, and commiserated with him.

"Too bad, boss, you missed dat train," they sympathized. "Your pals caught it, though," one comforted.

"Yesh?" came the dazed answer. "Well do you know—they were down here to shee me off!"

Richard Thorpe, MGM director, was in Missouri's Jefferson City the other day, picking up prison atmosphere for the Lionel Barrymore starring story, "The Voice of Bugle Ann." While visiting the penitentiary, so Lowell Lawrence tells us, Mr. Thorpe talked with a convict who is such an ardent movie fan that he subscribes to most of the film trade papers. The fellow said he was particularly interested in Barrymore's new "Bugle Ann," based on a story of feuds and fox hunting in the Missouri Ozarks, and asked Director Thorpe when he would be able to read reviews in the trade press of the new production. "Oh, it will be six or eight months before the film is ready," Mr. Thorpe replied.

"That consoling," answered the convict. "I'll still be here."

When King Edward Met William Fox

THE ACCESSION to England's throne of the Prince of Wales recalls to Jim Loughborough, now in Government service, the visit made by Prince Edward to the old Academy of Music, in New York, then owned by William Fox, in 1920.

Mr. Loughborough, serving at the time as Fox press agent, observed in the newspapers an item that told how the Prince of Wales had arrived from England on Canada's shores at Halifax, aboard HMS Renown, intent on a visit in the Dominion and later in the United States. Jim knew that when King Edward VII, Wales' grandfather, was Prince of Wales and visited New York he attended a grand ball at the Academy of Music. The hilarity was great. Some Sons of Erin in the balcony threw flower pots at the old Prince and a free-for-all melee followed, in which Wales' grandfather took part valiantly.

So Mr. Loughborough wired a message to the commander of the battleship Renown, inviting Wales to the Academy to carry out the family "tradition" established by old King Edward. Fox's general manager at the time, one Winfield Sheehan, advised Loughborough on the procedure. Next day came a reply from the commander telling the Fox lieutenants to communicate with the British Mission in Washington. There, arrangements were made to have the Prince include the Academy in his itinerary. Of course there was great excitement around the Fox offices in New York. John Zanft was appointed master of ceremonies. Plans were effected to rig up a camera with kleig lights in the theatre lobby to "shoot" William Fox greeting the royalty. Mr. Fox was told he would have to wear a dress suit and his yes-men and scenarists began rehearsing him on the speech he was to make. Mr. Fox, however, was unsuccessful in mastering the polished message of welcome and blew up. "The hell with that speech!" he shouted. "I'll agree to wear a dress suit if I can make my own speech."

Meanwhile the British Embassy became dreadly fearful of the Prince's visit to 14th Street and Irving Place, where bolshevists and their bombs were rampant. They tried to talk the Prince out of the visit, but to no avail.

Came the big day. There was a parade a mile long down New York's wide Fifth Avenue—Scottish bag-pipers, British war veterans, Irishmen with their Sunday shillalahs, American soldiers. The Prince rode in a taxicab. Arriving at the theatre he was startled at the lavishness of the movie mogul's reception. William Fox was there in his dress suit and boiled shirt. Jim Loughborough was wearing a uniform of a captain in the United States Army, with two foreign service stripes. Jim had met the Prince on the Ypres front, where he saw him try to "crash" the front line. A British major compelled him to go back, issuing his orders on the ground of military superiority. The next day Prince Edward returned in the uniform of a colonel and ordered the Major to take him over the front line, which was done with a true British sense of the power of a colonel over a major.

Anyway, at the Academy of Music the Prince spotted Loughborough, walked over to him with an extended hand and whispered: "For the love of Pete, have you got a 'ball?'"

The Fox crowd was in a tough spot. Prohibition was in effect. No provision had been made for liquor. Loughborough stormed over to Bill Fox. Fox became panic stricken. "Get Zanft," he bellowed. Zanft got the liquor.

Almost at the same hour that King George V was breathing his last, United Artists' home office in New York submitted to MOTION PICTURE HERALD, through the regular publicity channels, a picture of Queen Mary, the Duchess of Kent, Sir Connop Guthrie and members of royalty and the diplomatic corps at the Leicester Square theatre, London. It was the last public appearance of Queen Mary before the death of her husband and King. They saw "The Ghost Goes West."

The world down through the ages has and will acclaim Louis Pasteur for discovering virus to cure rabies, a cure for anthrax, and that the fermentation of wines and beer is due to germs. Monsieur Pasteur was quite a boy. But Warners think their Paul Muni, now starring in "The Life of Louis Pasteur," rates high, too. The motion picture is the occasion of Mr. Muni's tenth starring effort, and the company, in its press book to exhibitors, suggests that for purposes of exploitation, theatres playing the picture celebrate together the anniversaries of Mr. Pasteur's great scientific discoveries and Mr. Muni's tenth production.

87,300 THEATRES IN WORLD

The United States Government this week reported the existence of 87,299 motion picture theatres throughout the world, an increase of approximately 27,000 over 1934, located as follows: Europe, 60,150; United States, 15,378; Far East, 5,185; Central and Latin America, 5,044; Canada, 905; Africa and Near East, 637.

Compiled by Nathan D. Golden, chief of the motion picture section of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Thomas Burke, in charge, the report, made annually, shows the tremendous strides being made in exhibition everywhere, especially in Russia.

The 87,299 theatres throughout the world, geographically and by countries, at the end of 1935 compare with the three previous years as follows:

51,700 HOUSES ARE WIRED

Europe leads all countries in the world in advancing the position of sound motion pictures, sound theatres there increasing from 23,460 in 1934 to 27,956 at the end of 1935, when total wired theatres everywhere approximated 51,697, leaving some 35,602, both open and closed, still to be wired. Estimates of the increase in wired theatres in the United States can not be made because of incompleteness of the 1934 total.

The 51,697 sound theatres throughout the world, geographically and by countries, at the end of 1935 compare with the three previous years as follows:

338 NEW BRITISH COMPANIES IN YEAR CAPITALIZED AT 18 MILLION

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Official details of the new company registrations in Great Britain in 1935 indicate a continuance of the steady increase in film investments. The new companies connected with the industry numbered 338, representing a capital issue of £3,677,440 or, in round figures, $18,387,200. These included 12 public companies and 326 "private" registrations; the former took £664,500 ($3,322,500) and the latter £3,013,000 ($15,065,000).

Theatre companies registered were 162 and the total capital involved £587,465 ($2,837,325). Seven public companies took £257,000 ($1,235,000) of the money.

Of outstanding interest among the bigger issues were:

National Provincial Cinemas, Ltd. Capital increased from £100,000 to £750,000. This company is a subsidiary of Union Cinema Co., Ltd.

Gaumont Super Cinemas, Ltd., £400,000. Floated to absorb the H. & G. Kinemas, Ltd.

Technicolor, Ltd., £160,000.

The total registrations show a big increase over the figures for 1934, which were £1,257,335 for 259 companies.

The proportion of new trade capital which has been raised without an appeal for public money is a significant feature of the figures just given, and seems likely to characterize at least the first stages of expansion in 1936.

The first month of the year has seen several interesting registrations. Denham Laboratories, Ltd., with a nominal capital of £10,000 ($50,000) has been formed for the purpose of erecting a processing plant on a site neighboring the new London Films studio at Denham, with Sir Connop Guthrie, Alexander Korda, D. Oliver and S. Warburg as directors. It means that London will have a complete plant at its disposal for the production of films from the first negative shot to the completion of the last theatre print. Also, the capacity of the plant will be such as to provide a further extension of film processing services for independent producers.

Another £10,000 company, Worton Hall Studios, Ltd., indicates that the plant at Isleworth occupied by London while its own plant was building will be used chiefly by another United Artists affiliate, Criterion Productions, Ltd. A. S. Cunningham-Reid, M. P., Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Marcel Hellman, directors of Criterion, are also directors of the new studio company; the other director, Paul Czinner, is Elisabeth Bergner's husband and director; he at present is making "As You Like It," for Inter-Allied at B&D studio for Fox-Twentieth Century release.

Amalgamated Plan Advanced

New studio plans are announced almost daily, but there have been few on the scale of the Amalgamated plan, already described in the HERALD. This £500,000 plan has advanced to the stage that contracts with the builders stipulate for completion of the entire plant by early August, and Major Chas. H. Bell, O. B. E., one of the principal promoters, is sailing to New York in mid-February, with the intention of putting in 10 days there and three weeks in Hollywood, for the purpose of investigating the latest developments in studio equipment. Major Bell informs me that a large part of the Amalgamated equipment will definitely be American.

New Policy on Sunday Opening

Indications are that general trade policy on Sunday shows may veer around to the point of view of those who have opposed the local vote and the Charity levy on principle. Speaking at an Odeon circuit convention luncheon this week, Earl Winterton, M. P., declaring himself an out-and-out opponent of the principle of local option as applied to one interest only, offered to support a movement for Parliamentary action to remedy matters.

A later development, announced by one of the "trade M.P.'s"—Norman Hulbert, the news theatre chief—at the Manchester CEA dinner, is that a deputation is definitely to wait on the Government.

British & Dominions, under its long term contract with United Artists, will continue to produce the films for that company at its own studios at Boreham Wood, according to Captain Richard Norton, director of the B & D corporation. Capt. Norton said that all the pictures made for United Artists for the American market have been released there. A limited number of the productions for United Artists are intended for release in the States. Paul Soskin will produce for and in association with B & D three of the company's pictures for release through United Artists

"Disillusion" Publicity

The general secretary of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association has made an approach to British and American producing companies protesting against the issue of publicity stories or stills which illustrate the methods by which various screen effects are obtained. There has been a feeling for a long time—and not only among exhibitors—that the public has been told a great deal too much of model work, trick photography and "background faking."

'OPERA' BECOMES 'OPRY' FOR CHARLOTTE HOUSE

The management of the Carolina Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., feared that the word "opera" in the title of MGM's Marx Brothers comedy, "A Night at the Opera," would keep many away from the box-office, since "arty" pictures have a reputation for faring not so well in the Carolina metropolis. A hurried staff conference was called and some bright young man suggested changing one word in the title. As a result, "A Night at the Opry" appeared on the marquee and the picture had a good run.

Catholic Council And Bureau Will Select Film List

Appraisal of product for the single nationwide list supplanting sectional classifications to be published by the National League of Decency, the first to be dated February 6th, will be made under the direction of the New York Archdiocesan Council of the Legion of Decency with the cooperation of the Motion Picture Bureau of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae.

Alfred E. Smith is chairman of the Council. His associates on it are William F. Bleakley, Martin Conboy, George L. Cook, James A. Donnelly, James F. Dwyer, James A. Farrell, William T. Fetherston, George MacDonald, John E. Mack, John P. O'Brien, Morgan J. O'Brien, Arthur T. O'Leary, Martin Quigley, John J. Raskob and Alfred J. Talley. Rev. Joseph A. Day is executive secretary.

Mrs. James F. Looram is chairman of the Motion Picture Bureau of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae which will analyze the product and prepare the three classifications into which films will fall. Mrs. Thomas A. Bannin and Mrs. Richard Auspitzer are her running mates. Consultors for the bureau are Dr. Francis W. Baldwin, Rev. John M. Costello, Dr. Paluel J. Flagg, Rev. Philip J. Furlong, Carroll Hayes, Rev. Conrad I. McCoy, Frank J. Murphy, Raymond H. Reiss and Ignatius M. Wilkinson.

The classifications follow:

A (1)—Unobjectionable for general patronage.
(2)—Unobjectionable for adults.
B—Objectionable in part.
C—Condemned.

Court Rulings on Replacement Parts Bear on Erpi Issue

In view of issues and litigations concerning the use of unauthorized replacement parts in the maintenance of Western Electric theatre sound systems, two recent and seemingly related court decisions, one in the motor industry and one in the shoe machinery trade, are interesting the official staff of Electrical Research Products, Inc. In substance it appears that the courts hold to the notion that manufacturers are within their rights in contractual provisions against substitute parts.

These decisions tend to bear on the issue now pending before Judge Nields in Wilmington concerning the validity of the renewal and replacement parts clauses of the Erpi leases.

On Dec. 19, 1935, the circuit court of appeals for the seventh circuit handed down a decision in the action brought by Pick Manufacturing Company against General Motors Corporation, Chevrolet Motor Company and Buick Motor Company, in which the plaintiff charged violation by the defendants of the provisions, particularly Section 3, of the Clayton Act.

It appears that in each contract of Chevrolet Motor Company with a distributor of, or dealer in, Chevrolet cars and replacement parts, there is included the following provision:

"Dealer will agree that he will sell genuine, new Chevrolet parts and accessories at not more than the current list price issued by seller. Dealer will agree that he will not sell, offer for sale, or use in the repair of Chevrolet motor vehicles and chassis, second-hand or used parts or any part or parts not manufactured by or authorized by the Chevrolet Motor Company, division of General Motors Corporation. It is agreed that dealer is not granted any exclusive selling rights in genuine Chevrolet parts."

A similar provision is found in like contracts of the Buick Company.

The plaintiff contended that the inevitable effect of the above provisions is to prevent dealers in General Motors cars and replacement parts from purchasing and using for General Motors cars replacement parts manufactured by plaintiff and other independent makers of parts; that competition in the sale of replacement parts is and will be substantially lessened and decreased, and that, therefore, the above provisions are in violation of the Clayton Act.

The circuit court of appeals, however, found that General Motors gives each purchaser of its cars a warranty against defects in material and workmanship for ninety days or until the vehicle has been driven 4,000 miles, whichever event shall first occur, and that the warranty does not apply to any vehicle which shall have been repaired or altered so as, in the judgment of the manufacturers, to affect its stability and reliability.

By this decision, the circuit court of appeals for the seventh circuit adopts similar reasoning of the trial court in the second United Shoe Machinery case.

CHANCE GAMES WIN IN TWO TESTS, LOSE ONE

Maine and Iowa Courts Sanction Bank Nights; Massachusetts Judges Say Illegal

The courts of Maine and Iowa this week gave complete victories to Bank Nights and such forms of box-office procedure, but Massachusetts' judges declared the practice illegal, and the St. Louis municipal government effected a ban against it, while the fate of the practice hung in the balance in the courts of New York.

What amounted to a virtual victory for Bank Night took place in Maine this week when the courts at Bangor refused to hand down a decision on anti-lottery charges brought by County Attorney Ralph Dale. Following the court's action Mr. Dale indicated he would press the case no further. Therefore, inasmuch as the litigation, which involved the M. and P. Theatres Corporation as the operators of the Opera House in Bath, was a test case, the discharge is held to be a victory for the chance game.

Further south, in Boston, on the other hand, Bank Night was declared illegal in the state of Massachusetts by a supreme court jury in the test case there and Judge Thomas H. Dowd fined James Wall, manager of the Fellsway theatre, Medford, $200 for violation of the lottery law. The jury was out less than five minutes after being instructed by Judge Dowd to return a verdict of guilty if they found Bank Night involved an element of chance for a consideration directly or indirectly.

In an opinion rendered by the Iowa supreme court, however, it was held that Bank Night does not constitute a violation of the state's anti-lottery laws and as a result it was reported that 270 houses would return at once to use of the device.

In St. Louis, Circuit Attorney Franklin Miller declared that the practice of giving away cash prizes or automobiles at motion picture theatres or other places of amusement, etc., constitutes an illegal lottery and has insisted upon police department coperation in preventing the practice. Fanchon and Marco houses and the neighborhood theatres only will fall under the proscription for other first run theatres had not entered the field.

Three Cases in New York

The future of chance games in the metropolitan theatres of the Loew's circuit in New York is contingent on the outcome of three cases pending against the circuit in special sessions court, The Bronx.

Two of the complaints filed by the district attorney are against the Elsmere and Grand and are scheduled for hearing on February 21. The third involves the Paradise, de luxe house, which is slated to be heard on February 28. Screeno is the game being used in the three theatres.

Last week the appellate division of the supreme court in Brooklyn upheld a decision of special sessions court in that borough. The case involved the Winthrop, an independent theatre, which was the respondent, and Farmer Miller was the name of the game. In affirming the lower court's verdict, the appellate court held that prizes awarded as a result of spinning a wheel in a theatre are a violation of the lottery laws. Weisman, Quinn, Allen and Spett, which represented the exhibitor, plan to seek leave to file an appeal with the court of appeals.

Owners Filing Suits

Concurrent with the various court cases to test whether or not Bank Night violates anti-lottery laws, Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., owners of the game, are continuing to file suits charging infringement of its copyright. Kansas City is the scene of the latest action with the filing of an equity suit in the federal court there against E. S. Young, theatre owner; Frank Bowen, supply man; W. Edgar Orndorff, attorney, and members of the Independent Theatre Owners operating a Sweepstakes Night pool. Unfair competition is charged through the resemblance of Sweepstakes to Bank Night and an accounting, damages and a restraining order are asked.

In Chicago Affiliated dropped its infringement case against six houses of the McCollum circuit when the operator of the houses agreed to use the Bank Night plan instead of his Cash Night idea. Suits against the Alger and Anderson circuits, scheduled to be heard soon, are expected to be settled in the same manner.

In Bangor Affiliated was declared the victor in the $2,500 suit brought by Harry Berman of Rockland, who alleged the amount was due him as commissions for selling the game in Maine.

Kleckner Heads New Motiograph

At the annual meeting of Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, held this week in Chicago, the name of the company was changed to Motiograph, Inc., along with the election of Joseph B. Kleckner as president and general manager. Francis E. Matthews, Mr. Kleckner and Arthur T. Spring were chosen directors. Other officers picked were E. J. Wienke, vice-president in charge of production, and W. R. Hirschfield, vice-president in charge of sales.

Records of the company show that during the last six months there has been 100 per cent increase in sales and that new distributorships have been arranged.

THE PERELMAN DECISION

IN THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT

No. 5841 October Term, 1935

VITAGRAPH, INC., RKO DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, PARAMOUNT PICTURES DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, FOX FILMS CORPORATION, UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION, Defendants-Appellants, vs. HARRY PERELMAN and LOUIS PERELMAN, Individually and as Co-Partners, Plaintiffs-Appellees.

APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA OPINION

(Filed January 16, 1936)

Before Buffington, Davis and Thompson, Circuit Judges

Buffington, Circuit Judge

This is an appeal from a decree of the District Court in a suit in equity under sections 12 and 16 of the Clayton Act for an injunction to restrain violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and section 3 of the Clayton Act. The District Court held that the appellants, hereinafter called defendants, as they were below, had violated certain provisions of those acts and entered a decree restraining them from further violations.

The appellees, Harry Perelman and Louis Perelman, hereinafter called plaintiffs, are the owners and operators of two motion picture theatres in Philadelphia.

The defendants, Vitagraph, Inc., RKO Distributing Corporation, Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, United Artists Corporation, and Fox Films Corporation, are distributors of motion pictures in interstate commerce. The Fox Films Corporation is the only one of the defendants who also produces motion pictures.

Definitions

Motion pictures are exhibited either in theatres which are controlled in some fashion by producing companies or their subsidiaries or in theatres operated by persons who are not connected with producers or their subsidiaries such as the two theatres owned and operated by the plaintiffs. The first group of exhibitors is called "affiliated theatres" and the second "independent theatres."

There are a number of affiliated theatres in Philadelphia. With their connections, they are able to display the earliest exhibitions of motion pictures released by the largest producers through their distributors. Naturally this gives to them a considerable advantage.

Theatres which are operated by persons who lack the connection or resources to display "first-run" motion pictures are able to exist only by offering the public something other than novelty. A common means of attracting audiences has been to offer an exhibition of two full length motion pictures at one performance for one admission.

The group of producers which the defendants represent furnish considerably more than half of all the motion pictures exhibited in the United States. The remainder of the pictures are produced by a few other large producers, not defendants here, and a group of small companies, sometimes called "independent" or "minor" producers.

The independent theatres are required by necessity to purchase motion pictures from the defendant. They would be unable to remain in business without offering such exhibitions and the defendants and their connections derive a large share of their income from these theatres.

The right of an independent exhibitor to show two feature pictures on a single program without contractual interference from large distributors was upheld last week for the second time in a year by the United States circuit court of appeals in Philadelphia in the so-called Perelman case. That the distributors may carry the case to the U. S. supreme court is noted in the story on page 23.

The independent theatres, including the plaintiffs, purchase motion pictures for the purpose of exhibition from the major producers or their distributors by contract for a period of time in anticipation of their needs. The method used is known to the industry as "block booking." At the time the contracts are made, the motion pictures are not identified, the contracts simply call for a supply of films to fill the number of exhibitions anticipated.

In the case of the plaintiffs, the contracts with the defendants contain a clause in which the plaintiffs agree not to display another full length motion picture or feature with the one supplied by the contract. The clauses prohibiting double featuring are worded differently but are contained in one form or another in the plaintiff's contracts with all of the defendants. The following clauses appear to be typical of those used:

"Exhibitor agrees not to exhibit any other pictures of feature length."

"The exhibitor agrees not to exhibit any of the feature photoplays licensed for exhibition hereunder at the same performance with any other photoplay of feature length, that is, as part of a double feature program: that upon volation hereof distributor shall have the right to terminate this agreement and recover from the exhibitor as damages for such violation the license fee payable in respect of all photoplays not theretofore exhibited hereunder."

"Exhibitor agrees not to exhibt any of the photoplays licensed for exhibition hereunder at the same performance, with any other photoplay of feature length. That is as part of a double feature program and that upon violation hereof distributor shall have the right to change or modify the run, availability and/or protection herein provided for."

The plaintiffs base their suit on the clauses in their contracts prohibiting double featuring.

Contract Requirements

The district court found as facts that in order to obtain feature motion pictures which are necessary to the continued existence of the plaintiffs and other independent theatres, they must sign the contracts in the form offered by the defendants, that they cannot survive by exhibiting features produced solely by minor producers; that the double feature clauses cause such independent theatres to purchase fewer feature films and lessens the production of such films by minor or independent producers; that double featuring increases the production of full length films.

The court further found as facts that the prohibiting of double featuring tends to create a monopoly in the production and distribution of pictures in the defendants and their affiliates and connections in the motion picture industry; that it tends to lessen competition by restricting such independent theatres from purchasing from the defendants' competitors; that the restrictive clauses are the result of an agreement among the defendants and the other major interests in the industry; and that the insertion of the restrictive clauses in the contracts is the result of a combination and conspiracy among the defendants and other major companies in the industry.

The court concluded as a matter of law that the restrictive double feature clauses were inserted in their contracts with the plaintiffs as the result of a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce among the several states, and that the combination or conspiracy lessens competition and tends to create a monopoly of interstate commerce and trade, and that by placing such clauses in the contracts, the defendants have violated section 1 of the Sherman Act and section 3 of the Clayton Act and that the plainiffs are entitled to an injunction. These sections provide as follows:

Section 1 of the Sherman Act

"Section 1, Trusts, etc., in restraint of trade, illegal; penalty. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations is declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the Court. (July 2, 1890, c 647 Sec. 1 26 Stat. 209) 15 U. S. C. A. 1.

Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

"14. Sale, etc., on agreement not to use goods of Competitor. It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, . . . on the condition, agreement or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale or contract for sale or such condition, agreement or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. (Oct. 15, 1914, 323 Sec. 3, 38 Stat. 731)" 15 U. S. C. A. 14.

The defendants contend that there is no evidence of a combination or conspiracy among the defendants concerning the double feature clauses contained in the plaintiffs' contracts and that if the evidence supported such a finding, the restrictive clauses constitute neither a violation of the Sherman Act nor of the Clayton Act.

The first question is whether or not the defendants have as a fact combined and conspired to prohibit the exhibition of double features. We have no power to disturb the finding of the district court if there is any substantial evidence to support it.

It is admitted that double featuring has been a serious problem in the industry. In some sections of the country it is a common practice in motion picture theatres. In certain urban districts, small theatres generally independently owned have resorted to the practice to enable them to compete with the larger, more luxurious theatres which enjoy the privileges of exhibiting first run motion pictures and other attractions. Without enlarging on that condition in the industry, a great many implications immediately arise.

The testimony bears them out despite the insistence of the defendants by a greater number of witnesses that they have neither combined, nor conspired nor agreed to destroy the practice of exhibiting double features.

There is testimony to the following effect:

The defendants are connected with the strongest interests of the industry. They distribute more than half of the annual production in which the artists who command the largest audiences are displayed. Their productions are the most comprehensive and pleasing. While they compete among themselves, they have a common interest in confronting the minor or independent producers who lack the resources to manufacture exhibitions on their scale. The independent theatres require their productions in order to continue in business. But to improve their business and to permit them in some fashion, other than by offering lower prices of admission, to carry on in the face of the de luxe theatres, they must exhibit double features. The independent theatres generally purchase the second full length film from the independent producer but they are prohibited from exhibiting double features, as in the case of the plaintiffs, by their contracts with the major producers. Thus, they purchase less films from the independent producers.

DISTRICT COURT RULING IS BINDING

With such a situation existing in the industry, one might logically be struck with the idea that it is more than mere coincidence that the defendants who represent a large majority of the major producers are in unanimity in prohibiting double features in their contracts. The fact that this unanimity of purpose is not carried out formally in the same language does not destroy the inference. Coincidence in form as well as purpose might have been fatal; while here the plaintiffs are required to bring forward other evidence to establish their case.

The finding of the district court that a combination and conspiracy existed among the defendants is binding upon us in view of the testimony of the plaintiffs' witness, (I. E.) Chadwick, an independent producer, and (Ed) Kuykendall, the president of the largest organization of independent theatres.

Chadwick testified as to the development and growth of the double featuring which led to the prohibition of the practice by the defendants in their California contracts in 1930. That resulted in a consent decree to the effect that the defendants had entered into a conspiracy violating the Sherman Act. Dissatisfaction with the injunction caused the industry in 1932 to agree voluntarily to discontinue double featuring. On May 1, 1934, at a meeting of exhibitors, producers and distributors in Los Angeles at which the defendants were represented, an executive of one of the defendants purported to speak on behalf of the defendants and stated that a method had been devised to stop the exhibition of double features and that the distributors could take and had taken steps to remove the menace. He further stated to the meeting that the practice had been stopped in Chicago and if the theatres wanted features, they must use "our features and not use double features."

Kuykendall, a witness for the defendant, testified how he and the association which he represented repeatedly urged the defendants to stop double featuring and that they agreed to cooperate with his association to that end.

Admitted as Fact

The testimony as to the consent decree was not admitted as, or intended to be, prima facie evidence against the defendants in this case, but was simply admitted as a fact in showing the activity of the defendants to prevent double featuring and as such the testimony was admissible.

The defendants argue that Chadwick's testimony concerning the statements made at the meeting in May, 1934, by the executive who purported to represent the defendants there present was inadmissible. Their contention is based on the rule that agency cannot be proved by the declarations of an agent. That is so,

ACCENTS ARE CHANGED FOR FOREIGN AUDIENCE

Ashton Dearholt, vice-president in charge of production of Burroughs-Tarzan Pictures, has inaugurated a new practice in recording pictures that will be released in England as well as in this country. He makes the pictures with two sound tracks, with the accents placed on various words in the right places for use in the British Isles and where they should be so as not to grate upon American ears.

but the speaker was the president of the distributor's organization and he was introduced in the presence of the defendants to speak and did speak on their behalf. Furthermore, this is not a question of agency, but was simply a statement by one of the conspirators in the presence of the other conspirators of what they had done and intended to do to stop double featuring.

The defendants point to the fact that a number of their witnesses who were either officers or managing agents in the Philadelphia district of one or another of the defendants, testified to the effect that there was no conspiracy or concerted action between the defendants in reference to the double feature provisions of the contract. They further testified that in every case, such provisions were the result of independent judgment.

As we have stated heretofore, we cannot retry this case for the defendants. The authorities they cite are inapplicable here. Ariasi v. Orient Insurance Company, 50 Fed. (2d) 548 (C. C. A. 9); Arnall Mills v. Smallwood, 68 Fed. (2d) 57 (C. C. A. 5); Pennsylvania Railroad Company v. Chamberlain, 288 U. S. 333. The District Court did not arbitrarily reject the defendant's testimony. It chose rather to accept as probable the plaintiffs' case which was built on a background of direct and circumstantial evidence. That is the right of the trial court.

The defendants pointed out that the plaintiffs argued that the testimony of the executives and the managers was inherently improbable because they testified that the defendants had not discussed the matter of double featuring with one another. The defendants go on to say:

"Everybody in the motion picture industry knew the rule laid down by the Supreme Court in the Paramount Case (Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation v. United States, infra) and every one of these large organizations understood that it must act in the formation of its policies according to its independent judgment and without conference or agreement with its competitors. This is the perfectly obvious reason why the men in the various defendant companies did not discuss this question of policy with each other, but acted on their own judgment."

That argument in itself has been seized upon, with some justification, by the plaintiffs to bring the defendants within the rule that a conspiracy may be made out without express words or writings but simply by working toward a common purpose through a tacit understanding or agreement. (Thornton, On Combinations in Restraint of Trade, page 492 and the cases cited therein.) The defendants might have refrained from discussing openly in conference the question of double featuring for the obvious reason of avoiding violations of the principles laid down in the Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation v. United States, 282, U. S. 30.

In that case, the supreme court held that an agreement of the ten competitors controlling 60 per cent of the motion picture industry to refuse to contract with exhibitors except on a standard form which provides for compulsory joint arbitration violated section 1 of the Sherman Act. The court said therein:

"It may be that arbitration is well adapted to the needs of the motion picture industry; but when under the guise of arbitration parties enter into unusual arrangements which unreasonably suppress normal competition their action becomes illegal."

The second question is whether or not the restrictive double feature clauses in the defendants' contracts wth the plaintiffs resulting from a combination or conspiracy between the defendants violate section 1 of the Sherman Act and section 3 of the Clayton Act.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act makes contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of interstate trade or commerce illegal. Section 3 of the Clayton Act outlaws contracts in which a party agrees not to use the goods of a competitor.

Appalachian Coal Case

In Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344,359, the court said:

"The purpose of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act is to prevent undue restraints of interstate commerce, to maintain its appropriate freedom in the public interest, to afford protection from the subversive or coercive influences of monopolistic endeavor. As a charter of freedom, the Act has a generality and adaptability comparable to that found to be desirable in constitutional provisions. It does not go into detailed definitions which might either work injury to legitimate enterprise or through particularization defeat its purposes by providing loopholes for escape. The restrictions the Act imposes are not mechanical or artificial. Its general phrases, interpreted to attain its fundamental objects, set up the essential standard of reasonableness. They call for vigilance in the detection and frustration of all efforts unduly to restrain the free course of interstate commerce, but they do not seek to establish a mere delusive liberty either by making impossible the normal and fair expansion of that commerce or the adoption of reasonable measures to protect it from injurious and destructive practices and to promote competition upon a sound basis. The decisions establish, said this Court in Nash v. United States, 229 U. S. 373,376, 'that only such contracts and combinations are within the act as, by reason of intent or the inherent nature of the contemplated acts, prejudice the public interests by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the course of trade.'"

The double feature clauses undoubtedly reduce the production of full length motion pictures. So great is the public demand for the defendants' films that independent theatres must exhibit them in order to stay in business. If they do exhibit features of one of the defendants they must agree not to display at the same time a feature of another producer. This naturally prevents exhibitors from purchasing films from producers who are in competition with the defendants and destroys the opportunity of those independent producers to produce and sell more films. The necessary and inevitable tendency of the conspiracy or combination is to produce a material and unreasonable restraint on interstate commerce. Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation v. United States, 282 U. S. 30.

Business necessity forces the exhibitors to buy from the defendants. It is true that they need not deal with the defendants, if they do not wish to do so, but if they do not do so, they would be driven out of business. The effects of the double feature clauses naturally result in strengthening the position of the defendants and weakening that of independent competitor.

The defendants contend that the double feature provisions were adopted for the best interests of the industry, their customers and the public and that the effects and motives of the defendants are important in determining whether or not there is an undue restraint of trade. For this, they rely upon the case of Appalachian Coals, supra.

"No Undue Restraint"

In that case, the supreme court carefully considered evidence relating to the economic conditions existing in the bituminous coal industry to determine whether or not an agreement among coal producers to eliminate competitive and destructive practices was illegal. The court concluded that under the facts of that case, there was no undue restraint of competition and commerce and no violation of the Sherman Act. The court said that "the question under the Act is not simply whether the parties have restrained competition between themselves but as to the nature and effect of that restraint."

But the court was emphatic in stating that good motives or intentions or benefits to the industry must give way to the law and if there is an undue restraint of commerce and impairment of fair competitive opportunities, the statute must be applied.

The court did not intend that the Appalachian Coals case should change its interpretation of the anti-trust laws. The test laid down in NASH v. UNITED STATES, 229 U. S. 373,376 (quoted in the Appalachian case) has been restated, approved and applied time and again. Maple Flooring Association v. United States, 263 U. S. 403; Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation v. United States 282, U. S. 30.

In this case the district court found that the defendants had combined or conspired to outlaw the exhibition of full length motion pictures. The evidence of the conditions in the industry leads to the conclusion that the inclusion of those provisions in the contracts between the defendants and independent exhibitors seriously affects the exhibitors and the smaller producer. This tends to reduce production and stifle competition. Whether or not the defendants intended to suppress competition, we do not need to know; the fact is that their contracts operated to that effect.

Declares Law Violated

It may also be said for the same reasons that in practical effect, the restrictive clauses relating to the exhibition of double features result in contracts not to use the goods of competitors and that such clauses both substantially lessen competition from independent exhibitors and producers and tend to create a monopoly in the defendants or their connected interests. United Shoe Machinery Company v. United States, 258 U. S. 451.

The plaintiffs brought suit under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and section 3 of the Clayton Act, but the district court found that the defendants had violated only section 1 of the Sherman Act and section 3 of the Clayton Act. The proofs unquestionably show that the defendants violated section 1 of the Sherman Act which entitles plaintiffs to injunctive relief under section 16 of the Clayton Act. It becomes unnecessary to determine whether or not the defendants also violated section 2 of the Sherman Act. It may be that section 3 of the Clayton Act was also violated, but as there is some question as to the sufficiency of the pleadings to support such a finding, we do not determine that question here.

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., First National Pictures, Inc., and Paramount Publix Corporation were declared as parties in the bill of complaint in this case. They are producers outside of the jurisdiction of the trial court and were not served. While their names appear in the caption on appeal, they were in fact not proper parties and consequently have been omitted from it.

The decree of the district court is affirmed.

File Amended Complaint In New York Trust Action

A second amended complaint is now on file in Lockport, N. Y., in the $750,000 anti-trust suit of Reliance Theatres, of Lockport against Schine Chain Theatres and other defendants. Actual damages of $250,000 and punitive damages of $500,000 are sought by the plaintiff, operator of the Palace, Lockport, on the plea that the defendants conspired to prevent it obtaining motion pictures from major producers.

Peter Grafiades, Reliance president, is the complainant. Defendants are J. Myer Schine, Louis W. Schine, John A. May, Vitagraph, Inc., First National, Fox, Paramount, United Artists, Columbia, Universal, and RKO.

500 Expected to Attend Reviewers' Conference

About 500 delegates are expected at the 12th annual conference of the National Board of Review to be held at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York, February 5 to February 8. On the morning of the opening day they will be guests of the Committee on Exceptional Photoplays and will see "The Life of Louis Pasteur."

During the afternoon and evening they will meet newspaper critics, Young Reviewers and 4-Star Club representatives for an exposition of the juvenile viewpoint on motion picture trends.

Complaints Filed in Two A T & T Suits

Complaints in two suits seeking triple damages of $10,500,000 from American Telephone and Telegraph and subsidiaries were filed in Federal court in New York last week. The complaints allege a monopoly in restraint of trade in the sound equipment field.

The actions were instituted about six months ago by Thomas F. James, assignee of a claim by the Granger Manufacturing Company, and by Bernard R. Gogle, assignee of a claim by Standard Sound Recording Corporation.

$2,000,000 Worth of Chaplin Fun on Screen Wednesday

Charles Spencer Chaplin will span 23 years of motion picture comedy next Wednesday evening with placement of $2,000,000 worth of Chaplin pantomime and farce on the screen of the Rivoli theatre on Broadway, in the form of "Modern Times." Mr. Chaplin will charge New York's white-ermined, top-hatted first nighters $5.50 admission to see the "world premiere" performance of his "tramp" becoming involved in the cross-currents of Cosmopolitan life.

Loew Bid Wins

The Rivoli opening is principally United Artists ballyhoo. From there the picture will go to work, first at the Loew theatres in New York. After unusual spirited bidding among New York circuit executives for the rights to the first general showing, Loew's looked like the best bdder and mndway during the negotiations Mr. Chaplin personally concluded the sale by long distance telephone from his studio in Hollywood. Both sides say that the rental price is a "humdinger."

The picture itself has been coming along now for some 18 months, Mr. Chaplin having spent a quarter of a year polishing and cutting from the rough and another two-months determining when and where he would place it for the public's first glimpse. The interest stirred up in the meanwhile has taken such invaluable tangible form in the printed page and rotogravurewise that Mr. Chaplin's return to the screen after five years, almost to the day, has been a challenge to the security of Mr. Mickey Mouse as the record holding "space grabber." (Charles Chaplin lighted theatre marquees with "City Lights" in February, 1931).

Tickets for the premiere performance—no others are scheduled at the moment—went on sale Wednesday morning at the Rivoli with much banner waving by the home office of United Artists, which company distributes. A special box office was set up at the Rivoli for this purpose and the nearby Times Square police station notified to be ready with reserves. Seats may be secured for as low as $2.20—far in the darkness of the neck-craning balcony regions.

Starting Thursday morning, "Modern Times" will be shown in continuous performances at popular prices, with midnight showings nightly.

Chaplin Composed Music, Too

Mr. Chaplin, as usual, not only starred, but wrote the story, produced, financed, prepared, directed, and supervised the production—and even composed the music. Carter De Haven and Henry Bergman assisted him directorially, Alfred Newman recorded, Rollie Totheroh and Ira Morgan photographed and Charles D. Hall designed the settings.

Most of the supporting players have been with Chaplin since his earliest days—Hank Mann, Louis Natheux, Henry Bergman, Chester Conklin, Stanley Sandford, Allen Garcis.

"Modern Times" represents the first production made by Mr. Chaplin from a prepared script. Usually he takes two years to shoot "off the cuff."

Coincident with the premiere, the publicity department at United Artists is sending to every chief editorial writer in the country a 12-page booklet with pictures explaining the personalities, statistical data and other facts on the production. This procedure is a new one in publicizing motion pictures, and will embrace 1,500 editorial writers on all newspapers with a circulation of 5,000 or more.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 7.—(A) What is meant by "feed-back"? (B) What is the effect of too much tension at the projector aperture? (C) What is the primary purpose of transformers? (D) What is a Maxwell?

Answer to Question No. 3 (New Series)

Bluebook School Question No. 3 was: (A) What is important with regard to the immediate surroundings of the screen? (B) What two kinds of trouble are caused by imperfect contacts in amplifiers? (C) May anything less than a No. 14 wire be used inside a theatre? (D) In what conductor of electricity does resistance decrease with rise in temperature?

The following answered sufficiently well to justify credit being given: C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; H. Edwards; A. L. Cooper; B. DeVietti; J. R. Prater; C. Umphrey; H. I. Moseley; W. C. Brown; P. and L. Felt; P. Howard; H. C. Goodman, Jr., G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; C. H. Toidte; D. L. and M. Rice; H. C. Goodman and N. N. Gray; T. W. Williams; M. and J. Devoy; J. T. Stanhope; L. A. Dodson and H. T. Todd; D. M. Lutz; O. R. Jones; V. G. Purvis; M. M. Sitman; L. D. Hill; P. Gregeson, H. T. Matley and J. Tomkins; D. J. Murphy and M. D. Fowler; M. L. Cummings; B. H. Thaller; T. W. Peterson and E. W. Ford; B. L. White; G. N. Guidotti, F. L. and N. Savlor; H. D. Sankey and F. R. Thomas; E. R. Muller; D. L. Simmons; C. O. Bartlett, D. Carille, P. L. Perry and W. Williams; L. U. Davis; S. T. Rogers; D. Emmerson; T. L. Bradbury; D. Allen and M. Spencer; N. Prane and B. R. Mills; T. H. Morton, F. H. and L. Klar; D. U. Granger and L. B. Proctor; R. and K. Wells; T. L. and G. Daniels; M. Spencer and D. Allen; T. R. Bougeson; T. R. Cotty; W. Burns and T. R. Fanning; T. T. Davidson and R. G. Crews; J. McGuire; J. Hawkins; L. B. McCabe; J. Dixon; H. Kalis; J. A. O'Connell and R. Jones; R. R. Hamill, B. L. Long and P. Mendelson.

(A) Evans and Rau say, "Immediate surroundings of screen should be toned so that the picture will stand out and the eyes not be distracted by objectionable spots of light."

A. L. Cooper says, "It is important that screen surroundings be such as will not distract the eye while the screen is in use. By using a black border and dark drapes on the stage, excellent results are obtained, though it is quite permissible to shade off from the black border into a lighter color."

B. DeVietti says, "When looking at the picture the only thing consciously visible to the eye should be the picture itself. If truly realistic results in presentation are to be attained that must be the condition."

J. R. Prater says, "For best results immediate screen surroundings must be plain and dark, therefore inconspicuous. Preferably the edging of the picture should be non-glossy black for several inches, then shading gradually through perhaps three feet to match surroundings, with no point light enough to distract the eye, and of course no glare spots of light."

D. Danielson says, "It is highly important that the screen be made the one and only center of attraction during a screen presentation. This can only be accomplished by eliminating all distracting lights and objects from the spectator line of vision. The best way is to border the screen with non-glossy black and then work gradually out, shading down to the auditorium tones."

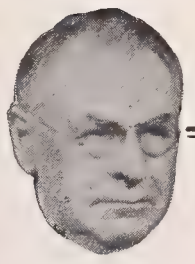
(B) H. Moseley says, "I believe this question is rather limiting. Imperfect contacts, which may include soldered connections, will invariably cause noise and raise resistance values, perhaps to such a point that sound values will fall to a lower level."

P. Howard says, "Bad contacts in an amplifier and its component parts can cause more trouble and happen more often than any other one trouble in a projection room. Its two most common and serious results are (1) loud, hashing, intermittent noises, noticeable to an extent that is very annoying, (2) very bad contact in certain circuits may cause the loss of sound entirely, necessitating stoppage of the show until the trouble is located and repaired. The number of points where bad contact may occur are very numerous in any sound system. Very careful attention should be given all moving contacts, spring clips, spring contacts, binding posts, tube sockets and bases, soldered connections and other points where bad contact may develop."

H. G. Goodman and N. N. Gray say, "Imperfect contacts will cause (1) noises in the sound, (2) if bad enough, complete loss of sound on one or both projectors."

C. H. Toidte (if that is the correct spelling of the name) says, "Bad contacts in amplifiers result in rasping noisy sound issuing from the speakers. A very poor contact, as for example a poorly soldered connection or a loose spring clip in a tube socket or volume control, poor contacts between switch points, etc., may result in total loss of sound, or if it (as may be the case) be a make and break, then the sound loss will be intermittent."

(C) There were more than 600 who said nothing smaller than a No. 14 may be used inside a theatre and keep within fire underwriters' rules.



(D) D. Danielson says, "Carbon is the only exception to the rule insofar as has to do with electrical conductors. With carbon, the rule that resistance increases as temperature rises is reversed."

W. C. Brown says, "The resistance of all electrical conductors except carbon rises with the temperature. With carbon the resistance decreases as temperature rises. With insulating materials the resistance usually decreases with decreasing temperature. I performed an experiment, as follows: Wires were fused into each end of a rod of glass, which then was connected to a power supply source and an ammeter. The glass was heated and when it neared the fusing point it was found to be a very good conductor."

Any one may join the Bluebook school at any time merely by sending in answers to the questions, addressed to F. H. Richardson, No. 3 Tudor Lane, Scarsdale, N. Y. However it is necessary to place your name and address and the number of the question being answered at the top of the first page of each answer.

O. L. Daris appends the following to an answer: "I have been through the school course once, but intend to stick. I find that I forget some things and get rusty on others. The school, I find, keeps me brushed up on knowledge and on my toes. It has helped me more than I could tell you, Dad, and I'm going right through again. My compliments! The new book is a humdinger. Didn't think you could ever do anything better than you did in that fifth edition, but you did! It has all other projection books (and I guess I've seen them all) looking like plugged nickels. CHICAGO EXPOSITION COMPETITION DENIED

Chairman Says Permanent Fair Will Help Theatres; Project Eliminates Entertainment Films

by BILL CROUCH
Chicago Correspondent

Walter L. Gregory, vice-president of the Palmer House and chairman of the permanent Chicago Exposition Commission, addressed the members of the Chicago Amusement Publicists Association (CAPA) last week and told of the plans being made for this forty million dollar venture.

Mr. Gregory pointed out that the establishment of a permanent fair or exposition would be a boon to local amusement interests rather than a handicap. The forms of recreation and entertainment to be offered would be of a nature non-competitive to theatres and of a type that would bring thousands of outsiders to Chicago, he said.

Basing his statement on figures taken from statistics compiled by Century of Progress officials, Mr. Gregory said that bringing thousands of persons to the Loop area during the fair had brought a great amount of revenue to outlying districts as well. He revealed that more than 200,000 additional persons had been employed in the loop area as a result of the increase in business brought by the exposition and in turn these persons had spent their wages in the outlying neighborhoods where their homes were. The same would hold true with the permanent fair, Mr. Gregory believes.

The lake front area from 12th street to 23rd street, which is known at Burnham Park, and the Northerly Island area would be the site for the permanent exposition. More than $7,000,000 in WPA funds is being spent to beautify and landscape this section. The site will then be ready for any permanent structures the commission plans to erect.

Some of the types of recreation and amusement now being tentatively planned include bathing beaches, roller and ice skating rinks, for winter and summer use, a huge convention hall, outdoor and indoor amphitheatres for opera and concerts, a huge medical research laboratory, an agricultural and horticultural building for experimental and educational purposes and many other similar projects.

The impression many have that the exposition will be a form of "Coney Island" is absolutely incorrect, according to Mr. Gregory. No such types of concessions are being contemplated and will never be accepted, he feels.

The showing of motion pictures as entertainment will have no part in the plans for the fair, either, Mr. Gregory said. He feels that this phase of entertainment is well taken care of in both the Loop and outlying sections and the theatres in Chicago are of such high caliber that it would be foolish for the exposition to try to compete with them in any way.

An admission price will be charged to enter the exposition grounds at all times, thus averting unfair competition.

The Chicago American and the Chicago Daily News have been staging a fight for theatrical advertising lineage. The American last week ran ads for 124 theatres, which they claim is a record. All ads were for three lines or more. Special emphasis was placed upon their statement that all advertising of this nature was paid for and not run gratis. Reports are that theatre advertising in some local newspapers of late has not all been sold, but donated in some instances in order to get a higher representation.

A thermometer that for the past 10 days has registered below the zero mark has played havoc with theatre grosses in and around Chicago. This inclement weather is so severe that late shows at night have played to practically empty theatres, this despite the fact that film offerings are the best in many months. Were it not for the fact that last week the American Canners held their national convention here, the grosses for that period would have been exceptionally low. This did much to help the Loop. Neighborhood houses, in outlying spots where most of the trade comes from those who drive or ride to the theatre, were hard hit. One 3,000-seat house with a good stage and screen attraction played to an average of 75 persons on the last show, for three nights last week.

They made a date with Red for later in the day, between shows at the Chicago where Red was appearing, but missed it. Now, Hodgson plans to start an injunction against Columbia's using the title of the song for the picture as well as the song. His lawyer is purported to be basing his claims on the statement that the composer has priority rights on a copyright.

The Garden Murder Case

(MGM)

Murder Mystery

An S. S. Van Dine "murder case," of which there have been seven others, the role of the famous detective Philo Vance, previously interpreted by William Powell, Basil Rathbone, Warren William and Paul Lukas, is here shouldered by Edmund Lowe. Many times a detective, producers are convinced that he has the suave manner, the way-with-women deportment, and the master-of-the-situation attitude, that will establish him as an ideal Philo.

The story, typical Van Dine material but given many new twists and situations and leading to a new killing idea, already has been published in book form and was a serial in Cosmopolitan Magazine a few months ago. The fact that it undoubtedly was widely read automatically serves as an interest creating angle, which is effectively substantiated by cast selections.

Virginia Bruce, sharing the lead with Lowe, also has a part in the romantic elements of the story, and in addition to being the girl whom Lowe saves from being accused of a series of murders also saves his life. With Nat Pendleton in the role of Sergeant Heath, a part he previously has filled, Etienne Girardot will be seen as Doremus. As practically all the supporting parts are feature roles, unusual care has been taken as far as name value is concerned and no doubt with an eye to the personalities being adapted to the parts in which they appear. They are Benita Hume, Douglas Walton, Gene Lockhart, H. B. Warner, Kent Smith, Grant Mitchell, Frieda Inescourt, Henry B. Walthall, Jessie Ralph and Charles Trowbridge.

Naturally semi-sophisticated in atmosphere, but embracing the element of comedy that gives mass appeal, the story involves three killings. One is just a journeyman job of murder; the other two are the result of hypnotic suggestion. In this premise, plus the events and incidents surrounding them, there is much mystery, an essential quality which in relation to its accompanying ingredients is promising of unique entertainment possibilities and tricky showmanship trends.

Showboat

(Universal)

Musical Dramatic Romance

As presented as a stage show originally in 1926 in New York and later London, revived for Broadway in 1932 and in the meantime having been made by Universal as a sound treated silent in 1929, and later to become a radio theme feature, "Showboat" has demonstrated its entertainment and commercial worth.

Based on a novel and serialization by Edna Ferber, with screen play by Oscar Hammerstein II who collaborated with Jerome Kern on the original stage version, the story is essentially dramatic romance embellished by the Kern music, Hammerstein lyrics and dances directed by LeRoy Prinz.

Being produced by Carl Laemmle, Jr., earnest effort has been made to capture all the spirit of musical gayety and dramatic romantic charm that characterized the original. To that end, Charles Winninger and Helen Morgan, who appeared in the original, will again be seen in their same roles. While Winniger has carried the "Showboat" tradition as Captain Andy through a period of years, Miss Morgan also has been seen in several pictures. For the leading roles, Laemmle selected Irene Dunne, currently in "Magnificent Obsession," and Alan Jones, who has had a rapid rise via "A Night at the Opera" and "Rose Marie." The singing abilities of both are recognized. Additional solo music will be provided by Paul Robeson, noted Negro baritone, and Clarence Muse, also by a Negro chorus of 200 voices.

Among others who will be seen in the cast are Helen Westley as Winninger's wife and Miss Dunne's mother, Hattie McDaniels, Marilyn Knowlden, Arthur Hohl, Queenie Smith, Charles Middleton, Donald Cook and Maidel Turner.

Opening with the river Showboat sequences, the picture plunges into the dramatic romance of Miss Dunne and Jones and covers a period of fortunate and unfortunate years while their child grows up. Then it tells of Jones' desertion, the struggle encountered by Miss Dunne, who, in rising to theatrical stardom, finds her child following in her footsteps to score a stage triumph that reunites her father and mother.

The Moon's Our Home

(Paramount-Wanger)

Comedy Romance

This is high-geared comedy romance, telling the story of a fast and furious courtship, a hectic married life and a surprise reconciliation, featuring a pair of stars and a supporting cast that the producer believes will be gleefully welcomed by patrons and exhibitors. With many novel twists it is spun out of elements that often have demonstrated their entertainment and box-office worth.

Based on a published story by Faith Baldwin, who currently has several features in production including "Wife vs. Secretary," the yarn was adapted by Isabel Dawn and Boyce DeGaw. Direction is by William A. Seiter.

Margaret Sullavan, recently in "So Red the Rose" and soon to be seen in "Next Time We Love," and Henry Fonda, whose recent screen success in "Farmer Takes a Wife" and "Way Down East" is a matter of record, are teamed in the leads. The chief supporting character is Charles Butterworth, whose comedy antics in "Magnificent Obsession" are still fresh in mind. Among other more familiar names in the supporting cast are Beulah Bendi, Margaret Hamilton, Henrietta Crosman, Dorothy Stickney, Lucien Littlefield, Walter Brennan, Brandon Hurst and Spencer Charters. Lesser known names are Margaret Fielding, Corbet Morris, Thelma White, Antoinette Lees, Monte Vandergrift and Richard Powell.

Modernly timed, localed in New England and New York, Margaret Sullavan, temperamental exotic screen star, and Fonda, famous author explorer, meet and fall in love while both are traveling incognito. Taking each other for what they are without benefit of fame or notoriety, they get married—and on the wedding night immediately start brawling. The bride disappears, but later, when each comes to know just who the other is, they meet again only to quarrel worse than ever. Bent on sailing to Europe for divorce and marriage with her childhood sweetheart, Butterworth, Fonda catches up with his fleeing mate and convinces her to make a sea voyage a honeymoon trip.

Treachery Rides the Range

(Warner)

Western Adventure

Action, adventure, thrills, heroism, villainy, romance, drama and comedy, plus stirring song numbers, are the elements of which this production is being woven. True to its title significance, it's a story of renegade white man inspired war between whites and Indians in the days when the West was young and wild. It presents Warner's singing western star, Dick Foran, previously in three features of similar character and now in "The Petrified Forest" in the leading role.

Being geared to whet and sate the appetites of outdoor thrill action fans with a particular eye to satisfying the youngsters, the yarn is an original screen play by William Jacobs. Direction is by Frank McDonald, maker of the recent "Backfire" and "Broadway Hostess."

In the story, renegade whites, contrary to military restrictions, slaughter vanishing buffalo herds, chief food and clothing supply for the Indians. A chief's son is killed. The hampered hero, escaping from jail, is captured by tribesmen, is unable to prevent the heroine from treading dangerous paths. About to be tortured and slain, a friendly Indian intercedes. Yet while the girl, who later has been captured, is held as hostage, the hero falls into the hands of his white enemies. Then the U. S. Cavalry ride up.

With Foran starred, romantic contrast of the story is carried by Paula Stone. The supporting cast lists many wellknown screen names, notably Monte Blue, Craig Reynolds, Jim Thorpe, Don Barclay, Carlyle Moore, Jr., and Milt Kibbee. Others included are Henry Otho, Frank Bruno, Monte Montague, Gene Alsace, Tom Wilson, Bud Osborne and Dick Botiller.

The Prisoner of Shark Island

Historical Drama

Darryl F. Zanuck considers this the most important picture he has been associated with since "The House of Rothschild." Essentially drama, it reveals a side of history that heretofore has been deliberately concealed. As such it can be expected to arouse as much public excitement as such controversial features as "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang." It is the story of Dr. Samuel Alexander Mudd, an innocent Virginia physician who for the crime of ministering to the wounds of the assassin of President Lincoln was, in company with other political prisoners, confined to a prison on Shark Island off the Florida keys, where, with every means of escape forever barred, every means was taken to bring about the death of Mudd and the other prisoners. Realistic fact, the horror of which has been a carefully guarded secret for more than 70 years, is the atmosphere of the production.

Among the big sequences in the picture, all of which have historical fact and are faithfully and authentically reproduced, are the assassination of Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, the court-martial of Booth's accomplices, the execution in the Washington prison, the arrest and trial of Dr. Mudd, Fort Jefferson on Shark Island with its moat filled with starved sharks, the pursuit and capture of Booth, suppression of the Negro soldier rebellion of the sunbaked islands and the naval bombardment of America's "Devil's Island."

Based on a compilation of original governmental reports and files which were analyzed and whipped into screen form by Nunnally Johnson, the picture is being directed by John Ford, whose "The Informer," now coming into real appreciation, is indicative of his ability to handle such vigorous material.

Warner Baxter will be seen as Dr. Mudd with Gloria Stuart as his wife. Claude Gillingwater is Baxter's relative, whose tip leads to Mudd's capture, but who tries to atone for this by helping him escape. Frank McGlynn, Sr., is Abraham Lincoln and Francis MacDonald is John Wilkes Booth. Other players re-creating the characters who were part of the Mudd chapter in American history are Arthur Byron, Harry Carey, O. P. Heggie, Francis Ford, John McGuire, Douglas Wood, John Carradine, Joyce Kay, Fred Kohler, Jr., Ernest Whitman, Paul Fix, Frank Shannon, Leila McIntyre as Mrs. Lincoln, Etta McDaniel, J. M. Kerrigan, Arthur Loft, Paul McVey and Maurice Murphy.

Palm Springs

(Paramount-Wanger)

Comedy Romance

Bearing a title that's probably as familiar as the name of anybody's home town, this production is not a story of Hollywood folk in their favorite winter playground. Rather it is a story of a girl and her romantic ambitions, the deception her father practices upon her, and the manner in which he upsets her plans to marry the wrong fellow and fixes things up for her to be with the boy he knows she really loves. Located in Palm Springs and currently timed, it naturally is photographed against scenes and backgrounds with which the general public is familiar.

A Walter Wanger production, the story is an original by Myles Connolly, adapted by Joseph Fields and directed by Aubrey Scotto. Frances Langford, Sir Guy Standing, Spring Byington and David Clive, names that are well known, with Smith Ballew, are the principal players. Ballew, making his picture debut here, has for years been one of New York's foremost orchestra leaders. As a pioneer radio entertainer, preceding any of the currently popular air wave stars by several years, he is undoubtedly known to many. He appears to have the looks and talents that make for screen popularity. Listed among the supporting cast are Ernest Cossart, E. E. Clive, Sterling Holloway, Grady Sutton, Maidel Turner, David Worth, Grace Goodall, Sarah Edwards, Lee Phelps, Eddie Tamblyn, the Brudie twins and Etta McDaniel.

As the story goes, Frances Langford, believing her father wealthy, aspires to marry the rich David Niven. Expelled from school, she goes to Palm Springs to be with her father Standing. Finding that instead of being a wealthy man, he and his valet, Cossart, are gambling house croupiers, Miss Langford is more determined than ever to marry Niven. But she falls in love with dude ranch owner Ballew, and Standing is just the man to steer her clear of Niven into the arms of Ballew, while he works out his own regeneration.

Says the New York Sun, prefacing its extended comment on the Herald's "Money Making Stars" canvass:

"While this little group and that scramble to announce their list of the year's best pictures, Motion Picture Herald has gotten together a survey that actually means something.

"The results of its annual canvass of the motion picture boxoffice, based on each week's receipts of independent theatres all over the country, between September 1, of 1934 and the same date in 1935, reveal Shirley Temple heading the money-making stars. Next comes Will Rogers, last year's leader. After him are Clark Gable, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, Joan Crawford, Claudette Colbert, Dick Powell, Wallace Beery, Joe E. Brown and James Cagney."

The Voice of Bugle Ann

Dog Story

The story on which this production is based is a current literary sensation. Written by MacKinley Kantor, published in several editions, the comparatively short novel has been read by thousands. These constitute a ready-made audience awaiting the picture. The character of the story, its deep human interest theme, the class of production which it is being given, plus the name values of the players to be presented, afford exhibitors opportunity for a unique publicity campaign, which the producers believe will result in the picture coming into wide popular favor.

The story is of a man and his dog; the great love the man had for it and the dog's devotion to his master. Yet it is not an ordinary dog story, rather one in which the various elements of romance, drama and light contrasting comedy touch the deepest human sentiments. It tells of a man who killed when he thought another had killed his four-footed friend. It further tells of how he went to jail, was pardoned, returned to his home to hear the familiar bugle baying, found that his pet had lived all the time he was in jail, but before dying after an accident had been mated to a prize dog and become the mother of a litter, one of which carried on the strain of his mother's noble character. Through it all runs a love interest story involving the son of the killer and the daughter of the man who was slain.

Importance attached to the appeal of the story is reflected in the selection of the cast. Lionel Barrymore, last in "Ah Wilderness," is the hero. Dudley Digges, currently in "Three Live Ghosts," is his victim. Eric Linden again is Barrymore's son as he was in "Wilderness," and Maureen O'Sullivan is Digges' daughter. The supporting cast includes Spring Byington, Charles Grapewin, featured in the forthcoming "Petrified Forest"; Henry Wadsworth, William Newell and James Macklin. Direction is by Richard Thorpe.

An original, completely out of the groove story idea, the yarn is completely American in tone. The locale is the upland country of Missouri and Kansas. Among the spectacular action features are several incidents colorfully portraying fox-hound hunting.

Captain January

Character Comedy Drama

According to the producer this is the most lovable story Shirley Temple has ever had. It is also one of her funniest. In it little Shirley does everything her legions of admirers expect her to do. Besides two numbers, "At the Codfish Ball" and "Early Bird," especially written by Lew Pollock and Sidney Mitchell, she sings "Asleep in the Deep" and a bit of grand opera. She dances a spiral lighthouse stairway number, a sailor's hornpipe, a hula hula and one with a trained crane. Watching her work while making the picture one cannot feel otherwise than that she is a comedy dramatic genius.

The motivating story is based on the famous book of the same title by Laura E. Richards. The screen play is by Sam Hellman, Gladys Lehman and Harry Tugend. David Butler, who handled Shirley in four previous pictures, is directing.

With Guy Kibbee in the title role, it is the story of a child saved from shipwreck by the old lighthouse keeper. Growing up, she worships him from the bottom of her heart. The menace, in the guise of a truant officer, comes to take Shirley away to break up the great association. Shirley's relatives are found. Planning an ocean tour, Shirley is overjoyed to find that "Captain January" is master of the luxurious yacht. As the story unfolds it takes in pathos, drama, melodrama, comedy, young love interest, intrigue, plot and counterplot, song and dance, as it tells the joys and tragedies of human Maine fisherfolk living their everyday lives.

Supporting Miss Temple and Kibbee, Slim Summerville will be seen as the captain's crony, Nazro. June Lang carries the youthful romance angle. Sarah Haden will be seen as the truant officer. Buddy Ebsen, who was in "Broadway Melody of 1936," dances with Shirley. Jane Darwell, previously with Shirley in "Curly Top," is the boarding house keeper who has designs on Kibbee. Nella Walker and George Irving are Shirley's relatives. Others in the cast are Jerry Tucker, Shirley's youthful trial and tribulation, James Farley, Si Jenks and John Carradine.

Murder of Dr. Harrigan

(First National)

Mystery

Against the background of a hospital, two murders are here committed and several others attempted to provide audiences with what sums up in the final analysis to be merely fair mystery melodrama. Added to this is a cast of such wellknown names as Ricardo Cortez, Mary Astor, John Eldredge, Phillip Reed and the newcomer, Kay Linaker. All of these, it it must be admitted, turn in commendable performances, but the material with which they had to work was not worthy of their talents and the situations all appear a bit too obvious.

Showmen, however, have much with which to exercise their exploitation talents. The hospital background itself should lend much to help create that atmosphere so necessary to pictures of this type. Then again, another weapon for their campaign is handed them in the form of the reason for the cinematic crimes, a new drug that has the same anesthetic effects as ether but lacks its harmful qualities.

One of the film's redeeming qualities is the hilarious comedy centering around a merry mix-up in the hospital between a nervous patient and an inebriate, roles played by Don Barclay and Johnny Arthur.

The direction of Frank McDonald helps in keeping the identity of the murderer secret until near the picture's end, but the treatment of the material as a whole leaves something to be desired.

In the story Peter Melady, head of a drug company, has a formula for a new anesthetic called Slaepan and he plans to cheat several doctors who have worked on it with him out of their share. He is about to be operated on by Dr. Harrigan, one of the wronged men, despite the protests of his daughter, Agnes, who fears for his life. Sally Keating, a nurse, following Dr. Harrigan's instructions, goes to the operating room to assist him only to find the surgeon's body with an operating knife in his heart. At the same time it is discovered that Mr. Melady had disappeared.

As the police arrive several persons are suspected: Ina Harrigan, the doctor's wife, because she hated her husband and had been carrying on with another man named Ladd; the latter because he fled the hospital the night of the murder down a fire-escape; Lillian, a nurse and divorced wife of the dead man; Sally because she took the Slaepan from Melady's room, and Agnes because she sent for the drug.

Dr. Lambert, in love with Sally, decides to clear her of suspicion and starts searching for Melady. He finds his body in the police morgue where it had been sent by a trick. When this is revealed Sally tries to leave the hospital and is attacked on the stairs. Dr. Lambert and the police chase the attacker up to the roof where he is captured and revealed as an orderly, Simon, former assistant to Melady and one who also claimed a share of the new drug.

From this point on, after Simon confesses to the two murders, all the other hazy points about where so-and-so was at such-and-such a time are all cleared up and the romantic way is cleared for Dr. Lambert and Sally.

Where mystery fans are not too discriminating this has elements for fairly satisfactory entertainment.—BAEHLER, New York.

Colleen

Comedy Drama

Where names alone are the primary consideration to patrons and exhibitors this picture is not lacking. Where entertainment worthy of the producing company's reputation as makers of colorful romantic musicals and the prestige of the players is a consideration, it's a horse of another color. The picture affords much that showmen welcome; at the same time, it erects handicaps and demolition of which undoubtedly will require the application of much astute exploitation.

The picture is long in running time. The theme plot becomes involved and complicated in including all its substantiating romance, drama, comedy, and establishment of relationships and situations of the various players, as well as permitting the introduction of solo singing and dancing and massed spectacular embellishing production effects. On several occasions to succeed in getting over its comic contrasts it descends to the level of low theatre comedy. In this angle there is definite possibility that in certain quarters questions may arise as to its moral value. These features are the incidents that undoubtedly will necessitate shrewd showmanship analysis.

Briefly, nutty Cedric Ames and his energetic modern young business executive nephew Donald, manage an estate housing many commercial enterprises. Among them is a rapidly failing modiste show owned by Carlo, but in which Colleen is the only one with any sense. Until Joe Cork, who is in love with Colleen, happens along, Donald contrives to keep Cedric safely caged. Cork, after taking Cedric on a tour of the Ames properties, convinces him that he should take over the modiste shop and place in charge Minnie, a candy factory goddess who has aroused that strange feeling in Cedric's breast. That brings Don into the picture to fall in love with Colleen. Naturally resentful that some one should try to steal his girl, Cork goes to work to make things tough for everybody. With Cedric in wrong with Alicia, Don estranged from Colleen, and Minnie scampering around so that she's always in Cork's way, the musical and dance spectacle numbers are rung in. Don gets a chance to square things with Colleen. Alicia takes Cedric in tow, and Minnie and Cork wind up together.

The Milky Way

(Paramount)

Comedy

Here is gold-plated amusement which at the preview provoked more laughs than it's possible for anyone to clock. It's nonsensical farce hokum foolishness, cleverly and cleanly set down in action, dialogue and situations.

Any attempt to describe all that happens would be silly, so let it be understood that "The Milky Way" is all comedy, and all in it, no matter what their previous screen character, are comedians in words and actions.

The fun starts at the beginning, gets funnier as the picture progresses, and winds up with such a burst of ridiculous foolishness, relevant and irrelevant to the theme, that just chopping it off is an act of kindliness and charity. The whole thing is about a meek milkman whose fighting propensities have been limited to an ability to duck. Protecting his sister from a couple of mashers, he awakes to find out that he is accused of knocking out the world's middleweight champ. Snagged by the champ's manager, he is carried through a series of set-up victories under the guidance of the champ's manager, that eventually make him a challenger. In the big fight the champ is given a sleeping potion, accidentally, of course, by the champ's dumb second, and the milkman retires undefeated to play pollyanna to all who did him well, also to those who did him dirt.

That's the story. It doesn't for a second attempt to describe all the fun that Harold Lloyd, Adolphe Menjou, Verre Teasdale, William Gargan, Lionel Stander, George Barbier, Helen Mack, Dorothy Wilson, Marjorie Gateson and all the rest in the cast contribute, whether their parts are important or just interluding bits. It doesn't tell about Lloyd and his horse; Stander trying to teach Lloyd how to fight; Teasdale training him in footwork to waltz music strains; Gargan's attempts to pulverize Lloyd; Lloyd's experiences in the ring with tankers; the show-her-how-to-duck epi-

A treat and event for any kind of audience, the picture is also a showmanship and exploitation gold mine, as just about everything that's said and done in the show can be readily adapted to sock exploitation and ballyhoo. The Calling of Dan Matthews

Drama

The militant clergyman of Harold Bell Wright's novel is here brought to the screen in a modernized version of that story published some thirty years ago. The picture concerns the minister, Dan Matthews, in his efforts to clean up Old Town, a currupted amusement center and hotbed of vice, outside the town of Corinth, and his love for Hope Strong, daughter of J. B. Strong, Corinth's leading citizen. Matthews' crusading efforts are successful in cleaning up Old Town, but only after a setback in the person of J. B. Strong, who, although innocent, was involved in Old Town's corruption.

In the modernizing process the story has lost much of the punch and sincerity of the original story. The title and the name of Harold Bell Wright are familiar to adults but comparatively unknown to the younger generation, necessarily making the exploitation campaign of a twofold nature. Richard Arlen plays the minister, Dan Matthews; Charlotte Wynters as Hope Strong, makes her debut in motion pictures, and the cast includes Douglass Dumbrille, Donald Cook, Mary Kornman and Frederick Burton.

In the story, Dan Matthews, as pastor of the Strong Memorial Church, launches a campaign to rid Old Town of vice. In this he has the support of Hope Strong, who accompanies him on a tour of inspection. Word of their coming has preceded them, however, and nothing they see in Old Town can be construed as contrary to the law. But Matthews continues his campaign through the medium of the radio and newspapers. J. B. Strong offers to help Matthews in his crusade.

Hardy, vice overlord of Old Town, becomes worried over the campaign and calls on Strong. He convinces Strong that the contract Strong has signed with him involves the town's leading citizen as much as it does him (Hardy) if not more so. Strong, fearful of his reputation, withdraws his support from Matthews. As Strong controls the radio station and the newspaper Matthews' hands are tied. Matthews convinces Strong that his attempt to save his reputation will not solve the situation. Matthews succeeds in getting the contract from Hardy after a struggle. Hardy is run out of town and Matthews and Miss Strong declare their love for each other.—Mooney, New York.

Call of the Prairie

(Paramount-Sherman)

Western

The fact that this is a Hopalong Cassidy story completely establishes the character and atmosphere of this production. It's a thrill action adventure of those two pals, Cassidy and Johnny Nelson. As it appears on the screen, there is ample evidence indicating that the producer has made strong efforts to make this a worthy entertainment and showmanship successor to the previous pictures in the series. The entertainment angle being understood, a yarn of the West when the West was wild and woolly and men were he-men, contrasted by romantic love interest and occasional bits of comedy and highlighted by musical interludes, the showmanship is that that capitalizes those elements and makes use of the William Boyd-Jimmy Ellison name value.

In the yarn, Nelson gets mixed up with bad company. Though innocent, circumstances make it appear that he is member of a gang that tried to loot Peter's ranch house. Fleeing, intent upon vindicating himself, Nelson's trail is picked up by Hopalong, who fears but is unwilling to believe his young pal is guilty. Shadowing the Sam Porter gang which includes Shanghai, Hoskins and Slade, Nelson in turn is trailed by Hopalong. A bank holdup frustrated, Hopalong personally accounts for the various bandits. In the meantime Nelson meets and falls in love with Linda and ensues the music tinged romance. With Linda taking a hand in establishing Johnny's innocence, it turns out that she is a daughter of one of the gang members and possessor of information that completely clears her Romeo of any complicity to re-establish him with Hopalong and the other Bar 20 boys.

As the various elements are well blended, there being plenty to create interest in action, dialogue and situations, the picture is well acted and directed. With natural appeal for western fans and youngsters, selling it for exactly what it is should produce the best box-office results.

Frasquita

Gypsy Love Song

(DuWorld)

Operetta

Quietly delightful entertainment abundant with the tuneful music of Franz Lehar, whose stage "hits" are almost innumerable, is the foundation for showmanship application to this Vienna-made and languaged production. Superimposed titles (albeit not very skillfully handled, what with repetitions of wording in some spots and too literal translations in others) make the following of the story no problem whatever.

For exploitation a specialty is the prelude and epilogue appearance of Lehar himself—it's called his first—conducting the Vienna Philharmonic. The composer makes an excellent appearance, but the footage allotted is too generous.

To the musically-eared and minded, another factor of importance is the starring of Jarmila Novotna of the Vienna Opera as Frasquita, the gypsy girl and center of the action. While the angle of closeup shots militates against the youthful role of the star, the cameraman has more than compensated with the scenic shots of the hilly shore road along the Mediterranean.

Considerable action has been inculcated. The comedy, carried by Hans Moser and Rudolph Carl, is typically Continental.

Hans Heinz Bollman is motoring to meet his bride-to-be, Charlotte Daudert, at the estate of her father, the Count Max Culstorff. With Bollman is his friend Heinz Ruhmann. While they vainly try to repair a broken spring, beautiful singing is heard down the road. It's a gypsy band—and Miss Novotna. Bollman is attracted to her, and when Ruhmann goes on ahead he finds a romantic urge for his friend's fiancee. She has the same idea. Bollman notes that his cigaret case is missing and circumstances point to the gypsy girl. Ruhmann meanwhole has arranged an audition for the girl and she becomes a star overnight. Bollman finds that he wrongfully suspected her of the theft.

Count Max has been entirely blind to the direction that love has taken and tells Miss Novotna that Bollman is to marry his daughter on the morrow. But Ruhman takes care of that, as do the bungling servants, and elopes with Miss Daudert. Ruhmann explains to Miss Novotna and she comes to the castle for the permanent reconciliation with her sweetheart.—Rovelstad, New York.

Freshman Love

Comedy

Basically this is a rollicking, rousing comedy of college life, athletics and love, set up on a story idea by George Ade and fitted to a musical background. It isn't a pretentious picture by any means, but it does afford more than the usual amount of entertainment found in films of this type, particularly because of the efforts put forth by those to whose hands have been trusted the principal roles.

Exhibitors are presented with material in abundance with which to work since the films' collegiate background naturally entails those extra-curriculum activities, athletics and romance. The producers have also inserted enough music, and a special dance, "The Collegiana," so that there is again something here for showmen to use as they plan exploitation.

The cast, although not composed of players of exceptional name value, nevertheless boasts of such actors and actresses as Patricia Ellis, Frank HcHugh, Warren Hull, Joseph Cawthorn and George E. Stone, all of whom are familiar to audiences, particularly so in the case of McHugh and Cawthorn, who stand for comedy plus in most cases and doubly so here.

Director William McGann never allows the action to lag at any point and drains every laugh from every possible sequence, of which there are plenty. The photography by Sid Hickox is good, and the inserted rowing sequences fit the action of the story accurately.

In the story Speed Hammond is in the "doghouse" with the student body and trustees of Billings College because of the miserable showings of the crew he coaches. As a result he conspires with Joan Simpkins, daughter of the college president, to get a real crew for the coming year on the strength of the latter's feminine charms.

By using obvious methods Joan succeeds in luring Tony Foster and Bob Wilson to Billings, along with E. Pendergrast Biddle, son of a former great coxswain. Biddle, however, is more interested in the rhythm of a dance band he leads than in a racing shell. Meanwhile, Speed and Squirmy, a coed, send out coy invitations to prospective rowers, inclosing Joan's picture and signing her name.

After the usual complications when all the oarsmen arrive at Billings, more intent on winning Joan than a place on the crew, Speed boats eight men and is getting fine results with Biddle as a musical coxswain who plays to the crew for an even and fast stroke.

Tony fails in his studies and is dropped from the crew, thus making a place for Wilson in the boat. Undaunted, Tony asks Joan to marry him and when she refuses he stumbles on the scheme used by Speed to recruit rowers and spills everything to Wilson, whom Joan really loves. The two of them desert Billings, and only after an appeal over the radio made possible by Wilson's father does Wilson return to stroke the boat to victory and himself into Joan's arms, following a race that is packed with laughter for audiences.

The comedy, for the most part, is of the situation type, except on the part of Cawthorn, whose style is wellknown, and showmen might do well to see this picture for themselves before mapping out their campaigns.—BAEHLER, New York.

(MGM)
Good

Built along other shorts of this type, this one takes audiences behind the scenes and shows intimate shots of such stars as Marion Davies, Cary Grant, Virginia Bruce, John Gilbert, Lee Tracy, Errol Flynn, Lili Damita, Sid Silvers, Eddie Peabody, Leon Errol and others. Chester Morris acts as master-of-ceremonies as Buddy Rogers and his Band play several numbers. The background of the picture and the excuse for the comedy is a pirate party on Catalina Island. It should fit in on most any program. Running time, 20 minutes.

A Thrill for Thelma
Interesting

This, the latest of the series, follows the pattern set by earlier members of the "Crime Doesn't Pay" group. Here, however, it is shown how a girl, desirous of silks, satins and jewels takes the easiest way to get them and winds up behind prison bars as the police outsmart her in the end. Irene Hervey has the lead in this featurette and tells her story in her own words, assisted by Robert Warwick, Robert Livingston and William Tannen. Particularly interesting are the scenes showing the methods used by the police in tracking down and capturing the criminals. Running time, 18 minutes.

Between the Lines
(Vitaphone)
Very Good

Using a modern fiction magazine as a background, the producers have fashioned a satire packed with elements that make for first class entertainment. The singing, dancing and comedy are placed in the capable hands of Bernice Claire, Rodney McLennan, Arline and Eddie Kinley, George Dobbs and the Commanders.

The characters on opposite pages of the book come to life in the person of Miss Claire, southern belle of the Civil War days, and McLennan, a modern playboy. The two fall in love, and the boy takes the girl to a cocktail bar, where she is rescued from modern gangsters by a troop of Civil War soldiers for the highlight of the picture. Running time, 22 minutes.

West Point of the South
(MGM)
Good

This Pete Smith Novelty takes the audience behind the scenes of the famous Virginia Military Institute and shows intimate aspects of cadet life at the famous school. Pete Smith accompanies the action with his typical flow of dialogue, which, in this case, rather hinders than enhances the picture. The past history of the school, from the Civil War to the present time, is related and this alone should provide sufficient entertainment for most audiences. Running time, eight minutes.

The Seeing Eye
Of Interest

A Treasure Chest production, this short is both interesting and enlightening—of interest in that it pictorially demonstrates the training of shepherd dogs to be "The Seeing Eye" of the blind, enlightening, for it shows the progress being made to encourage the blind to be useful citizens of society. As the Braille system has helped brighten the blind man's life, so, too, does the faithful shepherd dog. Originating in Europe, the idea has culminated in America with the establishing of a non-commercial institution in Morristown, N. J., where both student and dog are trained to be of service to each other. The dog to be the eyes of the blind and the man to be a good master. Story and narrative are by Clinton Wunder.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Going Places No. 16
Instructive

Varied subjects of interest are shown in the sixteenth of the Going Places series. In Vermont, great deposits of uncut marble, are quarried by the most modern of methods, machinery. Huge blocks of unpolished stone are cut by diamond toothed saws, driven by powerful machines. The marble is transformed by sand-blasting, rubbing-beds and rotating discs across its surface, into a thing of beauty. A shark catcher shows how its done and catches one of the man eaters for the camera's record. In Madeira, sea rounded stones enable the people to use sleds instead of wheels for transportation. There too are shown the fine laces for which the natives are known and especially the grape vineyards that produce the famous Madeira wines. An interesting and instructive short.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Melody In May
(RKO Radio)
Fair

Ruth Etting, on a vacation from her multifarious activities in the musical world, happens on a small town. When the shy and backward young man, who helps his mother run the town's boarding house, is dropped at the eleventh hour by the girl who promised to go to the big dance with him in favor of a more zealous admirer, Miss Etting comes to his rescue and accompanies him to the party. Miss Etting is introduced by the orchestra leader and, after singing a song, her escort becomes the center of attention. He subsequently wins back the girl he originally dated for the dance, and after punching her escort he takes her home.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Sacred City of the Mayan Indians
(MGM)
Interesting

The last remaining stronghold of the Mayan Indian in Central America is covered here with the Technicolor camera and the results are quite interesting. Native costumes, designed from those worn by the early Spanish Conquistadors, market places, dances, religious rites, pagan and otherwise, music and various other phases of life among the survivors of the Mayan race are all shown. As a travelogue, particularly with the off-screen dialogue of James A. FitzPatrick describing everything, this should please. Running time, eight minutes.

Vitaphone Troupers
(Vitaphone)
Fair

This vaudeville reel includes such acts as Ross and Stone in a comedy song routine, Tess Gardell, known more familiarly for her Aunt Jemima characterization over the radio, the Four Trojans and the Eight Buccaneers. Where this type reel is appreciated, the picture should please. Running time, 10 minutes.

Run Sheep, Run
(MGM)
Good Cartoon

This Harman-Ising cartoon, done in Technicolor, should have particular appeal to children, although adults will enjoy it as well. It tells the story of five little sheep, one of whom is continually running off to frighten their shepherd and his dog. After several sequences, which should strike audiences as being quite funny, and during which the sheep were chased by bears, everything ends well. Running time, 10 minutes.

Steel and Stone
(Vitaphone)
Interesting

The latest of the "Our Own United States" series deals with the modern problems of transportation, particularly bridges and tunnels. An interesting and explanatory off-screen dialogue takes the audience over practically all the famous and historical bridges in the country and through all the important tunnels. This subject should please, if only on the merits of its geographical and historical values. Running time, 11 minutes.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

York, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

We had pretty bad luck coming down here to York. At St. Edwards we tried to find Jerry Verrage. His theatre looked like it was closed, as there was no billing out in front, and nobody seemed to know where Jerry was. Our guess is that he had gone down to the Loupe river fishing for catfish, but we don't blame him for that.

At Genoa we tried to find Henry and Mrs. Peterson. We stopped at the house and Henry had a big police dog that gave us the once over and then got between us and the house and indicated that he wasn't overly fond of tramps. We finally got up to the door but we couldn't arouse anyone inside, although we felt sure that Ma Peterson was working in the back of the house, but that dog didn't show a disposition to allow us to make any further investigations and so we decided to pass them up. That dog would be a wonderful dog for skunks and rabbits. Henry runs a grasshopper train for the U. P. between Columbus and somewhere in the western hemisphere this side of the Puget Sound and that's probably why the U. P. gives such splendid service, and Henry and Ma operate the Genoa theatre, and that's probably what makes Genoa such a good town.

Better Luck

We had better luck at David City. We called there to meet A. F. Jenkins, who operates David City's popular theatre. We failed to find him at home but we had a very nice visit with Mrs. Jenkins and then went over to A. F.'s billiard parlor and met him.

A. F. has always denied being any relation of ours. We never could see any reason for that, for neither of us has ever been on friendly terms with the warden, although neither of us has tried to cultivate his friendship very much. A. F. says business is fairly good at his theatre, although he could find seats for a few. We believe there are two things which enter into the matter to make good business. One is that David City is a good town, surrounded by the best farming communities in the state, and another reason is that A. F. takes pride in showing his customers the very best pictures he can get. Sometimes, however, he gets a flop, just like all the rest of the boys. But anyhow, when you go to David City you better go to his theatre and spend an enjoyable evening.

I. N. Kuhl operates the Rivoli at Seward. We've got it in for Seward and have had for quite a number of years. We stopped at a hotel in Seward and somebody stole a brand new overcoat from the hotel lobby that we had just brought out of the clothing store and we have never heard from it since, but then that wasn't I. N.'s fault.

The Rivoli has been fitted out with new trimmings and it is now the pride of Seward and as nice a house as some larger towns can boast of. He has provided living quarters over the theatre that have been fitted up in the last word of house decorations. We have a nice visit with Mr. and Mrs. Kuhl every time we go there.

Over in Corning, Iowa, last summer we met a brother of Mr. Kuhl who is operating the Corning amusement center, and our judgment is that these two Kuhl boys know how to please the people with good pictures.

Here in York we met Carl Rose, the operator of the Sun and York theatres for the Blank Enterprises. It's funny how people remember our face. Carl said "Hello Dad" the minute we went into the lobby of the Sun Theatre. We met Carl at Hastings, Nebraska, several years ago and hadn't seen him since, and yet he knew us at sight. That shows what good eyesight some of these theatre boys have, or else, Oh Gosh, maybe it's our pan. The Sun and York theatres are about as beautiful as there is any need of any town having, and Mr. Rose inclines us to think that the Blank Enterprises don't need any better manager than they already have. York has about 7,000 people very few of whom are on the relief rolls, and York used to be known all over the middle west as the only town of its size without a saloon. That was back in the early days, but now, if you are thirsty and have the price you can get accommodations in York and no questions asked.

House Remodeled

You would hardly expect to find a very beautiful theatre in a town of the size of Exeter, but she has it. We called there and met the man who operates the house but we failed to set his name down and we wouldn't be able to remember it if they were going to hang us. But anyhow, he has remodeled the Auditorium and made a theatre out of it that Exeter can be proud of. Exeter has about six hundred people who are giving very loyal support to the Auditorium theatre, and that is what every town ought to do.

Mr. and Mrs. Somebody at Friend, Nebraska, ought to stay at home when their friend comes to call on them, but they won't do it. So there now, you see what you missed.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Lincoln has two things to be proud of—her state capitol that cost around fifteen million dollars, and the Capitol theatre, which cost somewhat less, but which is none the less important to Lincoln.

Roy Cochran, Nebraska's Governor, runs the Capitol building and Bob Livingston runs the Capitol theatre. That is, he runs the theatre when he isn't running after Lincoln dogs for that "Shelterbelt." Bob says he thinks if the dogs will hold out for a while he will be able to get through the winter without assistance from the Government. Bob was away when he called and we didn't get to see him, and the boy on the door said he never heard of the Motion Picture Herald and asked us if it was a Republican or Democratic paper. We told him it was both, but he said he couldn't use it because he was a Finlander.

Lincoln has the State University and the University has a number of sororities and Bob stands ace high at all the sorority dances, except when he is out chasing dogs. Lincoln also has the Cornhusker football team, but they have been licked so many times that we're not bragging about that very much.

Fishing and Riley

When we think of Bob Smith, who operates the Mission theatre at Mission, Texas, and remember the time he took us down to the Gulf of Mexico to fish for shark and tarpon, it makes us wonder if James Whitcomb Riley might not have had him in mind when he wrote:

Wonst we went a fishin', me
And my Maw and Paw all three,
Out to Hanscom's woods one day
When the school turned out to play.

And my Paw he fished and fished
And my Maw she said she wished
Me and her was home, and Paw
Said he wished so mor'n Maw.

That's just the way it goes. You might better go to the ball game.

Everything seemed to be going all right until last night and then it started snowing and it snowed and it snowed and it snowed, and then it got a fresh holt and it snowed again. Someone once wrote a poem about "This Beautiful Snow," and it was a good one, too, but that guy never had to buck snowdrifts very much, but this morning—

April Shower would go forward, then back
she would go
Until she got stuck in this beautiful snow.
She would cough and she'd wheeze
And her wheels would go 'round
For this "beautiful snow" kept her off of the ground.
And we'll still be thinking, wherever we go
Of the guy who wrote of "This Beautiful Snow."

There are fifteen or twenty more verses of this, but we haven't the heart to prolong the agony any further, and Ernie, you can take a glass of buttermilk on us.

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Ambassador-Conn

TRAILS OF THE WILD: Kermit Maynard—Only fair. If Ken Maynard could have played the part that Kermit played, the picture would have gone over much better. Kermit don't hit so good with the audience. Running time, 58 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Columbia

CASE OF THE MISSING MAN, THE: Roger Pryor, Joan Perry—Good story. Kept audience in suspense. Pryor excellent. Played January 11.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine. Town and country patronage.

CASE OF THE MISSING MAN, THE: Roger Pryor, Joan Perry—Light entertainment. Fair biz, but due only to added attraction. Poor excuse for "Missing Man," as picture was "wide open." Patrons kicked, some few even asking for refunds or "rain checks." Running time, 55 minutes. Played January 7-8.—C. J. Hubley, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Tallulah, La. Rural and small town patronage.

HEIR TO TROUBLE: Ken Maynard, Joan Perry—Excellent western. Maynard just broken in here and is well liked. Business above average. Running time, 59 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

HEIR TO TROUBLE: Ken Maynard, Joan Perry—A very good western, better than the average, and the best I have seen Ken make yet. Saturday night crowd ate it up.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

IF YOU COULD ONLY COOK: Jean Arthur, Herbert Marshall—Plain, wholesome entertainment and that is what the public lays the coin on the line to see. If all producers would make entertainment and leave the opera stars for the Ethiopians this would be a better business for smaller communities.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

PUBLIC MENACE, THE: Jean Arthur, George Murphy—One of the grandest little pictures that ever ran through a camera. Plenty of everything. Build it up. Played January 15-16.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SHE COULDN'T TAKE IT: George Raft, Joan Bennett—Seemed to please the majority. Just a little above present day program pictures. Played January 8-9.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SHE MARRIED HER BOSS: Claudette Colbert, Melvyn Douglas, Michael Bartlett—Played on Sunday and Monday to better than average business. Pleased practically all. The little mean brat, Edith Fellows, was swell. Running time, 90 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

First National

BLACK FURY: Paul Muni, Karen Morley—Tough going for double billing. Too long and too much fighting and brutality for the ladies. See the big magazines hand this one four star. Our B. O. usually gets lonesome on these colossal masterpieces. Running time, 95 minutes. Played January 17-18.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

BROADWAY HOSTESS: Winifred Shaw, Lyle Talbot—Expected excellent entertainment from this and was disappointed. I just can't explain, but somehow it didn't click. Kept waiting for something to turn up to pull it out and it never came. Played January 14.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

I FOUND STELLA PARISH: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter—Best Kay Francis picture in a year. Drew especially well and pleased all. A picture that helps stimulate trade.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

I FOUND STELLA PARISH: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter—Very good and interesting story. Miss Francis can always be relied upon for wonderful acting.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MAN OF IRON: Barton MacLane, Mary Astor—Fairly good one-day picture for us. Played January 7.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MAN OF IRON: Barton MacLane, Mary Astor—A mighty good program picture. Gave good satisfaction. Played on a double bill and saved the show. Played January 15-16.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

PAYOFF, THE: James Dunn, Claire Dodd—A very good action picture. Gave good satisfaction here. Story good. Acting very good.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Very good musical. Very well liked by everyone. —Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Tehatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

GB Pictures

BORN FOR GLORY: Barry Mackay, John Mills—What a picture. Oh, yes, it was good, that is if you can see and hear it. I couldn't and my eyes and ears are up to standard. Darn clever, these foreigners, but not clever enough to make pictures worth runs in theatres patronized by red blooded Americans. They had better leave the motion pictures to Hollywood. Running time, 70 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC TUNNEL: Richard Dix, Madge Evans—Fair. Could have been made into a big picture in Hollywood. Too drawn out scenes. American stars help out a British picture.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

Liberty

DIZZY DAMES: Marjorie Rambeau, Florine McKinney, Lawrence Gray—The ailments of this picture are so chronic that it never has a fighting chance even after the injection of a last minute hypodermic of two mediocre musical sequences. No story, poor continuity, bad direction, ineffective casting and technical inefficienies total up to the poorest musical effort released in several seasons. This picture received and deserved a very bad audience reaction.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Mascot

CONFIDENTIAL: Donald Cook, Evelyn Knapp—Good for double featuring. Fair program of the G-Men. Donald Cook always pleasing. Warren Hymer good in this. Kane Richmond has a small part but handles it very good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

IN OLD SANTA FE: Ken Maynard, Evalyn Knapp—Picture well produced and offers variety, good sound and lighting. Westerns like these create a liking for horse operas and will bring the patrons back. Running time, 64 minutes. Played January 3-4.—Ken Higgins, Avon Theatre, Edwards, N. Y. Rural and small town patronage.

LADIES CRAVE EXCITEMENT: Norman Foster, Evalyn Knapp—Fine program fare. Played on double bill to satisfied audience.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AH, WILDERNESS!: Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery, Eric Linden—Slice of life from a small town back in 1906 made into a very good comedy drama and it was very well received in this small town. Excellent direction, acting, photography and sound.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

AH, WILDERNESS!: Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery, Eric Linden—One of the most entertaining pictures we ever played. Story fine and an all-star cast. Did not draw as it should, as the folks out in the sticks are not posted on the titles and they said they could not see anything attractive in the title. What a world! Played January 19-20.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Good entertainment. Everyone pleased. Played January 12-14.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—Excellent acting by the entire cast. Played in the midst of a blizzard. No business, although no fault of the production. Running time, 89 minutes. —Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Jean Harlow, Clark Gable, Wallace Beery—Real entertainment, grand story and three big names, which means box-office. Played December 29-31.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel—Jack Benny in a not too good comedy. See nothing outstanding in this picture. Drew only average business.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Ted Healy, Una Merkel, Nat Pendleton—Another radio star, Benny, that did not add anything to his prestige when appearing in a picture. Maybe they expected too much but the audience were disappointed in the picture. Ted Healy did not add much either. He got pretty tiresome with his bit of comedy and Una Merkel was not up to herself in this one.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel—An extra good programmer, but Merkel miscast and Ted Healy walks off with the honors. Fair week end business. Running time, 80 minutes.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel, Ted Healy—Good entertainment. Nothing big, nothing lavish, but it certainly gets the laughs. Our patrons like Benny and Healy, so this proved to be to their liking. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 27-28.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

LAST OF THE PAGANS: Mala, Lotus Long—Something different. Seemed to please. Good one day picture here. Played January 10.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MURDER MAN, THE: Spencer Tracy, Virginia Bruce—Fair. Cold weather and Christmas shopping made it bad for business. Played December 22-24.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Clark Gable, Charles Laughton, Franchot Tone—Acting all that can be desired by everyone in the cast. Very good picture. A bit rough for the ladies. Scenes too gruesome.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone, Eddie Quillan—Big business. Performance of Laughton outstanding. Supporting roles of Gable and Tone superb. Quillan excellent in his first dramatic performance. Running time, 133 minutes.—James J. Wall, Penn Theatre, Ambridge, Pa. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone—Drew well. Had marvelous acting. Enjoyed by the masses. Only criticism: too brutal. Running time, 133 minutes.—Mrs.

P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Clark Gable, Charles Laughton, Franchot Tone—This picture is too big and good for me to comment on. About the most satisfactory picture we have ever played. Did a good business and satisfied them all. If you haven't bought it, buy it and it will draw, and satisfy. Played January 12-14.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—Pleased the patrons who follow the Marx Brothers. Personally, I think they are "nuts" but this picture is the best I've seen them in.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—People who like the Marx Brothers will get a kick out of this one. Running time, 96 minutes.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper, Sara Haden—Fine entertainment. Everyone had a good cry and enjoyed themselves. Strong box-office.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

PERFECT GENTLEMAN, THE: Frank Morgan, C. Courtneidge—No draw, but picture fairly entertaining. Strictly double bill fodder.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnisan, Utah. General patronage.

PERFECT GENTLEMAN, THE: Frank Morgan, Cicely Courtneidge—A fine comedy picture. Morgan funny and the lady funnier. I call it an extra good entertainment. We played it on a double feature bill but the picture will stand alone on any bill and satisfy even these days when they demand too much for their money. Played January 7-8.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell, Rosalind Russell—Good comedy and drama. Gave satisfaction.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH (Re-release): Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—A reissue that drew way over expectations and pleased most everyone. Wish Metro had a few more like this and I would take a vacation. A real money-maker.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

FIVE SHOWMEN ADD REPORTS

Exhibitors in Maine, Pennsylvania and Montana make their first reports to "What the Picture Did for Me" in this issue. They are:

J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine.

James J. Wall, Penn Theatre, Ambridge, Pa.

J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont.

Returning to the reporting service after more than a year are two showmen whose names are familiar to readers of this department:

A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb.

Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Colo.

Read the reports of these showmen in this week's columns.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—Played Christmas eve and Christmas to good business. Picture had not played here before. This should please anywhere. All the cast did fine but Leslie Howard seemed to impress me more. He was really good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Fredric March—People enjoyed seeing this again. It is still excellent regardless of the fact that it is a reissue.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

WHIPSAW: Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy—Didn't expect much from this but got surprised. Swell story, good acting. All comments favorable. That there gal's going places! Played January 5.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine. Town and country patronage.

Monogram

'NEATH ARIZONA SKIES: John Wayne, Sheila Terry—Little better than average Wayne but still not saying so much for the picture. Wayne not so popular here now. What happened to Box Custer and Rex Bell? Wish I could get them in some westerns. They used to be fine.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

RAINBOW VALLEY: John Wayne—Picture pleased well. John Wayne should satisfy all rural communities. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 10-11.—Ken Higgins, Avon Theatre, Edwards, N. Y. Rural and small town patronage.

Paramount

BAR 20 RIDES AGAIN: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—As good as any westerns. Boyd good as usual and Ellison should soon be starred. The Hopalong Cassidy is a very popular series. Played January 4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Jack Oakie, Burns and Allen—Very good show for those who like music and a variety of stars. It was well received. Running time, 97 minutes.—James J. Wall, Penn Theatre, Ambridge, Pa. General patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Jack Oakie, Burns and Allen—One of my patrons said, "Why didn't you run the trailer twice more and we could have seen all of the show." Bing Crosby is the biggest laugh in the show, leaning up against a post, gazing at the moon, looking like a sick cat. Business rotten. Running time, 97 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—And Paramount again comes home with a fine evening's entertainment. Give Paramount credit for not trying to make a big noise over Colbert pictures and yet delivering pictures that are real draws at the box-office.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Excellent. It is just the type of entertainment the people like.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

LAST OUTPOST, THE: Cary Grant, Gertrude Michael—Fair picture but no more than ordinary program fare. Good for midweek date.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE, THE: W. C. Fields—Where, oh, where, is the trapeze, let alone a flying one. Unless one calls home with a nagging wife as the trapeze. No, thanks, I don't care for any more. Played January 3-4.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. General patronage.

MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE: Sylvia Sidney, Melvyn Douglas—One sweet picture that pleases everyone and gets a lot of word-of-mouth advertising. A Walter Wanger production, and very smooth direction. Consider this one of the finest pieces of screen fare to play in my situation for six months. Step on this one and you will be glad of it.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

MEN WITHOUT NAMES: Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans—Made to order. The folks seem to like the G-Men pictures, especially when produced by an A-1 company. Thank you so much, Mr. Paramount. Encore. Running time, 65 minutes. Played January 12-14.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

NEVADA: Larry Crabbe, Kathleen Burke—As usual, a fine western from Paramount. All details are carefully taken care of and picture runs smoothly. Drew excellent and pleased all. Photography excellent and very scenic.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

PETER IBBETSON: Gary Cooper, Ann Harding—One of those class pictures. Failed to please the average show-goer. No draw. Title hurt picture. However, photography and cast were good.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

ROSE OF THE RANCHO: Gladys Swarthout, John Boles—One of those operatic pictures that all companies are making now that have very little mass appeal in small towns. Imagine Charles Bickford singing! Reminded me of a high school opera in plot, with a glorified cast the only thing that commends it. Operas are out with my overall wearing customers.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

SCOUNDREL, THE: Noel Coward, Julie Hayden—Here is a mystery picture. The mystery being, why was it made? No appeal to the masses. After hearing a few harsh criticisms we retired to the seclusion of the office to meditate in solitude for the rest of the show. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 8-9.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott—A very good picture and drew many compliments from my patrons. Paramount is coming out of the doldrums and will soon be on top again.—Russel Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott—Even though it does not follow the book, it is excellent entertainment and pleased well. Running time, 83 minutes.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott—A beautiful, sympathetically told story of the South during the Civil War. This proved a pleasant surprise all around. We fully expected it to be a failure in this situation, but it pulled above average and pleased. Many favorable comments and several came to see it the second time. Running time, 84 minutes. Played December 29-31.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

THUNDERING HERD, THE: Randolph Scott, Judith Allen—There are no outstanding stars in this picture. Perhaps the wife of the hide rustler is the most notable character. This western is perhaps a little better than "Wagon Wheels." A good western with not too much horror and slapstick melodrama. A good Zane Grey production. Played January 3-4.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

TWO FISTED: Lee Tracy, Grace Bradley—Action and humor make this picture good screen fare. Tracy is splendid and well chosen for his role in the picture. Pleased both children and adults.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—Worst think Crosby has ever appeared in. Songs were fair. No business. Played January 1-3.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Republic

HITCH HIKE LADY: Alison Skipworth, Mae Clarke, James Ellison—Likeable Alison Skipworth is at last given a chance to forget her stock characterization of the brittle sophisticate and portray a human and lovable old lady. This picture is easily as good as "Lady For a Day." We would dub it the surprise picture of the season, as advance reviews, though good, did not do it justice. The splendid word-of-mouth advertising it received made it a strong box-office attraction.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray—Swell picture, without Hepburn. MacMurray doesn't get a chance to breathe. Has two or three lines it in. Hepburn has no draw here. Played December 15-17.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray—These "four-star" pictures, unless they are musicals, seem to register only a "so-so" reception with our most peculiar audience. Excellent acting, especially in highly dramatic scenes, often evokes laughter from those men who fail to comprehend the deeper meanings. Everything considered (including the farcical dinner scene), the picture went over beyond my greatest expectations. Running time, 99 minutes. Played January 18.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—Very good entertainment for the masses.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix, Margot Grahame—Not exactly a western but a good out-of-doors picture. Drew well and was well received. Played January 18.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins, Cedric Hardwicke—A beautiful picture, wonderful color, great acting, but that was all. The story queered the entertainment and if I had not had a good picture on the bill with it, it would have been a terrible flop. One time a double feature bill saved us. Played January 15-16.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

FRECKLES: Carol Stone, Virginia Weidler, Tom Brown—Was only able to bring in average business on this one. All other Stratton Porters brought them in in droves. The picture, as far as I can see, is as good as any of them excepting "Laddie," and without Virginia Weidler it might be a pretty tame affair. It proves to be better than average entertainment.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Carol Stone—Played for a school tieup and business above average. Not as good as "Laddie," but beat it on the draw, due to little Virginia Weidler's performance in "Laddie." Running time, 70 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Virginia Weidler, Carol Stone—Gave more patron satisfaction than any picture we have played in a long time. Virginia Weidler as Laurie Lou walked off with all honors and several patrons expressed the hope she would be seen again soon. Held up to a nice three days business. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 5-7.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

HI GAUCHO: John Carroll, Steffi Duna—Was leary of this one; booked against better judgment. It confirmed my suspicions. Poor screen fare.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

HI GAUCHO: Steffi Duna, John Carroll—Terrible. Forget it. Carroll is about as much of a cowboy as Shirley Temple. Running time, 60 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOT TIP: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—Racing story comedy. Gleason and Pitts very good. Pleased those who saw it, especially two patrons who unconsciously thought they were at the races and beat the patrons on the head and shoulders sitting in front of them, as the horses came down the home stretch. (Did they feel foolish). Played January 10-11.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. General patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—Good entertainment. Very well balanced.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—A box-office picture and it proves one thing, that my patrons like Ginger. She does considerable clowning in this and she gets plenty of laughs with some tried and true kicks. The story is absurd.——W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—This is a splendid picture. Story entertaining, acting of stars great, also balance of cast. It gave 100 per cent satisfaction here. Played January 5-6.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, THE: Preston Foster—Dramatic spectacle. Pleased those who saw it but proved a very poor draw.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Hoot Gibson, Boots Mallory—Very good western.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Good Wheeler and Woolsey comedy. Drew extra children patronage but failed to draw adults. Consider this a better than average Wheeler and Woolsey picture. —Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Played on a midnight show New Year's eve. Went over big to a carefree audience of young and old. Business better than expectations. The locomotive shots were the hit of the show. Running time, 78 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Plenty funny. They kept the audience laughing all the way through the show. The locomotive scenes were a little too long drawn out. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE: Gene Raymond, Margaret Callahan—Have seen mystery that held one more tense, but this made us a good picture for one day. Played January 18.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Walter Abel, Paul Lukas—Very good picture, but did not draw. Nice settings. Fine acting.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—Very interesting production. I, like many others, thought it would be a draggy costume picture, and were very pleasantly surprised to find that this picture was full of pep and vitality. Everybody pleased. Tied in with high school to good advantage. Margot Grahame as the vamp of the middle ages made some of our modern age vamps look like two cents. Play it.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

TOP HAT: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—Very good picture. The tops in screen entertainment. Buy it, advertise and make some money.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix has an appeal in westerns that compares favorably with box-office results. Running time, 66 minutes. Played January 18-19.—Ken Higgins, Avon Theatre, Edwards, N. Y. Rural and small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple, John Boles, Rochelle Hudson—A very good picture. Perfect in every way. Due to below zero weather, business way below normal. Played December 25-26.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—Very good. Just an every-day, down-to-real-life picture. No gaudiness. Wholesome and clean. Played January 1-2.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. General patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—Good picture, but Gaynor doesn't draw as she used to. Played January 5-7.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

GAY DECEPTION, THE: Francis Lederer, Frances Dee—On a regular run this no doubt would have pleased, but it is doubtful that our patrons would have been attracted by the title. Used as a preview, this clever, laugh-filled comedy was received with enthusiasm. Comments were plentiful and highly favorable. Running time, 76 minutes. Played January 4.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

HARD ROCK HARRIGAN: George O'Brien—This is a good action picture. Better for small towns than for class theatres. I would call it just a fair production for small town and rural patronage. Played December 28.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

HERE'S TO ROMANCE: Nino Martini, Genevieve Tobin, Anita Louise—Two reels too long; draggy, very little entertainment, unless you like lots of opera. Double it with picture with lots of action or comedy. Running time, 86 minutes. Played January 8.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—Best draw in years. Everybody came out to see Rogers' last picture and went home pleased.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—One of Rogers' best pictures.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye—Even better than "Thanks a Million." This picture reminded me of the first and best musicals we had back in '29. Patrons said Warner Baxter was not only better than in "42nd Street," but the picture was even better than "42nd Street." Played January 19.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine. Town and country patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE: Warner Baxter, Jack Oakie, Alice Faye—Great musical production with a nice story written into it. Struck a very bad storm during engagement, but the crowd came just the same and when they do that in a small town, you know that they like a picture. You won't go wrong with this one.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple—Great picture, great story. Liked by all. Without doubt her best yet. Blast this one high, wide and handsome and you won't be wrong. Played January 12-13-14.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine. Town and country patronage.

MAN WHO BROKE THE BANK AT MONTE CARLO, THE: Ronald Colman, Joan Bennett—Just fair. Colman deserves a much better story than this. —Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage

METROPOLITAN: Lawrence Tibbett—Each exhibitor should know how a picture will go in his town. Tibbett is the whole show. This broke all house records for me. Played January 5-6.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BIG NEWS ON Air Conditioning

AN amazing new development that gives results never before possible is soon to be announced by

Kooler-Aire

U. S. AIR CONDITIONING CORP., MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Watch for it Wait for it!

METROPOLITAN: Lawrence Tibbett—Very good entertainment, but does not draw the small town patronage. Grand opera too much for them. Tibbett's singing splendid.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MUSIC IS MAGIC: Alice Faye, Ray Walker—Another one good only on a dual, although it has its moments, especially the final reel. The main thing is, this class of picture means absolutely nothing at the box-office. We absorb as many of them as possible on a mid-week dual bill and are lucky to get our money back. Running time, 66 minutes. Played January 15.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

MUSIC IS MAGIC: Alice Faye, Ray Walker—Got its share of laughs on a New Year's Eve show. Patrons forgot the horns, sepentine and hilarity once the picture got started, and found it interesting enough to keep quiet. That alone ought to be recommendation enough. Running time, 66 minutes. Played New Year's Eve.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

NAVY WIFE: Claire Trevor, Ralph Bellamy—This picture should "click" for average business in most any town. Audience pleased. Business only fair, due to weather conditions. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 29-30.—C. J. Hubley, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Tallulah, La. Rural and small town patronage.

ORCHIDS TO YOU: John Boles, Jean Muir—Nice little picture, with good audience appeal. Not a dull moment in it. Some action and comedy and always interesting. Played January 11.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

REDHEADS ON PARADE: John Boles, Dixie Lee—A fair program picture lacking in box-office names. The audience reaction was passably good.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY: Rochelle Hudson, Cesar Romero, Bruce Cabot—For this type picture, one of the best ever made. Pleased 75 per cent of my audience. Business average for two-day run. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 5-6.—C. J. Hubley, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Tallulah, La. Rural and small town patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak, Fred Allen—Powell's best so far. Fred Allen was a surprise. He was much better in this than he is over the radio. Of course, Patsy Kelly just about stole the show. Business above average. Running time, 87 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak, Patsy Kelly, Fred Allen—Very well liked by every one. Powell is very popular with both young and old.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers, John McGuire, Sally Blane—This is the type of picture our patrons prefer; a story of every-day people and their simple joys and sorrows; a people who have no assumed accents, shallow sophisticated ideals, or kingly ambitions. In short, a people wholly American and proud of it. The popularity of Jane Withers is fast approaching that of Shirley Temple and the stories given her have wide appeal. Our patrons' wholehearted approval of this film was attested by a generous response at the box-office and no complaints. Played January 12-14.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

THUNDER MOUNTAIN: George O'Brien, Morgan Wallace, Barbara Fritchie—This picture can hardly be described as a western, but is best described as an action film. Very little horseflesh, but a great deal of hand-to-hand fighting. Good audience reaction.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

THUNDER MOUNTAIN: George O'Brien, Barbara Fritchie—One that the western fans enjoyed.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

YOUR UNCLE DUDLEY: Edward Everett Horton—They may come worse, but I have never run one. There is just one word for it, plain terrible. Lay it out if you can, and get your exits cleared, for you will need them. I have run a good many clucks in 16 years and I think that this will head the list.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

United Artists

DARK ANGEL, THE: Merle Oberon, Frederic March, Herbert Marshall—A wonderful picture from every standpoint. Business bad on account of stormy weather and washed out roads. Wish more people could have seen this. Play it and give it all the advertising you can afford.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

RED SALUTE: Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Young—Just fair.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

SPLENDOR: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—Very good acting by whole cast, and pleased.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

OLESON URGES MORE EXHIBITOR REPORTS

"Make an appeal to the country exhibitors to send in more reports to 'What the Picture Did for Me'," writes O. INGMAR OLESON, of the Sons of Norway theatre at Ambrose, North Dakota.

"It is a wonderful help in selecting the most suitable pictures. The press notices and the advertising is often quite misleading and the most highly advertised picture often turns out a flop. The picture that is a great success in the larger cities may not draw in the rural districts, and vice versa. Let us have more reports from the small towns. Come on in, boys; Quigley pays the postage."

SPLENDOR: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—Good entertainment, of the type that will not make this picture popular in every situation. Slow in tempo, lack of action, obvious story, but interesting. Excellent performances by the entire cast, good dialogue and nice settings all contribute to make this above average. Our patrons liked it and business was O. K. Running time, 77 minutes. Played January 1-2.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

WEDDING NIGHT, THE: Anna Sten, Gary Cooper—A swell picture. Direction, photography, acting, the best ever. Being located in a Polish and Bohemian and German town, it made a hit. Sad ending.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

Universal

AFFAIR OF SUSAN, THE: Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell—This is a good one. Very funny. Both Pitts and O'Connell are funny comedians. Story made for laughs and they get them. Everyone tickled and satisfied. Clean comedy. Played January 10-11.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

BORDER BRIGANDS: Buck Jones—Drew better than the average picture. Has plenty of action and is all right for small towns or country. A little better than the average western. Played January 4.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

EAST OF JAVA: Charles Bickford, Elizabeth Young—You won't do yourself any good nor your patrons either by running this one. It is a complete waste of time and film. What entertainment value there might have been is completely destroyed by having so many of the characters killed by lions, a gruesome method of furnishing thrills, if they can be called thrills. As one patron remarked, "too bad the lions didn't get them all in the first reel. The picture could have ended then and there; just where it should have ended." Running time, 73 minutes. Played January 8-9.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

EAST OF JAVA: Charles Bickford, Elizabeth Young, Leslie Fenton—A run-of-the-mill picture that is especially well suited for double featuring. This action film received very little comment, but the general reaction was that it was just another picture.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

FIGHTING YOUTH: Charles Farrell, June Martel—Good football picture. Good story and good cast. Ann Sheridan was good in her role.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Alice Brady—Here is a pip. Good for three days and strong at the finish. Alice can sure produce the hilarity. Can remember featuring her as a star back in 1915 and she is still going strong. A genuine trouper. Good luck to her. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 12-14.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Alice Brady, Anita Louise, Douglass Montgomery—The best comedy that we have played for some time. The plot is not interesting, but Alice Brady with her humor keeps the audience in a happy mood. The old English lord is good, too, dontche know, by jove. Sub-zero weather and stormy so we did not net film rental. Played January 10-11.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

REMEMBER LAST NIGHT: Edward Arnold, Constance Cummings—This one is so smart, it is ahead of everything in a long time. Smart dialogue, smart, snappy direction and execution, and smart sets make it one of the best entertainments released by anyone. Box office fair only. Cast all of them 100 per cent.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

STORMY: Rex, Noah Beery, Jr., Jean Rogers—Of its kind there has been none better.—Russell Armentrout, Clark Theatre, Louisiana, Mo. General patronage.

STORMY: Noah Beery, Jr., Jean Rogers—A gem of the photographer's art. Some of the scenes are fairly breath-taking in their beauty and magnitude. Nice little story, well acted, all combined to make this a real joy to screen. Our patrons liked it immensely and told us so. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 3-4.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SWEET SURRENDER: Frank Parker, Tamara, Helen Lynd—An exceptionally good musical with more story value than that of the average picture of this type. Frank Parker has a pleasing personality and his voice is, of course, just about perfect. Helen Lynd, pert and blond, won favor with our patrons for her comedy contributions to the film. The lack of box-office names necessitated our doubling this with another feature, but it is strong enough to stand alone.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WEREWOLF OF LONDON: Henry Hull, Valerie Hobson—A washout; so unreasonable that the effect it should have had on the audience was killed completely. Business under par, with lots of unfavorable comments. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 15.—C. J. Hubley, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Tallulah, La. Rural and small patronage.

Warner Bros.

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown—Here is a real human interest story. Everybody satisfied, including cashier. Perfect for Friday and Saturday. Our patrons rate Joe E. Brown next to the late Will Rogers. His pictures are invariably good. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 3-4.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

DANGEROUS: Bette Davis, Franchot Tone—Excellent acting by Miss Davis and Franchot Tone. Story mildly interesting. Unexpected twist at the end with nice ending. Good for one day. Played January 17.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

DR. SOCRATES: Paul Muni, Ann Dvorak—Very good entertainment. And plenty exciting.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

FRISCO KID: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—Good screen entertainment, but not up to high standard of Cagney's usual performance. Will please most all. Cagney lacked his customary punch that puts his pictures across.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

FRISCO KID: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—liked by everyone. We kind of missed Pat O'Brien.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

LITTLE BIG SHOT: Sybil Jason, Robert Armstrong—Played on a Sunday. Should be used midweek or Friday-Saturday. Good program picture. It will please the cash customers.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Pat O'Brien, Dick Powell—A very fine production. Can't see how anyone could report to the contrary. Dick Powell is a great favorite here and I do not think he was miscast. As long as he was willing to take a role like the one he had, then nobody should feel sorry about it. He pleased his fans here and helped the drawing power of the picture, and nobody complained about him being miscast. Swell picture for me. I'd like to know what became of George O'Hara and Cullen Landis. (This has nothing to do with "Page Miss Glory," but the last two mentioned stars used to be great favorites of mine and I would appreciate it very much if some exhibitor or the Herald would give me this information.)—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage. [Cullen Landis is directing non-theatricals for Wilding Picture Productions of Detroit, Mich. George O'Hara is inactive.—Ed.]

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Davies is sure done as far as we're concerned. Powell has a small bit that didn't help. No business. Played January 14-16.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Seemed a little silly in some places, but patrons said it was excellent. Running time, 92 minutes.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

SPECIAL AGENT: George Brent, Bette Davis—Played this on a midnight show (Saturday) and it drew an exceptionally good crowd. Picture pleased 100 per cent. Plenty of action and an intensely interesting story. It's a stomp-down good picture!—Clarke Gurley, Ritz Theatre, Bainbridge, Ga. General patronage.

SPECIAL AGENT: George Brent, Bette Davis—A nice picture. Gangster type, but seemed to please. Running time, 78 minutes.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, Frank McHugh, Jane Froman—I cannot recommend this picture. Singing stars do not go with my audience. O'Brien and McHugh should not be in pictures like this.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, James Melton, Jane Froman, Jean Muir—Good entertainment, but by no means a special. Drew average, but held up very poorly after being ballyhooed so much.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, Jane Froman, James Melton, Frank McHugh, Jean Muir—Pretty good musical. Nothing outstanding. Melton has a good voice and there are a couple of ensemble numbers that add to the picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, Jane Froman—A fine musical picture, stars great, but "The Lady in Red" stole the picture. I call it an extra good entertainment. Pleased them all.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne, Donald Woods—Smooth and satisfying musical. Warner Bros. seems to lead the field with pictures of this type, with Metro close behind with the Jack Bennys. Can't go wrong with this one, city, town or country. Running time, 87 minutes. Played January 15-16.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

UNCIVIL WARRIORS: Broadway Comedies—Columbia certainly improved their short subjects a great deal in the past two years. In my opinion, their two-reelers are on a par with the best. This series is fine. Running time, 20 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

DAME SHY: Tuxedo Comedies—Very good two-reeler.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

KNOCKOUT DROPS: Frolics of Youth—And still they come, each one a little worse than the rest. This year there are not two in 10 that are worth running. I mean straight socalled comedies. Since sound came in, the producers have lost the touch that made entertainment in the two-reelers.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LADIES LOVE HATS: Star Personality Comedies—Educational really put out the honeys in the short subject field. If they ever put out a good one this year, I'll bet they put it against percentage. Running time, 20 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND MELODY: Musical Comedies—A very, very excellent short. Had more favorable comments on this than most good features receive. Running time, 21 minutes.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

ONE BIG HAPPY FAMILY: Tuxedo Comedies—Two-reel comedy. Fair to middling, rather tiresome in spots.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

SONG PLUGGER: Song Hit Stories—No Good. Another one who thinks he is a canary.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. General patronage.

TIMID YOUNG MAN, THE: Buster Keaton—Good comedy of hitch hikers and man haters. We always please our customers when we play a Buster Keaton comedy.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

YE OLDE TOY SHOP: Terry-Toons—A very good black-and-white cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ALIAS ST. NICK: Happy Harmonies—This one is a honey and deserves your best playing time.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

ALIAS ST. NICK: Happy Harmonies—Another Metro colored cartoon that pleased everyone. Very entertaining.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BASKETBALL TECHNIQUE: MGM Sports Parade—Excellent and very interesting.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

DESERT DEATH: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—The third of the Crime Doesn't Pay series and equal to the previous releases. I class these featurettes as the best two-reelers on the market. I played this with "Night at the Opera" and gave it almost equal billing. If you want a punch-packed two-reeler, book "Desert Death." Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

FOLLIES OF 1936: Our Gang—A short subject that pleased so much it deserves special billing. It is better entertainment than plenty socalled "feature" pictures.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

FOLLIES OF 1936: Our Gang—Excellent. Not their best, but about as good as their best.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FOOTBALL TEAMWORK: MGM Sports Parade—Good. Will fit in on almost any program.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GREAT AMERICAN PIE COMPANY: MGM Miniatures—Because of its length, it will get by. Not much, however.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HISTORIC MEXICO CITY: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—These colored travelogues are excellent and FitzPatrick's pleasing voice is always a joy to hear.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

HONEYLAND: Happy Harmonies—An excellent color cartoon. Running time, 10 minutes.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

HOT MONEY: Todd-Kelly—Very good comedy. A few asked if this was Miss Todd's last. This team was quite popular.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN MONKEY BUSINESS: Charlie Chase—Fair. Not as good as some he has made.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrsion, Ark. Small town patronage.

NURSE TO YOU: Charley Chase—An average Chase comedy.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

NURSE TO YOU: Charley Chase—Better than average comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

PITCAIRN ISLAND TODAY: Oddities—A very educational and interesting reel.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

POOR LITTLE ME: Happy Harmonies—The best color cartoons on the market. Running time, 11 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

THICKER THAN WATER: Laurel and Hardy—Good two-reel comedy. Nothing to rave about, but it got quite a few laughs. Running time, 16 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Paramount

EXCUSE MY GLOVES: Headliners—Another good one-reel musical from Paramount. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

HOOKED LIGHTNING: Grantland Rice Sportlights—These Grantland Rice Sportslights are always good; this one no exception. Rates top spot. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irving, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

JUMPING CHAMPIONS: Grantland Rice Sportlights—This series is the best of the entire Paramount lineup. Running time, 10 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

MUSICAL MEMORIES: Color Classics—This color is the worst I've seen yet. It is terribly indistinct. The subject is good, but the color spoils it. Running time, eight minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

TAKING THE BLAME: Betty Boop Cartoons—This got quite a number of laughs. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO Radio

GOING ON TWO: Dionne Quintuplets—Pulls and pleases and that is more than some features can do. Running time, 17 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

HOME WORK: Superba Comedies—Fair two-reeler.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

HOME WORK: Superba Comedies—Not many laughs in this. Errol gets very tiresome. Running time, 19 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

IF THIS ISN'T LOVE: Musicals—Some guy thinks he can warble. Terrible. Four walkouts on this one, so use your judgment.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. General patronage.

IN LOVE AT 40: Edgar Kennedy Comedy—Good comedy that got the laughs. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

LA CUCARACHA: Steffi Duna, Don Alvarado—Played this one quite old; but it couldn't have been better liked had it been released only today. Rated as the champion short of last year, it lived up to its advertising, and then some. The only complaint was that it was not long enough! Running time, 21 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Directors, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

LITTLE NEW NEW YORK: Easy Aces—I wonder if anyone thinks they are funny. I played this with the feature "Hi Gaucho," completing a terrible program. Running time, 10 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Ky. Small town patronage.

MAJOR BOWES' AMATEUR THEATRE OF THE AIR: No. 1—Something lacking in presentation. Interesting chiefly because people see the amateurs they have heard on the air. Certainly not worth the price asked. Running time, 18 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MAJOR BOWES' AMATEUR THEATRE OF THE AIR: Bowes' amateur theatre of the air pleases, but I do not see that they draw extra business.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MARCH OF TIME: No. 9—Good, but too much money for it. Not worth any more than a single reel scenic.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. General patronage.

MOLLY MOO COW AND THE INDIANS: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Excellent colored cartoon. Got a lot of laughs.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

MOLLY MOO COW AND THE INDIANS: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—In Molly Moo Cow, RKO has a great character. These colored cartoons are good enough for anybody's program and should have preferred time.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PATHE TOPICS: No. 1—These singles are in a class by themselves and one of the best fillers on the market.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RAG DOG: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Nice little color cartoons.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TOPNOTCHERS: Easy Aces—Athletics. Good for those that like it.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

FOX NEWS: Always up to the minute. Crisp, well balanced. Would rather have this than any other news. Many patrons stay and see it twice.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine. Town and country patronage.

United Artists

BAND CONCERT: Mickey Mouse—The tops in colored cartoons. It rates all the publicity you can give it.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

GRASSHOPPER AND THE ANTS, THE: Silly Symphonies—All the Silly Symphonies are very good. —Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MICKEY SHANGHAIED: Mickey Mouse—Dandy Cartoon.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

THREE ORPHAN KITTENS: Silly Symphonies—Very good colored cartoon reflecting highest quality and very entertaining.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

Universal

CAMERA THRILLS: Universal Special—Here's a short that packs more thrills than a dozen features. Not the most pleasant picture to look at, but every foot packs a wallop, of the kind that strikes right at the heart. For those who can take it, it's a sensation. Even those who can't will admit it is a mighty tribute to the newsreel cameraman, whose courage made this all possible. Running time, 21 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

DOUBLE EXPOSURE: Bob Hope—Nothing extra. Will get by for one-day showing. Not many laughs in two-reel comedies now days.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FREDDY MARTIN AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—An excellent band act with good singing and very cleverly staged.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

I WANNA PLAY HOUSE: Merrie Melodies—A very fine colored cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

JACK DENNY AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—A fine band act with good singing and dancing.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

NUTVILLE: Pepper Pot—Radio Ramblers. Slightly better than average.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

RED NICHOLS AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—Another excellent band act.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Serials

Mascot

BURN 'EM UP BARNES: Jack Mulhall, Lola Lane, Frankie Darro—Good serial and pleased all. Enough action to keep them on the edge of the seat. Good sound and print in good shape. Running time, 28 minutes, opening chapter.—Ken Higgins, Avon Theatre, Edwards, N. Y. Rural and small town patronage.

MIRACLE RIDER: Tom Mix—Tom Mix is terrible in this. He looks like he is getting too old to get on a horse. His voice does not record at all. No extra draw here. Running time, 20 minutes each chapter.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

Universal

TAILSPIN TOMMY IN THE GREAT AIR MYSTERY: Clark Williams, Noah Berry, Jr., Jean Rogers —Have played three chapters and the followers seem to like it, as I have not had a complaint from anyone yet.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

Paramount Circuit in Control

Southio Theatres, Inc., a Paramount subsidiary, has leased the Sorg and Gordon, at Middletown, Ohio, formerly controlled by Gordon Theatres, and now dominates the town with operation of the Paramount and Strand, which gives Paramount 5,500 out of the 6,000 seats in this 30,000 population spot. James Stamper becomes manager of the Sorg, and Robert Gibbs, Jr., will manage the Gordon. R. E. Peffly remains as city manager. Southio also operates the Paramount, Palace and Rialto, at Hamilton, Ohio. Tracy Barham is general manager and George Fettick, booker.

Canada Tax Figures

The Dominion Government has added its bit of year-end statistics with the report that, for the calendar year of 1934, the receipts of 799 reporting theatres in Canada totalled $25,280,300, or an increase of 1.5 per cent over the total of $24,897,100 for 1933. Returns from film exchanges revealed an even greater increase in cash volume with receipts of $7,618,700 or 9.4 per cent better than in 1933.

Nolan Joins Comerford

John Nolan, formerly executive director for Fox Films in Australia, has joined the Comerford organization in Scranton, Pa. Frank C. Walker, vice-president of the Comerford company, has borrowed him for a few months to assist in handling the company's affairs, Mr. Nolan said.

Ontario Tax $1,743,430

The Ontario Government profited nicely from the amusement tax, launched last June. A year-end report showed that for the nine months ending December 31, the collections were $1,743,240 as compared with only $555,460 for the same nine months of 1934.

Universal Theatres Dividend

A fourth liquidating dividend for $2.50 a share has been paid by Universal Chain Theatres, which has been undergoing liquidation for several years.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

WHY MUST IT TAKE NERVE?

One phrase used by Col. Jenkins in his last week's column points to an ever-present weakness in the structure of the motion picture industry. In commenting upon the article on publicity written by D. S. Lawler of Kansas City and published in the Dec. 28th issue of the Herald, the Colonel referred to the author as a "man who knows what he is talking about and who has the nerve to get right out in the open and tell it."

Your Chairman, from the very beginning, believing firmly in the benefits to the industry of open discussion in these pages on various phases of theatre operation has endeavored to stimulate personal expression from men in the field. And our experience has been that with conditions being what they are theatremen who choose to speak freely will rarely do so for publication unless their identities are not revealed. It is this regrettable circumstance that enables us to understand what Colonel Jenkins perhaps has in mind in referring to a man who "has the nerve" to speak out under his own signature. At the same time, his phrase may be taken as no uncertain commentary upon these same certain conditions in this business.

Why is it necessary that members of the industry wholly concerned with strengthening its structure, removing its weaknesses and who desire to speak out so that these things shall be known and acted upon must be regarded as heroes of a sort because they choose to identify their opinions in print?

The readiest answer and one that probably will do as well as any, is fear—fear that such statements will be taken amiss and the authors immediately chastised by some superior. There is basis of truth in this undoubtedly and to quite an extent, but not as all-conclusive as one might be led to believe. There are smart, wide-visioned motion picture executives who would look upon with favor any general discussion in print to aid in cleaning up sore spots.

Of course it would only be a plain sucker who would at this time encourage men dependent upon their jobs to come out publicly and put their names to letters that have to do with unfair working conditions and insufficiency of remuneration.

But we refuse to believe that any open forum conducted in these pages on such subjects as the control of faulty publicity or other matters as important to the industry would result in less than corrective remedies sponsored even by those whose opinions the silent theatremen may mistakenly have occasion to fear.

The industry stands indicted while any member of it who has something really worthwhile to say and decides to say it, must be regarded as a fellow of great daring and high courage.

OFTTIMES MORE THRILLING

Screen history is punctuated with accounts of herculean labors in the mechanics of production that bid fair to become studio sagas in some future motion picture hall of fame. But not all the niches are to be reserved for the studioites. In the field of exhibition there too are deeds of derring-do to be recounted fondly when theatremen gather.

On a following page is set forth a graphic tale of battle—a grim battle waged by Famous Players Canadian managers to keep their theatres open when the power lines washed out. "Reads like a book," proudly writes J. J. Fitzgibbons telling of the physical courage shown by his boys in the face of devastating blizzards.

Reads like a book? Yes, indeed. And ofttimes feats performed by theatremen in the course of duty make far more thrilling reading than the tales pictured on their screens.

NO COINCIDENCE

Herb Morgan, Quigley Silver winner, goes from the post of Loew's Baltimore Theatres publicist to an important spot in the home office advertising department of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Chuck Shannon, two-time Quigley Bronze winner, moves up to the position of manager of the Belmar Theatre in Harry Kalmine's Pittsburgh Warner Theatres zone.

Al Sindlinger, Quigley Silver winner and formerly manager of Warner Bros. Appleton, Appleton, Wis., becomes exploitation director for March of Time.

Promotions to theatremen are of course not confined to Quigley Award winners but it is more than a coincidence that the list of those thus rewarded grows so steadily.

Youngsters in the borough of nearby Brooklyn who endeavor to crash the portals of Joe Lee's Paramount Theatre have discovered and not at all pleasantly that the good doctor has conceived a punishment to discourage their boldness. The inquisition prepared for juvenile malefactors takes the form of a shower bath with lots of soap. Reports have it that after one such treatment, the rascals, cleaner in body if not in mind, are usually eager to renounce the ways of the wicked.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

This cartoon was created by Curley Bowers, Paramount Theatre, Austin, Minnesota.

Special "Zero" Show For Junior Birdmen

As "Ceiling Zero" is an aviation picture appropriately enough did Irv Windisch and Zeb Epstin tie in for the date at the New York Strand with the Junior Birdmen of America. Top stunt was invitation from Pat O'Brien inviting representative number of youngsters to special morning screening, letter appearing in the New York American, the newspaper sponsoring the junior flying club. Event was broadcast from the stage and reported among those speaking on the radio were Mayor LaGuardia, Eddie Rickenbacker and Frank Hawks.

Special short wave set was planted in lobby to pick up messages between flying planes and airports. Dialogue record out front carried actual give-and-take between Cagney and O'Brien to fit scene from picture enlarged and used in the display.

Modern planes with copy were placed in well-spotted windows and other tieups included Postal hookin with windows showing various flying instruments. On opening night several members of the Quiet Birdmen, an organization of ex-war flyers, attended the performance.

Hikers' "No" Hand Stops 'Em in Spokane

To get over the angle in Republic's "Hitch Hike Lady," Manager H. D. McBride, Granada, Spokane, worked out a gummed sticker made up in the shape of a hand thumbing a ride. Right across the palm the word "No" was lettered and reverse side carried title and theatre credits. According to Ed Finney, Republic ad head, the novelty was in demand by autoists, also service stations and various automobile clubs.

Unique way of selling new 1936 model auto was engineered by having car cruise all parts of the city. Side banners carried copy: "Don't hitch-hike to the Granada to see, etc., etc.—ride in this new, etc." Title also was sold tied to an ice cream sundae concocted by local drug chain with various units plugging the new confection.

Newspaper campaign started with teaser ads and other angles were Woolworth lipstick tiein with other windows planted at Postal and Western Union branch offices.

Woodin Arranges Premiere For Coulee Dam Picture

Harry Woodin, former New York theatre executive and now in charge of national distribution and exploitation for Hooper-Connell Productions reports recent activities anent the Coulee Dam six-reel picture recently completed by his organization.

As the dam is near Spokane, Wash., Woodin tied in with the Spokesman-Review of that city on contest for best title for picture with cash and round trips to the dam offered as prizes. Contest was put on well enough in advance of the premiere dated, for the Fox Theatre, Spokane, on Jan. 28, to build up a lot of community interest in the production.

March of Time Offers Prizes in Ad Contest

Started on first of January and ending April 1, managers and publicity men in key point theatres playing "March of Time" have been invited to participate in current contest sponsored by that organization. Entries will be judged as follows: Best and most consistent tieup in regular advertising. Best, but not necessarily largest, lobby display. Best general publicity and best special stunt or tieup. Entries may be on one or all of the above points.

Contest closes April 1, with theatres divided into sectional groups. Two specially constructed nine-tube radios will be awarded winners in each group. Judges are Bruce Barton, Jules Levey and S. Barret McCormick.

To aid contestants, March of Time has created a tabbed file folder containing material for publicity, advertising and exploitation. Credit for the snappy literature goes to Ralph Rolan, ad head, working with A. K. Mills, publicity director, and Al Sindlinger, in charge of exploitation.

12-Day Limerick Contest Sells "Strike Me Pink"

Last-line limerick contest put on 12 days ahead with local sheet on "Strike Me Pink" at the Radio City Music Hall, featured campaign arranged by Hazel Flynn and Jim McFarland. Those turning in best last lines were guests at the picture. Tiein with Fifth Avenue store beauty salon illustrating hairdress of women stars was arranged for series of display ads.

Different angle for trailer selling was put across at the Pennsylvania Station, where announcement trailer on 16 mm. film was used to attract. Many merchandising tieups recommended in the pressbook were effected through local outlets of the national advertisers.

Music stores featured the hit songs in the picture and coast-to-coast plugs were also secured on some of the bigger radio programs.

Folks in Baltimore Play "Column-Mania"

Blame it on Rod Collier and George Browning at the Stanley, Baltimore, for the new game of "column-mania" Baltimoreans were recently invited to play by local paper in tieup on "Stars of Broadway."

Publicity credited Broadway columnists for the start of the idea, the scriveners frequently leaving out essential names in their paragraphs. So readers were invited to fill in names in five different questions run daily, winners getting cash and guest tickets.

Questions for instance ran like this: "Dolores del Rio, glamorous Mexican film star, is married to a famous artist by the name of ———," "Joan Crawford is the latest Hollywood bride, although she was married in New York State recently to ———?"

Contest ran for three days and entrants were required to send in the 15 answers at one time with letter telling how they enjoyed game. Cleverness of letters helped determine winners.

On "Collegiate" the Warnerites also went contest, tying with another sheet for an idea wherein readers were invited to form an intelligent sentence made up of the titles of all the song hits from the picture.

"Pasteur Week" Suggested In Warner Bros. Pressbook

Included in the exploitation on "Life of Louis Pasteur," starring Paul Muni, the Warnerites suggest a week in honor of the French scientist built up around his many important discoveries. These are enumerated. Various stunts are suggested to tie in this angle.

Page of class ideas for schools, charity parties, formal openings, etc., are offered as are two national tieups, co-op page and other interesting slants. Ten-day fictionization is also available. Publicity includes interviews, sketches, science features together with eight-page insert of varied display ads.

Canadian Theatremen Battle Storm to Keep Houses Open

Manager Hikes Six Miles Through Blizzard to Get Equipment

Some few weeks back, severe storms up in British Columbia washed out the power lines in the Okanagan Valley, where are situated houses operated by Famous Players-Canadian. In the following addressed to your Chairman, J. J. Fitzgibbons, general director of circuit theatre operations, relates, and with justifiable pride, how his boys met emergencies.

DEAR MIKE:

In the operation of a circuit covering the vast territory we do here in Canada, from time to time dramatic instances appear in the managers' letters, the most recent of which is where our boys in the Okanagan Valley of British Columbia worked to get their shows open when the power line belonging to the West Kootenay Light and Power Company, which furnishes us with light and power, was washed out. Our boys, by rigging up emergency systems, not only got their theatres going, but helped to furnish some light to other businesses.

At Kelowna, our manager was successful in securing a 10 KW AC generator set which has put him back in business and will continue to be the bright spot in that Mountain Town, as it is estimated the power line will not be in operation for six or eight weeks. If you have ever traveled up through these Mountains, you can well appreciate just what a job it is to re-establish the power line which has been washed away.

The enclosed copy of letter from Harry Black, of the Empress, Penticton, to Mr. F. H. Gow, District Supervisor in Vancouver, reads like a book and clearly indicates not only the ingenuity but the loyalty of some of our Managers.

The following, reproduced in part, is the letter from Harry Black to Mr. Gow, of which Mr. Fitzgibbons speaks:

DEAR FRANK:

I guess it's about time I was getting some word to you with regard to our grief out here. I've been running around in circles for days.

First of all, I would like to say that considerable credit is due Tom Bailey and Jim Looney for the assistance they gave me and made it possible to get the show started as soon as we did.

After talking to you on Friday I put Tom to work making alterations in the booth, and getting things ready for the plant when it arrived. Looney and myself hired a man and truck, and started out in a blinding snowstorm at 5 P. M. for the Grandoro Mine—about 30 miles away with a climb of 5,500 ft. altitude.

We left town in six inches of snow and as we climbed the mountains it became deeper, until we were forced to abandon the truck, about six miles from our destination. We walked the six miles through three feet of snow to where we procured a tractor and snowplow and brought the equipment down to our truck. By this time it was three A. M. and Bailey, worried about us, came to meet us in another truck all prepared to pull us out of a ditch or something.

Shortly after meeting them the clutch in our truck burned out, and we had to transfer the equipment to the other truck, and also tow the original one home, arriving at five A. M. We immediately went to work on the plant and had it in running order by afternoon. For motive power I was able to get a car motor which had been fixed up with a governor and pulley. This gave us a little trouble on Saturday, but after working on it all day Sunday we have had no further trouble.

On Monday everything ran fine until nine P. M., when one of the brushes on the generator began to ark. This was fixed without shutting down, but it had burned some insulation off the armature and allowed some oil to run in, causing a short, which as soon as we started up yesterday started to burn. Bailey and myself were on hand at the time and no great damage was done. The generator had to be torn down and re-insulated, which caused a shut down and we were not able to get going until nine P. M., and ran only one show. . . .

I was talking to the Chief City Electrician this morning, and he stated unofficially that I could not expect power for at least three weeks. It was also stated that the emergency power, when it is hooked up in possibly two weeks would be very limited and would not be able to supply power to any heavy users. This will mean that our own plant will possibly be in operation from two to three months. . . .

There are four Delco plants operating in town at present, but the theatre contains the only street light and our neon sign can be seen from Summerland, and the benches. The stores are closing at 4 p. m. so I'm going to try continuous performances from 4.30 to 5.30 at matinee prices and after that evening prices.

If I am able to procure the larger transformer I will be able to supply power to some surrounding businesses which will help offset operating costs.

Sid Holland Agrees With Lawler View

The boys in the field continue to express themselves on D. S. Lawler's publicity article, in the Dec. 28 issue, and reproduced here is a letter from Round Tabler Sid Holland who agrees generally with the opinion held by the Kansas City Fox Midwest Theatres ad chief.

DEAR MIKE:

While I usually welcome an opportunity to disagree with some one—being a disagreer by nature, I must confess I am at a loss—not for 750 words but for 75 words which would add anything of value to Lawler's very splendid and timely article.

The solution of part of the problem, of course, lies in convincing the newspapers and periodicals that by killing the illusion in pictures they are killing the proverbial goose that lays the golden egg.

Why in an art that depends upon illusion for its very life, there should enter and be tolerated a group, who, for no better reason than to complete a column and appear to have the wisdom of sages—is far beyond my comprehension. Do the editors and publishers of said newspapers and periodicals realize they are jeopardizing their own "bread and butter" and perhaps "cake" in encouraging and accepting for public consumption this so called movie gossip?

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, Fox, Universal, Columbia and Warner Brothers —surely there is power behind these names! Let us pray that this power will be utilized while there is still life in the world's finest business.—SID HOLLAND, Elco Amuse. Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Actual Tunnel Photos Exhibited on "Tunnel"

Actual scenes of excavation in the new mid-town tunnel being constructed under the Hudson River between New Jersey and New York were obtained by Manager Morris Hatoff, State, Jersey City, for a special lobby exhibit on "Transatlantic Tunnel." In addition to the photos, Hatoff rigged up a 16 mm. projector built into the set piece as shown in the extreme left of accompanying photo. On this a trailer was shown. Heralds were distributed free of charge through tieup with Postal Telegraph and special cutout inspector stars given to members of Hatoff's Mickey Mouse Club which worked as another plug for the picture.

Dick Wright Suggests Anniversary Ideas

Some time in the year every theatre has an anniversary, and its observance can be just one of those things or made an event of importance, says Dick Wright, Cleveland zone Warner Theatres district manager. Helpful ideas for this event are suggested by the Warnerite, who has passed the following slants around to the managers in his sector.

Organization Nights

Tie in with civic associations, lodges, societies, clubs, etc., for different nights during the celebration, such as "Elks Night," "Legion Night," "West Hill Community Night," etc. Participation of these groups might include choral societies, glee clubs, dance schools, drill teams, amateur vaudeville and other similar slants.

Newspaper Tiein

If theatre has been in the community for any length of time, Wright suggests hooking in with local paper on a "remember when" contest along the lines of "What was the (Theatre's) opening attraction?" "What stars appeared in it?" etc. Old-time single or two-reel silent might also be shown.

Have newspaper conduct search for locals who attended theatre on opening night. These would be interviewed and be guests of theatre during the celebration. Photostatic copies of news stories describing opening could be blown-up for lobby display. Newspaper cartoonist might sketch a "cake-cutting" idea with manager and others of the staff represented.

Other Slants

Theatre might start savings account for first child born on date of anniversary and this could be tied in with participating bank for some promotional copy. Special edition of weekly house program; decoration of lobby and front and a strong line up of screen entertainment are other aids.

Marquis Finds Profits In Theatre Parties

Two years ago, says Manager J. Marquis, Egyptian, Brighton, Mass., he contacted various local clubs and organizations selling a theatre party plan. Starting with two such affairs, Marquis has worked up the idea until some 15 hold affairs at the theatre at least twice a year, with the list growing steadily.

When a club or society requests a donation or program ad, Marquis plants the party idea for raising funds. For every advertisement taken in these outside programs, this manager insists upon a return through the party plan and states that it has brought him the backing of every locally important group.

Salmon's Holiday Display Built Around Boxoffice

Savage Engineers Two Smart Tieups

On holdover for second week of "Mutiny" Manager Frank Savage, Warner, Youngstown, Ohio, secured a rare break by promoting almost the whole front page of local paper's second section for photos and captions. Two cuts ran four columns each and two others were three columns. Full page holdover streamer topped everything.

With another paper putting out a home comfort section supplementary to the regular edition, Savage secured the entire back page and full column on page two for theatre ads and publicity. Frank received thousands of the tabloids free of charge for distribution at the theatre.

Discontinued Boxoffice Becomes Holiday Display

Put to good use for a very distinctive lobby display was the inside boxoffice at the Riverside, New York City, where Manager Joe Salmon created a miniature snow scene as part of his holiday's decoration. The ticket window, not now used, has sufficient depth for such purposes and Salmon conceived an idea he called "Dreams of Yesterday" for the spot.

Reproduced at left, the display was built up to represent a fireplace and chimney effect with the box snow scene behind glass in the center as illustrated. It typified a snow-covered village nestled in a valley between two hills with roads dotted with horse-drawn sleds. The homes were illuminated, with church in background appearing as though services were going on with concealed victrola playing carols.

In addition, Salmon planted over his entrance doors a display he titled "A Night at the North Pole" depicting a miniature vessel hemmed in among the ice floes against background of peaks and icebergs. Team of dogs pulling sled was also used with light from ship's mast illuminating entire display.

Homer Harman Makes Neat Tieups on "Captain Blood"

Homer Harman of the Shubert Rialto, St. Louis, effected several neat window tieups on "Captain Blood." Stills, model ship and puppets were given display in steamship agency window centrally located. Book angle on Sabatini's novel came in for another excellent show with a large cutout still, showing Errol Flynn in action as well as copies of the book plus theatre and date sign. The same still cutout plus copy was placed in a large St. Louis music store (see photo), while Olivia de Havilland received her plug in one of the town's largest jewelry store, copy reading: "Jewels that would do a pirate's chest proud." Distinctive "Crusades" Tieup from Havana

(Right) Starting the exploitation of "Gay Divorcee" at headquarters, so to speak, does this window at the RKO Radio, Barcelona, Spain, branch, arranged in advance of showing in that sector. Decorations were supervised by branch manager, ROBERTO TRILLO, Spain RKO head.

YOU ARE INVITED TO JOIN UP

J. W. LEHRKIND
is the manager and owner of the Strand Theatre in White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Lehrkind says he started in in 1917 as an operator and "seat turner upper" and later managed houses. In 1932 he started a portable circuit and finally stayed in one town on a permanent two-change program. "J. W." says he can do anything around a theatre from electrical repairs right on through. He invented a reel indicator for use in the box office that operated from each machine electrically. He has bought, booked and had something to do with each branch of the theatre and even assisted in the installation of a pipe organ in the Ellen Theatre in Boseman. With your various and sundry experience, you ought to be able to tell us some mighty interesting stories on showbusiness.

in Creston, Iowa, is managing the Dickinson Theatre in Creston, Iowa. Bob started as an operator, then took a job managing. He has been only with Glen Dickinson Theatres, handling the Auditorium in Delphos, Kan., the Dickinson in Iola, Dickinson Theatres in Fayette and Marceline, Mo., and then to his present assignment.

we find at the Plaza Theatre, in Philadelphia, Pa., and since his fair city is one of the most active in our pages, we hope to add his name to the roster of livewire showmen reporting their activities via these pages. We can expect to hear from you shortly, can't we, Herb?

is the general circuit manager headquartering at the Hippodrome Theatre in Gloucester, England. We don't know what Rogers means by it, but he says he entered showbusiness "at birth," and his experience has covered delivering of programs to general management. His ancestors have been in the profession for generations and he has personally been in the variety, legit, touring and cinema end of the game. He has been with Poole's circuit for 28 years.

is another new overseas showman to join our ranks from the Granada Theatre in London, England. He comes recommended by Bruce Allan and we hope it was explained to you that we impose a moral obligation on all our members to keep in touch with us so that we may report their doings at the theatre via these pages. Let's hear from you, Burke.

is close to club headquarters, managing the Majestic Theatre in Brooklyn. Frank seems to have been around, having managed theatres in various spots, including the Morgan Grand in Sharon, Pa., Shyne circuit in Washington, D. C., to say nothing of theatres in Janesville, Ohio, Pleasantville, N. J., and Auburn, N. Y. Why not come in and say hello one of these days, Frank?

Absolutely No Dues or Fees!

ALEX D. SCHOR
joined the club a short while ago as manager of the Empress Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y. and we haven't heard from him since. Your responsibility to the Club just starts when you sign on the dotted line, Alex, remember we expect to hear from you from time to time and whenever you're in the neighborhood you might drop in and get acquainted.

assistant at the Embassy Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. comes well recommended by his boss, Joe Herman. The Embassy is a Randforce house and Dave has worked for the Federated Theatres and Fox as usher, chief usher and assistant manager. Lots of luck to you, Dave and why not come in some time?

is the relief manager for Consolidated Amusement Enterprises North Bronx Division, N. Y. and with his experience travelling from theatre to theatre there ought be plenty of stunts put over that should prove interesting reading to our members and contributors.

is managing the newly reopened State Theatre in Presque Isle, Maine, having started as doorman, cashier, office, non-sync operator, assistant and later relief manager until he attained his present job. The later positions were held at the Publix-Temple Theatre in Houlton, Maine. John has made a determined effort to start his membership off right, subscribes at the time and promises to keep us posted.

acts as assistant manager to a grand showman who is no stranger to our pages, L. O. Daniel, at the Delman Theatre in Houston, Texas. Jerry is a former sports writer for a San Antonio paper, which job he resigned to enter showbusiness. Well, Jerry, with your background and present boss to break you in, we shall expect big things from you.

managing the Broadway Theatre in Denver, Colo., is no stranger to us since we've heard from him before. John tells us that his house is supposed to have the best reproduction possible and is acoustically perfect. With that head start, John, tell us what you do to keep your house up front and the shekels coming in to the box office.

manager of the Tower Theatre in St. Paul, Minn., started as usher at the Garrick there, later became assistant at the New Riviera and the same year, 1930, was promoted to manage the Paramount. George later came East to manage Warners' Strand, Warner, Hollywood and Wintergarden Theatres. From there to B. S. Moss' Broadway and then returned to St. Paul at his present theatre.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 122, No. 6 — February 8, 1936

WHAT IS COMPETITION?

BECAUSE General Motors is putting out a traveling ballyhoo for the automobile business, including incidentally some motion pictures, there seems to be the makings of quite a shindy in the air, raised by persons who think they see a menace to the box office of the motion picture theatres of the land.

It would appear probable that there is a deal more excitement than menace involved.

The tent show is a part of the motion picture theatre's own history and background, the dim beginning from which it evolved. It is not likely to be seriously invaded by one of its ancestors.

There are other, though not so obvious, competitions about which the exponents of the screen are not consistently vociferous. The star of the motor movies is a mess of machinery, built in Detroit, but the stars of the nation-wide competition of the radio, which nightly invites the customers to stay at home, are mostly the very players and personaliites who have been created by and on the screen. That would appear to be something more immediately to be concerned about.

Also to be remembered is that constant and considerable flow of screen publicity, in newsreels and sports releases, for competitive amusement industries, as conspicuously exemplified by attentions to baseball, beginning with the spring practice in the South and continuing through the world series games.

Meanwhile the day has long since passed when the motion picture theatre can reasonably expect to have exclusive use of the medium of the films. The theatre is concerned with the films as a medium of entertainment, and it can demand that its function of entertainment shall be properly protected. But the motion picture is just a medium of expression, a way of saying things, and if others with something to say desire to use it nothing can prevent extension of its use. The theatre can no more expect a monopoly of the use of camera and projector than the newspaper might in an earlier day have demanded a monopoly of the linotype and the rotary press.

In the somewhat parallel field of publication, advertising has for years commanded the best printing, the best engraving, the finest paper stocks, and many, many highly skilled writers, but the market for literature still gives it a claim on attention and circulation that no advertising tract, book or pamphlet has ever approximated.

The motion picture theatre is in the main much more properly to be concerned about what it shows on its own screens than what may appear as competitive entertainment elsewhere. The screen theatre has arisen by no monopoly of entertainment, but by being the biggest value for the admission price. It has nothing really important to worry about but its own business.

NAIVE!

SO it seems that Mr. Elmer Rice and a number of other dramatists of ability and experience are not pleased at all with what develops to be the controlling policies of the Works Progress Administration theatre—in other words the first government controlled national theatre. It seems they couldn't find elbow room in it to say anything. The only surprise is that these gentlemen, more especially Mr. Rice, should have been so naive as to expect a free, frank stage under such auspices. That is not the way of governments or any spokesmen thereunto pertaining. They never say anything outright. Even the commander of the Union Army used to sign himself "Your Obedient Servant, U. S. Grant." And you know how much he meant it.

ANTICIPATING "PASTEUR"

IN "The Story of Louis Pasteur" about to issue from Warner Brothers the indications appear that the screen has a new asset of special value in the building of status and prestige in the more influential upper strata. While the box office vote is yet to be cast, advance attentions from the more serious observers and commentators of the public press denote an attitude of anticipation and receptivity that was unknown to the screen but a few years ago. In the main the movie columns have yet to hear about it, but the editorial writers are evidencing a remarkable interest.

THE Hollywood fauna, which would have given Darwin notions, while capable of many variants, has evolved a prevalent type characterized by platinum plumage on top, sun-tan face, with white bare legs below, but swathed in mink. A bevy of them, shot and stuffed, or just shot, would make a nice group for the American Museum of Natural History.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Own Inquiry

Large distributors face the unusual procedure of having the spotlight of a private investigation by a federal court judge turned on their activities in selling to independents. Judge George Welsh, in Philadelphia, this week set out on this bold and unprecedented move in an attempt to determine on his own whether the companies are violating anti-trust laws by unlawful conspiracies.

Judge Welsh appointed Ben Golder, himself a representative of the independents, to conduct the investigation, and upon Mr. Golder's findings the court will determine whether the practices of distributors should be made the subject of a federal grand jury inquiry. See page 13.

Remember the Maine

Don't "Remember the Maine," Hollywood producers are advised indirectly by the Spanish government. It all has to do with Twentieth Century-Fox's forthcoming "A Message to Garcia." Spain has cautioned the producers against the slightest reference in the picture to the sinking of the battleship Maine.

Further details appear in the Hollywood Scene, on page 37.

Music Suits

Increasing its pressure on the large radio networks to apply for performing rights licenses to its music, Warner this week filed two suits, seeking $1,565,000 damages, alleging copyright infringement, against Columbia Broadcasting System. Individual stations were also named, and a number of smaller suits were instituted.

ASCAP meanwhile was taking court action against exhibitors in the South, five suits having been filed for unlicensed use of music.

E. C. Mills, ASCAP's general manager, is sought by the large independent broadcasters as a Moses to lead them out of the copyright muddle, as the radio industry split into three camps. For particulars, see page 20.

$1,000 Fine

Producer, distributor or circuit members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., Will H. Hays, president, who violate the rules governing advertising standards, will, if found guilty, be fined $1,000.

This procedure became effective on February 1, but the organization had decided on its adoption some 10 months ago. "No special occasion prompted the move," said an MPPDA official.

A New Year

Starting the film season January 1, to coincide with the calendar year, instead of September 1 as has been the custom, is advocated by Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Cohn sees advantages to the exhibitor, distributor and producer in a film year concomitant with the calendar.

Support of Mr. Cohn's idea is offered in the fact that three large companies, besides his own, have already begun selling 1936-37 product. Mr. Cohn is interviewed on page 30.

Junior Matinees

Junior matinees, conducted by thousands of motion picture owners, usually on Saturday mornings, need not suffer a dearth of suitable material. Leading distributors and the National Board of Review have just completed a list of motion pictures adaptable to this type of exhibition. The record, with titles and credits, appears on page 40.

Leaves Hal Roach

After only four months' affiliation with the company, David L. Loew has resigned as vice-president of Hal Roach Studios, effective this Saturday.

Mr. Loew requested a release from his three-year contract, it is understood. No explanation was given by either Mr. Loew or Hal Roach, but Mr. Loew said he planned to make California his permanent home and would remain in the industry.

In Hollywood it was being regarded as a possibility that he would affiliate with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio.

Mr. Loew resigned as vice-president of Loew's, Inc., on October 1. At that time it was announced that plans for heavy expansion of Roach production were under way and that the studios would be greatly enlarged early this year.

Repeal Asked

The motion picture industry this week launched the advocacy of repeal of the 16-year-old statute in New York state prohibiting the admittance of unchaperoned minors to theatres.

That action, it was held, is the only feasible solution to the problems brought about by what is generally considered an unworkable, unenforceable law.

A "cop" in every theatre in the state is seen by the industry in legislative proposals to make the law more stringent. Meanwhile the police drive in New York City against theatres for admitting children continues, after 245 arrests. A picture of the entire situation is presented on page 51.

To Carl Laemmle

The lobby of the White Front Theatre which Carl Laemmle opened on Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago, thirty years ago, will be reproduced at Universal City on Monday, February 24th, when the production colony pays tribute to Mr. Laemmle's three decades in the business, with a luncheon on the "Phantom of the Opera" set.

Guests will enter the studio through the reproduced lobby of the White Front Theatre with its 290 undertaker chairs. Decorations and souvenirs will reflect the pioneer days.

Following the luncheon will be shown a special reel from "Showboat," one from "Sutter's Gold" and the 900-foot picture "Hiawatha," Mr. Laemmle's first, which was released by the original Imp company, directed by William Ranous and shot at the Falls of Minnehaha in Minneapolis.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Approved

RCA's capital readjustment, as proposed by Joseph P. Kennedy, was approved by directors this week and will go to stockholders for a vote on April 7. Eventually the only class of securities outstanding will be common stock.

At the same time David Sarnoff, president, announced that net income of Radio Corporation and subsidiaries for the year ended December 31 totaled $5,100,000, equivalent after full dividend requirements on the preferred A stock to $4.38 a share on 767,275 shares of preferred B stock. This compares with net income of $4,249,264, or $3.27 a share on the preferred B stock in 1934.

High lights of the new Kennedy reorganization plan are on page 17.

"Cain's Warehouse"

Assailing the Government's WPA theatre project as a "proving ground for sociological theories or a Cain's warehouse for outdated turns," Ralph Whitehead, executive secretary of the American Federation of Actors and an executive of the project, this week unleashed a barrage.

Administration of the program is controlled by a "clique" and most of the productions are impotent to effectuate the Government's plans to revive the stage, he charged. He also hit at the motion picture industry for its attitude toward vaudeville.

Meanwhile, a graduate of the "sociological school" of the theatre, Philip Barber, was appointed regional director for New York. Mr. Whitehead's charges and developments of the week are detailed in the story starting on page 29.

Loew Setup

The Securities and Exchange Commission found on its desk at Washington Monday morning a certificate by Loew's, Inc., of the registration of $15,000,000 of debentures which the company is to issue February 15th. Contained therein was a detailed explanation of contractual relations with officers of the corporation and others, showing that Irving Thalberg, Louis B. Mayer and J. Robert Rubin last year received $1,013,058 under a profit-sharing contract.

Loew's, Inc., now has 157 theatres, 73 of which are in the New York area, the management admitted, and pays Electrical Research Products, Inc., some $100,000 a year to put sound into its motion pictures

See page 14.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN IN "MODERN TIMES"

Charlie Chaplin, after much showmanly deliberation and whetting of anticipations, gave the world his "Modern Times" with a premiere at the Rivoli theatre in New York's Broadway Wednesday night—and revealed it a memory album of his triumphs of yesteryear.

"Modern Times", constructed as all Chaplins have been, is a succession of gags, business and feats of funny business, beaded along the gossamer thread of a plot as slight as a Shubert operetta.

The story, a waif of a wisp of a story, is the sentimental theme of "The Vagabond", the most romantic of his earlier endeavours. Sequences that ensue are reminiscent of "The Floorwalker", with its escalator, "The Rink", with his acrobatic rollerskating, and the most strikingly of all recalling the dope motivation of "Easy Street", a Vincent Bryan notion of '17, in which our hero becomes a superman by falling on a hypodermic. This time the dope is in the salt shaker. Superimposed over it all, making it the authentic Chaplin complete, is the general theme of the triumph of the boob, ever under pursuit by Might and Power as depicted by the law and the police, from the Keystone Cops to the officers of modern times.

The chases are abundant, as thrilling as ever and perhaps even more complex. The foil of wistful beauty in distress, so ably supplied in years agone by Miss Edna Purviance and successors, is in "Modern Times" charmingly represented by Miss Paulette Goddard, who has had a world of publicity of late as a Chaplin find.

The picture wins its title and the best and newest of its business from the addition of a theme that may be termed Man vs. Machine, wherein Mr. Chaplin is presented as the most conspicuous victim of the assembly line speed-up method of today's industry, in a symbolic mill that makes nothing but comedy. Just incidentally this mill sequence presents an anticipation of television with a device by which the boss in the office can see everything in the mill on his screen and can make himself menacingly, commandingly seen almost anywhere at will. There is a dig at the boss, of course, showing him working on jig-saw puzzles between fits of ordering speed-ups.

It must have been that dash of rather bored irony that encouraged Comrade Shumiatsky, of the Soviet cinema, a few months ago, to promise that Chaplin's picture was something important in service to the red cause. It is now evident enough that Mr. Chaplin's picture is not precisely a red tract. It just so chances now, too, that since the cables from Moscow have been so full of Stakhanoffism, the industrial sequences of "Modern Times" may have to the reds a new meaning.

The Rivoli's rather sophisticated first-night audience found the most fun in a mechanical sequence with Mr. Chaplin suffering at the ministrations of a feeding machine. The pie throwing that used to be done by hand now is presented better and faster by a machine.

This is Mr. Chaplin's first appearance in five years. It is 23 years since he gave the screen the same personality which creates and dominates "Modern Times." The Chaplin of the screen is as vigorous, as ageless, as then. This picture, with lively and often humorous musical scoring and many incidental sounds and occasional voices, is essentially in the technique of the silent days—in other words, it is motion picture.—TERRY RAMSAYE.

U. S. JUDGE OPENS PRIVATE INQUIRY ON DISTRIBUTORS

Grand Jury Action Will Follow If Jurist So Decides After Anti-Trust Study by Counsel for Independents

The smoke of battle had not cleared this week in the United States Government's unsuccessful St. Louis anti-trust proceedings against large distributors, when the very structure of distribution, with dramatic suddenness, found itself facing the bold and unprecedented action of a federal court judge ordering a first-hand private investigation to determine whether any or all of the eight companies are conspiring against independent exhibitors and/or distributors.

This rare piece of enterprise appears to have grown out of the defeat in Philadelphia by independent exhibitors of distributor attempts to force double bill extinction by contractual prohibition. The United States district court in that city, in deciding the Perelman (independent exhibitor) dual billing case, last week, had declared that the distributors' standard contract clause which sought to prevent dualing was not only illegal, but virtually amounted to restraint of trade against both independent owners and independent producers.

Apparently it was that victory that moved the Philadelphia independents to demand a federal grand jury investigation of allegedly unfair distributor selling practices. Federal Judge George Welsh refused to grant the request, for the present, but instead appointed ex-Congressman Benjamin Golder to investigate conditions, as his private agent, and to report back to him. Presumably, Judge Welsh has in view the instigation of federal grand jury proceedings if he thinks the Golder report warrants such action.

Earlier Actions Failed

It was just such a federal grand jury investigation of local conditions that resulted in criminal proceedings in St. Louis against Warner Bros., RKO and Paramount, and, subsequently in proceedings in equity, in the Fanchon and Marco matter. The fact that the Department of Justice was unsuccessful in both prosecutions now is history.

The Department of Justice at Washington is understood to have received the news of Judge Welsh's private film investigation with surprise, and with some displeasure at seeing a federal judge take from the United States Attorney General the prerogative of instituting proceedings of this nature.

Judge Welsh's action is considered in New York distribution quarters to be not only unusual in the precedent it establishes, but peculiar in that Mr. Golder will act as the court's private investigator of distributors while at the same time he represents the very independent exhibitor interests which demanded the federal grand jury inquiry. Too, it was Mr. Golder who led these independents into Judge Welsh's courtroom to demand the probe, and, it is said, after the grand jury inquiry was refused, himself suggested that he be appointed "a friend of the court" (amicus curie) to investigate conspiracy charges, violations of the Sherman anti-trust law or other unfair practice complaints. Also, he represented the independents in the Perelman dual bill case.

Private Detective for Judge

Mr. Golder will serve without compensation and without power to subpoena witnesses or any other power. He is merely acting as a private detective for Judge Welsh.

New York legal authorities at distributor home offices were speculating over whether or not Judge Welsh was within his federal court authority.

The understanding is that Mr. Golder will meet any expenses incurred. Whether he will have the support of the Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association of Philadelphia in this connection could not be determined.

The new private investigator left last week for the sunny sands of Florida. there to repose in a study of the "mass of data" from which he will draw conclusions.

Methods of Procedure

Proceedings against large distributors who are accused by independents of unfair trade practices and conspiracies in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law have to date been started in this manner: (1) The filing by independents, individually or en masse, of a federal court civil suit; or, (2) criminal or equity prosecution by the United States Attorney General acting in behalf of the United States Department of Justice, as in the St. Louis case.

Benjamin M. Golder, born in Vineland, New Jersey, 45 years ago, is a Philadelphia lawyer. He was admitted to the bar in that city in 1913. His World War service was as ensign in the Naval Aviation Service. Mr. Golder, a Republican, served in the 69th to 72d Congresses at Washington.

Yamins Named Head of Allied; MPTOA Cooperation Discussed

Nathan Yamins of Fall River, Mass., was elected president of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors on Wednesday, succeeding Sidney E. Samuelson, who because of private affairs declined a proffered third term. The election took place at the annual meeting of Allied national directors at the Hotel Carlton, Washington.

Abram F. Myers was reelected general counsel and chairman of the board; Herman A. Blum, treasurer; H. M. Richey, recording secretary; B. Price and Mr. Samuelson were named to the executive committee with Mr. Myers and Mr. Yamins, ex-officio members. The executive committee governs Allied.

W. A. (Al) Steffes, at his request, was relieved of the duties of regional vice-president for the northwest. Mr. Yamins did not name a successor.

Alfred Price was chosen as a vice-president of the eastern region, and the following regional vice-presidents were renamed: Aaron Saperstein, for the west; Colonel H. A. Cole, the south, and Martin Smith, the middle states.

Cleveland was the unanimous choice for Allied's annual convention, to be held about May 15. H. M. Richey of Detroit was appointed general convention chairman.

The proceedings of the directors were carefully guarded behind closed doors. J. B. Clinton's suggestion that Allied and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America combine efforts in common causes was considered, but no action was taken. Mr. Clinton is vacationing in South America.

The meeting got under way Tuesday morning and adjourned Wednesday afternoon, with Mr. Myers presiding. Present were 31 delegates and national directors from the District of Columbia, Illinois, Indiana, Maryland, Michigan, New England, New Jersey, the Northwest, Ohio, Western Pennsylvania and Wisconsin.

Allied Theatre Owners of the District of Columbia was host at a stag dinner Tuesday evening, and at a luncheon Wednesday.

The business of the meeting was in the hands of five committees, the chairmen of which were: nominations, Nathan Yamins; budget, Herman Blum; legislation, Walter B. Littlefield; litigation, Colonel H. A. Cole; trade practices, product shortage, etc., Sidney Samuelson. The committee on arrangements was composed of Arthur Price, William Wilcox, A. E. Lichtman, Charles Olive and Benjamin Tendler.

Report Reveals Thalberg, Mayer and Rubin Together Received $1,013,058 Last Year Under Profit-Sharing Contract

Debentures, Due Feb. 15, 1946, Will Be Offered Public at Not Exceeding $99 per $100; Erpi Contract Detailed

Issuance on February 15th of $15,000,000 in sinking fund debentures caused Loew's, Inc., this week to lay bare before the United States Government private information about the corporate and financial structure, in accordance with the law.

Irving Thalberg, Louis B. Mayer and J. Robert Rubin, Loew executives, last year received $1,013,058 under the profit-sharing contract entered into with Loew's several years ago when the late Marcus Loew took over Louis B. Mayer Pictures, it was revealed in a statement filed by the corporation with the Securities and Exchange Commission for registration of $15,000,000 of three and one-half per cent sinking fund debentures.

The debentures, to fall due February 15, 1946, will be underwritten by a group of which Dillon, Read and Company, New York bankers, will be the principal member and will be offered to the public at not exceeding $99 per $100.

In addition to the profit-sharing agreements with the Messrs. Thalberg, Mayer and Rubin, it was disclosed, the company has similar contracts with David Bernstein, Arthur M. Loew and Nicholas M. Schenck, likewise corporate officers; has stock option contracts with the Messrs. Thalberg, Mayer, Rubin and Bernstein, and has a contract with Electrical Research Products, Inc., for use of its sound system under which minimum royalties of $100,000 a year are called for.

The $15,000,000 of debentures which the company proposes to issue are to cover the retirement, already accomplished or contemplated, of other Loew securities, and the statement showed that $8,171,812 will be used to retire on April 1st the balance outstanding $7,972,500 15-year six per cent gold debentures due in 1941; $3,564,824 to reimburse the company's treasury for the retirement of seven per cent cumulative stock of Metro-Goldwyn Pictures; $1,860,420 to reimburse Loew's for the retirement of the first mortgage of the New Broad Company, and $270,300 to reimburse for retirement of six per cent notes of Loew's St. Louis Realty and Amusement Company.

The company has set up a sinking fund calling for $500,000 a year for the purchase of old debentures. The amount of this fund is to be increased to up to $1,000,000 annually by the addition of an amount equal to one-half of the dividends in excess of $3 per share paid on common stock.

A statement of the company's corporate structure shows that it has 58 subsidiaries which it owns entirely and 23 which are partly owned. The subsidiaries, in turn, own 26 others, wholly or in part.

The most intricate set-up is that of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which owns Metro-Goldwyn Pictures, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, Culver Export Corporation, Moredall Realty Corporation, 45th and Broadway Corporation, and Robbins Music Corporation. Culver Export owns 50 domestic and foreign subsidiaries.

The organization also has a total of 57 theatres, 105 of which are wholly owned, 15 partly owned and 37 affiliated; 73 of the houses are in the New York metropolitan area and 17 are located abroad.

The Erpi Contract

Believed to be the first of its kind made public, the Erpi contract for use of sound is of more than passing interest to the trade, indicating the cost of putting sound into pictures. Under the 15-year contract which Loew's have with Erpi, it pays royalties of $500 per 1,000-foot reel or fraction thereof on features, and $100 per reel or fraction on newsreels; where a feature runs more than 5,000 feet the extra part-reel pays no additional royalty unless it is in excess of 200 feet. Regardless of whether sound is used throughout or only in part, the royalty applies. Royalty is based on negative production, and does not in any way apply to positive prints.

A royalty of $500 for each 10 minutes of playing time is imposed on master sound records produced independently of specified pictures.

Records for Radio Barred

Under the contract, the film company may not produce sound records for radio or any purpose other than motion pictures, although it is permitted to broadcast from its pictures. It is also prohibited from producing sound pictures for any other company, unless such company also is licensed by Erpi, and may not produce for other licensed companies more than five features or 12 shorts a year.

The contract also carries a schedule of the charges on pictures for distribution abroad, ranging from $7.50 to $100 per reel per country, the last-named figure being for pictures for distribution in the United Kingdom and Ireland. The rate on pictures for Canada is $75 per reel; Australasia, $62.50; Germany, $50; South America, $40; Central Europe, $35; France and Belgium, $25; Scandinavia and Denmark, $20; Italy and China and Japan, $15; Spain and Portugal, $12.50; Holland and South Africa, $10; and Cuba and Mexico, India and Indo-China, and Turkey, Egypt and Asia Minor, $7.50.

Under the stock option contracts with the Messrs. Thalberg, Mayer, Rubin and Bernstein, Mr. Thalberg is given the privilege of taking up to 100,000 shares of common and each of the others up to 50,000 shares in instalments at stated periods between December 31, 1934, and March 1, 1939. During the months of January and February in each of the years 1935, 1937 and 1939, each is given the privilege of taking a part of the total allotment; Mr. Thalberg is to take up to 27,780 shares and the others up to 13,890 shares in the first period at $30 per share; a similar amount in the second period at $35, and 44,440 and 22,220 shares, respectively, at $40 in the third period. As an alternative, if they do not purchase the stock in the manner outlined, they may take any amount thereof between March 1, 1935 and March 1, 1937, at $35 per share or between March 1, 1937 and March 1, 1939, at $40. All the options were given December 15, 1932, and it is provided that if any of the group leave the employ of the company before December 31, 1938, his option is to be canceled.

Under the contracts with Thalberg, Mayer and Rubin, weekly salaries of $4,000 for Mr. Thalberg, $2,500 for Mr. Mayer and $1,000 for Mr. Rubin are provided, in addition to which the group are to receive 20 per cent of the first $2,500,000 and 15 per cent of any excess of the net profits of Loew's after the deduction of dividends on preferred stock and $2 per share for dividends on common. The profit-sharing agreement was entered into April 7, 1934, and is to run to December 31, 1938; it carries a guarantee that the group's share of net profits shall be not less than $500,000 a year.

Profit-sharing agreements on the same conditions are held by other officers of the company, one with Nicholas M. Schenck, president, calling for two and one-half per cent; one with Mr. Bernstein, calling for a salary of $2,000 a week and one and one-half per cent, and another with Arthur M. Loew calling for $3,500 a week and five per cent of profits derived from foreign operations in excess of $3,640,000.

$30,000,000 Involved in Suits

In a statement of operations, the company disclosed that it is involved in a large number of suits. Approximately $30,000,000, it was said, is asked in damages in anti-trust suits now pending, but, it was added, the final obligation will be negligible

The salary list of officers and directors is headed by Nicholas M. Schenck, who received $265,173 during the company's 1935 fiscal year, this including his expenses and his "cut" of the profits; Mr. Bernstein, as vice-president, received $182,711; Arthur M. Loew received $182,170, while David L. Loew received $74,766; Leopold Friedman, secretary, received $53,342; Isador Frey, assistant secretary, $31,694, and J. Robert Rubin, as vice-president, received $93,888 in addition to his share of the million-odd dollars which he participated in with Mr. Thalberg and Mr. Mayer.

The statement showed, in contrast with the nearly $2,000,000 paid to a half-dozen Loew officers and directors, that 184 actors, writers, directors and other employes engaged during the year were paid salaries aggregating $11,303,773.

AGITATION SPREADING AGAINST CHANCE GAMES

Massachusetts Bill Would Bar Them; Ruled Lottery in Cleveland; Banned in Milwaukee

Agitation—legal, legislative and otherwise—against the so-called chance game form of box office stimulation is spreading, as evidenced by the following developments of the week:

The United States Post Office reiterated its warning against mentioning chance games in newspaper theatre advertisements.

Lowell, Reading and Stoneham in Massachusetts banned the practice, and a bill was introduced in the state legislature prohibiting its use everywhere in the Commonwealth.

Cleveland ruled chance games to be a lottery, causing theatre owners to start raising a fund to fight the prosecution; city authorities are preparing for a court test.

Houston owners asked that the device be eliminated by city authorities, on grounds of lottery in violation of Texas law.

Kansas City owners suggested a city-wide ban and Missouri's attorney general determined to re-investigate to determine the legality of the promotions.

Milwaukee ordered chance games stopped.

Exhibitors in New York were granted leave to appeal a decision against chance games, as the copyright owners of Bank Night continued to fight alleged infringements.

In Denver, following a warning from Postmaster J. O. Stevic, giveaway advertising was discontinued by both the Denver Post and the Denver Rocky Mountain News. Both had allowed mild advertising before, such as "It's Ford Night Tonight," calling attention to the Harry Huffman Ford giveaway each week. Now a line in Mr. Huffman's ads says, "It's Tuesday Night."

Bills Would Bar Practice

A bill has been introduced in the Senate in Massachusetts by William F. McCarthy prohibiting "that practice of theatres and other places of amusement of awarding bank accounts, cash or other prizes to its patrons in the form of a lottery." A public hearing is expected to be held by the committee on mercantile affairs, to which the bill has been referred. It is pointed out that if such practices are determined to be lotteries, they would automatically be prohibited under the present Massachusetts' anti-lottery laws.

With the giveaway banned in Lowell, Reading and Stoneham, the Bank Night battle-front is widening in Massachusetts. It is already out of Boston and Medford, while appeals are pending from superior court convictions on a lottery charge in these municipalities. In an infringement suit brought by Bank Night against Parlay Cash Night in Boston the judge told both sides neither had any standing in court, but reconsidered when Attorney George S. Ryan told the court that participants did not have to buy theatre tickets to win.

Police Prosecutor Perry A. Frey of Cleveland, Monday, told 27 theatre owners that for the sake of public policy a judicial ruling should be obtained on the legality of Bank Night. The prosecutor warned the exhibitors that arrests would be made. William E. Minshall of the law firm of Minshall and Mozier, who successfully defended Bank Night in a previous court action seeking a permanent injunction to stop it, again will oppose the charges of lottery. M. B. Horwitz, general manager of the Washington circuit and first exhibitor in the Cleveland territory to introduce Bank Night, is said to have obtained pledges from 15 exhibitors to create a fund to fight the prosecutor's ban on Bank Night as being a lottery.

In Houston protests against Bank Nights at downtown theatres were lodged with the City Council last week by independent owners and operators of suburban theatres. They charged the Bank Nights are lotteries and therefore illegal in Texas, and that their operation constitutes unfair competition for the small suburban theatre. Mayor Holcombe said he would "see what other cities" are doing before replying.

Three-fourths of the members of the Independent Theatre Owners of Kansas City met last week and voted to eliminate all cash giveaways and premiums, providing other independent and circuit theatres in Kansas City do likewise. The vote resulted from an effort on the part of E. Rolsky, president, in the direction of complete elimination. Most of the independents are agreeable to the move, but agree it will be abortive unless elimination is 100 per cent.

New Investigation Promised

Attorney General Roy McKittrick of Missouri will reinvestigate the details of Bank Night to determine the promotion's legality. Early last year it was pronounced a lottery, and therefore illegal, by Mr. McKittrick's department. The banning of Bank Night by Franklin Miller, circuit attorney, in St. Louis, is expected to lead to a test case which will be carried to the Missouri Supreme Court. Promoters of the system say they are anxious for the test, because of their recent victory in the Iowa Supreme Court.

In Milwaukee City Attorney Max Raskin has ordered exhibitors to discontinue giveaways of various sorts within a week or face prosecution.

In addition, there are a score of independent houses also featuring giveaways in the form of souvenir and glassware nights or charging 10-cent admissions one or two nights a week. No efforts to clamp down on this type of promotion have been made by the Milwaukee police following a district court verdict in December acquitting Norman Haacke, manager of the Grace.

Leave to Appeal Is Granted

In New York leave to file an appeal with the court of appeals from a decision of the appellate division of the Brooklyn supreme court in connection with lotteries was granted Weisman, Quinn, Allen and Spett, attorneys, last week by Chief Judge Crane. The case which is being appealed has to do with a Farmer Miller game at the Winthrop, Brooklyn. On January 20 the appellate division of the Brooklyn supreme court held that prizes awarded as the result of spinning a wheel in a theatre are in violation of the lottery law.

The case of Affiliated Enterprises vs. Wheatley and Howe, of Hot Springs, Ark., for alleged infringement on Bank Night through their use of Dividend Night was called in Federal District court at Little Rock, week before last, with Affiliated taking a non-suit.

PREDICTS DEATH OF CHANCE GAMES

Bank Nights and other forms of expedients to spur theatre patronage will shortly run its course, predicts the Des Moines Register, which, following a decision of the Iowa supreme court that Bank Nights do not violate that state's lottery laws, commented thusly:

"Bank Night will probably die a natural death, just as most fads do. Not enough persons can win anything, year in and year out, to make it permanently attractive to the limited family purse. 'Biting' on long shots gets tiresome eventually. As long as the public 'gets a kick out of it,' the Bank Nights will likely continue, but when the patronage begins to lose interest, dear old Bank Night will be tucked away to permanent rest in some dark corner."

Grainger Returns As Cowdin Leaves

Universal's home office at Rockefeller Center in New York was a-bustle this week with activities attendant upon the return of James R. Grainger, sales manager, from Universal City, with 1936-37 product plans, and the departure of J. Cheever Cowdin, holder of an option to buy the company, for Europe, reportedly in connection with option matters.

Mr. Grainger, on his arrival in New York, went into executive session with F. J. A. McCarthy, eastern sales manager; Sieg. Wittman, eastern district manager; A. J. Herman, New England district manager; Harry Graham, southern district manager, and Clair Hague, Canadian general manager.

En route to New York Mr. Grainger told a one-day sales convention of Universal men at the Hotel Blackstone in Chicago that he not only had reached an agreement with Carl Laemmle on the details of the remainder of the current season's lineup, but also had induced him to add four serials for next season. Preliminary arrangements on the 1936-37 lineup also were discussed.

Mr. Cowdin, head of Standard Capital Company, sailed on the Europa last Friday night for a hurried trip to London, to be gone about three weeks. It was reported that the trip is for the purpose of conferring with British financial interests on a participation in Standard's option to acquire control of Universal.

Colonel William Freiday, partner in the firm of J. Robinson-Duff, stock brokers, last week was elected a director of Standard Capital. It is expected that he will become associated with Universal in the event that the Standard option is exercised.

RCA ADOPTS KENNEDY CAPITAL PLAN; $5,100,000 NET EARNINGS IN 1935

Plan Calls for Eliminating $17,263,689 Preferred B Stock Arrearages, Borrowing $10,000,000, Redeeming Preferred A

Net Earnings Totaling $5,100,000 Are Reported for 1935, an Increase of $850,000 Over Previous Year

The plan of Joseph P. Kennedy, special advisor, for reorganizing RCA's capital structure, requiring (1) elimination of $17,263,689 preferred B stock dividend arrearages; (2) borrowing of $10,000,000 for five years from New York banks; (3) redemption of 495,597 shares of $50 preferred A stock at $55 a share, costing $27,000,000; and, (4) giving eventual control to common share holders, was accepted this week for adoption by the board of directors of Radio Corporation of America, parent of the RCA communications system, and, in amusements, of National Broadcasting, RCA Victor, RCA Photophone motion picture sound equipment and half-owner, with Atlas-Lehman, of RKO. The plan will go to stockholders for an approval vote on April 7th.

RCA's directors at the same time disclosed net earnings of $5,100,000 for 1935, representing an increase of approximately $850,000 over 1934.

The board's action in adopting the new capital plan terminated the assignment, for the purpose, of Mr. Kennedy. The former chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, who was called in on the Radio job a month ago, immediately boarded a plane for his winter home in Florida.

The Plan in Detail

For the purpose of clearing accumulations on the preferred B stock, it is proposed to exchange each present share for 1-1/5 shares of a new $3.50 cumulative convertible first preferred stock, callable at $100 a share and one share of common stock. Each share of the proposed new first preferred stock will be convertible over a five-year period into five shares of common stock, or at $20 a share for the common.

The first preferred stock would be entitled to dividends from April 1, 1936 and it is planned to start payments when the proposed plan is put into effect.

Arrangements have been made for a five-year $10,000,000 loan at two and one-half per cent from a group of banks, consisting of the National City Bank, Central Hanover Bank, Guarantee Trust Company, Chase National Bank, the Bank of New York and Trust Company, Irving Trust Company and Bankers Trust Company. It is indicated that the company now has $33,470,962 of cash assets, of which about $18,000,000 is estimated as needed for working capital requirements. The excess cash, with the loan, will be utilized for retirement of the preferred A shares.

Common To Be Increased

Commenting on the terms of recapitalization, as applied to the B preferred stock, David Sarnoff, president, was quoted by the financial press as saying that directors had endeavored to recognize the B stockholders' rights and at the same time safeguard the company's financial position. Despite the present cash resources and improved earnings, he was reputed to have pointed out, it would be impossible to pay out of cash or earnings now or in the future $17,263,689 of preferred B dividend arrears to April 1, 1936.

Under the plan, the outstanding common shares will be immediately increased six per cent, to 13,897,965 shares, from 13,130,690. Giving effect to complete conversion of the first preferred, common stock would be increased 41 per cent to 18,501,615.

A compilation prepared by the company giving effect to the proposed new capitalization, indicates that assuming exchange of the entire amount of present preferred B into new $3.50 first preferred stock and on the basis of estimated net of $5,100,000 for 1935 there would be a balance available for common stock after preferred dividends of $1,405,400, or 10 cents a share on the 13,897,965 shares common to be outstanding. Essuming that ultimately the entire proposed first preferred stock is converted into common stock Dow, Jones' financial news service figures that, on the basis of 1935 earnings, a balance of $4,628,000 would be available for the 18,501,615 common shares to be outstanding, or 25 cents a share.

Two Primary Objects

Mr. Kennedy, who presented the proposed plan jointly with President Sarnoff at a press interview, explained that in considering the recapitalization, two primary objects were kept in mind: (1) revamping of the capital structure to a form more in line with demonstrated earning power of past years, and (2) elimination of the mounting accruals on the preferred B shares.

It was also pointed out by financial editors that proposed plan obviated the necessity of any cost or underwriting fees in connection with financing payment of the accrued dividends.

Many different plans have been considered in the past few months but discarded as not equitable to the different classes of shareholders, or as not meeting the needs of the present situation.

Mr. Kennedy was quoted as saying that in view of the nature and hazards of the type of business, the ideal capitalization was one class of stock and that this should be the ultimate aim of the company. Neglect of the opportunity to take advantage of the present money market to effect retirement of the seven per cent A preferred stock would be inexcusable on the part of directors, according to Mr. Kennedy's views.

Mr. Kennedy said that question of a reverse split for the common shares had been considered and discarded as likely to give the common shares an investment status to which they were not entitled. The only plausible argument advanced in favor of a reduction of the number of common shares was that the number outstanding was perhaps unwieldy, he said.

President Sarnoff was reported to have revealed to the directors that the options given to the Atlas Corporation for the company's interest in Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation ran until the end of 1937. Half of the option has already been exercised, estimated as netting RCA in excess of $5,000,000.

In order for the new Kennedy plan to become effective, an amendment to the company's certificate of incorporation will be necessary requiring the approval of a majority of the holders of each class of stock. The plan will not be declared effective unless in the opinion of directors sufficient preferred B stock is deposited to warrant its consummation.

While the $33,000,000 cash on hand of the corporation would be sufficient to carry out the plan, $18,000,000 of this amount has been earmarked by the directors as working capital, on the basis that $1 in cash is required for each $5 of annual revenue. Retirement of the Class A preferred and the borrowing of $10,000,000 would leave the corporation with $16,000,000 in cash, which will be supplemented by accruals to cash position this year from earnings.

While, on the present capital basis, the 1935 net income is equal to about $4.35 on 767,275 Class B preferred shares after Class A preferred dividends, on the reorganization basis the earnings would be equivalent to 11.7 cents a share on the 13,897,963 common shares.

Based on 1935 earnings and upon conversion of all the new first-preferred stock into common stock, net income would be equivalent to 25.7 cents a share on the 18,501,616 ultimate number of common shares. The computations allow for fixed charges as actually reported in 1935 and for $250,000 additional interest on bank loans. Actually, fixed charges will be $222,000 annually before interest on bank loans.

The changes in capitalization entailed under the plan follow:

(Last three figures omitted.)

	Present Status	Status After Exchanges	Status After Conversion
Notes and mortgages	$4,701	$4,701	$4,701
Bank loans	.....	10,000	10,000
A pf. .....*	27,257	.....	.....
B pf. .....*	76,727	.....	.....
Do arrears	17,263	.....	.....
$3.50 1st pf.....*	.....	92,073	.....
Common (shares)....	(13,130)	(13,897)	(18,501)
Quick assets	$33,470	$16,213	$16,213

*Based on call prices.

Annual charges ahead of common stock, based on the above stages, follow:

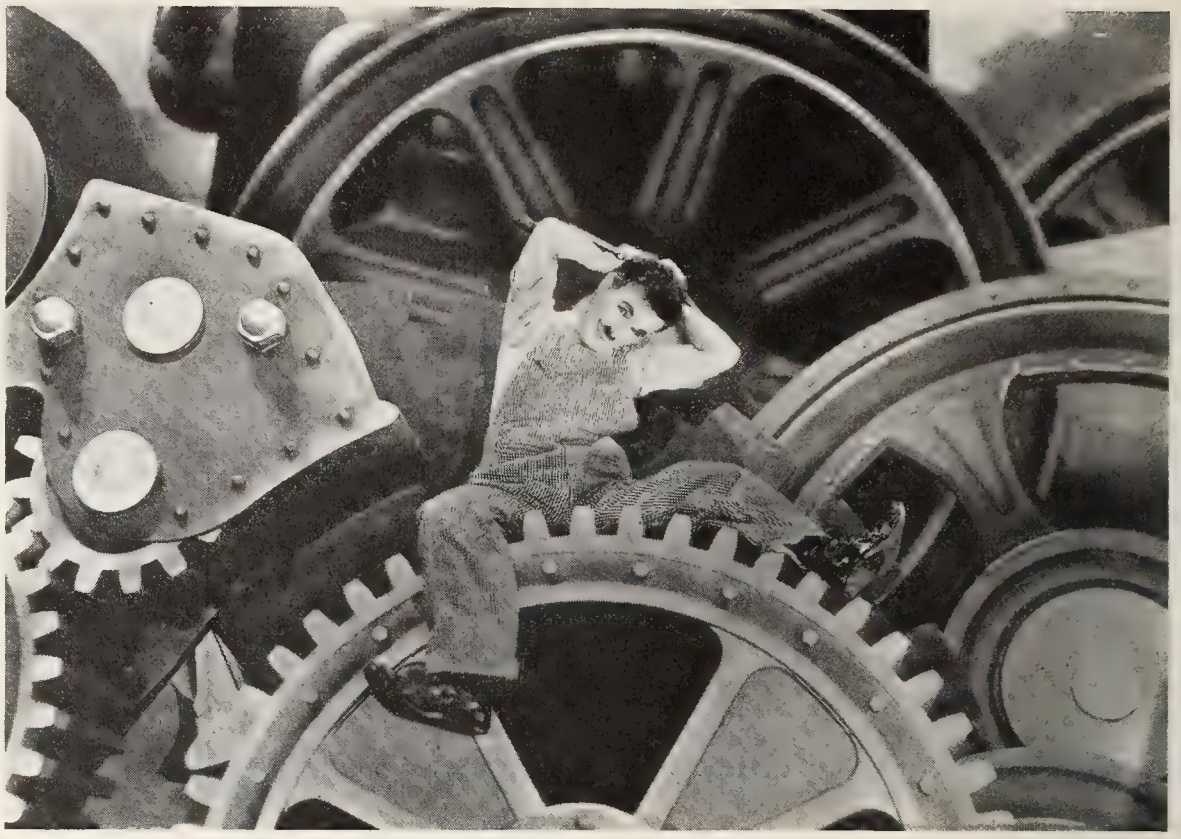
(Last three figures omitted.)

	Present Status	Status After Exchanges	Status After Conversion
Notes and mortgages	$222	$222	$222
Bank loans	.....	250	250
A pf. divs.....	1,734	.....	.....
B pf. divs.....	3,836	.....	.....
$3.50 pf. divs.....	.....	3,222	.....

The new first-preferred stock will rank ahead of any Class B preferred stock not exchanged under the plan. Each holder of B preferred stock who accepts the plan will begin to receive dividends totaling $4.20 a year immediately upon consummation of the plan, or $3.50 on each full share and 70 cents additional on each one-fifth share received, before any dividends will accrue on unexchanged B preferred shares.

ST. LOUIS CASE IN STATUS QUO

The army of counsel which participated in the prosecution by the Department of Justice of Warners, RKO and Paramount, on anti-trust charges, returned last weekend to Washington and New York, respectively, from the scene of battle at St. Louis, after the case had been withdrawn.



There was nothing forthcoming this week from Justice Department headquarters indicating when or how the case will be reinstated. The Department's withdrawal of the charges and their subsequent dismissal were followed by an admission that the case be reinstated.

CHAPLIN'S "MODERN TIMES" IN LONG-AWAITED WORLD PREMIERE

Brilliant Audience Attends Opening at $5.50 Admission; Star Is Active in Selling Picture; His First in Five Years

Charles Chaplin, having come after many delays and reconsiderations to final agreement with himself to regard the picture as completed, bowed motion picture-wise to the world Wednesday night for the first time in five years, in "Modern Times," at New York's Rivoli theatre on Broadway, on the occasion of the premiere of his $2,000,000 comedy of slapstick and pantomime. He charged the first-nighters $5.50.

A greater contingent of film notables appeared to have attended than had ever participated in the opening celebration of a motion picture. The guest list included the names of Will H. Hays, Herbert Bayard Swope, Douglas Fairbanks, junior and senior, John Edward Otterson, Adolph Zukor, Nicholas M. Schenck, Sidney R. Kent, Harry M. Warner, Major Albert Warner, Lee Shubert, Alexander Woollcott, Nathan Burkan, Myron Schenck, Sam Katz, Harry M. Goetz, Arthur W. Kelly, Harry D. Buckley, Lillian Hellman, Edward G. Robinson, Tilly Losch, Gloria Swanson, Evelyn Laye, Corinne Griffith, Ginger Rogers, Eddie Cantor and his Parkyakarkus, and Burns and Allen.

CHARLES CHAPLIN, star, director, author, producer, musical director and all-pervading spirit of "Modern Times," five years and something like two million dollars in the making for United Artists distribution, in a scene typical of the picture.

Publishers Invited

Leading publishers invited included Arthur Hays Sulzberger, New York Times; Mrs. Ogden Reid, Herald-Tribune; Paul Block; William Randolph Hearst, Jr.; Lee B. Wood, executive editor of the World-Telegram; William A. Curley, managing editor of the Journal; Edmond Coblentz, American; David Joseph, city editor of the Times; Martin Quigley, publisher, and Col vin Brown, vice-president, of Quigley Publications; Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD; Maurice D. Kann, editor, MOTION PICTURE DAILY; James P. Cunningham, of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

On hand was a theatre party from Canada and one from Mexico City. There was also a small party from England, and an individual who traveled from Venezuela.

There was a large contingent from California's motion picture colony, and reservations were made by Chaplin enthusiasts from Texas, Kentucky, Illinois, New Jersey, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland.

The Exploitation

A general refurbishing of the Rivoli theatre was accomplished in ten hours before the premiere Wednesday.

Mr. Chaplin, from Hollywood, conversed freely with United Artists' home-office advertising-exploitation department, in charge of Monroe Greenthal, on the manner and method of selling his "Modern Times" to the public in New York through the medium of the ballyhoo showing at the Rivoli. Previously Mr. Chaplin had arranged personally for the sale of exhibition rights to the Loew circuit, after the Rivol run, concluding the arrangements on the long distance telephone from his studio in Hollywood.

The New York press several days in advance of the opening devoted considerable space to the event. Celebrities from all walks posed before the Kleig lights for the Hearst Metrotone News which covered the opening. Arrangements had been made to send an aeroplane aloft with a neon sign announcement to cover the city for two hours before the show.

A special Charlie Chaplin contest was conducted by the Hearst New York Evening Journal for several days before the premiere. Liberal pictorial, art and word descriptions accompanied the contest.

Six Chaplin imitators covered weekend sports and political meetings, distributing publicity matter to the crowds. They were also stationed in the more congested areas.

Charles Chaplin's original hat, shoes and cane were given an entire window display in the department store windows of R. H. Macy and Company, on lower Broadway. The Southern Pacific Railroad devoted its entire Fifth Avenue window to a special display.

Several mechanical stunts were arranged for the Rivoli theatre front to give the appearance of a huge factory in action, signifying the action of the plot.

International tieups planned in New York are included in the campaign for the London run, which opens at the Tivoli on February 11th.

The musical score, heard publicly for the first time Wednesday night, will be published by Irving Berlin, as "The Charlie Chaplin Medley from Modern Times." Mr. Chaplin wrote the music, financed, produced, directed and starred in the motion picture. He wrote the story, too.

United Artists is distributing.

"THE GOLD RUSH," United Artists comedy of 1925, revealed the Chaplin talent for sustained, solitary pantomime.

"THE IMMIGRANT," produced by Mutual in 1916, emphasized the wistful side of the Chaplin screen character, started tongues wagging, perhaps for the first time, with speculation as to whether the comedian might not be also an artist.

"THE KID," discovering Jackie Coogan, was released by First National in 1920, the greatest Chaplin picture of all times.

"THE ADVENTURER," a 1917 Mutual release, risked divesting the vagabond Harlequin of his rags, presented the Chaplin personality in tails, but did not discourage the cash customers.

"CITY LIGHTS," produced in 1931 for United Artists, disdained the then general use of dialogue, depended on musical score and pantomime, yet managed to satisfy the Chaplin fans.

"SHOULDER ARMS," Chaplin's war comedy for First National, made repeat-run box office history wherever shown.

"EASY STREET" was released in 1917, midway in the series of twelve Lone Star-Mutual comedies produced under the then spectacular $670,000 contract, a time when wishful dreams of a Chaplin studio to house his production ambitions were aborning.

WARNER SUES CBS FOR $1,565,000; BROADCASTERS WANT MILLS AS 'CZAR'

Each Station Using Unlicensed Music in Chain Broadcasts Will Be Sued, Say Attorneys in Confused Copyright Fight

Greatly accentuating its drive to force the large radio networks to apply for licenses to broadcast its music, Warner Brothers within two days this week brought copyright infringement actions in United States District Court, New York, against Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., for a total of $1,565,000 damages.

The causes of action were based on individual broadcasts of single music numbers over separate stations, and also alleged infringements by a majority of the network's affiliated stations, which number more than 100.

Seven other suits were filed by Warners since late last week in New York and elsewhere, and additional actions are being prepared, said Wattenberg and Wattenberg, Warner's attorneys handling this litigation.

Columbia Broadcasting System said it "welcomed" the court actions as a legal test of the copyright controversy, at the same time contending that it had full right to broadcast the disputed numbers as well as all other Warner music. The amount of damages requested was "greatly inflated," the network declared.

Warner attorneys now are drawing papers for numerous suits against other networks and individual stations on the ground of unlicensed broadcasting of the company's music since its withdrawal from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers on January 1.

Prepared to "Go Limit"

In the case of chain broadcasts, every individual station broadcasting the music will be sued, and Warner is prepared to "go the limit," the attorneys said. Individual suits will be filed in the jurisdiction of each infringing station.

The 24th suit brought by a Warner music publishing subsidiary against broadcasters was filed Tuesday, bringing the total of damages sought to $1,750,000.

This was begun by Harms, Inc., against CBS and station WABC, New York, key outlet of the chain. The action seeks total damages of $895,000, of which $890,000 represents the network's alleged infringement in the use of Rudolf Friml's "Chansonette," which, it is asserted, was broadcast over 89 stations of the network on January 18. The damages are computed at the rate of $5,000 for each of 179 individual infringements, and an accounting of profits is also sought.

Remick Sues CBS

The same number was used over WABC alone on January 23, it is alleged, for which $5,000 is asked.

Remick Music Corporation on Monday filed an action against CBS, asking damages of $670,000 on the basis of $5,000 for each of 134 alleged infringements and an accounting of the profits.

Two causes of action were cited: (1) The alleged infringement by broadcasting over 66 stations of the network the number "That Old Fashioned Mother of Mine," this broadcast assertedly having originated from station WJR, Detroit, on January 23; (2) the alleged infringement by broadcasting over 68 stations the song "Some Sunny Day," emanating from WCAU, Philadelphia, on January 25.

Three suits for damages totaling $55,000 were brought against WHN, New York, operated by Loew's, Inc., last Friday. In the action of Harms, Inc., against the Marcus Loew Booking Agency (WHN), damages of $40,000 were sought, the plaintiff charging "Not Bad" was used eight times between January 2 and 13. In another action M. Witmark and Sons contends the same station broadcast "I Like Mountain Music" on January 4 and "A Shanty in Old Shanty Town" on January 14. The third complaint was by Remick Music Corporation for the use of "Put on Your Old Grey Bonnet," January 13.

Suit also was filed Friday by Remick

CANADA IS PONDERING WARNER TARIFFS

While infringement suits by Warner against broadcasters are mounting almost daily in the United States, the situation is at a standstill in Canada and no litigation is possible until the Radio Commission there has approved the company's tariff scale, it was said by Warner in New York.

The necessary information has been filed with the commission, but so far it has not replied favorably. The commission is understood to be empowered to fix the rates, which Warner said were substantially the same as those asked from stations in the United States.

Meanwhile, arriving in New York from Paris, Hugo Bryk, European representative of ASCAP, reported Europe is not concerned with the Warner-ASCAP controversy since European composers are protected for 50 years following death and have no copyright problem.

Collections by the 21 royalty societies in as many European countries are made directly to the American publishers and composers, hence there can be no reaction to the American situation abroad, ASCAP explained. These societies are agents for some thousands of composers and authors.

Committee of Unaffiliated Broadcasters Proposes General Manager of Composers' Society as Radio Industry Czar

The radio industry, or a large segment of it, is seeking a Moses to lead it out of the chaos in which it finds itself, brought to a peak in recent weeks by Warner's secession from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and the resultant muddle over copyrights.

Edwin C. Mills, general manager of ASCAP, was decided upon as radio's possible "czar" at a meeting of a broadcasters' committee in Washington last week. This committee represented unaffiliated clear-channels stations, some of the country's larger broadcasters. Willingness to cooperate with ASCAP, instead of fighting it, was expressed at the meeting, it was reported.

While broadcasters' representatives in Washington would not confirm this development, it was disclosed by an authoritative source in New York.

Seek Permanent Policy

This group comprises the high-powered stations who have no interests in common with National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System and also the smaller independents. They seek to deal with the copyright problem in their own manner and to set up a permanent policy, in relation to the licensing of music and its cost. Radio, chief competitor to motion pictures, is thus split into three camps.

Concurrently, Mr. Mills denied reports that he was resigning to join NBC as head of its copyright and license bureau.

The radio industry has other pressing problems, among them the program clean-up effort of the Federal Communications Commission. Both this and the copyright situation can be met, however, without acquiring the services of special interests, according to broadcasters' representatives in Washington.

Independents Opposed

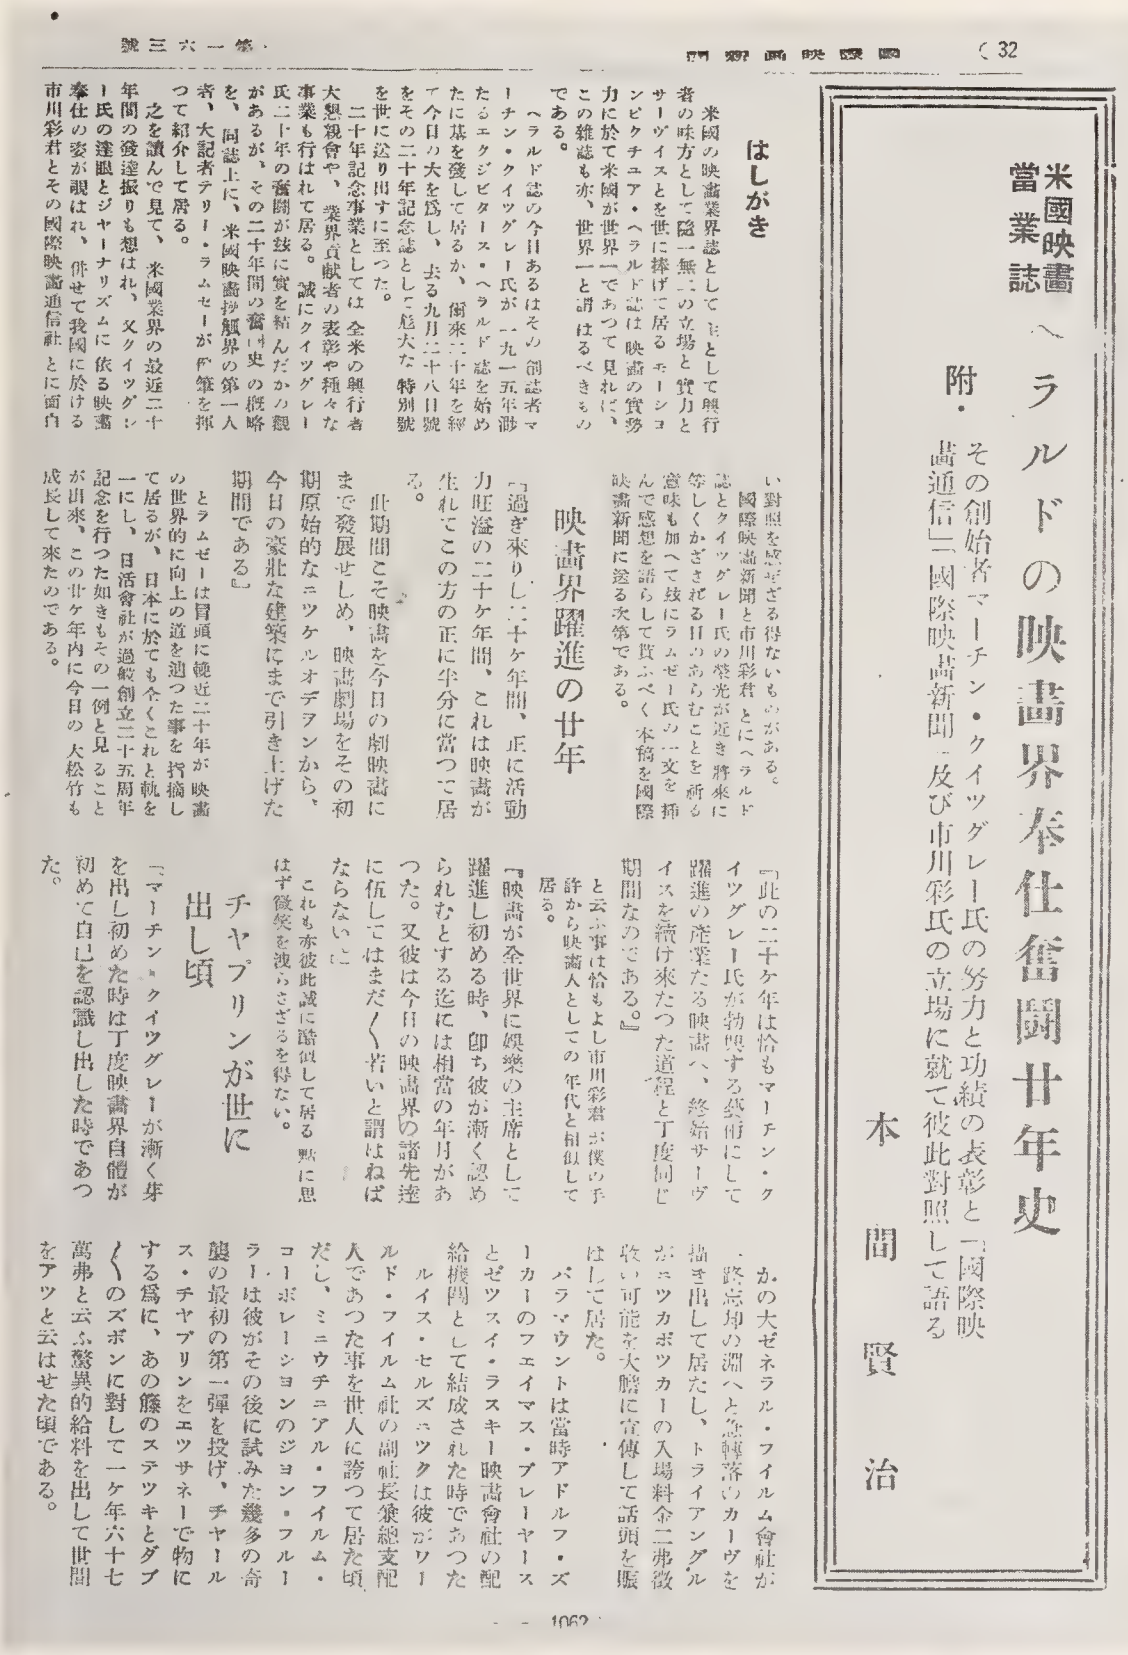
Independent stations comprising the membership of the National Association of Broadcasters would not join in the movement for a central organization of the nature outlined, it was said, and they certainly would not stand for Mr. Mills at the head of it, according to independents' spokesmen.

Meanwhile the board of directors of the NAB met in Chicago Monday for a general discussion of the whole copyright situation. The board agreed not to resort to any legal means to enforce its demands on the licensing agencies, ASCAP and Warner.

In Congress meanwhile there are a number of bills to regulate various phases of broadcasting, and moves for an investigation of broadcasting facilities and their use are being pressed.

JAPANESE TRADE PRESS IN TRIBUTE TO QUIGLEY

"Kokusai Eiga Shimbun" Celebrates Publisher's Twentieth Anniversary in Industry



THE sun that never sets on British soil shines as constantly upon the expansive realm of Quigley Publications' service to the motion picture, according to "Kokusai Eiga Shimbun" (The International Motion Picture Trade Review), semi-monthly trade publication of Japan,, which devotes four pages of a recent issue to celebrating the twentieth anniversary of Martin Quigley's founding of Motion Picture Herald. High appreciation of Mr. Quigley's constructive influence upon the motion picture in all its phases is the major theme of a special article, reproduced in part herewith, by Mr. Kenji Homma. Translated, his introduction reads:

"As a motion picture magazine of the United States of America, the Motion Picture Herald has served side by side to the promoters of the motion picture with the highest standing, capability and service. Thus the Herald can be called the best magazine of its kind wherever the motion picture has demonstrated its supremacy.

"What Motion Picture Herald is today, is indeed attributed to the birth of the Exhibitors' Herald by Mr. Quigley." (Well, the way of the translator is hard, you know.) "Twenty years have elapsed since then and last September 28, 1935, in celebration of its twentieth anniversary, a gigantic special number was printed. In this twentieth anniversary celebration some memorable undertakings were made, such as a banquet of the motion picture leaders in America in tribute to Mr. Quigley's services, their presentation of a scroll to Mr. Quigley, and many others. This is nothing but the fruit obtained by Mr. Quigley's effort for twenty years."

Quoting copiously from Terry Ramsaye's article, "Twenty Years A-Growing," published in the Anniversary Number referred to, Mr. Homma cites a number of calendar coincidences likening to Mr. Quigley's record of progressive motion picture journalism in America that of Mr. Sai Ichikawa, editor-in-chief and publisher of "Kokusai Eiga Shimbun," in Japan. In common with the publisher of Motion Picture Herald, Mr. Homma points out, Mr. Ichikawa started his journalistic career in the daily newspaper field. Further, the article states, "It is interesting to note that his hope and vision were alike as Mr. Quigley's when Mr. Ichikawa first published his first number of the simple and slim 'International Motion Picture Trade Review'."

Bearing a cover of almost identical hue, "Kokusai Eiga Shimbun" is, in Mr. Homma's manifestly earnest belief, the Motion Picture Herald of the Orient. But Writer Homma claims one point of ascendency for Publisher Ichikawa. Says he, "His mania on the motion picture industry seemed more than Mr. Quigley's." But maybe that's translator's license.

之を讀んで見て、米國業界の最近二十年間の發達振りも想はれ、又クイツグレー氏の達眼とジヤーナリズムに依る映畫奉仕の姿が覗はれ、併せて我國に於ける市川彩君とその國際映畫通信社とに面白い對照を感ぜざる得ないものがある。

國際映畫新聞と市川彩君とにヘラルド誌とクイツグレー氏の榮光が遠き將來に等しくかざされる日のあらむことを祈る意味も加へて玆にラムセー氏の一文を挿んで感想を語らして貰ふべく本稿を國際映畫新聞に送る次第である。

映畫界躍進の廿年

『過ぎ來りし二十ケ年間、正に活動寫眞旺盛の二十ケ年間、これは映畫が生れてこの方の正に半分に當つて居る。

世期間こそ映畫を今日の劇映畫にまで發展せしめ、映畫劇場をその初期原始的なニツケルオデヲンから、今日の豪壯な建築にまで引き上げた期間である』

とラムセーは冒頭に過去二十年が映畫の世界的に向上の道を辿つた事を指摘して居るが、日本に於ても全くこれと軌を一にし、日活會社が過般創立二十五周年記念を行つた如きもその一例と見ることが出來、この廿ケ年内に今日の大松竹も成長して來たのである。

『此の二十ケ年は恰もマーチン・クイツグレー氏が物與する藝術にして躍進の産業たる映畫へ、終始サーヴイスを續け來たつた道程と丁度同じ期間なのである。』

と云ふ事は恰もよし市川彩君が僕の手許から映畫人としての年代と相似して居る。

Quigley Publishing Company Moves to Rockefeller Center

In step with the steady march of motion picture and related interest to ultra-modern, super-practical Rockefeller Center, the Quigley Publishing company, publisher of Motion Picture Herald, Motion Picture Daily, Better Theatres, the Motion Picture Almanac and the Box Office Check-up, opened new headquarters February 8 on the 30th floor of the RKO Building. More than fifty concerns in the motion picture industry have established offices in the area, including RKO-Radio, Universal Pictures, First Division, Republic Pictures, The March of Time, Trans-Lux, Castle Films and the U. S. Army Motion Picture Service.

With this move into the new capital of motion picture affairs, the Quigley Publishing company changes its executive residence for only the third time in twenty years of operation. Originally in Chicago, the company moved to New York in 1930, officing in the United States Rubber Building, 1790 Broadway. Publication properties acquired and consolidated with the parent paper between the date of its founding in 1915 and that time were formerly known as Film Index, Motography, Moving Picture World, Motion Picture News and Exhibitors Daily Review.

Paralleling the concentration of motion picture interest in Rockefeller Center, publishing houses and advertising agencies have shown a similar preference for the location. The Curtis Publishing company, News-Week, Inc., and the McCall company are major organizations housed in the community. Advertising agencies domiciled here include Donahue and Coe, Arthur Kudner, Inc., Badger, Browning and Hersey, Kelly, Nason and Roosevelt, Transit Advertiser, Radio Advertising Corporation and Wildrick and Miller.

Officers of the Quigley Publishing company are Martin Quigley, president; Colvin Brown, vice-president and treasurer; T. J. Sullivan, secretary; and Leo J. Brady, assistant secretary. Branch offices are maintained in Chicago, Los Angeles, London and Paris.

Fees Allowed Bank

In addition to fees allowed the Chase National bank and its attorneys, Millbank and Tweed, for their services in the Paramount reorganization, Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe has awarded the bank $5,000 and the counsel $10,000 for services as trustee under a Paramount indenture preceding the bankruptcy.

Kent Due Next Week

Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, is due to arrive in New York from the coast next week, following which he will leave for a Florida vacation. He plans to sail for London in late April to confer with Walter Hutchinson, recently appointed foreign sales manager.

Kusiel Is New European Manager for Universal

Sigwart Kusiel, Universal manager in Spain, has been appointed general manager for Europe, succeeding Max Friedland, resigned, said Nate Manheim, foreign manager, who arrived in New York from abroad Tuesday.

With the resignation of R. Rappaport as Vienna manager, Mr. Manheim has named Leopold Schiller supervisor of Vienna, Prague and Hungary branches. No appointments have been made as yet for Vienna and Spain.

Mr. Manheim, who was abroad two months, said Universal's production plans in Europe would be discussed with Carl Laemmle on the coast. Joseph Pasternack, in charge of Universal production on the Continent, and Charles Kosterlitz, director, are en route from London for the conferences.

Distribution of $10,000,000 in Premiums Ordered

Exhibitors, distributors and allied tradesmen of Missouri are interested in the federal district court's decree at Kansas City ordering distribution of approximately $10,000,000 in fire, windstorm and hail insurance premiums impounded between June, 1930, and November, 1935. Twenty per cent of this amount goes to policyholders of the state, plus a fifth of the earnings of the impounded fund.

Insurance companies asked a 16 2/3 per cent rate increase in 1930, which was refused. They obtained an injunction against the insurance commissioner, and since then the rate increase has been collected by the companies, but has been impounded under court jurisdiction. Most of the companies—137 of the larger ones—took their case to the federal court of Kansas City. More than 70 of the smaller companies went into the state court. It is the federal court case that was finally wound up Saturday. The state court cases probably will be settled soon.

Theatre men and others in the industry will be returned a fifth of 16 2/3 per cent of the amount they have paid in 5 years for fire, hail and tornado insurance. In addition they will receive 20 per cent of the fund's earnings, based on the amount of premium they had impounded.

Wolf Succeeded Huse As SMPE Vice-President

S. K. Wolf succeeded Emery Huse, and not Homer G. Tasker, when recently appointed executive vice-president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and Mr. Huse was appointed a regular member of the board of governors, the Society announced this week.

The change in the executive lineup was made necessary because the Society did not wish to have both the president and the executive vice-president on the west coast. Mr. Wolf is manager of the acoustical department of Electrical Research Products.

against the Bamberger Broadcasting Service, Inc. (WOR), New York, for use of "I Wanna Bounce Around With You," January 24.

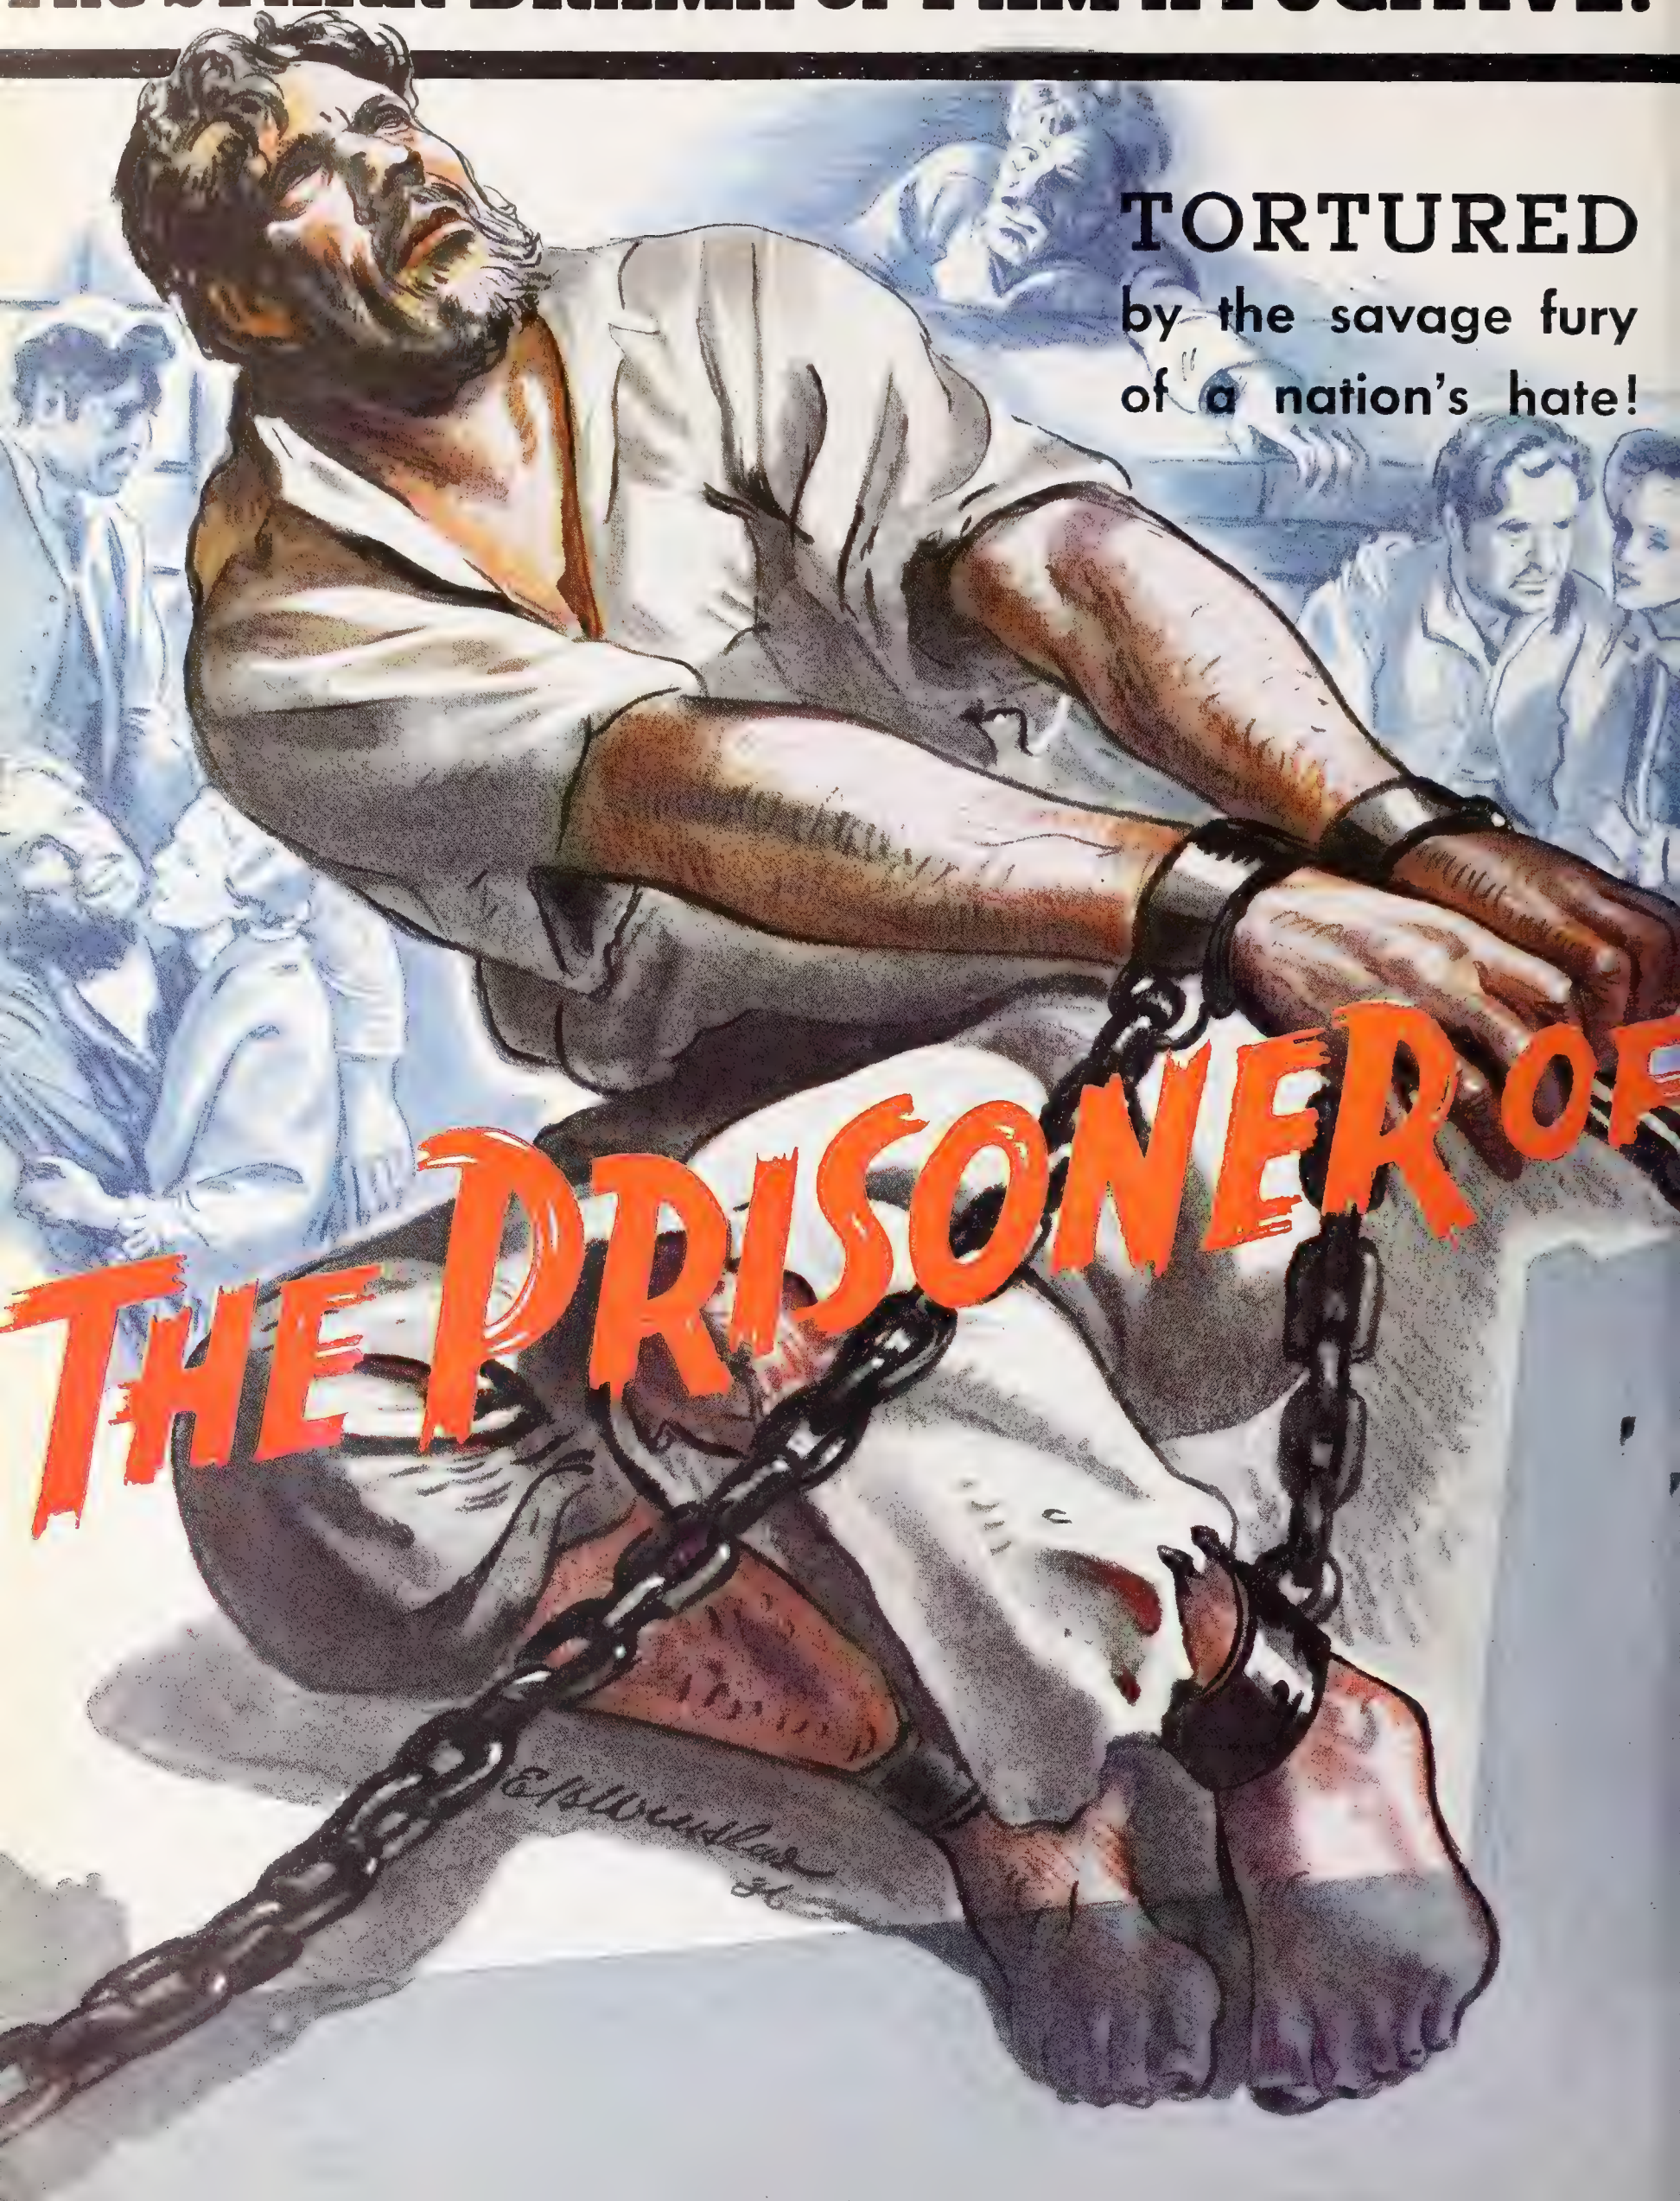
Actions are being prepared by Wattenberg and Wattenberg in New York for filing out of town by local counsel. Among these brought this week were Harms against WTEL, Philadelphia, for $15,000; Harms against KMTR, Hollywood, for $20,000, and Witmark against KMOX, St. Louis, $5,000.

Columbia Broadcasting System on Tuesday gave the press this statement:

"Columbia officials said that they welcomed the bringing of this suit as providing the means for a judicial determination of the position of the broadcasters as affected by the purported withdrawal of the Warner group of publishers from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers." Columbia, it was explained, was re-licensed by the American Society for a period of five years at a time that the Warner group of publishing houses were members of the Society and represented on the Society's board which ratified the new contract. Both the Society and Columbia contend that Columbia is now licensed to play all Warner Brothers music. Because of prohibitive statutory penalties for copyright violation, Columbia has, however, endeavored to refrain from playing any Warner Brothers music pending legal determination of the issue, and believes that it has succeeded in doing so.

The Columbia officials also said that their investigation showed that the numbers that were broadcast on January 23 and 25 were not published by Remick, but were songs of the same titles published by houses who have remained members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. It was also said that the amount of the damages claimed was greatly inflated and that the requested damages bore no relation to the actual amount in controversy.

Meanwhile ASCAP also was resorting to the courts in actions for alleged unlicensed performance of its music, the latest suit against an exhibitor appearing in Greensboro, N. C., where J. T. Justice, Jr., operating the Pickfair, Kernersville, was sued in Federal court by Gene Buck, for ASCAP and the Broadway Music Corporation.



The plaintiffs ask $250, the minimum penalty provided in the copyright law, for the alleged use of "Don't Let Your Heart Go Wrong," in the Pickfair, and an injunction restraining the exhibitor from further alleged copyright violations.

A number of suits has been filed by ASCAP against night clubs and hotels, eight such actions having been brought in the federal court in Los Angeles. Not less than $250 damages and a permanent injunction are sought in each case.

A STATEMENT TO THE TRADE

Hollywood, Calif.

ANY six-page insert should have a serious purpose and carry a proportionately important message to our customers.

In my eighteen years in this business I have personally endorsed very few productions; but I feel that "The Prisoner of Shark Island," which I have just viewed at the studio, deserves everything that I shall say about it.

Not only is it Darryl Zanuck at his best, but the work of John Ford, the director, Warner Baxter and the entire cast is so outstanding as to label it definitely one of the three great pictures of the year.

"The Prisoner of Shark Island" is a true page from our own history. It could be properly labeled our own American "Les Miserables" and Dr. Samuel A. Mudd, its chief character, could well be called our own Jean Valjean.

The story is that of the tragic fate of Dr. Mudd, who lived through many hells because he dared to serve the highest ethics of his calling – only to be saved when, under circumstances that will wring your heart, he answered the call again to save hundreds of helpless, as well as his own worst enemies.

Only recently our government has taken action to pay proper honor to this hero – the victim of mob hysteria – a sacrifice thrown to an inflamed and prejudiced public.

The holders of 20th Century-Fox contracts should approach the handling of this subject in their theatres with the same responsibility as I feel for its proper handling the world over.

CLIQUE ACCUSED OF CONTROLLING $7,000,000 IN U.S. STAGE FUNDS

Secretary of Actors' Federation Scores "Film Magnates'" Apathy Toward Restoring Vaudeville to Picture Houses

Charging that the administration and spending of the millions of dollars in the Government's WPA theatre project are in the hands of a "clique," Ralph Whitehead, executive secretary of the American Federation of Actors—and himself an official of the project—this week hurled a broadcast assailing the entire setup of Uncle Sam's $7,000,000 program.

Mr. Whitehead's chief protest was against the non-professional character of the shows being offered. Substantially, he complained that the productions of a "little theatre" and "experimental theatre" nature and "outdated turns" meet no entertainment demand and fail to achieve revived interest in the stage.

At the same time, he directed criticism at what he calls "the motion picture magnates" for their apathy in restoring vaudeville in film theatres.

Mr. Whitehead, who is assistant national director under Eddie Dowling of the federal theatre project for vaudeville, circuses and musical comedy, had been attempting to persuade WPA authorities to subsidize vaudeville by $1,000,000 to set up a nationwide circuit. This plan has fallen through. More recently Mr. Whitehead has been directing his energies to reviving vaudeville through the federal theatre program and a national "save vaudeville" campaign. His organization, of which Rudy Vallee is president, is a union of variety actors, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

"So far the Government has voiced many fears against direct subsidy of the theatre, but the majority of them appear paradoxical in the light of existing facts," Mr. Whitehead declared.

Says "Clique" Rules

"It has refused to make an outright appropriation or loan to theatre groups, presumably on the ground that it might be used to the advantage of one particular branch of show business and to the disadvantage of another, yet it has placed the spending of millions of dollars in the care of one clique.

"The Government was reported to believe, on the same grounds, that an individual apart from show business should direct any subsidization plan, and (to the detriment of our business) it has seen fit to place its gigantic relief program in the hands of persons inexperienced in professional show business."

As an example of what he termed maladministration, Mr. Whitehead said he had found this week that WPA vaudeville shows had been booked into the State, Poughkeepsie, and the Ritz, Newburgh, both motion picture houses in New York state, on a percentage basis, the actors receiving the Government's wage of $103 a month and depriving others of employment.

The total expenditure, by the scheduled end of the federal theatre project June 30, this year, may be conservatively estimated "at easily $10,000,000," he said.

"Nobody can quarrel with the Government's determination to care for the needy," he went on. "However, as relief becomes increasingly considered in terms of permanence, at least for several years, larger issues cannot be wholly ignored.

"A major obstacle for most businesses in reabsorbing their own workers is that existing markets have been over-exploited. . . . That condition holds true, at least in implication, for the motion pictures. What are the motion pictures to do when the public fancy tires of the double feature? Three pictures on a single program would be downright monotony and, after two, the public would not be satisfied with one. Flesh seems the logical answer.

"Obviously, a condition of over-production does not exist for live entertainment. In certain sections I have learned by careful research that a whole generation has grown up without seeing flesh and blood entertainment produced by professional showmen. That very fact discounts the argument of motion picture magnates that the public does not want flesh.

"Cain's Warehouse"

"One of the keys to the nationwide popularity of the motion picture and radio is convenience. The theatre must go to the potential audience, rather than expect the audience to travel miles to the theatre. And it means that professional showmanship principles must be used. After all, the function of the entertainment industry is to entertain, as the radio and motion picture magnates so well know. If educational advancement can be made incidental to the entertainment aspect, so much the better. But it is little short of foolish to believe that the majority of Americans, particularly outside of the metropolitan cities, would be satisfied in their entertainment demands to be primarily a 'proving ground' for sociological theories or a Cain's warehouse for outdated turns. Modern showmanship must rule.

"Ensnarled in red tape which, judging from past experience, is likely to continue with each change in the setup of relief, the federal theatre project seems to perpetuate many of the evils which all branches of the industry have branded as contributory factors to the industry's illness, chiefly the matter of centralization.

"A maze of rules and apparently unsurmountable hazards have had the effect of confining projects to cities where there is already theatrical activity.

"In the light of two years of futile efforts to remove the label of 'temporary' from governmental expenditures for the theatre, should any more time or money be lost in seriously considering the plans of the best minds of practical people in a business desperately anxious to get permanently on its feet?" asked Mr. Whitehead. "Something should be done—and done quickly!"

Criticism Answered

The criticism that the directors of the federal theatre project are nonprofessionals has been answered by Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, national director, with the explanation that they are or have been professionals.

The Screen Actors' Guild in Hollywood finds that "many of the administrative officers throughout the country are 'dollar-a-year men.'" The Guild thus admits an error in saying that a majority of the regional directors are not from the professional ranks.

However, the "experimental theatre" influence was extended when Philip Barber was confirmed this week as regional director for the New York area, succeeding Elmer Rice, playwright, who quit over an issue of censorship of WPA productions. Walter Hart, New York stage producer, has been appointed assistant regional director in charge of operations, succeeding Mr. Barber.

Mr. Barber at one time was a scenario writer for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in Hollywood. His first contact with the theatre was as student stage manager of the "47 Workshop," Harvard University's experimental theatre directed by the late Professor George Pierce Baker.

First Production Opens

Nathan Zatkin, who was identified with the advance exploitation campaign of Warner Brothers' "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and other motion picture publicity, is staying on as publicity director of the federal theatre in the New York region.

Long preparation finally resulted in the opening Tuesday night of the first production staged by the federal theatre in New York. This was "Walk Together Chillun," put on by the Negro Theatre unit at the Lafayette in Harlem. Frank Wilson, who wrote and directed the play, has gone to Hollywood to appear in Warners' production of "The Green Pastures."

Meanwhile in California, where the project is to include some 3,000 theatre workers, several resident companies, three vaudeville units and a number of dramatic groups are in rehearsal or on tour.

DECLARES ACTORS ARE STILL HUNGRY

After years of striving to put unemployed theatre workers back to work, "the Government finds itself essentially in the same position that it was when relief started," and the actors are still hungry, charges Ralph Whitehead, executive secretary of the American Federation of Actors.

The Government, he said, "still provides breakfast, but it is unable to guarantee luncheon."

What the American Federation of Actors, Actors' Equity Association and other groups want, he added, is "breakfast, luncheon and dinner for performers."

Says "Outdated Turns" and Non-professional Nature of the Shows Miss Entertainment, Fail to Revive Interest

Sabath Will Resume Hearings on Coast

West Coast hearings on motion picture and theatre company reorganizations will be resumed late this week by the Sabath Congressional committee for the investigation of real estate bond reorganizations. it was learned with the departure for Los Angeles of Murray W. Garsson of New York, attorney for the committee.

CALENDAR YEAR SALES SEASON URGED BY COHN

Would Permit Selling in Winter When Attendance Is Highest, Says Columbia Executive

A reform in the time-honored method of selling and releasing to make the film season coincide with the calendar year was urged on the industry this week by Jack Cohn, vice-president and chairman of the board of Columbia Pictures Corporation, as holding many benefits of tangible value to the exhibitor, distributor and producer.

By business custom and selling practice now extending from September 1 to September 1, the film season, Mr. Cohn believes, should be advanced to start January 1 for a twelve-month period. In his opinion this would be more orderly and more in accordance with the requirements of the several phases of the business.

Mr. Cohn has been advocating the change for three years, he said, and is now finding that some of the principal companies have adopted the idea to the extent that selling for 1936-37 is already under way.

While in the past sales crews of several large companies have presented their product to exhibitors as early as October or November for the season following, this has been confined to the large first-runs and key circuits, on one-year contracts or longer, to assure themselves a continuous product supply and to obviate delays. This year the pre-season sales campaigns are being extended to other accounts, but the releasing season generally begins September 1st. This Mr. Cohn would like to see changed.

Cites Attendance Peak

"In the winter, when theatre attendance is at its highest peak, exhibitors are anxious to meet and profit from the increased audience demand," he said. "This would be a much more logical time for the companies to present their product as it would help exhibitors plan their program for the winter season."

Under such a plan, the sales conventions would be held in December, instead of in May to September.

Columbia's selling season for 1936-37 already has been launched, as have been the seasons of MGM, Warner and RKO Radio. United Artists plans to start selling next month instead of in late summer.

It has been the distributors' experience, pointed out Mr. Cohn, that in June and July the exhibitor is away on vacation, or in the midst of the summer slump, and in no mood to discuss product.

Furthermore, Mr. Cohn continued, some of the biggest pictures of the year are released to the first-runs in the early fall, when theatre attendance has not hit its stride.

"This is brought about," he observed, "by the fact that no company likes to send out releases of box office potentialities during the summer, preferring to hold them for the season's start. The consequence is that films accumulated from season-end studio activity are stored in the vaults and for the time being are a total loss as far as revenue is concerned.

"They lose, also, the cumulative effect of publicity, since the exploitation given to films during their production in the spring is forgotten by the time they reach the theatres in the fall.

"To the producer, a switch to the calendar-year releasing plan would mean that his product would play at a propitious period, with commensurately larger returns, and better pictures inevitably would result."

Average Films Held Up

Films of average or lesser caliber could be held for the summer months when business is at a low ebb anyway, Mr. Cohn said.

The small exhibitor would be a particular beneficiary, he maintained, as it could be arranged for the small towns to follow the key city runs more closely, and runs prior to the neighboring metropolitan centers might be eliminated.

Numerous exhibitors have informed him, the Columbia executive reported, that patrons place great store by reviews in the large city newspapers, so that a standout picture loses a great deal of drawing power when it plays a small town before the favorable publicity has had time to percolate.

First Nominations In on Shorts Awards

First nominations for the Academy's eighth annual awards have been made in the short subjects division. The cartoons nominated are: "The Calico Dragon," Harmon-Ising; "Three Orphan Kittens," Walt Disney, and "Who Killed Cock Robin?" Disney. The comedy nominations are: "How to Sleep," MGM; "Oh, My Nerves," Columbia, and "Tit for Tat," Hal Roach. Novelties are: "Audioscopiks," MGM; "Camera Thrills," Universal, and "Wings Over Mt. Everest," G. B.-Educational.

Appointment of a Tellers Committee to count and certify the nominations submitted for the Award for Achievement in Art Direction was announced last week by Bernard Herzbrun, Chairman of the Art Directors Section. Membership of the Committee consists of Al D'Agostino, Duncan Cramer, Arnold Gillespie, Perry Ferguson, Robert Haas, Robert Odell, Max Parker, Jerome Pycha, and Gordon S. Mitchell, manager of the Academy Technical Bureau.

Four Companies Launch Selling

"Jumping the gun" several months in advance of the usual selling season, four large companies have their 1936-37 sales drives already under way, at least to a limited extent, and others are understood to be contemplating following suit. Some companies reported 1935-36 selling still in progress.

Selling plans for 1936-37, however, are still in preliminary stages, and while indefinite, numerically the programs will be about the same as the current year.

Paramount has started selling long-term franchises to circuits on next season's product.

As it shapes up now, the situation is:

Columbia: Selling under way.

MGM: In smaller situations where competitive product is offered, the company already is selling, but only in specific situations. MGM is not offering next year's product generally.

Paramount: Preliminary plans for next year's product program will be started at a meeting of New York distribution executives and Hollywood production executives, to be held in Kansas City some time between February 15 and March 1. As far as Paramount knows now, the sales campaign will start in August, after the annual convention. Paramount's feature list may be increased to 70.

Republic: No plans for early selling, as the company is still contracting for this year's program.

RKO Radios 1936-37 selling is under way.

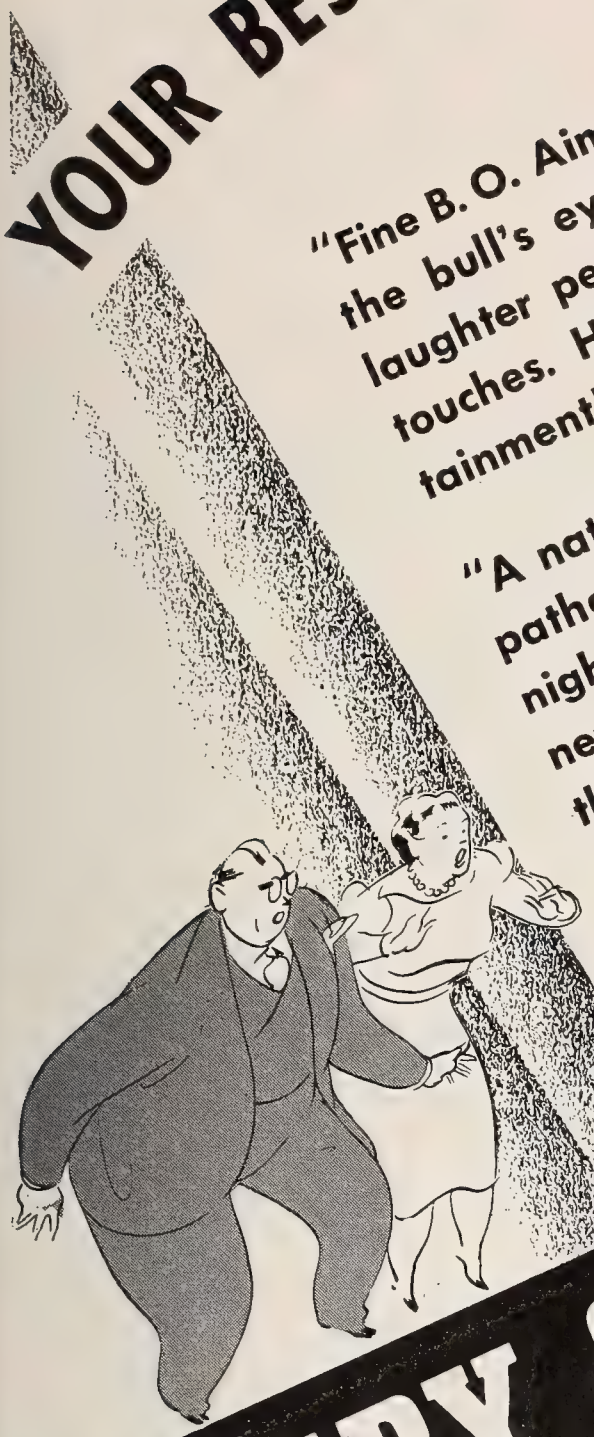
Twentieth Century-Fox: No indication of early selling generally. There will be a district managers' meeting February 21 and 23 in Chicago to start new season plans.

United Artists: Selling will start soon, because other companies are doing so, the company reported. Also, it was explained that in previous years United Artists was not certain of its list until spring, but it is now more or less positive of getting 20 or more features from member producers for 1936-37.

Universal: Not selling early, but preliminary arrangements have been discussed for the 1936-37 lineup. The company usually starts selling serials in March.

Warners: Sales have started in specific situations.

Modern Art Library Has Second Showing



The Museum of Modern Art Film Library had the showing of its second program of motion pictures on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week at the museum in New York.

The second program, under the general title of The Rise of the American Film, is composed of four motion pictures: "The New York Hat" (1912) directed by D. W. Griffith, with Mary Pickford and Lionel Barrymore; "The Fugitive" (1916) directed by Thomas H. Ince, with Wm. S. Hart; "The Clever Dummy" (1917) a Mack Sennett comedy with Ben Turpin; and "A Fool There Was" (1914) with Theda Bara.

Federal A T & T Inquiry Soon; Erpi Suit Postponed

The American Telephone and Telegraph Company, its manufacturing subsidiary, Western Electric Company, and Western's motion picture sound equipment subsidiary, Electrical Research Products, Inc., figured this week in the news on two fronts: (1) The Federal Communications Commission was completing plans for its investigation of the telephone system, indicating it would be ready to commence hearings in a month; and (2) The suit of independent theatre owners and equipment manufacturers against Erpi and its parents was postponed until March 12th.

In its investigation of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company the Federal Communications Commission expects to begin the taking of testimony some time this month in New York. The hearings will be both in New York and in the field. The inquiry is expected to take considerable time, since every phase of the company's activity is to be studied. One of the major phases will be A. T. & T.'s operations in connection with the motion picture industry.

Preliminary motions in the recovery actions brought against A. T. & T., Western Electric and Erpi by a score of New York theatre operating companies and sound equipment manufacturers, which were scheduled for hearing in federal court in New York Monday, were postponed to March 13. The actions allege that provisions of the Erpi contracts made it necessary for the theatre operators to pay more than was necessary for replacements and servicing of their sound equipment, and seek recovery of the alleged surplus charges. Most of the exhibitor plaintiffs are represented by Weisman, Quinn, Allen and Spett. The company is also counsel for the Independent Theatre Owners Association.

ERPI Announces Changes In Engineering Set-up

H. B. Santee has been appointed Director of Engineering according to an announcement made by H. G. Knox, vice-president of Electrical Research Products, Inc. The men on Mr. Santee's staff are H. G. Humphrey, D. Mackenzie, G. Dobson, A. DeNapoli, G. W. Flaccus and K. F. Morgan.

J. S. Ward has been appointed Director of Operations. On Mr. Ward's staff are J. P. Dinsmore, D. C. McGalliard, P. T. Sheridan and F. C. Gilbert. J. P. Maxfield has been appointed Director of Commercial Engineering. The men on Mr. Maxfield's staff are S. K. Wolf, G. T. Stanton and C. H. Fetter.

Sullivan Building New Theatre at Wichita

O. F. Sullivan, owner and manager of the West theatre in Wichita, Kan., is to build a $60,000 theatre seating 1,000, starting in February. Plans call for a modernistic structure with particular attention to acoustics.

Radio Program Sponsored By Midwest Association

The "Laff Parade," a 15 minute program of recordings is being offered every Sunday at 10:15 a. m. over WTMJ under the sponsorship of the Independent Theatres' Protective Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, Inc. A 39 week contract for the broadcasts has been signed by the association. Commercials on the program stress the desirability of patronizing the home owned theatre and members of the association are being supplied with box-office emblems so that the public may readily identify them.

"Patronize Home Owned Industry-Keep Independence Alive," is the slogan adopted for the broadcasts. More than 100 independent theatres are members of the association. The association is also working on plans for a buying organization, which it expects to have functioning long before the next buying season.

Owners Alarmed Over Free Shows For Motor Cars

General Motors' countrywide free-show motor caravan will be vigorously opposed by theatre owners, on the grounds that it will constitute unfair competition. Efforts to call a halt to similar ventures engaged in by national advertisers have been successful in the past.

A thorough study of the film and stage program to be offered by the General Motors "science-circus" without an admission charge during a 20,000-mile tour of the country will be made by Ed Kuykendall, M.P.T.O.A. president, on his arrival in New York Thursday.

National exhibitor representatives are already investigating the free show project with a view to protesting to its sponsors in the event it is revealed to be unfair competition with established theatres. Indications are, however, that organized exhibitor action will be held in abeyance until the effects of the free performances on theatre attendance have been observed.

The motor caravan opens with its first free tent show February 17, in Miami. The 28-car unit, carrying complete facilities for making and exhibiting sound pictures, left Detroit late last week and was in Nashville over the week-end. It is booked for one, three and four-day stands in more than 20 Florida cities following its Miami opening. From Florida it will work northward through Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia on the first five months of its itinerary, which will bring it to Washington on June 15. The balance of the itinerary has not been completed yet, but will probably call for continuation of the show through the east, New England, central and middle west during the summer and fall and heading southwestward about October 15.

The show was planned by the G. M. home office advertising department, which is being assisted by the Arthur Kudner advertising agency. General Motors states that the film program, except for pictures of local residents to be made in each stand, is solely commercial and scientific. It includes a two-reel Audio subject with narration by Edwin C. Hill of Hearst Movietone, Lowell Thomas of Fox Movietone, John B. Kennedy and John S. Young, radio commentators

National Board Opens Twelfth Annual Meeting

The twelfth conference of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures opened in New York Wednesday at the Hotel Pennsylvania, and is continuing through Saturday.

There will be various demonstrations of the work of the board, the Conference opening with the delegates sitting as guests of the Committee on Exceptional Photoplays, when "The Life of Louis Pasteur," Warner film, was viewed and discussed. This committee is composed of critics and students of the screen who are interested in the artistic qualities of the motion picture, and their discussion was based upon this consideration.

The first afternoon session concerned a presentation of viewpoints on films by critics of well-known publications, including The Nation, New Republic, and metropolitan newspapers.

Thursday was to be given over to an interchange, through the discussion method, of policies, plans and programs of varied organized community motion picture groups by delegate representatives of these groups, the morning session presenting the activity in the smaller communities with one or two theatres, and the afternoon session the larger metropolitan communities with many theatres.

Friday will be devoted to visual education, under the supervision of Professor Robert A. Kissack, Director of Visual Education of the University of Minnesota. Professor Kissack will open this part of the program on Thursday night at a special session of the New York University course on motion pictures, which is being given this year for the second time under the joint auspices of the School of Education of the University and the National Board. Professor Kissack will continue on the following day to preside at sessions covering different phases of the motion picture in education.

The subject of films in relation to youth, which is receiving the active interest of the board, will be presented by the young people themselves at the Saturday morning session, conducted by the Young Reviewers and representatives of the National Association of Four-Star Clubs, which is the junior member body of the board.

Five hundred delegates will attend the Conference, the final event of which will be the 21st annual luncheon at the Hotel Pennsylvania, Saturday. Dr. George W. Kirchwey, chairman of the board, will preside.

Columbia Pictures Enters Broadway Legitimate Field

Columbia Pictures has announced its intention to produce legitimate plays on Broadway and has signed Richard Aldrich, of the producing firm of Aldrich and de Liagre, as play editor and producer. William C. Lengel, recently associate editor of Liberty Magazine and now eastern story editor for Columbia, will assist Mr. Aldrich.

THE CREAM OF COMEDY!

"There's no top milk in 'The Milky Way'. It is pure cream of the comedy crop, traveling at a fast pace through a series of hilarious situations. The best Harold Lloyd picture to date, it will stand one hundred per cent behind the Paramount slogan, 'It's the Best Show in Town'."

"The picture emerges on the screen as one of the funniest comedies since the advent of talkers. It should prove a money picture everywhere. Writing trio have taken a good play, made it near perfect screen fare. Everyone connected with the picture has contributed to its success. Picture can live up to most anything zealous press agents will say."

SEASON'S ACE ATTRACTION!

"With uproarious comedy and to the tune of a thousand laughs, Harold Lloyd returns to the front rank of screen funmakers. Farce and hokum, moving with speed and holding a sock in every sequence, the film is a credit to everyone connected with it and should prove one of the season's ace attractions."

LAUGHS — TWO A MINUTE!

"Harold Lloyd's new one is a gag-bejeweled farce of the prize ring. It registers a laugh-count of about two a minute for its entire length and that is something of a record, even for Lloyd. So there should be nothing but smiles at the box office wherever it goes."

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Remember the Maine

Hollywood production executives have been advised by the Spanish government in an "unofficial" indirect manner not to "remember the Maine." In Twentieth Century-Fox's forthcoming "A Message to Garcia," Spain objects to several elements of the story and cautions specifically against the slightest reference in the picture to the sinking of the battleship Maine. Government officials had read the script, according to report supported by semi-official communications.

The picture, on which shooting had just been completed, is in the cutting room. The production was personally supervised by Darryl F. Zanuck, with Ray Griffith as associate producer and George Marshall director. Heading the cast are Wallace Beery, John Boles and Barbara Stanwyck.

The Spanish objections to phases of the "Garcia" story recall the fate of Paramount's "The Devil Is a Woman", directed by Joseph von Sternberg, which was barred in full in Spain two months ago and was followed by publication of a decree authorizing the minister of the interior to prohibit the exhibition of all classes of films which in his opinion tend to misrepresent historical facts or to impair the prestige of Spanish institutions or personalities.

The foreign market problem of Hollywood was even more sharply focused from another viewpoint in the case of Franz Werfel's "The Forty Days of Musa Dagh," which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer bought when it was originally published in Germany long before its appearance in the United States a year ago. When the material was in preparation for filming, the Turkish government protested, basing its objection on the fact that the story portrays Turkish persecution of the Armenian people. And the story still lies on the shelf.

Color Trend

The tide of color is spreading, slowly, relentlessly.

Pioneer Pictures definitely is committed to an all-color program. Shooting now is "Dancing Pirate," for release April 17th, and be followed by "La Ballerina," an untitled story, and "The Life of Custer."

Though contracts with Technicolor have not been signed, Walter Wanger has discussed in detail with Dr. Kalmus the use of color for his "Spawn of the North," "Vogues of 1937," "Arabian Knights," "Aldershot" and "The Peacock Feather." Wanger's "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" in color is finished.

Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., has been in conference with Technicolor relative to its use in his "Marco Polo." Cecil DeMille has had similar conferences on "Samson and Delilah." There is a strong possibility that RKO-Radio will make its projected series of outdoor action pictures in color. David Selznick has been discussing the use of Technicolor for his "Tom Brown's School Days," and Samuel Goldwyn may do his South Sea film, "Hurricane," in the same medium. George Hirliman's eight features for independent release all are to be made in Magnacolor.

All major studios are doing cartoons in color, and MGM, Warner and Paramount have series of short subjects entirely in color.

Donovan, formerly with the local branch of the NRA code authority, was named executive secretary of the group The Pickford-Lasky company has obtained $2,000,000 finances from a group of New York and California capitalists headed by Guy Carey and Robert W. Goelet.

Light Production

The production mill took a rest last week, starting but two pictures but completing seven. Current schedules are the lowest they have been in months, with only about 30 pictures shooting, but quality is reflected, with such potentially big pictures as "Opera Hat," "Cissy," "Romeo and Juliet," "I Loved a Soldier," "Dancing Pirate," "Under Two Flags," "Showboat," "Anthony Adverse," "Sons o' Guns" and "Green Pastures" still in work.

Only one major studio got around to starting a picture. That was 20th Century-Fox, which launched "Wooden Crosses." With Howard Hawks spotted as director, the cast lists Fredric March, Warner Baxter, June Lang and Gregory Ratoff.

Representing the independents, Victory Pictures started "Taming of the Wild," in which Rod LaRocque, Maxine Doyle, Barbara Pepper, Bryant Washburn, Reed Howes, Donald Kerr and Zetta Russell will be seen. Robert Hill is directing.

Republic Completes Two

Two pictures were completed by Republic. Cast of "House of a Thousand Candles" includes Mae Clarke, Phillips Holmes, Fred Walton, Bela Lugosi, Hedwiga Reicher, Eugene Borden, Olaf Hytton, Lawrence Grant, Rosita Moreno, Frederick Vogeding, Michael Fitzmaurice, Rafael Storm, Mischa Auer, Keith Daniels, Charles C. De Ravenne, George Sorel and Al Polletto. Arthur Lubin directed. "Laughing Irish Eyes," which will present Phil Regan, Walter C. Kelley, Herman Bing, J. M. Kerrigan, Evalyn Knapp and others, also was finished. Joseph Santley directed.

Universal completed "Sutter's Gold." Directed by James Cruze, the cast lists Edward Arnold, Lee Tracy, Binnie Barnes,

"Farmer in the Dell" was finished at Radio. The cast features Fred Stone, Jean Parker, Esther Dale, Frank Albertson, Leonard Trainor, Rose McQuaid, Alleen O'Malley, Lucille Ball, Moroni Olsen, Margaret Armstrong, Maxine Jennings, Spencer Charters, Oscar Apfel, Ray Mayer, Reed Howes, Torbrn Meyer, Jane Hamilton and Fern Emmett. Ben Holmes directed.

"Country Doctor" Finished

At 20th Century-Fox "The Country Doctor" was completed. Starring the Dionne Quintuplets, the screen personalities are Jean Hersholt, Dorothy Peterson, Frank Reicher, John Qualen, Tom Kennedy, Lang, Slim Summerville, Monte Vandergrift, Bill Collins, Helen Jerome Eddy, Harry Bradley, Mary Carr, Pat Flaherty, Montague Love and Harry Harvey. Henry King directed.

For Paramount, Walter Wanger productions completed "Palm Springs." The cast lists Frances Langford, Guy Standing, Smith Ballew, Ernest Cossart, Spring Byington, David Niven, Sterling Holloway, David Worth, Jean Rouverol, Grace Goodall, Lucille Ward, Lucien Littlefield, Goldwyn Productions finished "These Three," co-starring Miriam Hopkins, Merle Oberon and Joel McCrea.

Academy Adds Four

Besides eight features previously announced from Academy Pictures, Edward and Victor Halperin will produce four specials. Victor Halperin brought to New York recently a print of "I Conquer the Sea," starring Steffi Duna. The next release is "Revolt of the Zombies."

Canada's Censors Bar Few Pictures

by J. A. COWAN
Toronto Correspondent

Censorship has ceased to be a major problem for distributors in Canada. The number of films banned in Canada is at what is probably a record low. A survey just completed by Col. John A. Cooper, president of Canada's Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors, shows that the 1935 total dwindled to one-third of the 1934 rejections. Only 26 pictures came under the ban last year despite the fact that eight different boards are censoring for Canada's ten and a half million residents. If there is a censorship problem in Canada, it is one of duplication of official effort and consequently high censorship costs.

Col. Cooper ascribed the drop in rejections chiefly to improvement in the quality of films. He noted also an improvement in the quality of the criticism proffered by social, educational and clerical bodies, at no time, when the moralists were at their busiest, did the attacks on film business in Canada equal those in the United States, either in volume or acidity, but such criticism as there is now is to a large extent of a constructive nature.

According to Col. Cooper's summary, 1921 was the peak year for censor troubles in Canada, when 219 films were condemned. The total dropped to 116 in 1930, but jumped to 182 due to the gangster cycle of 1931. From that date on the decrease has been steady—from 101 films in 1932 to the negligible total of 26 last year.

Art films and art film groups, hitherto practically non-existent in Canada, are beginning to gain a following. The National Film Society, Montreal branch, now has a waiting list of 700 would-be members and is unable to obtain non-theatrical accommodations sufficiently large to handle the local art-film clientele. A branch of the same organization has just been launched in Ottawa.

Dickstein Bill Protested As Theatre Straitjacket

Differences as to the merit of the Dickstein resolution barring the admission of alien actors marked hearings held on the measure Wednesday by the House immigration committee.

Asserting that the bill, which was drafted by the labor department, is "without merit," Representative Celler of New York declared its enactment would place the theatre industry in a straitjacket and "would greatly impede not only the motion picture but the little that remains of the spoken drama."

Representative Celler clashed frequently with Representatives Cramer of California and Dickinson of Illinois.

Assailing the provisions for reciprocal entry of actor as "sugar coating," Representative Celler declared "American films are the greatest salesmen we have."

Hearing of Koplar Action Against Warners Opens

Trial was to begin Thursday before Judge John P. Nields in the United States district court at Wilmington, Del., in the suit of Harry Koplar, St. Louis, against Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., Harry M., Jack L. and Albert Warner and other officials of the company.

The suit, filed several years ago, seeks an accounting of issuance of 90,000 shares of Warner common stock by the company to Renraw, Inc., a Warner family corporation. It also seeks to have that stock returned to the company, to have the brothers account for the profits they are alleged to have made in dealings with the corporation, to oust Warner brothers as directors and also asks that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the corporation's affairs.

Mr. Koplar alleges the stock was issued to Renraw, Inc., in exchange for services of the Warners to the corporation and they were to be paid collectively $10,000 a week.

New York Exchange Union Calls Republic Strike

Employees of Republic's New York exchange went on strike Saturday on call of the Film Exchange Employees' Union, in line with the group's campaign for a closed shop at all exchanges.

Republic was chosen as the first exchange for a walkout because of the 100 per cent union membership in this company's film department, according to the union, which demands a contract granting it recognition.

The company called in an emergency crew from Consolidated Film Laboratories to take the strikers' places. Republic is financed by Herbert J. Yates, who heads Consolidated. The Film Center building housing the Republic exchange is picketed.

Academy Has New Destiny Tablet

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts' research council's subcommittee on improvement in release print quality is weighing results of tests on the proposed standard density tablets being made up under the direction of the subcommittee.

Density tablets made up of platinum sputtered on glass, which are under consideration as possible industry standards for laboratory use, have been made up by the Mount Wilson Observatory and the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena. When satisfatcory standard platinum tablets are finally obtained, one set will be deposited with the Bureau of Standards in Washington and one set in the headquarters of the research council, with a set of secondary standards on film made from the primary platinum standards, being furnished to each release printing laboratory throughout the world for use in calibrating their instruments and referring their print measurements to measurements made in other laboratories.

Members of the committee in charge of this work are: L. E. Clark, chairman; Gerald Best, Gordon Chambers, Ferdinand Eich, Harris Ensign, J. G. Frayne, K. F. Morgan, Hollis Moyse and Gordon S. Mitchell, manager of the Academy's research council.

Every studio sound department director has been asked to submit the name of the production which his department considers the best overall recording done by the department during the year 1934 for consideration for the award for achievement in sound recording.

Nominations for this award will be governed this year by the same rules under which the award was made last year.

All studio technical department heads, chief studio executives and equipment manufacturing companies were also requested to submit nominations for the scientific or technical award.

Nominations may be made in writing by anyone in the industry and must be for a device, method, formula, discovery or invention of outstanding value which has been actually employed in production during 1935. Carl Dreher is chairman of the board of judges for the award.

Publisher Ties Up With MGM

Random House, book publishing firm of New York, announced last week in conjunction with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer that a special edition of "Romeo and Juliet," which will include the complete text of the actual "shooting script" used in making the picture besides the original Shakespearean text, will be published on the national release of the picture by MGM.

Leon Schlesinger has augmented his animating staff for "Loonie Toons" and "Merrie Melodies" with another unit of 25 animators. Fred Avery will supervise. Mr. Schlesinger now has 100 animators turning out cartoons for Warner release.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Dick Grace and Charlie Stoffer are the only two left of Hollywood's "Last Man Club," a movie stunt flyers' group called "The Buzzards." All of the others are dead and gone—died in their cockpits, in plane fire or fatal crack-ups.

It was in the middle 1920's, when Colleen Moore was doing "Lilac Time," that eight of the most famous daredevils of the air in Hollywood concluded that Buzzards should die in their cockpits. They drew up a roster in the form of a chart, naming pencil-drawn airplanes after each member, with the provision that it was to be passed on to the next in seniority as the oldest holder dies. Dick Grace has it now. He gave the Buzzards their qualifying tests, taking a single-seater scout plane up himself and going through all the gyrations he had learned in the World War—loops, tailspins, barrel-rolls, reversements, Immelmanns and what-not. His idea was that when a man would and could follow him as leader, through all this, he was a natural born Buzzard. All the boys could—and did! Grace still is crashing planes on the Coast—at so much per crash, having "washed out" 30 planes to date. He has broken 69 of the 200 bones in his body.

With several hundred Negroes engaged for "The Green Pastures," Warner Brothers' studio has gone in for a little word changing. "Rules" has become "superstitions," a sign on the Burbank set reading:

SUPERSTITIONS

Time has proved that the following will cause undue suffering and oftentimes result in dismissal. Don't test Fortune too far. It is bad luck to:

1. Be late to work.
2. Bring razors on the set.
3. Drink spirituous liquors during working hours.
4. Smoke on the set.
5. Sit in the director's chair.
6. Shoot dice while in the studio.
7. Look at the camera.
8. Use grease in the hair.
9. Pluck eyebrows.
10. Assume an English accent.

The inventors of the Middle Ages seem, in the light of today's scientific achievements, a dreamy and impractical lot. Many of their ambitious notions never got beyond the idea stage, and a lot of those that did now seem crude and comic. But the libraries of the world are cluttered with musty pictures and books yellow with years, which reveal that the basic ideas for many of the mechanical marvels of the present so-called Machine-Age sprouted in the heads of medieval thinkers. Some evidence is presented in William Randolph Hearst's "American Weekly," where there is shown, among others, the ancestor of the cinema—a sort of magic lantern through which the figure of a crude and scary-looking devil was flashed on the walls of enemy cities to frighten the defending and superstitious troops.

Pleasantly ironic is Lou Sobol's story about Clyde McCoy, Broadway's newest band leader. McCoy it seems is a member of the McCoy family who for years waged the sanguinary Kentucky feud with the Hatfields. McCoys killed Hatfields—Hatfields killed McCoys—and occasionally to make matters worse, a Hatfield and a McCoy eloped. The other evening Clyde McCoy's orchestra played for a dance contest at one of the Broadway dance halls. The girl winner was Gloria Hatfield.

Wattenberg and Wattenberg, Warner attorneys in music matters, last week filed a suit in the federal district court in Philadelphia against a radio station in that city. The petition asks damages for the alleged use of three Warner songs without permission and without paying Warners royalties under a license. The three songs:

"YOU TOOK ADVANTAGE OF ME"
"NIGHT AND DAY"
"WHERE AM I?"

More amusing in the music controversy raging between Warners and ASCAP and the radio stations is the complaint by counsel for the Madison Square Garden Corporation of New York lodged with Homer S. Cummings, United States attorney general, that they could not play "The Star Spangled Banner" because Warners "had restricted it." Seems that Warners has an arrangement of its own on the national anthem, and that special arrangement, which the Madison Square Garden desired to render, is the private property of Warners.

WHAT THIS INDUSTRY NEEDS TODAY IS TEAM WORK

Right now the leading theatres of this country are faced with the problem of continuing the remarkable business they have been doing in recent weeks with such consecutive Warner Bros. hits as "Captain Blood" with Errol Flynn (which ran over 3 weeks in New York, 3 in Chi, Los Angeles, and Frisco, and held over in 37 other spots); Bette Davis in "Dangerous" (it's actually out-drawing Bette's previous biggest by 50% in a lot of situations); and Cagney and O'Brien in "Ceiling Zero" (3 weeks in New York and Boston—and it's just started!) keep moving, please...

It will take the strongest kind of Team Work to maintain this pace...

AND HERE IS THE TEAM THAT WILL DO IT!

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by the Hollywood staff of the Motion Picture Herald

The Country Doctor

(20th Century - Fox)

Comedy Drama

The fact that this is the story of the Dionne Quintuplets, presenting them in person, is the promise of entertainment worth and exploitation availability in which audiences and exhibitors are going to be most interested. The mountains of publicity given the children, plus the reams accruing to the production while the company of players was at the Dionne homestead, practically guarantees that. One can readily believe that it was not enthusiasm or artificial optimism that led the producer to say that "this will be the most sensational topical 'news scoop' picture in the history of the industry."

The story is a stirring tribute to the unsung hero of rural life, the country doctor, the man who through generations, in every country, has given the last bit of his skill and patience at all hours of day and night that others might live. As such it is powerful drama, homey human humor and thrilling adventure in the back-country, through which a romance of tender sentiment is carried.

The story is by Charles E. Blake, Chicago newspaper man, who is almost as closely associated with the lives of the quints as the famous Dr. DaFoe. The screen play is by Sonya Levien. Direction is by Henry King. Though it is a story of the children, and they are its stars, in substance and even without them the yarn seems to be of a character that would make it an important event in any theatre.

Bringing the ingredients to screen actuality, Jean Hersholt appears as the doctor. Dorothy Peterson is the first nurse. Slim Summerville carries the comedy contrast as the country constable; Michael Whelan and June Lang account for the embellishing, charming love interest. Other important topical roles feature Aileen Carlyle and John Qualen as the father and mother; Robert Barratt as the heavy, Montagu Love and Helen Jerome Eddy. Additional players are Franch Reicher, J. Anthony Hughes, George Chandler, George Meeker, David Torrence and Bill Conlon.

Thoroughbreds All

(RKO Radio)

Horse and Dog Adventure

The term "thoroughbred" has long been associated with the fine breeding of horses and dogs. It is particularly applicable here in relation to the substantiating story, inasmuch as the two principal centers of potential entertainment and commercial possibility are a horse and a dog. Though, necessarily, humans are an integral and important adjunct to the story, it is evident that the producers have given full consideration to that hard-to-explain affection that exists between man and his two most important beast friends. They say this is the angle which will prove most appealing to patrons.

Definitely, "Thoroughbreds All" is a story of a horse and a dog. It is the tracing of the careers of two animals, what they were and what they did, despite the human contrasting counterpart, that makes the story. It takes the pair, the race horse Warrior and Lightning the dog, from birth in the companionship of man to the wilds where one becomes leader of a herd of mares, the other leader of a savage wolf pack. Through many an adventure they are reunited on a race track, when with the natural desire of man and woman for love and man's unnatural desire for wealth at stake, the dog calls the horse to victory that consummates both.

The story is by Earl Johnson and Tom Storey with screen play by Frank Clark, Ferdinand Reyher and Jerry Hutchinson. Direction is by Glenn Tyron.

The horse is Warrior, Lightning is the dog. Moroni Olsen is the owner of both. John Arledge is the horse's trainer. Though he has a great affection for his four-footed friend, the apple of his eye is a girl, Louise Latimer, about whom the story's romantic love interest counterpart revolves. Emmet Gogan and Harry Jans, as two race track gamblers, are the heavies and Ethan Laidlaw and Max Wagner are their henchmen. Other players are Murray Alper and Willie Best.

The Golden Arrow

(Warner)

Romance

Love's young dream in the glamorous atmosphere of luxurious yachts, champagne, night clubs and social splendor, advanced by responsible parties, is the theme and atmosphere of this picture. Possibly lending further credence to that assumption is the fact that the picture is based upon a story by Michael Arlen.

Presumed that the story encompasses many sympathetic human touches which will lend charm and sparkle to its delineation of youth adventuring into the field of romance, the production is being directed by Alfred Green, who has demonstrated by past accomplishments that he has a particular ability to handle this type of entertainment material.

That the story quality may have a more than ordinary popular audience appeal and give exhibitors something extra to work with, Bette Davis, currently in "Dangerous" and "Petrified Forest," and George Brent, seen recently with Ginger Rogers in "In Person," were selected as the principal characters. Adding to the name values are Arthur Treacher, Catherine Douced, Dick Foran, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Kay Hughes, Ivan Lebedeff, Raphael Storm and Eugene Pallette. Others in the cast are Pierre Watkin, G. P. Huntley, Jr., and Earl Foxe.

Moving in a production atmosphere that actuates the story's sophisticated basis, two of the richest girls in the world, one of long tradition, the other an upstart, become infatuated with a personable young man who happens to be a newspaper reporter. Husband in name only, as certain complications tend to prove the supposedly rich girl whom he married is rich in name only whereas she is just a publicity figure advertising and publicizing a brand of cosmetics, thereby arousing his resentment, the groom is unwilling to have anything to do with his bride. Enters the erstwhile jealous rival to the man's affection, to capture glory for herself by spurning the proffers of foreign nobility to wed a golf professional, which is supposed to prove that the cosmetic heiress did exactly what was correct in marrying the newspaper man, now a budding novelist.

Murder by an Aristocrat

(Warner)

Mystery Drama

This mystery film is based on a novel by the same title written by Mignon G. Eberhard. The producers are of the opinion that the resulting transition promises to be one of the most wholly entertaining and thoroughly exciting pictures of the type ever to emerge from a Hollywood studio.

It is claimed that the plot is unique, and that as it is entertaining and witty in action and dialogue the picture will keep audiences in breathless suspense from beginning to end. Lyle Talbot and Marguerite Churchill head the cast, which includes Claire Dodd, John Eldredge, Virginia Brissac, Gordon Elliott, Addison Richards, William Davidson, Florence Fair, Mary Treen, Joseph Crehan, Lottie Williams, and Eddie Shubert. The story was adapted by Luci War. It is being directed by Frank McDonald.

As the title unmistakably indicates the story is murder mystery, taking place in a family ordinarily presumed to be superior to such a sordid thing. Quite naturally there is a romantic contrast. Whether there is any comedy to serve as a medium of lightening the dramatic suspense is not quite clear.

Reunion

(Paramount)

Romantic Drama

It is expected that in the combination of title, story content and name value of the principal players, showmen will find the necessary exploitation assets with which to sell this romantic drama. Essentially the feature is a war atmosphered love story, in which the dramatic worth of incidents, situations and production backgrounds are being counted upon to be as interesting as the dialogue and action of the players.

The motivating story can quickly be described and understood as the reckless escapades of a pair of spies in wartime. To establish further its potential entertainment and commercial character, it is the dramatic love story of an English actor and a Viennese actress. Very much in love with each other until the outbreak of hostilities in 1914, they are caught in the turmoil of national enmity and hate. Forced to part on the eve of their wedding, they are called upon to do the most dangerous work a country can ask of its loyal citizens. As spies they use the arts of the stage for the greater theatre of war. Meeting later at the height of the war they match and conquer the hate of their respective countries with their own love.

Gertrude Michael, currently in "Woman Trap," and Herbert Marshall will be seen in the leading roles. The third important character is Lionel Atwill, presently featured in "Captain Blood." As they are the artists carrying the main story trend, the supporting cast includes Guy Bates Post, Rita Carlisle, Tempe Pigott, Charles McNaughton, Phyllis Coghlan, John Rogers and Yorke Sherwood.

The picture is being directed by Robert Florey.

SEC's Atlas Study Will Involve Films

Officials of the Securities and Exchange Commission said this week that a study of the operations of the Atlas Corporation undoubtedly will involve the company's activities in the motion picture field. The Atlas inquiry is part of a study of practically all investment trusts undertaken at the direction of Congress, and on which a report, together with recommendations for necessary legislation is to be submitted at the opening of the Congressional session next year.

In numerous cases the SEC is sending field examiners to check the records of investment companies, without waiting for the returns of the complete questionnaire sent out some time ago. It was pointed out that, although the study of Atlas is almost certain to involve its motion picture operations, it will not be an investigation in the usual sense of the word as used in Washington. The purpose of the study is to determine whether any legislation is needed to control investment trust operations.

Radio Inaugurates Own Brazilian Distribution

The recently organized Radio Pictures Do Brazil has consummated a deal with Irmaos Ponce of Rio de Janeiro, under the terms of which the former company will become sole distributors of RKO Radio Pictures throughout Brazil. The deal for the acquisition of the Ponce business in that territory was concluded by Ben Y. Cammack, RKO Radio representative in South America, and Generoso Ponce, senior partner of Irmaos Ponce.

Nat Liebskind, who organized branch offices for Warner Brothers in Cuba, Panama, Porto Rico, Singapore and Java, and who recently managed the Brazil branch office for that company, has been engaged to serve in a like capacity for the new Brazilian branch of RKO. Mr. Cammack and Mr. Ponce have returned to Brazil to supervise the transfer of distribution.

Gowthorpe Heads Paramount "Pep Club" Governors

Montague F. Gowthorpe was elected vice-chairman of the board of governors of the Paramount Pep Club at a meeting at which a method of collecting dues was also discussed. The board of governors also adopted a resolution which will open the membership of the club to employees of the company's laboratory, Paramount News and New York, Brooklyn and New Jersey exchanges of the company.

Malco Building Offices

A two story office building in North Little Rock, Ark., is being erected for Malco Theatres, Inc., operators of the Rialto and Princess in North Little Rock and more than 20 other houses, at a cost of $10,000, according to Max J. Pruniski, vice-president.

Hamrick Acquires Theatre

John Hamrick has announced the purchase of the Roxy Theatre in Tacoma, formerly owned by Jensen-VonHerberg circuit. Ned Edris, city manager for Mr. Hamrick in Tacoma, is a partner in the deal.

FROM READERS

CITES HERALD'S VALUE TO NEW THEATRES

To the Editor of the Herald:

Having seen where I was "among the missing" in "Managers' Round Table" prompts me to resume. Have been busy moving around since last sending in reports, which was last sent from Clayton, N. M.

Left Clayton and went to Rapid City, S. D., for a short stay, only to come back to New Mexico, to this very promising looking situation, which is owned and operated by the local A. Hurley & Son, who with great foresight have started a new 520-seat house, in addition to the present 750-seater. In selecting new equipment, Better Theatres has been invaluable, as has the Herald in selecting product.

The writer is very happy in this new situation, having been here about three months, which is long enough to size things up, and have found only the best looks from every angle.

So will keep you posted on activities in this locality, and look forward to the visits of your staff in the event they ever wander into the wasteland.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M.

HERALD PHOTO SECTION APPEALS TO FRANKLIN

To the Editor of the Herald:

The Still Photo Preview section in your December 28th issue of the Motion Picture Herald is of unusual interest, and is a departure for a trade paper publication.

If subsequent subjects are as interesting, this section must have value to exhibition.

Harold B. Franklin, Columbia Pictures Corporation of California, Ltd., Hollywood, Cal.

Centaur Films Starts Operations

Centaur Films, Inc., of Hollywood, new producing and distributing unit incorporated about the first of the year, has begun operations, with the intention of having the first release ready in March. Harry O. Hoyt is president, Walter M. Kofeldt is general sales manager and is now touring first run centers, and Billy Leyser is in charge of advertising, exploitation and publicity. Lawrence W. Fox, Jr., head of Standard Capital, is back of the company.

Goldstein RKO Manager In Poland

Christophe Goldstein has been appointed general manager of RKO's Polish branch, with headquarters in Warsaw. Mr. Goldstein replaces Michael Havas, who has been managing the Polish office temporarily, and now returns to his post as Central European Sales Representative with headquarters in Vienna.

Browarsky Circuit Grows to 5

With the acquisition of the Linden theatre, Bellevue, and the building of a neighborhood house on Beaver avenue, the Browarsky Brothers, of Pittsburgh, bring their circuit up to five houses.

Change in Building Code For Theatres in New York

For the first time in New York's history, skyscrapers may rise above the auditoriums of theatres under the revised building code, which will come up for its first general hearing before the committee on buildings of the new Board of Aldermen this week.

Property owners previously were forced to keep auditoriums as well as stages clear overhead, and thus were handicapped by having to run the building into the rear of their plots, or had to confine their structures to theatre purposes. Under such conditions valuable street frontage suitable for stores often were sacrificed, and potential income was cut down.

MGM Production Plans Abroad Await Parleys

MGM's production plans for England will be mapped in conferences which Ben Goetz will hold in Hollywood next week with Nicholas M. Schenck, Louis B. Mayer and other company executives, Mr. Goetz announced on arrival from London Tuesday.

Mr. Goetz remained six weeks in England during which he completed a survey of studios and talent. He said details of production there were indefinite at the present.

Others arriving on the Ile de France were Jack Alicoate, publisher of Film Daily, and Mrs. Hal Roach and daughter.

Music Arrangement

Paramount's musical department is to take over composition, scoring and other music work for productions of Walter Wanger and Harry Sherman, and Leo Robin and Ralph Rainger will write the songs for Wanger's "Palm Springs."

"Informer" Wins Capital Vote

Five dramatic editors in Washington picked "The Informer" as the best picture for 1935. "David Copperfield" and "Mutiny On The Bounty" were accorded honorable mention.

Radio Signs Herbert Marshall

Herbert Marshall has been signed to a five-year contract by Radio, calling for three pictures a year. He is currently appearing in "The Lady Consents," in which Radio co-starred him with Ann Harding.

New Orleans Chapter Elects

Mrs. J. M. White was elected president of the New Orleans Better Films Chapter at a meeting in the Public Service Auditorium held early this week. She succeeds Mrs. Luther D. Ott.

Goldwyn Signs Howard Hawks

Samuel Goldwyn has signed Howard Hawks to a long-term directorial contract. His first assignment will be "Come and Get It," adapted from Edna Ferber's novel.

Producing Roosevelt Picture

A two-reel picture dealing with the life of Theodore Roosevelt is being produced by J. H. Hoffberg, starring Oscar Apfel.

PROHIBITION OF CURRENCY EXPORTS MUDDLES DISTRIBUTION IN GERMANY

Retirement of American Companies from Domestic Producing Brings Them Squarely Before Limitation of Licenses

by JOACHIM K. RUTENBERG
Berlin Correspondent

Germany's prohibition of exportation of currency, a governmental policy adopted generally in Central Europe, presents a special problem to distributors of foreign-produced motion pictures.

In former years some of the American branches in this country have distributed German-made films or have produced such pictures with the money thus accumulated. A year has passed since these companies stopped German production and restricted their business to distribution.

By their withdrawal from production in this industry the American companies have come under a new regulation which forms a part of the kontingent laws in effect since 1916, although in a different form.

In the past the wording of the kontingent law has been changed every year, making impossible a clear policy for an extended range of years for American companies. Since the arrival of the new Government the kontinent provisions have been untouched, only the prices of the kontigent licenses having been changed.

Licenses on Sliding Scale

Each year, at least since the present stipulations have been in force, 105 import licenses have been distributed. Sixty of them are handed free of charge to distributors of German films and 30 to exporters of German pictures. The 60 distributors' licenses must, according to the provisions of the law, be used by distributors themselves, and are nontransferable. The 30 exporters' licenses, however, are transferable once, and previously were sold to American companies at a price regulated by market conditions. To prevent an overrating of these exporters' licenses the Government prescribed at the end of 1934 a price of 20,000 marks ($8,000) for each license. After a stormy debate, in which George R. Canty, trade commissioner, pleaded the case of the Americans, the Government agreed to reduce this price and introduced a sliding scale.

The main point of this regulation is that the wholesale price is reduced to 10,000 marks ($4,000) if the imported film is to be shown in Germany in the foreign language (original version) or with superimposed German titles.

If this film is dubbed in German in a German studio with German negative stock and German actors, the price is reduced to 9,000 marks when more than 20,000 reichsmarks are paid for the dubbing. For each additional 5,000 marks spent in making the German version, the license price is reduced by another 1,000 marks, so that 5,000 marks are paid when the cost of the dubbing reaches the 40,000 mark limit.

The license is issued on presentation of bills. After the American film companies retired from production the showing of U. S. films depended upon availability of exporters' licenses, and external licenses were used to differentiate them from the 60 internal licenses. Internal and external licenses make a total of 90 licenses every year, so that 25 licenses a year remain in the hands of the Government and are issued only when a special need for films exists.

New Money Regulations

New regulations on foreign exchange, while entitling foreigners coming into Germany to obtain a border certificate, or Grenzbescheinigung, stating the amount of foreign currency being brought in, must not include registered marks or mark notes, nor may any be taken out of the country. A maximum of 30 marks notes per person may be brought in. Issuance of the border certificate must be noted in the passport.

Any moneys sent to foreigners in Germany may be taken out if the German bank paying out the moneys certifies the payment, and this also must be noted in the passport.

Foreigners who have overlooked the Grenzbescheinigung will be exonerated from the violation if they can prove by a bank invoice that they have changed foreign money within Germany into reichsmarks, and the amount can be converted back to foreign currency and taken over the border. Any reichsmarks still in the foreigner's possession on arrival at the border station are to be deposited in the customs house, to be disposed of only by special permission.

American Films at Top

American pictures always have held first place so far as foreign-made product is concerned, and there is no sign of a change in this field. The preponderance of American films is mainly due to the fact that with a few exceptions only American film companies have their own representation in Germany.

American films for this market have not always been wisely chosen. Some pictures have done a tremendous business, beating house records. Others, however, have completely failed.

Some countries send films abroad which have been unsuccessful in the country of origin, largely to cover the expense of production. This always impairs the market and handicaps later productions because of the dissatisfaction of exhibitors.

Severe Regulation

Germany has severe provisions to regulate the showing of foreign-made films. Each company must arrange a trade show, to be announced three days ahead in the official organ of the Association of German Film Exhibitors. Even when there is a contract signed months earlier, the exhibitor has a right to refuse the film within four days after the first public presentation. This provision causes constant fluctuation in the number of bookings and complicates the problems of foreign companies, which, generally, present films in original versions at first to judge reactions of public and press.

Germany considers films a cultural medium rather than entertainment solely. Historical films have a better chance than modern satires, human features more of a welcome than "hot stuff."

61 PLAYERS WERE IN 19% OF FILM ROLES

Figures compiled from the 430 domestic films released in Hollywood in 1935 and eligible for the Academy's Eighth annual awards, indicate that 61 players, or six per cent of the 974 receiving major screen credit, played 19 per cent of 2,201 roles listed. In 1934, 46 players, or five per cent, played 15 per cent of the major roles.

A total of 393 players receiving screen credit in 1934 were not in the 1935 listing. However, there were 408 players noted in the 1935 study who were not included in the previous year's list.

New Republic Sales Executive Due Soon

With Jack Fier handling the west and Edward M. Schnitzer the east, Republic shortly will appoint a sales head to supervise southern and midwestern cities. For the time being W. Ray Johnson, president, will not name a general sales manager. He will assume this post in addition to his other activities. The southern and midwestern sales head will have headquarters in Chicago. Mr. Schnitzer, who recently resigned as branch manager of the New York Columbia exchange, moves into Republic's home office next week.

Theatre Executives Guests At Weekly AMPA Luncheon

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers was host to a large number of important theatre executives at its luncheon meeting at the Astor Hotel in New York on Thursday. Pete Woodhull, past president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, acted as master of ceremonies. Ed. Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, and Charles L. O'Reilly, head of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, were the principal speakers.

BRITISH EXHIBITORS SEEK NEW POLICY ON RENTALS

Cash Penalties for Breaking 40 Per Cent Maximum Rentals Are Declared to Be Illegal

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

Decision by legal advisers of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association that the imposition of cash penalties against theatre men breaking the 40 per cent maximum rentals rule would be unconstitutional is proving a serious obstacle to those members of the CEA who saw a way of solving problems of "unfair competition" by means of the machinery of the association.

The suggestion was that all CEA members should make cash deposits with the association, proportionate to the capacity of their theatre or theatres, and that this amount would be forfeited in the event of proof that a rental payment exceeding 40 per cent had been made.

When this plan was worked out in practical detail, it was found that 4,000 theatres represented in the CEA would be called upon to deposit a total amount of at least $5,000,000 and that as much as $2,500 would have to be put up for each big capacity house.

The legal decision against the possibility of imposing these deposits must have come as a relief to the CEA officials who would have had the task of collecting them and, if successful, of finding an investment for the money, which represents an annual income of about $250,000! To the more zealous exponents of the theory of price regulation by agreement it has come as a serious disappointment but not as a knockout. They already are discussing alternative ways and means of bringing down rentals, by means of CEA machinery.

Expulsion Biggest Threat

The lead has been taken by the London and Home Counties Branch, which on the weekend discussed a revision of the rules of the CEA with the suggestion that a recommendation be made to the annual meeting of the association in March. The new rule to be put up to the London members states that one of the aims of the association shall be: "to secure that film rentals paid or payable by members of the association shall not exceed the maximum sums fixed from time to time by the council."

It already has been pointed out that a rule of this description is likely to be ineffective without penalties and, now that deposits and fines seem to be ruled out, the interesting point will be to see just what the London branch can evolve as a workable alternative. The biggest threat which the CEA can hold over its members appears to be expulsion and this is not likely to be regarded lightly.

Definite Benefits

The association brings very definite benefits to its members, not the least being that it puts them on a very preferential scale of performing rights fees. Its aid in legal proceedings is another service which the small exhibitor rightly prizes highly. And if there is to be relief from quota demands it certainly will be obtained only through the CEA. This is another of the matters to be discussed at the London and Home Counties meeting, where the reduction of the quota to 10 per cent (from 20 per cent) again will be advocated.

All these considerations show that the CEA membership is, and should be, valued by the exhibitor—but it does not, so far, appear certain that they can be so used as to make a maximum price policy workable in face of intense competition for product and ultra-efficient organization of distributors in the Kinematograph Renters Society.

Capital Issues Postponed

Owing to the death of King George V, two important issues of capital by British film interests have been postponed. These are the £1,000,000 ($5,000,000) debenture issue of Associated British Pictures, and the Sound City (Films), Ltd., offer of 130,000 six per cent participating preferred £1 shares and 135,000 5/- ordinaries.

These offers will be revived at a comparatively early date.

Formed with a capital of £750,000, Dufay-Chromex, Ltd., is an amalgamation of Dufaycolour, Ltd., and Chromex, Ltd., the color printers. There are 150,000 six per cent redeemable cumulative preference £1 shares, 100,000 non-redeemable second preference, also 6 per cent, and £500,000 ordinaries.

Unified Service Links Air Lines

An agreement which brings 20 of America's 23 domestic air lines into a unified air express system covering the entire United States and serving 215 cities with a combined population of 40,000,000 persons in the United States and Canada, was consummated last week by the country's air transport operators and the Railway Express Agency at a meeting in New York. The new setup affords domestic air express users their first direct link with the extensive Latin-American service operated for years by Pan-American Airways. Almost 500 planes are said to be affected by the agreement.

The motion picture industry is one of the country's biggest air express customers. L. O. Head, president of the Railway Express Agency, announced that his company was "continuing negotiations" with Transcontinental and Western Air, Inc., and two small air lines that have not yet signed. The agreement became effective February 1. The domestic air lines during 1935 have been credited by the Department of Commerce with flying 2,240,000,000 air express pound-miles, this being the estimated equivalent of shipments aggregating 2,400,000 pounds.

Indication of a rising tide of business throughout the nation is contained in a nationwide survey by Railway Express of the shipments handled during the month of October which showed an average increase of 13.5 per cent throughout the system, over October, 1934. Motion picture films, shipped from Los Angeles studios to New York and from there in prints to exchanges and theatres, are a very large part of express shipments.

Central States Circuit Organized in Illinois

Central States Theatre Circuit, Inc., has been organized in Illinois. A. L. Hainline of Macomb is president; Walter Fluegal of Pekin, vice-president; Charles Kuchan, Sr., of Canton, secretary-treasurer. In addition to officers other directors are Charles House of Monmouth and N. Fye of Danville. Offices are located in the Capitol Theatre, Canton. The corporation is authorized to build, lease and operate theatres in the Illinois circuit which now composes nine theatres whose operators are connected with the organization, representing a $500,000 investment. The houses are located in Pekin, Canton, Monmouth, Macomb, Colchester and Augusta.

Other theatre interests are to be identified with the organization later. Formation of the circuit increases buying power and probably will counteract the somewhat rising power of the Anderson circuit in these communities. Operators in this group own a number of other houses which ultimately are expected to join the circuit.

SIROVICH WOULD PUT U.S. INTO PRODUCTION AS AN INDEPENDENT

Congressman Has Idea for a Project Which Would Underwrite Small Film Companies with Government Funds

The United States Government would become a motion picture producer and an underwriter of motion picture producing companies, under a grandiose plan of Congressman William Sirovich, Democrat, of New York. He said in New York this week that he expected his proposal would come up before the House Committee on Patents, of which he is chairman, for a hearing within a week.

The plan is incorporated in his bill to create a national "Department of Science, Art and Literature," patterned in some respects after the subsidized theatre of various European countries. Although strongly urged by organized professional groups and individuals, it received scant attention at the last session of Congress.

Congressman Sirovich seems to have enlarged the scope of the measure, as the motion picture producing phase was absent from its original form, which proposed a federal subsidy of the legitimate theatre. He explained this week that many provisions would impinge on the film industry, and said he immediately would ask an appropriation of $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 to "start it off."

Denies Competition

While he viewed the Government's theatre project under the Works Progress Administration as competition with private industry, he denied his proposal would put the Government in the motion picture business or in competition with anyone, insisting it was designed to "help private industry to develop." He hinted, moreover, that his plan could very well take over the activities of the federal theatre project.

Congressman Sirovich was optimistic that his bill would be reported out of committee within a few weeks and on the floor of the House by April. If the committee reports it favorably Senator Robert F. Wagner, Democrat, of New York, has promised to sponsor it in the upper house, he said.

The representative said he had enlisted wide support among persons connected with the theatre, and that many of them would attend the hearing.

Government Underwriting

Smaller motion picture producers, under Congressman Sirovich's proposal, would be underwritten out of Government funds.

"If any existing producing agency finds it cannot float a stock issue or borrow money, the Government should finance it just as much as it now finances big business and industry through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation," he argued, emphasizing that this assistance would be extended only to qualified companies which were going concerns. As security the Government would take a mortgage on the negatives, he said.

While it is a little early for the motion picture industry to have formulated its stand, there will be an industry observer at the committee hearing. It was pointed out, however, that no sound film company would have difficulty obtaining a loan from the RFC if it wanted it, but that no requests have been made, the company preferring to deal with the banks.

Also, industry spokesmen doubted seriously whether the administration would want to incur any further obligations at this time.

As outlined by Congressman Sirovich, the drama division of the Department of Science, Art and Literature would be organized on the following lines:

1. The President would appoint an Undersecretary for Drama, thoroughly conversant with the theoretical and practical aspects of the theatre, who would hold office under civil service.
2. The Undersecretary would appoint a play-choosing committee of men of the type of the late Professor George Pierce Baker and Hatcher Hughes.
3. Everyone in the United States who thought he had a worthwhile play would be invited to submit it.
4. Playreaders would select 40 scripts.
5. The "patriotic spirit" of the drama critics of America would be called upon to read these plays, each critic to read one.
6. After the plays were rewritten in line with the written criticisms of these men, they would be produced, opening in Washington, then sent on the road, and, when sufficiently polished, brought to New York. If they proved Broadway hits, they could finance the program, and if found unsuitable for metropolitan audiences, would be sent on a 40-week tour, playing regular commercial engagements.

Would Expect Filming

The department would expect the motion picture companies to film these plays, and where "private enterprise" failed to take advantage of them, Congressman Sirovich suggested that the Department would produce them itself.

The drama department could be made self-supporting, he believed, but any loss could be made up from admission tax revenue from motion picture theatres and other amusements. Collected on all tickets over 40 cents, this revenue is expected to bring about $17,000,000 for the fiscal year ending next June 30. Some of the Government's profits would come from the sale of the motion picture rights, he anticipated.

Congressman Sirovich also would establish a department similar to the United States Bureau of Standards which would advise playwrights and serve as a clearing house and advisory board for producers.

Congressional Medal, Too

Another of his ideas is a "Congressional medal" and a cash award for the authors of the five best plays of the year produced by the department.

Attacking as an "outrage" the WPA censorship of "Ethiopia," which has been abandoned as a federal theatre project production in New York, the Congressman declared his bill would provide for freedom of expression in all plays presented.

He said he believed his plan would employ the 6,000 workers now in the federal theatre program, which, he added, is being operated by "abstract theoreticians" who "haven't been able to do what should be done."

A theatre subsidized by the Government has long been a dream of leaders in the profession. Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, national director of the federal theatre project, recently said the regional directors and executives were devoting their time to it because they discern in the program "the possible beginnings of a subsidized theatre in America."

Actors' Equity Association is another which has been advocating a theatre actively and financially supported out of public funds. Frank Gillmore, Equity president, is one of the chief proponents of the Sirovich proposal, as is Gene Buck, president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP), Percy MacKaye, dramatist, Lawrence Tibbett and others.

SIROVICH ACTIVITIES FAMILIAR TO INDUSTRY

Congressman William Sirovich, M. D., has displayed an undaunted determination to do things for and to, especially to, the motion picture industry and fields contiguous thereto in recent years.

In the first Roosevelt session, in the spring of 1933, he sponsored a resolution for a sweeping investigation of practically all phases of the industry. The proposal was defeated overwhelmingly.

As chairman of the House patents Committee, last fall he set out to investigate the industry via patent pools. The trade press made certain revelations, and the "fishing expedition" exploded.

He has been identified with copyright legislation and his committee now has in hand the Duffy copyright bill, which is expected to bring music tax relief to the exhibitor.

A practicing surgeon, he would, too, a playwright be. Some years ago he was in violent controversy with the New York critics over a play he wrote which was produced and which the critics did not like. He also has offered unsuccessfully, his dramatic inspirations to the Hollywood studios.

Born 53 years ago in York, Pa., the son of the Reverend Jacob and Rose Sirovich, and educated at Columbia, he has been a member of Congress from the 14th New York district continuously since 1927.

FRENCH EXHIBITORS WIN ROUND IN FIGHT ON TAX

Total Releases Largest Since Sound Began; Business Conditions Hold Down Receipts

by PIERRE AUTRE
Paris Correspondent

Though the 500 pictures released on the French market in 1935 was the largest number in the sound era, general business conditions held down grosses, particularly in the factory districts.

There were 130 French talking films released, of which 110 were made in France and 20 in foreign countries as French versions; of 250 foreign pictures dubbed in French, 200 were American, and of 250 foreign language films, 150 were American. About 150 of the 250 originals were also dubbed, and thus cannot be included in the total figure.

The French industry, with about 3,500 wired houses, can count upon only about eight per cent of the total population attending the films weekly.

Tax Fight Partly Successful

An important development was the partial success of exhibitors in combating excessive taxation, and they are continuing to fight. State taxes were reduced about 15 per cent, but the pauper tax is still in force and represents a problem. Exhibitors now pay about 20 to 25 per cent of the gross receipts in taxes, compared to the 25 to 30 per cent they were taxed before. Late last year the industry escaped the danger of a Government decree which would have made the industry virtually a state organization. The danger, however, is not completely over.

In general a French film must be kept within a cost of $80,000 to return its cost to the producer. The chief fault found with French pictures is in the matter of stories and screen plays. Production standards have improved.

Few Shorts Are Shown

Short subjects are comparatively rare in the French markets, since 90 per cent of the theatres have adopted the double feature program. France produces very few shorts. The short subject field is largely represented by a few excellent subjects which are largely too artistic for the average French patron. The big handicap to American distribution in France is the necessity of dubbing in French for general release, since the provincial patrons accept only such films as are in the French language. Comparatively few American films were successful in dubbed versions in 1935. "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," "G-Men" and "Sequoia" were well received, however. American dubbed films are in general shown as the second feature on double bill programs.

Films with considerable action, simple stories and those of unusual quality are for the most part the only ones successful in dubbed versions.

In general 1935 cannot be considered to have been a good year for American companies, except in the limited exhibition of original versions in English. It is this situation which is said to have led some American companies to buy French films for release in this country. As a whole, conditions here are difficult for American companies.

12 Warner Films To Cost a Million

Twelve specials, each to cost at least $1,000,000 to produce, will be released this year by Warner Bros., Cosmopolitan and First National Pictures, said Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production for Warner Bros., in New York before leaving for Florida over the weekend.

The twelve films are "Captain Blood," now in the third week at the Strand theatre, New York; "Anthony Adverse," "Ceiling Zero," "The Petrified Forest," "The Green Pastures," "The Charge of the Light Brigade," "Colleen," "The Singing Kid," "Hearts Divided," "Angel of Mercy," "Stage Struck" and a Max Reinhardt production, whose title and cast will be announced soon.

"My visit to New York has been an inspiration to me," said Mr. Warner. "The great success of 'Captain Blood,' 'A Tale of Two Cities,' 'Mutiny on the Bounty' and other pictures produced by our own and other studios is a clear indication of the splendid support which the public always gives to worth-while entertainment on the screen."

P.T.A. Unit Asks Ban On Picture Tieups

Minneapolis West High Parent-Teacher Association, protesting that distributors had refused to provide old films for lunch hour shows, this week called upon PTA groups throughout the country to bar all commercial film tieups from schools and demanded the choice of best pictures after their commercial value has expired.

Dr. C. S. Pollock, president, said the PTA families were being urged to withdraw their patronage from films of companies refusing to cooperate.

New Tube Sees Through Dark

A new electron tube which for the first time is said to enable man to see through the dark was described and demonstrated in St. Louis last week before the American Association for the Advancement of Science by Dr. V. K. Zworykin and Dr. George A. Morton, of the Radio Corporation of America laboratories.

The scientists witnessed the projection of motion pictures focused on the tube, which converted light rays into electrons. The electrons sped through the tube and reproduced the pictures in enlarged form on a screen in its further end. Continuing the demonstration, a dark glass filter was placed in the beam of the motion picture projector. All visible light rays were stopped dead, yet, with what to the average person would appear sheer magic, the electron image tube continued to reproduce the enlarged pictures with hardly noticeable loss in clarity. Dr. Zworykin explained that the tube was then functioning entirely on "black light" or infra-red rays, which were all that could reach the tube through the light filter.

The new device, which is sensitive to ultra-violet as well as infra-red rays, known as "black light," makes electrons behave exactly as light rays, and, it is said, marks a great advance in the use of electron lenses. Its large photoelectric cathode allows the efficient employment of large diameter, high power optical lenses.

The similarity of the new system to optical systems was shown. The images were focused by electrostatic instead of optical means, and the produced images possessed a degree of definition quite comparable to that obtained by photography. This new electron optical system inverts the image, as in the case of a glass lens optical system. In the electron image tube electrostatic lenses play the part of glass lenses. Focusing of the image is accomplished by varying the electrostatic lenses by means of a potentiometer, and, to carry the analogy one step further, the scientists have even corrected the tube for various distortions, just as is the lens of a camera.

For some time it has been possible to capture on photographic negatives images carried by "black light," but investigators have been limited to the use of "still" pictures, which could be observed only after the process of developing and printing. The new electron image tube converts the scenes it receives in "black light" directly into visible pictures on its fluorescent screen.

REPEAL OF LAW BARRING MINORS PROPOSED AS BILL TO END BILLS

See "Cop" in Every Theatre of New York State If Proposals Pass; Many-Cornered Fight in Prospect; Scrapping Favored

Repeal of the law prohibiting the admittance of unescorted children under 16 to motion picture theatres in New York state was urged by the industry in New York this week as the solution to the vexing problem of when and under what conditions children should attend the theatre. The law has been on the statute books for 16 years.

None of the legislative amendments so far proposed offers any real remedy to a situation that for years has been the subject of argument among the industry, reform and social welfare groups, better films movements and the authorities, it was held.

There is almost unanimous agreement that the present law is unworkable and unenforceable, but while there is a movement underway to amend the statute, the industry this week came out in favor of scrapping it entirely. No specific legislation is needed, said exhibitors, and the general regulations governing theatres are adequate to cover the situation.

A "cop" in every theatre in the state—a form of governmental policing—is seen if present and prospective legislative proposals are enacted. From present indications, a many-cornered fight looms in the state assembly in Albany.

A series of police raids in Greater New York in which some 245 managers and house staffs at 109 theatres have been caught in the dragnet since January 4 for allegedly violating the law forbidding the admittance of unescorted minors has brought into spectacular prominence the need of repealing or amending the antiquated law, exhibitors declared.

Enforcing Law Meanwhile

"Until such time as the statute is changed, I shall continue to enforce it," said Byrnes MacDonald, director of the Juvenile Aid Bureau of the New York police department, this week. "I know of no more effective way to bring about a change in an unpopular law than to enforce it rigidly."

Mayor LaGuardia has expressed himself similarly, saying the police drive was to make conspicuous the necessity for amending the law.

Violations are decreasing as a result of the wholesale arrests, said Mr. MacDonald, adding that the circuit houses are "extremely cautious" about admitting children and "more law-abiding and safer than the small theatres."

A large number of those summoned were held for trial in court of special sessions, while others were dismissed by the magistrates, and still others were ordered before Police Commissioner Lewis Valentine in cases where the theatre employees denied they could judge the age of the children. The mayor also is interested in the disposition of the cases.

When the statute was enacted, motion picture theatres were grouped with such places as pool rooms, dance halls, liquor establishments and "concert saloons."

Too, the cry in the old days that films were unfit for children was a contributing factor in passage of the law. Today, by common consent motion pictures generally are family entertainment, suitable for children, and the physical surroundings which caused theatres to be classed in the statute as "places of entertainment injurious to health or morals" have been entirely altered.

Sees Disregard for Law Bred

William Edwin Hall, president of the Boys' Club of America, and others have pointed out that the practice of children begging adults to buy their tickets breeds disregard for law which reacts more unfavorably in their future years. Some theatres have had a system of "bootlegging" whereby "professional escorts" take the youngsters into the theatres, but the police campaign is said to have put a stop to this.

Because of these factors, the situation is described as "intolerable" by industry spokesmen, who maintain that it not only does not protect the children but precludes the type of group cooperation with the industry that would adequately safeguard them. Every better films organization which sponsors a showing of a selected program for children is breaking the law, it was indicated, because of the regulation that they must be accompanied by a parent or "authorized guardian."

Charges Political Factor

Commenting on the situation this week, Mrs. Malcolm P. McCoy, New York City clubwoman known throughout the state for her children's film activities, said: "The present legislation is inadequate, and the measures proposed are not ideal by any manner of means. They would inject politics into theatre operation and set up unneeded special censorship. Other states get along very well without this kind of law. If common sense were used in attacking the problem by the public, the exhibitor and police authorities, acting on common ground, I believe a practical method could be found to protect the children."

THIS YOUNGSTER HAS OWN IDEAS

What one youngster thinks about the furore over the admittance of minors to motion picture theatres in New York is evidenced in a letter published in the New York Daily News over the signature, "Spinach Hater."

Said the letter: "I think it is a damn shame that us kids aren't allowed to go into the movies without grown people. If you ask me, I think us kids should gang up on a few of these ticket choppers or ushers who try to enforce this 'law,' and just crowd on in. My gang could take care of any usher that ever lived."

Approval of Proposed Bills Would Subject Industry to Direct Governmental Control and Extended Censorship

Scoffing at the claim that films are a factor in child delinquency, Mary E. Hamilton, New York City's first policewoman, advocates a change in the law "which hinders crime prevention rather than helps it."

"The juvenile delinquent today is invariably the product of bad home and street environment," she found. "The young criminals that overcrowd our prisons, in most instances, started out with some gang, an institution which is the product of street life. If moving pictures will keep children off the streets, by all means make it possible for children whose parents are too busy to look after them to go to these places of amusement during the daytime and see a bit of life that will lift them out of the poor environment of their crowded homes.

Records Show Safety

"Children love the movies, and since there is nothing in the pictures themselves to endanger their morals, as shown by the fact that no law exists prohibiting them from seeing moving pictures provided they accompany older people, there is no reason why they should not be permitted to go unescorted, in the afternoon, provided certain precautions be taken by the managers to protect the safety and welfare of young charges."

As to safety, the police records are clear of any molestations of children in theatres, according to a recent industry checkup. Furthermore, the underwriters' figures show that there are fewer fires in theatres than any other class of business, and rigid building codes, regular fire inspection and the vigilance of the management and house staff all contribute to the safety of the patrons.

All theatres are subject to fire and police supervision, it is pointed out, and the authorities can compel the management to remove any hazard. Special legislation now on the statute books and being proposed, the industry believes, is needless as well as a hindrance.

In the proposals advanced by various interests seeking to amend the law there has been no agreement, and in some of the ideas industry leaders see attempts to make a political football out of the industry, in which exhibitors would be the chief victims.

If some of the proposals are approved by the legislature, the industry in New York will be subjected to direct governmental control and extended censorship—and there will be a "cop" in every theatre.

Furthermore, the industry gravely fears that control of this sort would upset the community cooperation that has been painstakingly built up through the years at a cost of much effort.

Another substantial fear is that laws of this nature will spread to other states. It is pointed out that in most sections of the country there are busybody organizations always willing to undertake "reforms" of this kind and to exert pressure for their enactment.

Foisting Regulation Charged

It was charged this week that Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia of New York, wittingly or unwittingly, was pulling chestnuts out of the fire for bluenose reform organizations in sponsoring new legislation. Industry opinion was that these groups were attempting to foist regulation upon the industry in New York state in this manner after failing in previous attempts initiated through their own efforts.

Meanwhile the National Board of Review, a pioneer better films organization, has served notice that it will oppose the "mayor's bill," so-called, when it reaches the legislature. Opposition will also be forthcoming from parent-teacher organizations, previewing committees and similar groups.

Their fight will be motivated by the fact that the proposed regulation would substitute government fiat for the voluntary cooperative activity of which they are a part.

Specifically, Mayor LaGuardia proposes that children younger than 16 will be permitted unaccompanied to motion picture shows during non-school hours to theatres "which have been certified as meeting all requirements for proper showing for children." These requirements, the Mayor explained, include the segregation of children in one part of the house, with one or more "qualified" matrons to supervise them, and the showing of pictures "suitable for children."

While prominent exhibitors were quoted in the press as approving these proposals, they did so without considering their implications, and probably for political reasons, point out industry leaders.

For one thing, it has not been defined whether the exhibitors would be permitted to appoint the matrons or whether they would be political appointees. If the latter is the case the situation opens a vast new field for political patronage, with the industry footing the bill. Exhibitors oppose the recommendation that a matron be employed for as few as every 25 children.

Secondly, who is to decide what films are "suitable for children," and by what yardstick?

Some of the reform groups, with the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children as the spearhead of the drive, are demanding a board of censorship to decide arbitrarily what films shall be fit for children to see.

It is agreed that the present law unreservedly barring minors from theatres is impractical and unenforceable. But, the industry contends, if the mayor really is sincere in seeking a change, the industry itself can work out the problem with the voluntary cooperation of the better films groups, rather than relegate the solution to more law, which, it is feared, will breed additional evils.

Sponsored Matinees Proposed

Sponsored children's matinees, it is suggested, would solve the difficulty, since the proper supervision would be assured, and the right type of shows.

Furthermore, it is pointed out that children's entertainment has been the concern of the existing preview committees, which have exerted a powerful influence in elevating public taste. Extension of censorship to cover children's programs specifically would not only discourage better films committees but would probably kill their activity, it is feared.

Meanwhile, if the legislative sessions of the past 10 years are any criterion, a flood of bills on the subject is expected in Albany this year. Two have already made their appearance, and neither is acceptable to the industry or better films groups.

Under a bill to amend the education and penal laws, proposed by Assemblyman William T. Andrews, Democrat of New York City, children under 16 may be admitted during non-school hours to theatres approved by the local police and fire departments, provided a special section is reserved for the youngsters from which adults would be barred. Theatres would be required to employ a matron for each 200 children, such matrons having first obtained a certificate from the board of health and "a certificate of qualification from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children."

It is also provided that before theatres would be allowed to admit children they "shall agree to exhibit only such moving pictures as shall first have received the written approval of the mayor or other similar official or a commission which he shall be authorized to appoint." Noncompliance with the fire regulations would be sufficient to cause revocation of the privilege to admit children.

The second bill, by Assemblyman Breitbart, Democrat of Brooklyn, provides that if the state board of censors finds a film unfit for children under 16, it may license the film on condition it will not be shown to such children.

Regardless of any moves in the Assembly, the feeling prevails in the industry that with so many interests involved, a lack of agreement on an acceptable formula will block legislation this session.

CALLS MOVE IDIOTIC HANGOVER OF DRY ERA

In denunciation of the antiquated law forbidding the admittance of minors to theatres in New York state, the New York Daily News, under the caption, "The Demon Movie," editorializes as follows:

"We notice a campaign going on to keep children under 16 out of the movies unless escorted by adults. This is an idiotic blue law, a hangover from the prohibition era. So far as we know, this is the only state that has such a law, though we may be mistaken about that.

"The spirit of this law seems to regard the movies as the prohibitionists regard the 'demon rum'; appears to view a quiet movie house as unsafe for children, and the city streets as quiet little havens of refuge for them.

70 from Paramount In 1936-37 Season

Decision of the management to produce and distribute 70 features next season and a change of the name of a corporate subsidiary were the principal orders of Paramount home office business this week.

In its listing of 70 features for the 1936-37 season, Paramount will have six Hop-a-Long Cassidy Westerns produced by Harry Sherman. The same number of single reel subjects, 100, will be distributed.

Paramount Pictures Corporation of Dover, Del., has changed its name to Paragar Corporation, New York. Publix-Salt Lake, Inc., has changed its name to Inter-Mountain Theatres, Inc. The Corporation Trust Company is agent for both corporations. It was explained at the Paramount home office that Paramount Pictures Corporation was formed about 1932, but has not been actively in use. The name change is for the purpose of avoiding confusion.

After weeks of negotiations Paramount late last week signed a two-year product deal with the Skouras circuit. The arrangement calls for 100 per cent of the distributor's output for the balance of the current and all of next season. This is the second two-year deal closed by Paramount in the New York territory within the past few weeks. The first was the Century circuit. The reason for the two-year agreement is the Loew franchise which has another year to run. The two circuits follow the Loew circuit.

Next Time We Love

(Universal - Paul Kohner)

Romantic Drama

This picture was previewed in a little projection room. It was shown to a group of newspaper men and women. In such a place and before such an audience there was no possibility for study of mob psychology, no chance for contagious or spontaneous outburst of emotional expression, as each reporter rigidly sought to conceal his or her reaction. Despite this artificial barrier no one could mistake the force and power with which "Next Time We Love" rode right into the hearts of every man and woman in that room.

The picture is a love story, probably one of the finest the screen has been privileged to present. It appears so because it deals in fundamental human equations, simply, sincerely and intelligently. There are no artificial theatrics, no straining for forced anti-climaxes. In fact there's no action. Nor have concessions been made to high brow or mass mind availability. Rather there is continual demonstration that producer, director and players, believing that they had a valuable piece of entertainment property, treated it honestly in the belief that the whole public would understand and appreciate the candor of their efforts.

Basically it's romance drama. It's a story of faithful love, brought face to face with life's cold realities, strong enough to conquer the tragedies that every husband and wife most fear. Sometimes it burns with an intense ardor; sometimes it is heartless, always it's human, with the power to make spectators believe what they are seeing on the screen. As such it provides the thrill of a quick and charming courtship; the dramatic sympathy-stirring pathos of a faithful husband and wife who to live must live apart, and the glowing spirit of triumph that comes with the realization that when the need is greatest the vows pledged in matrimony are eternally sacred.

It tells of a woman who upon marriage goes on to achievement on the stage and screen, a husband who gains fame as a newspaper correspondent in every quarter of the world, and a child who cements their love. It puts squarely to the woman the question should she divorce her husband, marry another man who always has been an honest family friend, and thereby enjoy a life that has been denied her? It takes the woman to her husband for the answer. Finding him seriously ill, promise of another marital happiness and further triumphs on stage and screen are forgotten as she remembers only her pledge "in sickness or health; in riches or poverty."

The story is impressively portrayed by Margaret Sullavan as the wife, James Stewart the husband and Ray Milland the family friend. But for a few appearances of Robert McWade as a managing editor and Christian Rub as an Alpine innkeeper, the balance of the small cast is only incidental and the top trio carry the story and they carry it through the medium of conversation.

"Next Time We Love" is a picture to be handled with dignity and intelligence. A look at the faces of feminine reporters when the light went on indicated its potential popularity with women patrons. For general audiences a campaign that convinces all classifications that this is an attraction that nobody would want to miss should have the desired effect.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Desire

(Paramount-Lubitsch)

Comedy Romance Drama

There is much for comedy fans in this production. Those who think that torrid sex as a part of screen entertainment mechanics is a forgotten thing are in for a surprise. Those who like sentimental romance drama will find plenty of it. "Desire" is an amalgamation of all three.

The picture places a lot of valuable sales angles in exhibitors' hands. Also it erects certain handicaps which undoubtedly presage difficulty in many quarters. All right for the sophisticated, probably, but a feature that official and unofficial guardians of public morals are quite likely to leap on, requiring the application of much pretty astute showmanship and no little diplomacy.

Half the picture is gay comedy. It's made so by American automotive engineer Tom Bradley's connivances to force boss Gibson to give him a vacation in Spain. It's made more ludicrously funny by the hokum manner in which glamorous thief Madeleine makes Dr. Pauquet an innocent accessory to her stealing a string of pearls from gem merchant Duvalle. There's chase comedy across the Pyrenees, consummated when clever Madeleine makes lovesick Bradley her dupe in smuggling the loot over the border. It's still fun when, upon the entree of confederate Margoli, he and Madeleine work a hokey magic trick on guileless Bradley.

Then it turns to super-heated sex. Alone in a mountain inn, Madeleine falls in love with Bradley.

Later, despite Margoli's threats and Aunt Olga's long-winded dissertation on how it can't be done, Madeleine desides to quit the racket and go straight as the show turns dramatic. Her confession and burning words of love serve only to alienate Bradley. But one long kiss takes care of that and, like every American he-man, Bradley realizes that, no matter how enameled the exterior may be, a true heart beats beneath. Making literal hash of Margoli's plan to put him on the spot, he's with Madeleine when she returns the pearls to Duvalle. By implication she's cleared of criminal charges. By further implication Madeleine is off to a future of comparative quietude as the wife of the Detroit carburetor expert Bradley, wondering how efficacious the moonlight is in the flivver capital.

Previewed in the Los Angeles Paramount Theatre. The audience roared at its comedy and did quite a bit of ooh-ing and ah-ing at its sex.

Love on a Bet

(RKO Radio - Lee Marcus)

Comedy Romance

Clean, clever comedy, pepped up by further comedy romance, this production has material for plenty laughs. It's a sort of combination funny bet, hitchhike, romantic adventure yarn. Moving speedily, involving half a dozen or more ludicrous situations, it rollics and frolics along, with amusement its only intent. Not very impressive as far as cast names are concerned, but adequately so where value of title and story content are considered as entertainment and showmanship assets, it has sufficient quality to hold interest.

What happens—and much that is given many funny twists does—is the result of a queer bet. Michael bets his uncle Carlton that he can start from New York in his underwear and without a penny and arrive in Los Angeles in 10 days' time with $100 and a complete outfit, and during the trip make a girl fall in love with him. If he wins he gets a bankroll to back a show. If he loses he goes to work in Carlton's meat packing plant.

He gets the suit first. Thumbing a ride with appealing Paula and her rather stern aunt Charlotte, he's quickly in a fair way to land the girl. By hook and crook, and via some pretty sharp trading, he gets the finances to keep the caravan rolling across the country. Not everything is accomplished without amusing complications, but anyway Michael captures a pair of bandits for whom there is a $1,000 reward. He sells the reward for $100. Then he steals an airplane in order to land in Los Angeles on time; gets pinched, is bailed out in the nick of time by Aunt Charlotte, convinces Paula

Dangerous Waters

Melodrama

A melodrama of the sea with Jack Holt supplying most of the action, this picture moves at a swift pace throughout. Reminiscent of certain sea tragedies of recent years the motivating story centers upon a chief mate who takes command when his captain dies during a storm at sea and while a fire rages in the hold of the vessel. The chief mate brings the ship safely to port. He finally obtains papers as a captain but has trouble in finding a ship to command, due to his antagonizing of certain high powers. When he does get one it is an old cargo boat, heavily insured, one which some members of the crew are desirous of sinking for monetary reasons.

The romantic phase of the picture finds Holt loving his philandering wife and blind to the fact that another girl, daughter of Holt's former captain, sincerely loves him. This circumstance is changed when Holt discovers his wife's true character. In typical fashion Holt uses his fists on numerous occasions to terminate an argument.

Supporting players include Robert Armstrong, an effective foil for Holt in this type of production. Grace Bradley as the unfaithful wife. Diana Gibson and Charlie Murray, who, with an insatiable desire to fix things, supplies most of the comedy.

In the story, the steamship Brazil, of which Holt is the chief mate, is running into a storm with a fire raging in the hold. One of the passengers, who has influence with the owners of the Line, convinces the seriously ill captain to allow the passengers to escape in the lifeboats. The captain dies before the lifeboats are manned and Holt, taking command, refuses to let the passengers take the risks of the open sea in the small boats. He brings the ship safely to port and at the inquiry is exonerated and commended. In the wake of subsequent events, however, Holt finds himself in disfavor and without a ship to command.

The S. S. Gibraltar, a cargo ship, is insured for $200,000, and the owners, with the help of the first mate, conspire to collect. Holt is signed on as captain, with Armstrong as third mate. Holt's wife accompanies him on the trip. The first mate causes the vessel to ship water and when a storm arises the crew attempts to mutiny. Meanwhile Holt has discovered his wife in Armstrong's arms and knocks Armstrong out. Later he sends Armstrong down in the hold to discover the leak. Armstrong is trapped by one of the crew, in conspiracy with the first mate, and Holt rescues him. Holt finds out his wife and, not Armstrong, was to blame for his apparent advances. The first mate confesses his part in the conspiracy and Holt brings the ship into port, with reward.

Emphasizing the name of Jack Holt, coupled with the action involved in the production plus the fact that the picture deals with the sea, would seem to be appropriate for the selling campaign.—Mooney, New York.

Tough Guy

(MGM - Harry Rapf)

Adventure Story

Essentially this is a boys' picture. It's about a boy, his dog and a gangster. The way in which it is written, directed and played, it concentrates exclusively on what modern boys, just before the teen age, apparently like to think. Generally it's an adventure story. As there's no hug and kiss romance in it, the only love is the affection the boy has for his dog. It's exciting, from a kid's point of view, and naturally has an atmosphere of theatrical heroic that more mature spectators are quite apt to consider as pretty hokey.

Just as many another boy might like to do under similar circumstances, Freddie and his dog Duke run away from their wealthy home because his father doesn't think as much of the dog as the boy does. Stealing a ride in a trailer, Freddie is witness to a bank truck holdup precipitated by gangster Joe's mob. Found by Joe as they are trying to get away, the thug first wounds Duke, then takes the pair with him, knowing that if officers ever got hold of them his chances of liberty and life would be nil.

Believing Freddie kidnaped, Vincent offers a large reward for his return. Other gangsters led by Tony know that Freddie and Duke are with Joe. Reacting to the influence of Freddie's affection for Duke, Joe feels the first pangs of regeneration. Compelled to battle vicious Tony's gangsters to protect himself and the boy and his dog, with dangerous adventure coming from every quarter, Joe is forced to sacrifice his life that Freddie and Duke may be returned to the now understanding Vincent.

While the boy-dog theme is by no means new, the manner in which it is presented here gives it a novelty of appeal. Providing plenty of speed, lots of thrills and a brand of imagination stimulating suspense, the story is all action.

Every Saturday Night

(20th Century-Fox - Max Golden)

Domestic Comedy Drama

Here's a picture that any exhibitor, certainly those playing to family trade audiences, can be glad to present to his audiences. The cast boasts no grand names; the title isn't so hot, but the entertainment it presents and the way it presents it is all wool and a couple of yards wide. In most places, probably because it has not been roundly advance ballyhooed, it, like many another "sleeper," may fall into the "we didn't realize its worth in time" class, unless it is given a little prior investigation.

"Every Saturday Night" is a domestic comedy drama of a typical American family. Dealing with natural human folk, it is told in a natural human way, without any resort to the artificial. It blends drama with comedy, humor with pathos, heartache with heart thrill, as modern youth conflicts with loving but resolute maturity.

The whole thing is just a few hours chopped out of the Evers' family life. Mr. Evers wants his kids to have a real life, but he wants them to have it according to his dictates. Ma thinks he's a little bit old fashioned. Bobby is a toy-playing kid; little Lucy mimics the screen stars, and young Roger is the family miser and Shylock. Adolescent Jack and Bonnie are in the throes of puppy love with Millicent and Tom Dayton. Granny is a very modernistically inclined if somewhat erratic old girl.

There are the squabbles to borrow the family car, the frantic pleas to buy another one, the long, lonely waits while the elder youngsters are out and Pop imagines the most terrible things happening to them. And there are the deals the kids make with each other, the suspense packed with fear that Bonnie has been seriously injured, that Jack is in the clutches of the law. But everything turns out all right. Mr. Evers' kids are just honest, clean living kids who know their way around. Mother and Granny know that and he has no difficulty in realizing that this Saturday night will be no different from a lifetime of Saturday nights.

Of that refreshing yet neighborly human character that presages popularity in the smaller theatres, but not without similar value in more high toned theatres, the show, sold for exactly what it is, substantial, wholesome entertainment, has the elements of an audience pleaser.

The Garden Murder Case

(MGM - Lucien Hubbard)

Murder Mystery

When it's an S. S. Van Dine story and the resourceful Philo Vance is the hero, pretty nearly everybody knows just about what to expect. Here, with plenty mystery, lots of comedy, the full quota of romantic intrigue, vivid dabs of real love interest, the requisite number of killings, any number of surprises, and the demonstration of a new murder idea, there is all the familiar "Case" drama plus quite a bit that is brand new. Of course the story is geared to befuddle and baffle. It does both in a logical and interesting way. It puts down the motives for the killings, deftly puts the finger on the real killer, establishes the full number of suspects, but does so in a manner that so cleverly hides its clues that solution should give the amateur sleuths as well as general patronage ample opportunity to exercise their detective talents.

In the story, production values establishing the semi-sophisticated character, three deaths occur, only one of which looks like a real killing. When Floyd Garden dies, an incident he fatalistically prophesied, it just seems a hazard of steeplechase racing. Lowe Hammle is shot while making a telephone call. The police are called in and everybody is suspected. Madge Beeton, with whom Fenwicke-Ralston has been having an affair, is called by the police for questioning. On the way, she falls off a bus and dies. Zalia Graem, for whom Vance has had a romantic attachment, is arrested and charged with the crime. Realizing that there is something sinister about Ralston, Vance ostensibly permits the Major to hypnotize him. Reconstructing the crime, Vance adduces that Garden was chiseling with Madge and that for revenge Ralston hypnotized him into self-destruction. Madge shot Hammle, thinking her victim was Ralston. Ralston worked the same trick on Madge as he did on Garden to protect himself. Confronted with the cold logic of this evidence, Ralston tries to kill Vance, only to have Zalia and an officer intervene to save his life.

Popularity of the Van Dine stories and pictures plus the fact that there is a new Philo Vance, Edmund Lowe, appear to be the best angles to concentrate on in bringing the feature to patron attention. Naturally the lines of romantic intrigue, straight love interest, mystery, melodrama and comedy should come in for their share of attention.

Previewed in studio projection room.

Woman Trap

(Paramount-Hurley)

Comedy Romance Drama

With a Mexican character portrayed by Akim Tamiroff, highly reminiscent of Holbrook. Blinn's famous "bad man" running through the story, this is one of those pleasing minor pictures that audiences are quite apt to enjoy much more than they do some of the more pretentious features. Essentially the show is a comedy romance drama and not anything sophisticated, as the title might suggest. Concentrating on action that moves to the tune of clever dialogue and uniquely contrived situations, the show moves fast and smoothly to create the impression that there's always something doing on the screen.

In Mexico, gangster Ferguson and his minions, Mopsy, Meade and Harry, rob and kill jewel thief Hogan. Sinister Ramirez butts in to convince Ferguson that he's Mexico's ace public enemy. In Los Angeles reporter Shevlin, hearing about the killing, gets permission to cover the story. Boating down, he picks up stranded derby aviatrix Barbara Andrews. An adventurous soul, she negates Shevlin's plans to send her home. She meets Ferguson and Ramirez, who learn she is the daughter of a wealthy senator and decide to kidnap her. With Shevlin powerless, Ferguson bribes Pancho to take the party into the desert, away from the bothersome Ramirez. But Ramirez, a slick customer, joins the gang, announcing that he's going to be in for a cut on the ransom. Via shortwave radio, they get the money and wily Ferguson decides to kill both Shevlin and Barbara as well as nemesis Ramirez. Shown that his death would be fatal to all, inasmuch as they'd never be able to find their way out of the desert, Ferguson spares him on the condition that he'll lead them to safety. Ramirez does. But the little shack he leads them to turns out to be a jailhouse on the border and to the tune of roaring sirens Ramirez reveals himself as the best G-Man in all Mexico. With Ferguson in custody the way is cleared for happy romance for Barbara and Shevlin.

Though the mixture of gangsters, newspapermen and an adventurous girl provides plenty of entertainment as well as potential showmanship, the surprise character of Ramirez is probably the angle that audiences and exhibitors will most appreciate.

Previewed at Alexander Theatre, Glendale. The audience quickly grasped the comedy spirit but gave graphic indications that it was uncertain of what would happen, so it got a real boot out of the surprise climax.

Ice Cut-Ups

(Columbia)

Timely

Most of the staple winter sports and a number less familiar to the multitude are linked together for an intelligently narrated sequence aimed to sell the joys of winter to all and sundry age, sex and present occupation notwithstanding. Skating, plain and fancy, ice-boating, horse-racing with runnered sulkies, hockey at its bloodthirsty best, pass in orderly succession, all tingling stuff to an observer seated comfortably in a correctly heated and ventilated auditorium. The sail-skating is a particularly inviting idea, with ice tennis and basketball affording a bit of comedy relief. A seasonable all-purpose short. —Running time, 10 minutes.

The Cat Came Back

(Vitaphone)

Very Good

This cartoon, done in Technicolor, opens with a mother cat teaching her kittens how to catch mice. In another part of the house a mother mouse is instructing her brood in how to avoid cats. One of the kittens becomes friendly with a young mouse, and while the two are dancing the kitten falls down a drain and the mouse rescues him. This brings the families together until their natural instincts predominate and the finish is a free-for-all-fight. There are several sequences in the reel that should provoke howls from audiences. Running time, 8 minutes.

Stars of Tomorrow No. 5

(Columbia)

Standard

Benny Rubin, as master of ceremonies, manages to clip his gags closely enough to give the several amateurs presented an even break for audience reaction. Off-stage business in this one has to do with a gong that is always about to but never is struck, a bit of business relieving somewhat the tedium of successive vocalists and instrumentalists offered. A sister act contributes a bit of needed action in a dance of average quality.—Running time, 10½ minutes.

Stars of Tomorrow No. 6

(Columbia)

Satisfactory

Benny Rubin's amateurs average a little better in this than in the preceding number, laugh honors going to a male trio using trick voice effects. The off-stage business in this one is the old gag about the man who wants to tell the principal his house is burning down but isn't permitted to interrupt. It dies pretty hard but serves to end the picture.—Running time, 10½ minutes.

Signing Off

Amusing

Ray (Cuckoo) Knight, less hilariously funny than in his broadcasts but funny enough, flees a detective, takes refuge in a broadcasting studio where he is mistaken for a famous announcer and, thrown on the air cold, scrambles sundry programs in his characteristic manner. Lois Ravel and other radio performers interpolate straight numbers and relieve strain on the comedy plot, which winds up in a gag finish good for a laugh in any company.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Radio Barred

(RKO Radio)

Brisk Slapstick

Johnny Arthur, Ed Kane, Maxine Jennings and Ruth Hiatt are strenuously engaged in tangling and untangling identities scrambled through the use of a neighbor's name by the wife of an advertiser's employee barred from competing in a radio contest which she wins. The confusion is logical, the action swift and plentifully vigorous, but the histrionic medal goes to a mongrel dog that figures secondarily but brilliantly in the plot. Story elements are fresh and make routine situations look new. Arthur probably rates major billing.—Running time, 15½ minutes.

The Softball Game

Dull

The Jungle Giants, on a mass-over-merit basis, run up a huge score against Oswald the Rabbit's diminutive softball team, but the breaks come in the ninth inning and Oswald is victorious. The long arm of credibility is over-stretched, even for cartoon purposes, and the comedy doesn't jell.—Running time, 7 minutes.

story having to do with the misadventures of a hen-pecked jewelry salesman whose client turns out to be an attractive young woman and, unknown to him, an old friend of his wife's. Action takes place chiefly in a swanky hotel and consists of narrow escapes from wife and house detective accomplished with much slamming of doors, bumping into waiters carrying loaded trays and so on. The short has ample body to warrant combination with almost any type of feature picture.—Running time, 18½ minutes.

Wild Wings
(Vitaphone)
Interesting

The island Laysan, 800 miles northwest of Honolulu in the Pacific Ocean, and one of the few remaining natural bird sanctuaries, is the subject of this novelty reel. Shearwaters, boobies, albatross, flightless rail, love tern, Hawaiian tern, frigate birds and the remaining members of the Laysan teal species are shown in countless thousands, and some of the scenes are truly remarkable, such as the mating dance of the huge albatross. Running time, 11 minutes.

Carnival Time
Excellent

Jean Sargent, Jack Fulton, Sue Hastings' Marionettes, the Washboard Serenaders and other radio and vaudeville acts are presented on the ballyhoo stage of a carnival sideshow as a build-up to a Hawaiian dancer to be seen on the inside. The talent is effectively introduced by a leather-lunged barker whose cross-fire with a comedian in the crowd is smart, swift and funny. Combining straight entertainment with comedy, at the expense of neither, the subject is adequate to take the place of two on a tight program.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Screen Snapshots No. 6
Standard Fan-fare

On a par in every respect with the consistently sustained average of these fan-satisfying subjects, this edition opens with brief glimpses of Ken Maynard and other stars at home, then attends the grand opening of Max Factor's new cosmetic salon, where stars of all rank, size and condition of employment come to extend felicitations and sign the "among those present" register. This takes up a major portion of the picture but manages to bring in a great number of personalities handily.—Running time, 10½ minutes.

The Alaska Sweepstakes
(Universal)
Satisfying

Oswald the Rabbit and his heavy-pawed mastiff run a bad last in an Alaskan sledge-race until, when every conceivable mishap has thwarted them, they are rolled into a snowball that gathers volume and velocity as it rolls downhill to the finish line where it cracks up and releases Oswald, the winner. The tempo is nicely gauged and the animation smooth, the idea just silly enough to get the correct reaction.—Running Time, 8 minutes.

The Bird Stuffer
(Columbia)
Ordinary Cartoon

Departing in no important particular from tried and found standard cartoon comedy material, the efforts of Krazy Kat, taxidermist, to stuff a fish so that it will look like a bird terminate for no very good reason in an abrupt and not especially funny finish. There's a dream sequence preceding the finish in which animals Krazy has stuffed come to life and chase him about menacingly.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Dr. Bluebird
Excellent

With comedy held to a minimum in keeping with a gentle theme, this superbly paced short witnesses a colony of bluebirds turning out in winged acorn shells, self-propelled leaves, etc., to brighten the day of a juvenile shut-in whose friend has gone fishing. Transporting sunshine to his chamber, the birds effect a miraculous cure of his ailment and send him on his way. The lyrics of incidental music are especially good. An excellent subject for juvenile entertainment.—Running time, 8½ minutes.

Double Or Nothing
(Vitaphone)
Very Good

This is a very good miniature musical comedy with a cast composed of Phil Harris of radio fame, Leah Ray, Harry Tyler, Vicki Joyce and Johnny Boyle. The story centers around the close resemblance and friendship between Harris and the heavyweight champion, and the practical jokes they play on each other. The reel winds up with a very funny sequence in which Harris is kidnaped by Miss Ray, after falling in love with her while posing as the champion, only to find out it was merely a joke on the fighter's part to get even with the band leader. Running time, 21 minutes.

You Can Be Had
Entertaining

Borrowing manner and voice of Mae West, Zasu Pitts and others, well trained monkeys enact an old fashioned melodrama in the approved new fashioned manner. The animals are admirably controlled, the dubbing adroitly done, and action is remarkably smooth considering the difficulties inherent in this type of production. The short rates high among its kind.—Running time, 15 minutes.

March of Time In 4,500 Houses on First Anniversary

Since the introduction a year ago, in February, of the March of Time on the screen the theatres using the new form of pictorial journalism have grown from 400 to 4,500. Ten editions have been produced, with worldwide distribution through RKO.

For more than a year before the first public release, the three March of Time editors, Roy E. Larsen, John S. Martin and Louis de Rochemont, experimented with their film. Subjects were made and discarded, hundreds of scripts were written and four complete experimental reels were tried out, unannounced.

With the third issue the picture really came into its own.

In the year March of Time has turned its cameras on many parts of the world. Its German episode in the second issue came out ten days before Hitler renounced the Versailles treaty and rearmed Germany. The trans-Pacific episode of the third issue coincided with the first flight of the Pacific clipper ship. The Army episode of the summer came as the country's greatest peacetime maneuvers opened.

While some foreign episodes, notably those based on Russia and Palestine, bore a certain resemblance to travelogues, they contained enough of a story to give them significance. Other foreign subjects went more deeply and directly into political and economic problems, as in the episodes concerning Germany, Japan, Manchukuo, Ethiopia and France, but selection has been made from almost every field of life.

Most of the pictures are taken by March of Time's own camera crews. Abroad, March of Time has sent Julien Bryan to Russia, Japan, Manchukuo and China. In Palestine, Charles Herbert filmed the pictures used in the subject based on that country. March of Time photographers have been at work in France, Ethiopia and other countries. They obtained exclusive pictures of two of the most difficult men in the world to photograph, old Sir Basil Zaharoff and Anatole Francois Joseph Diebler, hereditary executioner of France.

Special foreign editions are now prepared in French and Spanish and an English edition is made up for countries of the Empire.

New Theatres in Houston Get Editorial Accolade

Concerning the new theatres that have opened or are about to be opened in Houston, Texas, the Houston Chronicle, on its editorial page said that "Theatrical history has been written, and is being written, in Houston over this year end. The opening of a beautiful new movie house on North Main Street, by the Interstate interests, with the same group soon to open even more elaborate houses on Westheimer Road and on Telephone Road, marks noteworthy progress in the bringing of first class screen theatres to our outlying residential sections. The result should be more movie patronage, and more convenience and comfort for the residents of the sections now to be served."

JAPANESE RETURN TO SUPERIMPOSED TITLE

Too Many Complications in Remaking Dialogue; Korea Tightens Its Quota Restrictions

by CHIKUSHI TANI
Tokio Correspondent

Preferences of Japanese audiences in the dialogue structure of motion pictures are veering back to superimposed titles with the spoken words left in the language of the original production.

When dubbed product, with the dialogue done over in the Japanese, made its appearance last fall there was something of a sensation and various foreign film distributors followed suit. Initiating the procedure was Chidori Kogyo Company, with the dubbing of "The Man Who Came Back." Then Paramount applied it and the plan was taken up in such European productions as "Maternite," "Verdun, Souvenirs d'Historie" and "Wilhelm Tell," imported by PCL, and this distributor since has used dubbings on "Jeunesse," "Musik im Blut," "Der Alte Und Junge Koenig," "Die Weisse Majestat" and others.

Now comes a turn of public sentiment, away from the dubbed version, except in Tokyo itself. The attitude is largely attributable to the difference of culture between filmgoers in large cities and small towns. Then, too, there is the feeling that without the original dialogue the real taste and atmosphere of the picture is lost. Furthermore, there is the obstacle that the Japanese language in its wording scarcely can be attuned to every movement of the lips in the diction of the foreign players. Very few Japanese actors, for example, would be able to mimic in Japanese the words spoken by Harold Lloyd or Charles Farrell, much less to express the same feeling in every action seen on the screen.

Therefore public opinion now is that the old method of superimposing titles works best.

Korea's Quota Strengthens

Korea's quota law, which required last year that one-fourth of each week's program consist of Japanese pictures, now goes into its second phase of promotion of the home industry by specifying that for 1936 one-third of the product shown be Japanese, while next year half of the product exhibited is to be of domestic origin.

At the same time the theatres have reduced admission prices 20 per cent.

G-Men Films Liked

The socalled G-Men productions have been meeting with considerable success in Tokyo. In Shochiku's three theatres "Public Hero No. 1" and "After Office Hours" were very well received. When "The Whole Town's Talking" was released at the Hibiya Eiga Gekijo early in the fall, the theatre was packed almost every day, and "G-Men" did even better at the Nihon Gekijo.

It may be that the present day social status of Japan spontaneously inclines the nation toward worshipping heroes, but it is also true that the modern film audience in Japan is keenly attuned to American product even if the subject matter involved is entirely foreign to Japanese custom.

Manchuria Business Improves

A marked change for the better in motion picture affairs in Manchuria and thereabouts was reported by M. Yamanashi, distribution manager for PCL, on his return from a six months' tour of Manchukuo and Chosen.

"Among the various new theatres established in Manchukuo, the Minami-Za at Mukden and the Horaku Gekijo at Hsingking are so ideally constructed and appointed that we would do well to follow their example in Japan," he said.

"Things have settled down in the towns and the people are working hard and enjoying themselves as well. Thus it looks bright for motion picture business, too, not only on the foreign picture, but on Japanese productions also.

"Hardin bids fair to be a good market soon."

Aiming at American Market

Three Japanese pictures for oversea distribution have been completed. Two of them are Shochiku productions, "Tonight Is Mine" and "100 Per Cent Love Brilliant." The studio, with both America and Epurope in mind, prepared special titles in English, German, French and Italian, to be superimposed. "Princess Kaguya," a JO production, is generally regarded as the most ambitious of the three. It is adapted from a Japanese classic novel, "Taketori-Monogatari," a dreamlike romantic story of ancient Japenese folk with background of both modern and old music. United Artists will handle distribution of this picture, which Director Ohzawa made into a five-reel subject.

Foundation Fund

Private film companies must pay Y120,000 of the cost of the foundation fund of the Japan Association of the Motion Picture, the Japanese government's Home Office bearing the balance.

Director Karazawa of the Police Bureau of the Home Office ushered into being the new association, which has a twofold purpose of restricting importations and encouraging domestic production, in addition to tax reduction. Decision of the Metropolitan Police Board to apply pressure upon foreign pictures gave the new organization a real impetus.

Foreign companies have recovered to some extent from the first alarm, but it scarcely can be said that they are viewing the situation with complete composure.

While a flurry of special interest in foreign pictures, particularly European, followed the general enthusiasm for "Leise Flehen Meine Lieder"—and there had been previous successes such as "Congress Dances," "Le Pacquebot Tenacity," "Grand Jeu" and "Poil de Carotte"—with a resultant fight for theatre control by the Shochiku and Toho circuits, the run of European product now has returned to normal. And therein lies a problem for distributors who have invested heavily in European pictures. Some have already announced as many as 38 pictures from Europe for 1936.

Stockholder's Action On Columbia Dismissed

The action of John Loeb, stock broker, against Columbia Pictures Corporation, in which he asked for a stock accounting on allegations of fraud by the company's directors, was dismissed Monday by Justice Lydon in the New York supreme court.

The court dismissed the suit on motion of Nathan Burkan, Columbia's attorney.

Owner of $60,000 of Columbia warrants, Mr. Loeb charged the directors had prevented him from exercising stock purchase options to which he was entitled. Columbia informed the court that the directors were not involved, but that Mr. Loeb himself was negligent in allowing his option to expire.

Republic Releasing "Frankie"

"Frankie and Johnnie," produced in New York at the Biograph Studios and starring Chester Morris and Helen Morgan, will be released by Republic Pictures, it has been revealed. At one time the RKO Distributing Corporation was scheduled to handle the film, but when certificate of approval was withheld by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., the arrangements were cancelled.

Harry Rubin Heads Committee

Harry Rubin, director of projection for Paramount in New York, has been named chairman of the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers for the fifth consecutive year. Mr. Rubin has been a projection expert for 25 years, is the originator of the effects projector and responsible for the development of the Magnascope giant screen.

Fidler Handling "Custer"

Robert Mintz, president of Stage & Screen Productions, Inc., has closed a deal with L. T. Fidler of the Distinctive Screen Attractions, Inc., and will distribute "Custer's Last Stand" and two other serials during the current season in the Denver and Salt Lake City territories. RKO Radio is also handling the serials in India.

Opening at Miami Beach

"The Music Goes Round" will have its premiere February 19 at the Lincoln Theatre, Miami Beach, Fla. Harry Richman, featured in the film, will make a personal appearance.

Gwenn Walters at Columbia

Gwenn Walters, fashion editor of Movie Mirror and fashion director of Santa Anita Park, Los Angeles, has joined the publicity department at Columbia's Hollywood studio as fashion publicist.

Elaborate Stage Shows Planned with Special Advertising; Storms Tie Up Openings

by BILL CROUCH

Chicago Correspondent

With an outstanding array of pictures on the schedule for the coming months, Balaban & Katz loop theatres are emphasizing this fact in all possible ways. Extra advertising, most of it provided by the film companies, is being planned and elaborate stage shows for theatres using talent are also being fashioned.

The Apollo theatre, which for the most part has run pictures after initial showings in the Chicago, United Artists or Roosevelt, will be moved into the classification of a strictly first-run theatre. The admission price which is now at a 50 cent top will be raised a dime under the proposed plan, putting it on the same scale as the United Artists and Roosevelt. The Garrick, 900-seat Loop house, will now be used solely for the class B pictures or second-week runs of pictures which open at the other Loop houses.

Scheduled for the Chicago during the coming weeks are the following pictures: "Anything Goes", "Ceiling Zero", "Ah Wilderness", "The Milky Way" and "Desire". At the United Artists the following pictures are booked: "The Ghost Walks West", "Modern Times" which is scheduled for at least five weeks, and "Little Lord Fauntleroy". At the Roosevelt, B&K have booked: "Show Them No Mercy", "Trail of the Lonesome Pine", "Rose Marie", "Klondike Annie", "Wife vs. Secretary" and "Petrified Forest". The Apollo has "Professional Soldier" coming next week, with further bookings to be announced soon.

Stage attractions set at the Chicago are: Fred Waring and his radio show (current), Ricardo Cortez, Jack Oakie, Horace Heidt and Band, Ann Dvorak, Earl Carroll's Vanities, Buster West, Xavier Cugat and Band, and Jack Benny with his radio show.

"King of Burlesque," current at the Chicago, goes into the Garrick following "Magnificent Obsession," which is in its fourth Loop week after two weeks at the Palace. During its first week at the Garrick the picture broke all records for second-run in this house, despite some of the coldest weather in years.

The preview committee of 56 women who are members of the Better Films Council of Chicagoland met Monday at the Universal screening room to see "Chatterbox" and "Tale of Two Cities."

The majority of the women present were new members on the preview committee, which is selected yearly by the organization. Mrs. Richard M. McClure, president of the Better Films Council, was in charge. Mrs. Charles R. Holton, motion picture chairman of the Chicago Federation of Women's Clubs and vice-president of the Better Films Council, was another speaker.

Under the guidance of Mrs. McClure the group was instructed as to how pictures should be previewed.

The political cartoon picture, "The Amateur Fire Brigade," is to be shown at the Grand Opera house for one week starting February 10. The picture will form part of a show that will run continuous from 1 p.m. until 10 p.m. Between showings political speeches will be made and other silent and talking films of a political nature will be shown.

One local paper, strongly anti-New Deal, gave considerable space to a complete review of the subject, but not by the regular motion picture critic.

Irving Mack has been busy moving into his new quarters. With much new equipment installed he says he is now able to offer faster service and better product. His new address is 839 So. Wabash, in what was formerly the Vitagraph building. The Filmack offices and laboratory now occupy the entire second floor, with the exception of Henri Elman's private office. Elman's Capitol Film Exchange is now on the ground floor.

Extremely late trains played havoc with opening day stage shows at the Chicago, Oriental and Palace last week. With trains two and three hours late, some shows had to open without rehearsal. At the Palace, Clyde Beatty with his 24 lions and tigers headlined the stage show. The troupe got in late from Detroit and it takes more than one hour to set the stage for this act alone. Fred Waring at the Chicago fared better. He had his own unit and a rehearsal was not so necessary.

The majority of the 200 theatres in and around Chicago which are using Banknight have started to use the Banknight matinee plan.

Gene Raymond, en route to New York for a radio broadcast and a vacation, arrived Sunday on the Santa Fe Chief. He spent several hours at the Blackstone hotel being interviewed by local scribes and then took the Twentieth-Century for New York. He will return to Hollywood the first of March.

According to Secretary Frank Olsen of the International Alliance of Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators of the United States and Canada, the night of February 10 will be a gala one. A huge benefit dance will be held at the Aragon Ballroom, with dancing plus entertainment by stage, screen and radio stars.

The personal appearance here of Jackie Coogan and Betty Grable has been marked by one of the best publicity campaigns this town has seen in some time.

The couple are appearing first at the Uptown and then moving into the loop for a week's run at the Oriental. So far they have appeared twice on popular local radio broadcasts as guest stars and have entered into a number of publicity tieups. One was the selection of an engagement ring at a loop jewelry store. The pair made a personal appearance in the establishment following an advertisement of about 100 lines in the Chicago Examiner.

Philip Ober, leading man in "Personal Appearance," reigning stage hit here, has turned down many film offers and says he will continue to do so. The reason, Ober said, is that he likes the stage exceedingly well, and judging from his first film attempt some years ago, acting before the camera is not as interesting as working direct to the audience.

"Perhaps," he added, "I may change my mind when we get to Hollywood, following our engagement here."

A farewell party for Libby Holman and a welcome party to Mitzi Green were staged at the Sherman hotel on Thursday last. The singing star finished her engagement at the Chicago on that day and left immediately for Miami for a rest before taking up further engagements. Miss Holman announced that she was considering three film offers. Mitzi Green, former child star now grown up, is appearing this week at the State-Lake. The theatre is grossing the heaviest in months.

Charlie Miller, general sales manager of Superior Pictures, is making a tour of the company's exchanges. He will visit Indianapolis, Milwaukee and St. Louis.

Harry Balaban and Nate Platt with their families are on the high seas bound for the West Indies to enjoy a few weeks vacation.

Ray Blass, theatre architect and nephew of Jack Miller was married last Saturday to Miss Jean B. Felker, of Ann Arbor, Mich. The ceremony was performed at the bride's home.

John Joseph, RKO press chief here, is suffering from an infected gland in his throat.

J. Consentino, auditor for Spectrum and Amity Pictures, is in Chicago attending to business at Superior Pictures.

Fred Anderson, circuit operator downstate with headquarters at Morris, is understood to be planning the erection of a new theatre in West Chicago. Plans are to be announced soon.

Special trailers concening the President's Birthday Party were used in all local theatres last week in advance of the dance held at the Stadium.

Jesse Kreuge, former motion picture editor of the Chicago American, was a vistor here last week. He is now with the Hearst organization in New York.

Walter Brown, local manager of Ross Federal Service, has been touring the various midwest branches of the company the past few weeks. He already has contacted the offices in Minneapolis, St. Louis and Kansas City and this week visits the offices in Cincinnati, Columbus and Indianapolis.

Jack Miller is in Miami absorbing sunshine and writing postcards to friends here with pert comments as to the warm weather and attractions just now missing from storm-swept Chicago.

Seeks New Sound Patent

Guy Douthwaite, operator of the open-air Drive-In theatre in Hollywood, is applying for patents on horns which he invented when complaints about noise forced him to abandon a loudspeaker. In his invention, sound is carried by wire to each car and is released through horns placed in front of the radiators.

Guaranteed Opens Paris Office

Mort Sikawitt, head of Guaranteed Pictures, has opened a branch office in Paris with Frank Bates, who formerly distributed Monogram product in Europe, in charge.

"MUSIC GOES 'ROUND" BIG BOX OFFICE FILMUSICAL BET

Direction, Richman, Cast All Deliver

"THE MUSIC GOES 'ROUND"
(Columbia)

Direction ..... Victor Schertzinger
Story ..... Sidney Buchman
Screen Play ..... Jo Swerling
Music and Lyrics: Harry Akst, Lew Brown and Victor Schertzinger.
Photography ..... Joe Walker
Supervision ..... Max Winslow
Cast: Harry Richman, Rochelle Hudson, Walter Connolly, Douglass Dumbrille, Etienne Girardot, Lionel Stander, Henry Mollison, Victor Kilian, Wyrley Birch, Dora Early, Walter Kingsford, Peppino and Rhoda, Gene Morgan.

This is the filmusical that, with the addition of new sequences and the services of Edward Farley and Michael Riley, composers of "The Music Goes 'Round and Around," is to become "Music Goes 'Round." As seen in advance of these changes it shapes up as a highly diverting and fast-paced musical [illegible] up the current scale. Even as it is, it looks like a strong b.o. offering that will hold its own up and down the line.

An important feature is Harry Richman, who has verve and adroitness and sings well. He is a good picture bet.

The story is a wow for comedy, smooth-running and snappy and its main idea is fresh.

This yarn is neatly interspersed with songs and dance numbers both on the boat and on Broadway. "Rolling Along" is the song hit and two or three others promise success.

Richman's support is a constellation of names and a galaxy of good performances. Rochelle Hudson, playing opposite him, does not sing but she is charming, clever and animated. Walter Connolly gives one of his fine character performances as the show's proprietor, and especially helpful portrayals are contributed by Douglass Dumbrille, Etienne Girardot, Lionel Stander and Henry Mollison—altogether an outstanding cast.

Victor Schertzinger's direction is admirable in its handling of broad comedy and the burlesqued dramatics. He deftly keeps things moving every minute. The story by Sidney Buchman is brightly dialogued by Jo Swerling for every laugh there is in it and a pretty romance as well. The music [illegible] by Harry Akst, lyrics are [illegible] Lew Brown and Mr. Schertzinger, who is no mean composer. The picture is handsomely set throughout and in toto a production that reflects credit on Max Winslow and all his people.

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 8.—(A) Does a stack (copper disc) rectifier require attention after installation? (B) Name the points in favor of and the objections to mercury arc rectifiers. (C) What will be the result if too little or uneven pressure be applied in making a film splice? (D) Just what is a "link" fuse?

Answer to Question No. 4 (New Series)

Bluebook School Question No. 4 was: (A) What is meant by an air gap? A shunt? Racing? A polarity switch? Over-shooting? (B) What serious condition is induced by worn motor or generator bearings. (C) What is meant by "angle of refraction"? (D) To what is depth of focus proportional?

[Answers copied directly from the Bluebook will not be considered. Set forth your ideas in your own words. Any one can join the school merely by sending in answers to the questions propounded.]

The following made sufficiently correct answers to be entitled to credit: S. Evans and C. Rau; D. H. Danielson; B. DeVietti; A. F. Sprafke; G. Thompson; W. C. Brown; A. L. Cooper; P. Howard; M. and J. Devoy; A. L. Sanderson; D. Pollock; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; G. N. Guidotti, F. L. and N. Savlor; S. E. Gay; L. B. Hardy; Nic Granby; R. I. Morris; T. H. E. Richman; R. D. Henkle and J. Gillespie; S. Myers; L. D. Hunt; W. Jones and B. R. Shepherd; H. J. Billingsworth; H. T. Granger.

(A) There were many excellent answers to section A, but on the whole I believe that of P. Howard is best. He says: "An air gap in an electrical circuit is a space between charged terminals occupied only by air. This applies either to electric or magnetic terminals. The air gap between field poles and armature poles in generators and motors are probably the most common examples found in projection rooms.

"A 'shunt' is a by-pass in a circuit over which a portion of the current flows. Shunts are used quite extensively in electrical motors and generators for the purpose of maintaining constant speed between full and no load. Some resistors use this principle to obtain larger load carrying capacities. Shunts are used extensively in radio, amplifier and filter circuits. Their function and operation should be well understood in order to properly service and maintain sound and electrical equipments.

"Racing is the sudden pick-up in speed in a generator or motor when the load is suddenly cut off. If a motor or generator be of good design and is operated within its rated capacity, there should be no noticeable racing.

"A polarity switch is one employed to reverse the polarity of a circuit. A double-pole, double-throw switch is best adapted to this purpose.

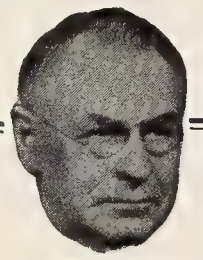
"Over-shooting is when the film moves past its appointed position over the projector aperture, thus causing the screen image to be slightly out of frame and more or less unsteady. It is due to slack aperture tension."

Friend Howard sent an excellent polarity reversal drawing, but, except it be absolutely essential, I cannot use drawings because of lack of space.

(B) And now I am going to take you to task. Almost 400 answers said essentially the same thing, in somewhat different words. All of these men understand, I am sure, but were too careless in their wording. They all say: "Worn bearings will allow the armature and pole pieces to come too close together. If the wear be too much there will be mechanical contact causing serious damage, possibly entirely ruining the machine."

Now that is all wrong. The armature will not contact or even come closer to all the pole pieces. It will come closer to the lower pole pieces, or to the lower lip of the pole piece in a single machine in which the pole piece is in horizontal position, but will by the same amount recede from the upper pole pieces. It also tends to increase operating temperature. Actual physical contact is not at all likely to ruin the entire machine. It will interfere with the electrical operation of the generator or motor if the friction be slight, and as wear progresses will short some of the armature coils, which latter may or may not ruin all the armature coils and the commutator, but may do little or no damage to the shaft or core and may leave the field wholly unharmed.

There, gentlemen. This is a school. It is designed to help you. To do that it is necessary to make your answers just as closely correct as may be.



(C) A. F. Sprafke says: "Angle of Refraction is the term applied to the change of direction a light ray undergoes upon entering, obliquely, a medium of different density from that through which it has been passing. In this case the following laws apply. (a) Light is refracted whenever it passes obliquely from one medium to another of different optical density. (b) The index of refraction for a given substance is a constant quantity, whatever be the angle of incidence. (c) The refracted ray lies in the plane of the incident ray and the normal. (d) Light rays are bent toward the normal when they enter a substance of heavier optical density and from the normal when entering one of less optical density." (Note: I believe the "in" in C should be "between" but am unable to locate any definite authority in my library. F. H. R.)

(D) W. C. Brown and almost all others said: "Depth of focus is a definite physical condition exactly proportional to the diameter and focal length of a lens. Lenses the diameter, focal length and corrections of which are all equal, will all have the same depth of focus."

May I compliment the many new students who have entered the new "term." There was also an agreeable surprise at the large number of the older students (older ones in the school, I mean) who remain. But still while gratified I am not satisfied. This school should have at the very least 15,000 active students.

There is no charge of any sort. You don't even have to own a Bluebook, though I hold that you should. In fact I hold, and hold honestly, that a projectionist who does not own a Bluebook of Projection has cause to feel ashamed of himself.

Why? Well, gentlemen, for this reason. It holds the accumulated projection wisdom and knowledge of thirty years, four of which were spent projecting motion pictures. It not only contains what its author knows about projection and sound, but also what Aaron Nadell knows about sound.

Ambassador

TRAILS OF THE WILD: Kermit Maynard—Only fair. Kermit Maynard just don't go over in this town. Running time, 58 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Columbia

CASE OF THE MISSING MAN, THE: Roger Pryor, Joan Perry—One of the best program pictures we have played for a long time. Nothing outstanding except it's just darn good entertainment and a small-town theatre can be assured of a satisfied audience the night it's played. Played January 8-9.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

CASE OF THE MISSING MAN, THE: Joan Perry, Roger Pryor—A good action play with a different story slant. Well liked here. Only fair draw. Played January 7.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GRAND EXIT: Edmund Lowe, Ann Sothern—Columbia seems to be able to put that certain something in their program pictures which makes them outstandingly good. This picture will please in any situation and is too good to pass up. It has good acting, good direction and an exciting story. Played December 29-30.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

First National

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe Brown, Ann Dvorak—This was swell entertainment for my town. Joe sure drew them in this time and pleased them all.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

BROADWAY HOSTESS: Winifred Shaw, Lyle Talbot—Did a pretty good business with this one and it was well liked. Running time, 69 minutes. Played January 16.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

CASE OF THE LUCKY LEGS, THE: Warren William, Margaret Lindsay—A very good show. Plenty of comedy that gets across nicely in the hands of the capable Warren William, and Genevieve Tobin. Suspense well maintained. Lively throughout. Drew well enough. Played January 10-11.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

CEILING ZERO: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—This picture is truly an outstanding hit of the season. We believe that this production is really superior to "Devil Dogs of the Air." Plenty of action. Running time, 95 minutes. Played January 26-27.—Harry Granoski, assistant manager, LaQua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. General patronage.

MAN OF IRON: Barton MacLane, Mary Astor—Action drama. Very pleasing to our Friday and Saturday patrons. A sure-fire hit for any theatre. Running time, 61 minutes. Played December 27-28.—Harry Granoski, assistant manager, LaQua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. General patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Another navy picture well done. Some action, some comedy and well directed with a cast of youngsters in the navy that were not mentioned doing just as good work as Powell to put the picture over. However, Ruby should be her age. She did two dance numbers and after seeing some of these young tap dancers do their stuff, Ruby looked awkward and stiff. She did not get over so well in this, but she supported Powell very nicely otherwise.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Mascot

HARMONY LANE: Douglass Montgomery, Evelyn Venable—Here is a surprise picture, exhibitors. Of its kind it is without a doubt the finest little picture I have ever had the pleasure of offering to our patrons. We played it on a double feature, which was a mistake, as it should have been played by itself. This picture pleased everyone and that's what I am in business for, to try and please them all, and it broke a record of four years standing, and that in middle of the week showing, with the second night showing a bigger gross than the first night. If you will call in your local music club and give them a preview on this before you show it, they will do the rest, and what a surprise you will get. I did this.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March—Nothing exceptional. No good for our town. Business poor. Running time, 94 minutes. Played January 19-21.—Fay M. Wiklund, State Theatre, New England, N. D. Small town patronage.

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March—The critics gave this a place among the 10 best, but our patrons stayed away. It is beautifully done, finest kind of acting and production values, but a tragedy very seldom draws at this theatre. Probably the scenes in the trailer of the Russian military scenes and foreign atmosphere injured the drawing power of this.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET, THE: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Charles Laughton—A very fine picture. The portrayal of Elizabeth and Mr. Barrett is particularly fine. This picture is considered to be somewhat "high-brow" and for that reason perhaps will not draw as well as some others, but we did not notice anyone that was not well pleased. Personally I viewed it the second time, which I would not do with the ordinary picture. We had sub-zero weather and rather stormy, but did not take a loss. Played January 17-18.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel & Hardy—If cold spell holds on here will need more pictures like this one. Pleased all and received many favorable comments. Operator laughed so much he ran eighth reel twice. Running time, 88 minutes. Played January 24-25.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell, Robert Taylor, June Knight—This is one of the best musicals we have played for a long time. Eleanor Powell is great. Robert Taylor and June Knight also did fine. This lost money for us, but no fault of the picture. Running time, 103 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

CALM YOURSELF: Robert Young, Madge Evans—Nothing to rave about. A few laughs was all my patrons got out of it. Poor business.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Mis. General patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—This was a wonderful picture, with plenty of action. We did no extra business. We put extra energy on this picture to make it all that it should have been, but our net wasn't there. Any average western would have done as well.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—A good picture with fine acting, but not the special claimed for it by the producers. Badly cut by the censors. Running time, 89 minutes. Played January 16-18.—Beatty & Johnson, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—Good picture, but poor at the box-office. Cold weather opening day, but picture failed to click when weather moderated Monday and Tuesday. Played January 5-7.—Fay M. Wiklund, State Theatre, New England, N. D. Small town patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne—Seemed to please fairly well, but do not think it is up to the usual Crawford standard. Brian Aherne is very good, but the real star is Frank Morgan. He gives a fine performance. Joan's acrobatic stunts on the donkey's back about ruined the picture. She is just not the circus type. She is not so popular here as she was a few years ago. Running time, 99 minutes. Played January 11-12.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Ted Healy, Una Merkel—Fine cast and good story gave my patrons much pleasure. Business above average and everybody happy. In these days of turmoil we want to laugh. Heavy drama, costume stuff, heavy English brogue or what-have-you should be kicked in the face. Running time, 86 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Una Merkel—Excellent entertainment. Jack Benny is fine, while Una Merkel is always good. Amusing story, good photography and good acting makes this a worthwhile picture. Pleased. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 18-19.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MAD LOVE: Peter Lorre, Frances Drake—This one might please a few horror-loving fans, but I failed to find any pleased ones.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Clark Gable, Fanchot Tone, Eddie Quillan, Charles Laughton—This picture drew slightly above average. Eddie Quillan certainly deserves a better break than given to him in this cruel type of entertainment. Handsome, agreeable, gifted, why not use him instead of so many other actors which are new and usually flops. Played January 4-6.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, Fanchot Tone—From every angle this is a great picture. A saga of the rough, tough old days of the sailing ships. Gable has never been better; also that goes for Laughton. Having read the book, it stays closely to the story, and the brutalities that are in the picture were in the book. But it did not do business the second day, and whether this was due to the weather, which was cold, or that it depicted too much stark realism I will never know. I still contend that it is a marvelous production, gripping through every scene and a credit to the industry. And I can't see where they could have glossed over the whipping and the spread eagling in the rigging and still have made the picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—This was my first experience with the Marx Brothers and I hope somebody hears me when I shout, "Give me some more." I was sort of leary about this picture, especially so when one of my best patrons confidentially told me to pass this one up as it was terrible. Well, it was the best business I have done for years, and I hope you all will have the satisfaction of doing likewise. Running time, 96 minutes. Played January 11-13.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—Finally got an April date on this. They agree to furnish us picture prior to 90 days from release date, but we get it 150 days old. Never again.—Fay M. Wiklund, State Theatre, New England, N. D. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: The Marx Brothers—A triumph, both for entertainment and at the box-office. Picture would not have suffered on eliminating some of the off-color lines, wholly unnecessary in a production of this quality. Running time, 96 minutes. Played January 12-14.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—I consider this equal to "The Champ." It has the father and son love theme. The work of Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper is well nigh perfect. The circus atmosphere is well carried throughout. This is easily a big league picture. While there is no romance between man and maid, the efforts of the father to regain the love of his son keeps the suspense at a high pitch. Drawing power, an increased number of juveniles and a good adult average on Sunday, and Monday was above average, which is a sure sign of word-of-mouth advertising. This has a fine happy ending.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

OUTCAST LADY: Constance Bennett, Herbert Marshall—Fine picture. Not good for small towns. Too much love. Restless audience. Pass it up. Farmers don't get it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

PERFECT GENTLEMAN, THE: Frank Morgan—Exceptionally poor business. Morgan carries his acting to extremes and at times gets on one's nerves with his fawning and fussing. There are many actresses that could have done better than this English one who co-starred with Morgan. Some liked the production. Personally, I enjoyed the story, but the box-office said "No." Running time, 73 minutes. Played January 14-15.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell, Rosalind Russell—Just about the finest piece of entertainment we have had in some time, plenty of good tense interest throughout the entire picture. This will stand extra advertising, and the best of playing time, right up to the class with "The Thin Man," and that is saying a lot. When my patrons see and hear Leo roar they all sit back in ease and contentment, for they know they will get their money's worth.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. General patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell, Rosalind Russell—This feature is well done and will stand up for more than one night. I do not care for this type of story, but just the same we did above average business and heard favorable comments. That is what counts. Running time, 106 minutes. Played January 9.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

Monogram

HEALER, THE: Ralph Bellamy, Karen Morley—Just an average program picture. Business very poor. Played January 15-16.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

HEALER, THE: Karen Morley, Ralph Bellamy—Here's a picture from an independent producer that made worlds of pictures from some of the major companies look sick. I am surprised, really I am. When booked it was in my estimation just another program picture, but it is very, very satisfactory entertainment in anybody's theatre. It was highly enjoyed here by all, and gave us two good nights' business.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. General patronage.

Paramount

ANNAPOLIS FAREWELL: Sir Guy Standing, Tom Brown—Very good production with plenty of exploitation connections. Enjoyed by all. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 14-15.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, New Mexico. Small town and rural patronage.

ANNAPOLIS FAREWELL: Tom Brown, Sir Guy Standing—Good. You will not have to hide when they go out on this. They will all be satisfied. Fair drawing power.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Jack Oakie, Burns and Allen—This picture surprised me in that it drew exceptionally good business and pleased everyone. There are enough names in the cast for a dozen average features and that fact alone is your best selling help. Nothing sensational, but it is one of those pictures I'm glad I played. Played January 5-6.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarrokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Jack Oakie, Burns & Allen—This disappointed many of my patrons. So many stars in it that none of them was given enough time when they appeared. The box-office disappointed me.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

CORONADO: Betty Burgess, Johnny Downs—Pictures of this kind make your bankers smile when you go in to see him on Monday morning. Don't be afraid to advertise this picture. It has comedy, music and everything. Real entertainment. Played January 17-18.—R. L. Riddle, The Kiva Theatre, Santa Rosa, N. M. Small town patronage.

CRUSADES, THE: Loretta Young, Henry Wilcoxon—A powerful, well made picture, but alas! no drawing card. Played January 12-13.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

EAGLE'S BROOD, THE: Wm. Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—Another in the "Hopalong Cassidy" series. Good enough western type drama, but lacking the comedy element that made the first of these releases somewhat more entertaining. Beautiful photography. Pulled well and pleased generally. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 17-18.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—I went away back and picked this up in an emergency and I'm glad I did. If you missed it, give your audience a treat and bring it in. It's the light comedy type in which Claudette excels and it's cleverly done. Played January 5-6.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—This one is full of good natured fun and, while only light comedy, has plenty of moments. It's bright and gay. Played January 17-18.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: George Burns and Gracie Allen—After first performance don't expect any more customers, as word of mouth "silliest thing I ever saw" will eliminate any possibilities. Running time, 65 minutes. Played January 12-13.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLE AMERICA: Admiral Byrd—An excellent picturization of Byrd's second Antarctic Expedition. Our folks received it well. Not the draw of the first Byrd picture. However, the penguins and the dubbed voice speaking as one, are comical. Played January 3-4.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MILLIONS IN THE AIR: John Howard, Wendy Barrie, Benny Baker—A dandy little picture based on the familiar theme of the radio amateur hour. Guess our patrons are all fed up on this idea, for they failed to respond too well and the reactions were decidedly split. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 12-14.—M. H. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

PRIVATE WORLDS: Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer, Joan Bennett, Joel McCrea—This was a wonderful picture, which didn't make film rental. They don't like pictures that tax their brains, so the exhibitors must pay. I have had in our situation very few specials that made us money.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

ROSE OF THE RANCHO: Gladys Swarthout, John Boles—Chiefly because we played this too early and because it is too high class, we didn't do much business with this. It is, however, a fine picture of its type and should do well in larger situations. Played January 3-4.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Zasu Pitts—What a picture! What a picture! If you're looking for a winner and haven't already played this one, do so by all means! Good, clean comedy in its finest stages. When Laughton recited Lincoln's Gettysburg address you could hear a pin drop; and if you are acquainted with our audience, you will realize that no greater tribute could have been paid either the speech or its latest speaker. Once again, what a picture! Played January 25.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

SOAK THE RICH: Mary Taylor, Walter Connolly—Here is a miscast cast headed by Walter Connolly. Connolly worked mighty hard throughout the picture trying to save it and hold it together, and for what, I wonder, and so did my patrons. If no one had ever seen this and it had not been made, there would not have been anything missed. It was played here on a double feature program, and that I am thankful for, for the other picture was a good one that pleased. Walter Connolly is a grand old actor, but a few more like this one for him and he will be washed up. What I cannot understand for the life of me is why, aside from Connolly, did the producers ever pick out such an amateur bunch of characters for this picture with all the excellent talent we have in the world today. Wait until you see the young leading lady in this one. In fairness to fellow exhibitors I would advise that you pay for this if you can and leave it on the shelf. From my experience with it, I can personally guarantee walkouts or maybe my patrons and myself are all nuts. I don't know.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. General patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: Alice Faye, George Raft—Very good musical. Some came to see this the second time. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye—Very good; while it did no extra business, it pleased all who came, and that is something.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—Just about the low point for "Bing." A weak story and none too good direction makes this "just another picture." It's one of those you can take—or leave it alone. Played December 22-23.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

TWO FOR TONIGHT: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—By far the poorest Bing Crosby I have played. This was a flop at the box office. Running time, 61 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Republic

MELODY TRAIL: Gene Autry—This gave us a better than average Sunday business which looks as if this star is becoming popular. This picture is done nicely with good recording. If they will watch his productions, his popularity should grow. Smiley Burnette is worthy of special mention. He makes a perfect comedy foil for Gene Autry, and they should continue to make a fine team. The comedy element that Smiley Burnette can give to a western if properly directed and the pleasing personality of Gene Autry should make this series of westerns increasingly popular.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

TUMBLING TUMBLEWEEDS: Gene Autry, Lucile Browne—This "western" has everything. Good music, plenty of action, a dash of humor a plausible story and good direction. While not of the "epic" type, this picture should please everyone. Republic has consistently given us good westerns. Played January 17-18.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

TUMBLING TUMBLEWEEDS: Gene Autry, Lucile Browne—This is a fine picture. Played it on a double bill to the biggest business in many months. These westerns that Republic has brought out certainly help the box office. Don't hesitate to buy them. Running time, 57 minutes.—Played January 4.—Warner McLaughlin, Empire Theatre, Port Henry, N. Y. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—While this was delightful entertainment and pleased everyone, from a box-office standpoint it was disappointing, playing to very low three-day gross. Running time, 90 minutes. Played January 19-21.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

ANOTHER FACE: Wallace Ford, Phyillis Brooks—This picture was a knockout. Why can't we get more pictures of this kind. Get behind this one with some good advertising. It will please. Played January 4-5.—R. L. Riddle, The Kiva Theatre, Santa Rosa, N M. Small town patronage.

FANG AND CLAW: Frank Buck—Very entertaining and well done. Interested patrons that were prejudiced. Running time, 74 minutes. Played January 18.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Carol Stone, Virginia Weidler—For the small country town theatre I would say that this picture was made to order. Nothing big nor sensational, but just a good clean entertainment that makes you glad to meet your patrons when they are leaving the theatre. This little Virginia Weidler bears watching. She steals the picture from Tom Brown. The child isn't beautiful, but she has something that wins the audience. Another good piece of work from her like this one would almost move her into stardom. Our patrons are still talking about her. Play this picture and give your patrons a treat. Did a fair business here considering the sleet storm and skating rink and basketball for competition.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

HI GAUCHO: John Carroll, Steffi Duna—Evidently every company has one in its system. Paramount gave us "One in a Blue Moon" and now RKO gives us this. While not as bad as "Moon," it runs a fairly close second. After it's all over you wonder what it was all about—and don't care much. Anyway, I'd recommend skipping it. Played December 27-28.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, THE: Preston Foster, Dorothy Wilson—An excellent spectacle picture. Quite De Mille-ish, but I missed De Mille's scenes of feminine pulchritude. Failed to do any more than average business. Played January 12-13.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, THE: Preston Foster, Dorothy Wilson—A very fine spectacular picture that pleased and did very fair business. Running time, 96 minutes. Played January 1-2.—Beatty & Johnson, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, THE: Preston Foster—Truly a great picture, but out here in the country there are not enough people that really appreciate this type of entertainment. The poorest matinee in months and our evening shows were far below average. The people that did venture out all seemed to enjoy the show.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

MURDER ON A HONEYMOON: Edna May Oliver, James Gleason—A very good program picture hat played to a below average business. The usual weekend customers didn't come to town. Every merchant complained, so it may not have been altogether the fault of the picture.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Hoot Gibson, Boots Mallory—This is a very good western. This sure has a wonderful cast. A little too much killing, but I guess that is what the western fans like to see in a western. Running time, 76 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Hoot Gibson, Boots Mallory, Harry Carey—A mighty good western, with enough stars to pull in the cash customers. Bad weather hit our gross. Running time, 71 minutes. Played January 16-18.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Hoot Gibson, Boots Mallory—An okay western made interesting by the casting of so many western stars of the independent field together. Average plot. Played January 10-11. —L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Wheeler and Woolsey always make money for us. Running time, 78 minutes. P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—A lot of hokum, but good fun if you're not too particular. Business fairly good. Played January 1-2.—Fay M. Wiklund, State Theatre, New England, N. D. Small town patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Plenty of laughs in this one and a few thrills in the locomotive sequences. Not as good as some of theirs, but still better than some others. Played January 17-18.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE: Gene Raymond, Margaret Callahan—A very pleasing picture. If RKO keeps this up in putting out these hits, we exhibitors will not have to hide from the customers as they come out. A very pleasing picture. Played January 11-12.—R. L. Riddle, The Kiva Theatre, Santa Rosa, N. M. Small town patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—Personally, I enjoyed this picture very much, but for some reason it didn't draw enough to pay its rental. Those few who did come out liked it. If you can get 'em out, they'll like it. Lack of names in the cast probably explains part of it. Played January 17-18.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Edward Everett Horton—One of the best musical shows we have ever run. Astaire dancing outstanding. Rogers not as good as usual. Horton is wonderful. Running time, 100 minutes. Played January 9-11.—Beatty & Johnson, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Tstaire, Ginger Rogers—We hoped to play this in October. Got it set for November and exchange pulled it less than 10 days before scheduled play date. Finally played it in December, during pre-Christmas slump. Business good first day. Poor Monday and Tuesday. Played December 15-17.—Fay M. Wiklund, State Theatre, New England, N. D. Small town patronage.

BAD BOY: James Dunn—Just a very ordinary program picture. No one complained and no one raved about it. Picture failed to draw at the box-office.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

BAD BOY: James Dunn, Dorothy Wilson—Not much of a story, but pleased better than a lot of high-priced specials. Don't know whether it was the title or the popularity of James Dunn, but had the best Sunday night attendance for weeks. Running time, 56 minutes. Played January 4-5.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

DANTE'S INFERNO: Spencer Tracy, Claire Trevor—An attempt was made to make this one of the giant shows of the year, and money was not spared, but it failed as a drawing card, but we did manage to do a fair average. A good thing that I did not show a trailer on this or the scenes from hell would no doubt have kept many away. I advertised it as a very thrilling, exciting modern romance (which it is) with a few scenes from hell as described by the great poet, Dante. While this was not a money maker, it did a fair average, which is better than a flop.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—Was agreeably surprised with this one, after reading many bad reports on it. Our people were all pleased with the picture and business was above average. Running time, 91 minutes. Played January 11-12.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—Good picture, but Gaynor means little at the box-office in our town. Business fair to poor. Played December 22-24.—Fay M. Wiklund, State Theatre, New England, N. D. Small town patronage.

GAY DECEPTION, THE: Francis Lederer, Frances Dee—Personally, I thought this an extremely dull and uninteresting picture, but find nearly everyone liked it, so will have to admit I am wrong. Good acting and pleased, but I still say the story is decidedly improbable and, to me, uninteresting. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 15-16.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

HARD ROCK HARRIGAN: George O'Brien, Irene Hervey—Another picture from Fox that pleased 100 per cent. I think perhaps the interesting locale had something to do with the popularity of the picture, but it pleased those who do not like the average western. Good acting, good photography, an interesting story and very interesting locale make this a feature you need not be afraid to advertise. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 8-9.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

HERE'S TO ROMANCE: Nino Martini, Genevieve Tobin, Anita Louise, Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink—It seemed to me there were only two words used by my patrons in describing this production and they were "wonderful" and "terrible." It is a great picture, but did not generally please. My patrons who are music lovers and understand this class of music thought it great, while the balance were frankly bored. I am glad I exhibited this feature, for it pleased the musicians, but would not want too many like it. Running time, 86 minutes. Played January 1-2.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Dorothy Wilson, Will Rogers—Many remarked this was Rogers' best picture. It really is swell entertainment. Probably as big a box office attraction as will be had in many a year. Played January 5-6.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—I am exceptionally pleased to announce that Will Rogers' last picture is a masterpiece from my box-office standpoint. I saw the picture four times in succession and I feel convinced that nobody will ever be able to take Will's place in pictures. For years I have always had the confidence to advertise his pictures as fit for the whole family to see, and they always were. Running time, 84 minutes. Played January 7-8.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwingsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles, Jack Holt, Bill Robinson—Shirley again does her stuff. In this one she still has the top draw, as always. She dances a little, sings a couple of songs. There is nothing new, especially. The pictures are that way to show her talent and she still has the old appeal that a cute youngster always has.—A. E. Hancock. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

METROPOLITAN: Lawrence Tibbett, Virginia Bruce—High class? Yes, too darn high. No business. Just put another wrinkle in your purse to pay for it. —A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

REDHEADS ON PARADE: John Boles, Dixie Lee —Just gets by. Stars have no drawing power. Should be in lower classification. Played January 12-14.—Fay M. Wiklund, State Theatre, New England, N. B. Small town patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers —Played to more people than any other Rogers picture in the past in spite of sub-zero weather and a blizzard. This one sure has what it takes to get them out. Played January 18-19.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers, Anne Shirley—Picture mediocre, but will satisfy Rogers fans. Rogers meant good business for us always and now it means exceptional business. Played December 25-28.—Fay M. Wiklund, State Theatre, New England, N. D. Small town patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak —Everything in this production anyone could ask for. Running time, 87 minutes. Played January 19-20.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers—A nice picture which drew fairly well. This kid can be somebody if handled properly and given a good story. However, likely as not, she may be put in an adult play or a gangster tinted story and that will be the last. Perhaps some of you remember Marie Osborne (Little Mary Sunshine). Through improper handling she passed out of pictures years ahead of her time. She was a great money maker while she lasted. Take heed. Played December 31-January 1.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

THUNDER IN THE NIGHT: Edmund Lowe, Karen Morley—Very poor from any angle.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Rochelle Hudson, Henry Fonda—Received many favorable comments on this outstanding feature production. Very fine story. Running time, 84 minutes. Played January 1-2.—Harry Granoski, Assistant Manager, LaQua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. General patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Henry Fonda, Rochelle Hudson—Just why this was allocated to the higher bracket is a mystery. It's a nice little picture, that drew fairly well on a midweek run, and pleased everyone, but it certainly cannot be classed as a special, not for this situation, at any rate. Running time, 84 minutes. Played January 15-16.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes—This is interesting entertainment for the older folks. Not much in it for adolescents. Business poor, but perhaps the weather had something to do with the attendance. Running time, 100 minutes. Played January 18-20.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

GREAT IMPERSONATION, THE: Edmund Lowe —Half the patrons freely admitted they still didn't know what it was all about. The other half, not being so frank, left the theatre with puzzled expressions. It's a combination of the Oppenheim story, with some touches of Frankenstein for good measure. All in all, just a program picture that would fail to stand on its own. We used it as a preview, which helped some, but generally it failed to please. Running time, 67 minutes. Played January 18.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert—Played this one late. Even so it pleased the majority and it surely is a great show. Different from all other pictures.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

KING SOLOMON OF BROADWAY: Edmund Lowe, Dorothy Page—Opinion was divided on this one. Some liked it, others didn't. Business was away off at any rate. Best for double billing. Played January 10-11.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PRINCESS O'HARA: Jean Parker, Chester Morris—Dandy picture. Well worth playing. Played to above average business. Typical small town picture that should have been a special.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

STORM OVER THE ANDES: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—A good action picture. Airplane sequences especially good. Story bears some resemblances to "The Last Outpost" in basic theme. Mostly male draw, minus the ladies. Played January 14.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

STORMY: Noah Beery, Jr., Jean Rogers—Here's a picture that brought them in and sent them home happy. You don't have to be a western fan to like this show. Don't be afraid to step on this picture. Played January 1-2.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard—Played it third time in 11 months to record crowds. If they ever want to have any more memorials, I say don't forget "Strawberry Roan." Hats off to Universal.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

THREE KIDS AND A QUEEN: May Robson, Henry Armetta—An ace high piece of good film fun. Enough of everything to suit any audience. We'd like to toss a bouquet to lovely little Charlotte Henry. Why can't we see more of her? Small draw. Played January 15-16.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Mighty darn good entertainment, I sez. Dick sings both modern and operatic numbers, but every minute will be enjoyed even by those that don't like opera numbers. The picture moves along rapidly without a dull moment in it. This could have stood a lot more advertising than we gave it. We did, however, give it our best days and only wish that we had more pictures like this one, to give to our patrons. Nowadays the cash customers don't come to the theatre to see a super production noted for its fine acting; they come to get some real entertainment, and this picture will give them all the entertainment they want, and you won't have to hide behind the door as they come out. Only Warner Bros. could make this kind of a picture.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. General patronage.

FRESHMAN LOVE: Patricia Ellis, Warren Hull—The atmosphere of the picture is built up of college life and love. Good amount of action. It stirs up unusual interest among the younger folk of prospective audiences. Running time, 67 minutes. Played January 31-February 1.—Harry Granoski, Assistant Manager, LaQua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. General patronage.

FRISCO KID: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—Better than average action picture, but not a special feature, although it will draw a little better than average. Played January 22-23.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

LITTLE BIG SHOT: Robert Armstrong, Sybil Jason—Now that Warners have started this clever little actress off in the usual gangster atmosphere, they can get down to business and find her some real stories. She is good, and the picture is, too, if you don't mind gangsters mixed up with your family attractions. Played January 3-4.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacock, N. H. General patronage.

MISS PACIFIC FLEET: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—This is light entertainment that went over okay to above average business. Should have played it two nights instead of only one. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 2.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran, Sheila Mannors—Maybe I'm wrong. I see Mr. Milligan of Schuylerville says this is one of the best westerns he has played in a long time. I'd call it neither good nor bad. Foran seemed ill at ease and miscast and the customers were prone to laugh at the wrong time. The last five minutes, though, are splendid and almost made me change my opinion. Played January 10-11.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

SPECIAL AGENT: Bette Davis, George Brent—A dandy entertaining little program picture that pleased all who saw it. Running time, 76 minutes. Played January 6-8.—Beatty & Johnson, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

WE'RE IN THE MONEY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—These two gals spell entertainment before the folks get into the theatre, and this one was no exception. They carry you through the entire picture without a letup, with fast action and cracks that all will enjoy. Hugh Herbert is a scream. Very good picture.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

HAPPY FAMILY, A: Krazy Kat Cartoon—Only fair.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Educational

AMATEUR HUSBAND, THE: Ernest Truex—Fair, but not up to Truex standard. Running time, 18 minutes.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

HE'S A PRINCE: Tom Howard—Nothing much in this one. Only a few laughs.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

JUNE BRIDE, A: Terry-Toon Cartoon—A fair cartoon.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacock, N. H. General patronage.

SOUTHERN HORSE-PITALITY: Terry-Toon Cartoon—This one is pretty good. We wish this series would improve, however.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WAY UP THAR: Young Romance Series—A fairish comedy that nearly gets to be amusing.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ALIAS ST. NICK: Happy Harmonies—An excellent cartoon for any time, any place.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FOLLIES OF 1936: Our Gang—A whole show in itself. Rates extra billing and top spot. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

FOOTBALL TEAMWORK: MGM Sports Parade—As good as any on the subject of football.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HOW TO SLEEP: MGM Miniatures—Distinctly a novelty reel and one that the audience enjoyed. Plenty of fun in this one.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LITTLE SINNER: Our Gang—Spanky plays hookey from Sunday school and in his own words, "And How." Amusing. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

LITTLE SINNER: Our Gang—We've seen better from these kids, but it still kept our folks howling, so we guess it pleased.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacock, N. H. General patronage.

MANHATTAN MONKEY BUSINESS: Charley Chase—An average Chase comedy. His singing of the song "When I Grow Too Old to Dream" was liked. Why not more music in his comedies when he is so talented along musical lines.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NURSE TO YOU: Charley Chase—I did not see this one, but everyone seemed to like it. Think it is rather better than the average Chase comedy. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

OLD PLANTATION, THE: Happy Harmonies—Just another of the always pleasing colored cartoons. They are all excellent. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

THICKER THAN WATER: Laurel and Hardy—Good comedy. Running time, 17 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TOP FLAT: Todd-Kelly—A good comedy. Plenty of laughs.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TWIN TRIPLETS: Todd-Kelly—A really funny comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP AND GRAMPY: Betty Boop Cartoons—The best cartoon we have ever played, bar none! Grampy almost—no, I'll have to do better than that—Grampy stole the show. The synchronization was excellent. It will take a mighty good short to beat this one for continuous laughs. Running time, seven minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

EXCUSE MY GLOVES: Jack Doyle, Betty Jane Cooper, Ted Husing—A very, very good musical short. Doyle's rendition of "Macushla" deserves a load of Winchell's orchids. This one will please any and all audiences. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

JUDGE FOR A DAY: Betty Boop—Above average of this series. Running time, seven minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

KING OF THE MARDI GRAS: Popeye the Sailor—The best Popeye and the best short we have shown for many a moon. I'm going to bring it back again.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

TAKING THE BLAME: Betty Boop—Very good cartoon comedy. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER: Grantland Rice Sportlights Series—Good sport reel. These Husing-announced subjects are favorites with our patrons. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO Radio

INSIDE THE ROPES: Sports With Bill Corum—Quite interesting. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RAG DOG, THE: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Pretty good. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

United Artists

BAND CONCERT: Mickey Mouse—Excellent reel and business-getter. Running time, eight minutes.—W. M. Allison, Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

GREAT IDEA, A: Mentone No. 1-B—Not up to the standard of previous release. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clattskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Vitaphone

CURIOUS INDUSTRIES: Our Own United States Series—A number of interesting and unusual industries from various parts of the United States, with Harry Von Zell supplying the off-stage dialogue. Good. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

ECHOES: Melody Masters Series—A good musical reel, but not outstanding in this series.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SHANTY WHERE SANTA CLAUS LIVES: Merrie Melodies Series—I advertised this as a color and was rather disappointed in it. Okay for Christmas, but not an extra for any other date. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WHAT, NO MEN: El Brendel, Phil Regan—This one got off to a slow start, but proved very satisfactory. Beautiful scenery, good acting, dancing and comedy combined in a short that seemed too short. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

GOODWILL INTO BOXOFFICE

Plenty of ink has been spilled on the pros and cons of how much time if any a manager should spend on activities outside the theatre. The answer obviously remains a personal one, depending on individual cases. Theatremen themselves, in the final analysis, must gauge how much can be accomplished for the box-office by lending time and effort to the advancement of local movements.

The hokus and pocus that accompanies a lot of the socalled goodwill and prestige gags pulled on showmen too timid to say "no" is of course always in evidence. Local big shots on the make and society Emmas hungering for personal publicity declare open season the year round on the bedeviled manager. But then again there are projects and drives to which the theatreman must lend a hand if his house is not to lose face in the eyes of all the community.

The ability to recognize the worthwhile—the talent to pick a proper spot is of course one of the distinguishing marks of your up-and-at-'em showmen. F'rinstance:

Besides doing a good job of work for Hunter Perry at the Paramount, Lynchburg, Va., Frank Boucher heads the 1936 Kiwanis program committee, handles publicity, music and floor shows for such parties as the President's Ball. Additionally, he speaks before clubs on the motion picture.

All these activities are duly stressed in the local press, but more significant, they allow this Round Tabler to advertise his shows in spots rarely available to theatres.

In nearby Americus, Ga., Manager J. N. Morgan, of the Martin circuit's Rylander Theatre, finds profitable a co-operation with the American Legion which makes possible Sunday shows, otherwise locally forbidden. Proceeds from these showings defray the cost of milk and medical supplies distributed by the Legion auxiliary to underprivileged children.

"Sunday movies in Americus," says Morgan, "have proven very successful, financially and morally."

Up in Dolgeville, New York, Cliff Swick, skipper of the Smalley Theatre, decided the town needed an "awakening" (to quote the local newspaper) in going after Christmas business. Lacking skilled hands the merchants were not wont to testoon their windows and interiors with seasonal decorations. Nor were they accustomed to organize any especial drive for the holiday trade.

So Swick not only took it upon himself to sponsor the movement, but personally trimmed the windows of 75 stores. Sales rolled up a new high in Christmas takings throughout the town, editoriallly the theatreman was praised, local prominents clapped hands. Numerous buyers in the nearby areas who might have gone other places to shop came to Dolgeville and quite a few no doubt to the Smalley Theatre.

We give you also the case of Manager Marquis, of the M & P Egyptian, in Brighton, Mass. Marquis gets around town and finds, as to be expected, that his clubs are always seeking about to raise extra funds.

Solicited frequently for program advertising and donations, Marquis skillfully turns these requests to his advantage by proposing theatre parties and lends his efforts to making them popular and mutually profitable.

To dash about generally playing the community good fellow no doubt marks the manager as a most worthy citizen—which has its points. But for concrete results we incline toward the hard-headed theatreman who at the same time finds ways and means of converting these extra-curricular activities, so to speak, into dollars and cents at the box office.

HEARTENING

Dillon Kelly, Jr., for three years assistant to Round Tabler Melvin Gold at the Calumet, in Hammond, Ind., recently was promoted to the Vogue, in Lincoln, Ill., another unit of the same circuit operated by Louis Reinheimer.

The newly elevated Kelly immediately proceeded to kick up a heap of exploitation excitement in the new situation, these activities being relayed by Gold to this department. The report also carried praises for the efforts of his former aid.

After listening to stories of cut-throating and back-biting among theatremen in various sectors, it is heartening to read of managers who go out of their way to publicly endorse the accomplishments of brother showmen.

Letter from a veteran showman discoursing on one happening and another in previous and more glamorous years refers to those times and a bit nostalgically with the following snappy line: "When grosses were grosses and salaries were paid from payroll instead of petty cash."

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Steinbuch Ties In With Safety Drive

Out in Cleveland, Ohio, Everett Steinbuch, skipper of Loew's State, recently reported an exclusive theatre tieup with local paper sponsoring a citywide safety drive under the title "Safety League Honor Roll."

Idea was to have Cleveland autoists sign pledges to observe 12 driving rules, these printed daily during the campaign. Motorists desiring to cooperate stopped at various places designated by paper to obtain and sign these pledges and among these was the State, where Steinbuch arranged for elaborate lobby booth with traffic police in attendance.

Two immediate results were obtained, the first being three-column shot of booth with name of theatre carried in head above cut. Second was distribution by newspaper of theatre heralds advertising coming pictures, copy tying in with drive reading, "Play Safe—Go to Loew's."

Merchants Help Lamm On "Thanks a Million"

Leading merchants of Lorain, Ohio, came through with a co-op page on "Thanks a Million" for Louie Lamm at the Palace, each ad carrying the "thanks" slogan. One of the stores tied in by enclosing cards in all purchases, one side thanking customers for patronage and reverse bearing playdates, etc. Specially constructed set-piece was used in lobby with large cutouts of Powell and Dvorak and street cars carried dashboard cards.

Harris Runs Movie Error Contest on "Crusades"

Four days ahead of opening of "Crusades" Marvin Harris, Orpheum Theatre, Springfield, Ill., ran a movie error contest with cooperating morning papers. Tickets awarded those correctly naming errors in various scene shots published in paper.

Special preview was held for ministers, school heads and local prominents. Teachers used picture as basis of lectures in schools and particularly were the historical and costume angle played up. For street bally, Marvin used man dressed as crusader riding a white horse. Special trailer was made and just before showing stage was darkened and bugler appeared as though heralding the coming of a great event. Forty-foot cutout of Wilcoxin holding sword in upraised hand and flag placed at his side was used on top of the canopy, title letters and flag were outlined in electric lights and sword hooked to flasher.

Eight-Page Section Celebrates Opening

Done in the very best big league style was the eight-page special newspaper section put over by Manager Fred Glass for the opening of the new Fox-Boulder Theatre, in Boulder, Col.

In addition to photos of personnel and shot of Rick Ricketson, division manager, publicity of every description, including feature story on the Skouras Brothers, there were two single co-op pages in addition to center double spread.

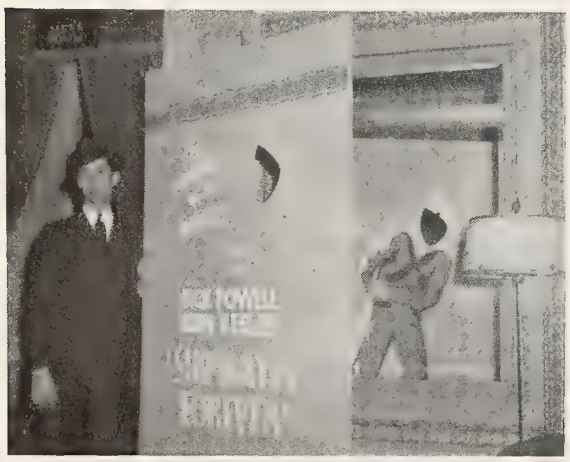
Lefkowich Telegraphs Theatre "Disaster"



On "Transatlantic Tunnel" at the Doan, Cleveland, Max Lefkowich, using a telegram blank style of message and titled Transatlantic Cablegram carried following copy:

"Tremendous disaster at Doan Theatre commences Saturday when transatlantic tunnel workers bore into submarine volcano stop terror by fire and water stop chief engineer's life threatened by angry mob stop imperative you see this GB special, etc., etc." Star names were carried in wire.

Newspaper Contest Sells "Shipmates" for Nelson

Cooperating newspapers featured a contest on "Shipmates" for which Glenn Nelson, Harris Theatre, Findlay, Ohio, awarded guest passes to those submitting correct list of all pictures in which Keeler and Powell had starred together. Contest ran five days ahead.

In exchange for lobby display of new model car, dealer bought 100 adult tickets for prospective buyers, theatre thereby receiving extra publicity. Double faced heralds were promoted from merchant, theatre distributing same through news agent who stuffed them in papers and hotel boxes.

SEE YOURSELF GAG. Bill Hendricks' lobby stopper at the Warner, Memphis, with patrons invited to see themselves as sailors. Reflected mirrors, of course, were used to do the trick.

Baltimore 1936 Babies Receive Temple Dolls

Topping the various newspaper tieins on "Littlest Rebel" was the front page stunt engineered by Morris Mechanic, at his New Theatre, Baltimore, whereby babies born on New Year's Day were given Temple dolls. Tiein brought a lot of advance publicity and art, paper also breaking shots of some of the infants with their gifts.

Another daily was tied to long-distance interview between Baltimore's Mayor and John Boles, which included greetings to starlet and others of cast. Limerick contest was planted in third sheet.

Co-op ads were many. Bakery used large rotogravure flash to tie in benefits of their bread with Shirley's photo and theatre credits. Bank took two sizable insertions on savings, using the Temple salary as an example. Department store arranged ticket giveaway for early morning show to first 1,000 customers purchasing dollar or more merchandise in infants' section.

Drug store chain offered free calendars decorated with Temple cut and credits. Window streamers on this were carried.

Smith Plants Essay Contest For "Little America" Date

Special screening of "Little America" was held by W. Clyde Smith, Paramount, Hot Springs, Ark., for local women's clubs, with attendant newspaper stories. Clyde also planted an essay contest for children, awarding passes for best stories and letters were sent to all school heads seeking cooperation on the contest.

For "Littlest Rebel" a Shirley Temple doubles contest was staged with promoted prizes going to winners. Full-page co-op ad was secured, for street bally Smith used a barrel with sign on it reading "don't look—this means you"; inside was an 11 by 14 of Shirley with playdates.

Uses Shipping Instructions For "Obsession" Buildup

Seeking something out of the ordinary for a buildup on "Magnificent Obsession" at the Ritz, Valdosta, Ga., Hugh G. Martin struck on the idea of using the shipping instructions on the film for a unique lobby.

The fact that the Universal exchange requested the print be shipped to the Paramount, Palm Beach, was Martin's angle in so publicizing the letter, the poster copy stressing that admission at the resort theatre was $1.10.

Attention given the poster was evidence, says Martin, that patrons were pleased with the opportunity to see the picture before Palm Beach and especially since they could see it for the regular prices.

Packwood Edits Theatre Tab

Another editor added to our round tablers list is Norman Packwood, Florissant Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., who is now getting out an eight page paper called the "Florissant Theatre News." Included is a comic strip, gossip column, editorial by Norman, pictures of the month are listed and merchants' ads help defray cost of sheet.

League Reports Success With "Country" Night

Up at the Palace, Jamestown, N. Y., Manager Walter League has been getting good results out of his country store night. Tieup with local grocers brings 20 baskets of food and three grand prizes.

Other merchants are now coming in and cooperating by sharing cost and distributing herald advertising on the stunt. Prizes are shown in lobby in display that simulates inside of grocery store.

Unusual "Personal" Arranged by Pritchard

Varying the usual routine of having screen players appearing in person on the stage, Manager Dick Pritchard, Fox Tower, Pasadena, Cal., arranged for Phyllis Brooks, RKO Radio contract player, to act as guest box-office cashier for a few hours during run of "Another Face," in which Miss Brooks was featured.

Pritchard billed the stunt with lobby posters and for the newspapers used the angle that the star was acting as cashier as part of her plan to get actual experience in handling various jobs.

The new address of Managers' Round Table Club is Rockefeller Center, New York City, where the offices of Motion Picture Herald are now located. Members and other readers will please note that all communications for the attention of your Round Table and the Quigley Awards Competitions hereafter should be posted accordingly and NOT to 1790 Broadway.

An invitation is extended Round Tablers to visit the new quarters. Out-of-town theatremen coming to New York are invited to use the Club facilities for making hotel and theatre reservations, forwarding mail, etc. There is no charge for these services. —A-MIKE

Animates Lobby Display For "Mutiny" Date

With cutouts of the principals, palm leaves and other appropriate accessories for atmosphere, Manager Spyros Geo. Cardas, Loew's State, Los Angeles, created an animation on "Mutiny" (see photo) with the background of moving waves and rocking ship.

Cardas also used broadcasts on five stations and reports effective displays in 24 windows. Cards were mailed to teachers, educational and historical societies.

Sharrock Ties In With Local "Save a Life" Drive

A stunt that paid dividends in good-will for the Palace Theatre was Raleigh Sharrock's work on the "Save a Life" campaign staged in Morrilton, Ark. Signs were appropriately placed and worded by Raleigh, each containing the Malco Amusement Company's emblem. Notices were placed on bulletin boards of schools with local paper devoting editorial to theatre's part in the drive.

Merchants Aid Allison On Handicap Race

George Allison at the De Luxe Theatre, New York City neighborhood house, has tied up about 20 local merchants on the street for gift giveaways every Saturday night. Wheel was constructed by theatre crew on which the gifts are arranged on names of different horses and to holders of lucky numbers the prizes are awarded.

Cooperating merchants use flags for their outside decoration with banners reading "Member of the 125th Street Handicap." Stunt is plugged in store's ads with theatre coming in for its share of publicity. Assistant Ted Rodis aided on the stunt.

Martin Highlights "Thanks" Date with Newspaper Tieups

Newspaper cooperated with Guy Martin, Colfax Theatre, South Bend, Ind., carrying stories of proclamation by the Mayor of a "Thanks a Million Week." Idea embraced in addition to newspaper campaign, the sending of special "Thanks a Million Society" letters to prominent townsfolk, merchants, civic organizations, etc., asking them to participate in the movement and sign pledge cards. Another phase of the newspaper campaign consisted of tieup whereby the three promiment stars, Powell, Dvorak and Allen supposedly selected subscribers of the paper to be their guests some time during the engagement. Names were picked at random and run in paper.

Another ace tieup was insertion of two large ads asking for an assistant to the theatre advertising manager, to offer suggestions for proper manner in which to inform South Bend about the picture. Two grand prizes were awarded, a radio and watch, both of which were promoted in exchange for credit card in lobby. Radio dealer carried large display setpiece in window, as did jeweler, both devoting portion of their ads to stunt.

Week ahead police department cooperated by posting "thanks" tack cards on light and trolley poles, warning signals, etc. Department stores, druggists, cigar counters all carried cash register cards reading "Thanks a million for your patronage," and 20 bridge clubs received telegrams offering guest tickets as an attendance prize. Accompanying photo shows large overhead lobby display used above exit doors week ahead.

Sizer Holds Temple Anniversary at Jeffris

There have been Shirley Temple birthday parties, but it took Eaton Sizer, Jeffris Theatre, Janesville, Wis., to report the first Temple party, celebrating her third year as a star. Every child attending the party was given a free colored photo of the starlet, given through compliments of leading shoe store whose ad was carried on reverse side.

Leading baker donated birthday cake which was displayed attractively in their window (see photo) and later removed to theatre. Ice cream company also contributed as did leading stores of their merchandise to be awarded winners of the Shirley Temple stage parade, these youngsters having been trained two weeks ahead for the show.

Winners were chosen by audience applause with assistance of two society editors of local paper. Among the promoted prizes were dolls, coloring books, passes, etc. For his school bally, Eaton used a boy with a megaphone and sign on his back who waited until school broke and went into his spiel about the party.

Merchant Helps Campbell Sell Shirley Temple

Contacting one of the local merchants for his Shirley Temple date, Duncan Campbell, Capitol, Midland, Ont., borrowed some of the starlet dolls for his lobby display. Also in the merchant's window a small stage was constructed with large size doll on stage and smaller ones seated on chairs for audience. Stills, cutouts and playdates finished the display, which was so successful that merchant donated doll for giveaway. All patrons entering the theatre during run of picture were given special numbered coupons carrying store's ad and on last night giveaways took place.

Some Suggestions For Holiday Weeks

In New England, Washington's Birthday is ranked with New Year's, Christmas, Thanksgiving, Memorial and Labor Days in observance, says Harry Browning, M & P Theatres ad head, in a holiday bulletin distributed to managers. And with this in mind, Browning suggests a number of slants to build up this Day in addition to others to attract child business during holidays. These are taken from bulletins edited by Don Chambers.

Some years back, Washington's Birthday Eve midnight show were found profitable in that sector and the M & P ad man advances the idea that this may again be profitable. Whether or not these are put on, advertising for the Day should contain lines such as "Gala Washington's Birthday Programs," etc., with small head cuts of Washington to be used. These may be available in local newspaper's mat service.

Mid-Winter school vacations in the New England sector will start on Feb. 17, in some spots and on Feb. 22 in others. Browning gives the following ideas found profitable during holiday weeks, stressing that cost can be held down by borrowing decorative material such as flags, bunting, etc., from patriotic organizations wherever possible.

Cooperation With Schools

School plays and pageants in grade and high schools are put on by school authorities and it may be possible to have these presented at the theatre. Stage facilities are made available to schools without charge with theatre profiting from sale of admissions to pupils who would of course see the regular show additionally.

Quartettes and choral societies connected with local organizations costumed according to the holiday being celebrated might be arranged for stage appearances. Settings would be in keeping such as a Valley Forge set for Washington's Birthday, etc.

Children's programs at special matinees on morning of day being celebrated may be stimulated, says Browning, with a "story teller," such as school teacher, librarian or other persons experienced in working with children. "Story teller" may or may not be in costume and will relate instances from the life of the personage being honored.

For Washington's birthday, Browning further suggests a drawing contest for best sketches or drawings of the first president. This may be tied in ahead with school authorities and with newspapers.

Impressive Front Sells "Crusades" for Worley

Outstanding in city manager Leonard Worley's "Crusades" campaign at the Madison in Peoria, Ill., was the impressive front constructed by his art department (see photo), which was illuminated at night. Seventy-five foot crusader atop marquee was painted in oustanding colors and built from a scale drawing, his sword was raised in air and lighted by many lights which flashed on and off. Banner above head of figure carrying title was also outlined in lights. Arches were built from sidewalk to canopy and on these were mounted stills and inserts, while at either end of the canopy were five foot scenes from picture which were bordered with lights.

School heads, boy scout leaders, church and club officials plus local prominents were invited to special screening, resulting in announcements from pulpits and scout and school bulletin boards. Cooperating merchant devoted radio program to picture and devoted window to display of stills and other material. Leading department store windows were tied up for display in fashions, jewelry and other merchandise using hand-lettered playdate cards and for street bally, man dressed as a crusader walked about congested neighborhoods.

EXHIBITION IN A 200-TOWN

Traveling Man's Desire To Be Exhibitor in Montana Hamlet Brings New Stores and Lighting

by TED STUMP
Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont.

In July, 1934, traveling for a wholesale electrical concern in LaCrosse, Wisconsin, I drove to Absarokee, Montana, for a vacation. Absarokee is located sixty miles from Billings and fourteen miles from Columbus—the nearest railroad point. The population hovers around the 200 mark and the village boasts of no street lights or water and sewer systems. Cows, horses and pigs wander up the main—and only—street.

But this small town struck me right between the eyes. Had always lived in large cities and the peacefulness of the town and the friendly residents made me determined to stay. So wrote the boss resigning the job and astounded the residents by announcing opening of a first class theatre.

My only association with a theatre had been as a steady patron during years of traveling, but had an idea that if the people of Absarokee and its trading territory were given a first class theatre it would be patronized. So bought and remodeled a building, installed Western Electric Sound, Simplex projection, comfortable seats and on December 16, 1935, opened up with the best pictures available with three changes of program weekly.

Locals Called It "Ted's Folly"

During its construction stage I stood practically alone. The townspeople shook their heads at "Ted's Folly" and even the film salespeople thought it foolish to start a theatre in such a hick town, foolish to invest in such good equipment and the idea of running every night was impractical.

But today the situation is different. The theatre is still operating three changes, business is holding up far beyond even my expectations and have branched out and taken over the theatre in the neighboring town of Columbus. The townspeople are proud of their theatre and it has been a boon to the town. Seven new businesses have been opened and several enterprising businessmen have installed a street light in front of their stores. Film contracts have all been liquidated and the salesmen are now using Absarokee as an example to exhibitors in other small communities.

There are three inseparable reasons for the success of this theatre. They are: comfort, excellent sound and consistently good pictures. There was no newspaper in Absarokee, and how to let the ranchers know about the shows was a problem until I started a mimeographed weekly in which was incorporated news of the town and surrounding communities interspersed with happenings at the theatre and a full page ad on the week's shows. Some 800 copies were printed and distributed. Soon other businesses asked for space and the Stillwater News is now an eight-page weekly entering its second year and making a profit of a hundred dollars a month for ye editor.

My experience as a traveling salesman, and before that as a minister, stood me in good stead in handling patrons and the advantage of knowing all who came by name is a great help. During my spare time I call at the surrounding ranches for a cup of coffee and a piece of cake. If I land at a ranch where they have not been to the show, or come but very seldom, I give them a free pass for the whole family.

Theatre going is like attending church. It's largely a matter of habit. The secret is to get them to come and then keep them coming. In the beginning used Amateur Nights, Pal Nights, Country Store, etc. Theatre books containing twenty tickets for $5.00 were printed and sold. While the regular admission is 35c., the 25c. ticket price paid because an accurate check-up showed that the purchasers of these books came to the show much oftener than they did before they bought the books. Besides, the money was received in advance.

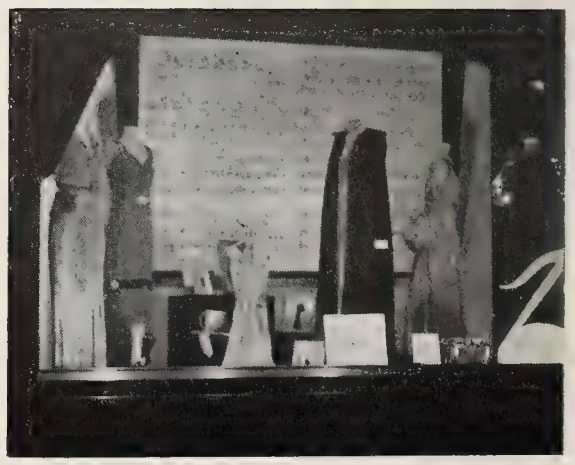
Cook Ties "Blood" to Treasure Hunt

Thirty local merchants, a newspaper and Manager Earl Cook cooperated on a one-day Treasure Hunt held in the stores which helped to build up the theatremen's advance on "Captain Blood" at Warners' Theatre, in San Pedro, Cal.

The Hunt started with a two-column page one story with details as follows: 200 prizes of various merchandise were placed on their shelves by the 30 participating merchants. Each prize carried a different number.

Included in the newspaper story was a two-column box which read: "Turn this page upside down . . . this is your Treasure Hunt number." Inclosed in the box was the number, printed upside down, and each copy of that issue of the paper bore a different number.

Names of all stores were listed in a giant double page co-op page (see cut above) in the same issue. Readers were instructed to go to these stores the following day, look for some article bearing the same number as the one they had taken from their copies of the paper. If they were successful, that article was the prize—and that's all.



Rules were simple. The Hunt was open only to adult readers over 18. All prizes had to be claimed on the day of the Hunt. Numbers appeared on large cards in plain view attached to the prize articles.

For the theatre, Cook planted the name of picture, cut of Errol Flynn in the streamer across the two co-op pages and the cut again in an additional quarter-page house ad on an inside page.

"Melody" Messages Typed In Lobby for Bamberger

Local typewriter exchange tied in with Herman Bamberger, Victory, Holyoke, Mass., for "Broadway Melody," supplying girl and typewriter for lobby stunt. MRS. RUTH D. ORNSTEIN is co-manager of the Lyric in Brooksville, Ky., and is proposed for membership by her husband, E. L. Ornstein, who says her acquisition of the intricacies of our business, plus uncanny exploitation ideas have gone a long way toward building up their business and good-will in the community. Can't we count on you for some reports of your activities at the Lyric and the new house you're planninng on opening?

is the resident manager of the Rex Theatre in Oakland, Cal. Starting in show business while attending high school he ushered in St. Louis and then was promoted to chief of staff. Later moved to San Francisco, where he worked for RKO for four years in various capacities, publicity, exploitation, etc. And in 1934 to his present job working for Arthur Barnett. The Rex is a six-hundred seater, grind policy.

JAMES F. PISTACHIO

is assistant manager of the Cort Theatre in Somerville, N. J., and the only member from that town to join the Club, so we are going to count on you for reports of your theatre activities there. Incidentally, next day off why not drop into headquarters and get acquainted?

owner and manager, respectively, of the Circle Theatre in Cleveland, Ohio. Some of our most active members contribute from Cleveland and we're hoping with 100 per cent representation at the Circle, we'll add to the list. How about letting us know what you did recently, so that it may be publicized in our section?

assistant at the Union Theatre, New Philadelphia, Pa., has ushered at various houses from 1924 to 1929. From that time on he has been doing publicity work for Skirboll Brothers and M. A. Shea. Harold says he has read our section for some time and has derived much benefit from it. It's always gratifying to receive such expressions.

manages the Corona Theatre in Groton, N. Y., having been born and educated in New York City. Andy hasn't been connected with any other outfits and is reasonably new to showbusiness. However, now that he's joined we're hoping to hear from up his neck of the woods quite frequently.

acts as assistant manager of the Bexley Theatre, Dover, Ohio, working for E. W. Smith, and it is at the latter's insistance that Dwight joins the club. He also says he has been an ardent reader of our pages and feels it is his duty to join. Well, your duty doesn't end with just signing on the dotted line. Let's hear what's doing in Dover.

out in Tiffin, Ohio, manages the Grand Theatre. You're our first member from your fair city, Tom, so the responsibility of letting us know what's what will have to rest on your shoulders. We shall be more than glad to publicize any recent happenings at your house, so shoot your material along in.

is the assistant manager of the Colonial Theatre, Laconia, N. H. Paul was born in Malden, Mass., and educated there, after which he assumed jobs as usher, doorman and assistant at the Larcom Theatre in Beverly, Mass., and then on to his present assignment, from which point we hope to hear frequently.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Dear Herald:

Uncle Ezra says "You won't ever get sore eyes from looking at the bright side of life." Uncle Ezra's philosophy would do a whole lot of us a lot of good if we would give it a little consideration. Some years ago we talked with a farmer living not far from this metropolis and we said to him, "Well, Uncle Joe, how's business?" and he replied "Oh gosh, I don't know how we will ever get through the winter. We hain't got no crops to speak of, our taxes is due and it looks like we would all have to go to the poorhouse." The next year we saw him and asked him the same question and he said, "Well, it's mighty tough, I hain't hardly got room on my farm to pile the corn, but then, what's the use, 'twon't be worth nuthin'". He reminded us of our sister. When she was a little girl she had gone over to the neighbors to play with some other girls and when she got home mother had gone to the neighbors and didn't wait for her, and she began to cry, and we asked her what was the matter and she said, "Well, doggone it, I never get home in time to go anywheres." If you are blue and think you have a hard life, just stop and think of the poor "Overland Tourist" who has to battle this snow to the back doors to get a handout. All back doors ought to be built next to the front sidewalk. There's no sense in people having to go clear around to the back.

We noticed that one lovesong crooner got a salary of $88,499. They should have added one dollar more to it and made it even money. Gosh, it looks like the sheep herders ought to throw up their jobs and go to crooning.

We went to the Moon theatre the other night and saw "Metropolitan," with Lawrence Tibbett singing the principal role in Italian grand opera. Mr. Tibbett is, undoubtedly a wonderful singer, perhaps the finest singer in the United States. There is no doubt about that, and anyone who loves grand opera will undoubtedly like this one, but somehow we folks out here in the sagebush prefer "Sweet Adeline" or "My Old Sod Shanty on the Claim."

In his letter in the paper, Irvin S. Cobb said he knows a woman out there who has been married eight times in eight years, and that she is being led to the altar again. Good gosh, it looks like she had been doing the "leading" herself. We'll betcha that some of the Hollywood residents haven't got a darn thing on her.

We have just received a check from the Recreation officer at Fort Meade, South Datoka, requestiong us to have his subscription to the HERALD renewed. Thanks, Mr. Officer, we'll do it. That just goes to show that the army boys are interested in reading the HERALD just like you exhibitor boys are. The fact is that everybody ought to read the HERALD, that is, if they want some reliable information, for we know of nothing that comes as near giving the straight of it as the HERALD does.

We also got a check from Mr. W. A. Ryan of the Minneapolis Star requesting us to do the same thing. That shows you that the editors of the big daily papers are also reading the HERALD. Three exhibitors sent us their checks, Mr. Olson of Wisner, Nebraska, and Mr. Carlins of Spalding, Nebraska, and Mr. Lyons of Aitkin, Minnesota. It is proof of what we have repeatedly told you, that "the HERALD covers the field like an April shower."

But speaking of that "Shelterbelt," we are reminded that when the weather gets dry and hot next summer it will require more than the Government's five million dogs to take care of the situation, and then what will those blue pelicans do?

The other night we saw two pictures at the Moon theatre, "Man of Iron" and "Show Them No Mercy," and these two made a program worth seeing, especially "Show Them No Mercy." This one is a gangster picture that was well played by a capable cast and directed by a man who knows how to direct. This may not go so well in cities where gangsters are common, but out here in the cow country, where men are men and women will swear to it, it will pass as a satisfying performance. "Man of Iron" will also pass as a he-man performance. It is a factory story wherein the foreman at the factory is promoted to vice-president of the company and his promotion goes to his head, and from then on the factory goes haywire. If you want to know what a promotion does to some people's heads you should see this picture.

We are wondering if you exhibitors know who Public Nuisance Number 1 really is. We have our own ideas about that, which may appear erroneous to some and objectionable to others, both of which cases "nach nicht aus" to us. Our theory is that he is the boy who was sent to college by the personal sacrifice of his parents digging their toes into the ground to raise the money, and who spent his time at sorority dances and who could name all the players on the football and basketball teams; and who spent moonlight evenings under the elms on the college campus with gum chewing Lizzie, but who was unable to name the capital of his home state or who delivered the Gettysburg speech.

He reminds us very much of a cartoon of the college boy who came home and was lying on the sofa one evening smoking a cigaret and telling his folks of his success at college, how he wore nose and shin guards and played fullback on the college team. His mother was smiling at him and evidently imagining what a swath he would cut in the White House, but his dad glanced over his evening paper at him and said, "Well, son, now that you are back from college we will get your hair cut and you will wear a pair of overalls and play whoaback with the home team." Somehow some parents never can appreciate a boy, nohow.

Our limited experience has shown that theatre attendance is much in excess of what it has formerly been, and this is due largely to improvement of story and treatment. Pictures are better, much better, which is largely the result of the public's insistence on wholesome entertainment. This magazine has consistently insisted on cleanliness on the screen and billboards, and this magazine is to be commended for it. Appealing to the lowbrow element of the American audiences is the wrong way to build business at the theatres. Barroom and poolhall lizards are not the people who spend money at the box-offices, and we are glad to note this has become to be recognized. People won't pay money to see what they don't care to see, and therein lies the secret of this added attendance. Maybe we don't know anything about it, but that's our guess, anyhow. We might say more, but Ernie won't let us.

A GRAND SLAM IN COMEDY

Buster Keaton in
"Grand Slam Opera"
(Star Personality Comedy)
Educational 20 mins.

A Laugh Riot

Easily the best comedy Buster Keaton has ever delivered. Whoever supplied the original and side-splitting gags should be given a long-term contract. This unknown writer has the perfect material for this dead-pan comic, and the way Buster handles that material puts it over for a continuous salvo of laughs. It is fast. It has variety. It has, above all, originality. And Keaton times his laughs, and holds 'em till he gets every possible gurgle out of 'em. In fact there are so many gags in this honey that the average short comedy looks like an anaemic invalid alongside it. Keaton comes to New York from Gopher Prairie to go on an amateur radio program with his juggling act. He tells the amazed director of the program that he does it by explaining each stunt to the radio audience. He gets the gong at the first juggling stunt, but keeps going, not realizing that the orchestra is going ahead with the next number. And that's where the belly laffs come in. Finishes with the orch leader and Buster playing the "Anvil Chorus" to the rhythm of beating each other over the head with broom and baton stick. And the end tag is too good to disclose. See it,— and book it without seeing it. It can't miss. It will be one of the biggest laugh-producers ever shot across your screen. Directed by Charles Lamont.

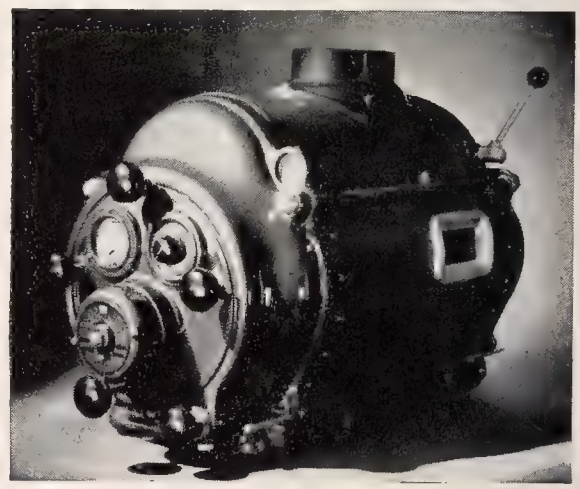
The Strong Mogul

Designed to Satisfy Fully the Most Discriminating Exhibitor and Projectionist



THE STRONG UTILITY series of reflector type projection arc lamps has been designed especially for theatres where economical, flawless projection is required, but where financial conditions limit the original investment.

THE STRONG MOGUL marks a distinct advance in projection arc lamp design and construction. It admits no competition for it is in a class by itself, and provides many fundamental advantages available only in Strong Lamps.

The tremendous volume of light delivered by the Mogul, results in a projected picture that is full of depth and definition, clearly showing all the delicate details.

Your Independent Theatre Supply Dealer will arrange a demonstration in your own theatre. Or write for your copy of the new interesting and instructive catalog of Strong equipment. No obligation.

This modern, dependable UTILITY series is comprised of the H. I., new low voltage, high intensity arc, the L. O., regular low intensity of advanced design, and the A. C., efficient alternating current arc.

NOTHING is more important in attracting patrons than your theatre front. Your management may be of the best, but unless your theatre front is modern and appealing to prospective movie goers, you can't get people to come into your theatre and take advantage of the fine programs you have so carefully worked out. That's why so many progressive owners and managers are remodeling their theatres with new Pittco Theatre Fronts. A new Pittco Front brings the customers in . . . and boosts box office figures. Retain an architect to design a new Pittco Front for your theatre. Our staff of experts will gladly cooperate with him in design and installation. And Pittco Store Front Products, so successful in remodeling stores, will prove equally effective in modernizing your theatre.

This map graphically displays the tabulations of the Film Boards of Trade for 1935. Each division is a film service territory identified by the name of the key city from which theatres within are served. The top bold figure in each indicates the total number of theatres operating. The next figure indicates the total seating capacity. The lower figure is the total number of theatres, dark and operating. Territories dotted are those in which the total of operating theatres increased in 1935 from 50 to 95 over the previous year; those in gray tone, territories in which the increase was from 1 to 49. White areas indicate territories in which the number of theatres decreased. In the Milwaukee district, no gain or loss.

VOLUME 122 FEBRUARY 8, 1936 NUMBER SIX

1935 Theatre Gains General Over Nation

WITH A GAIN of 826 houses, the physical plant of the motion picture theatre business began 1936 with a total of 15,378 operating properties. The figures as disclosed in the tabulations of the Film Boards of Trade of the MPPDA, and as published in Motion Picture Herald of January 25, show a grand total, including non-operating theatres, of 18,508 houses, 245 more theatres than the number existing at the beginning of 1935.

The tabulations further reveal that the increase in the number of operating houses, far outranking the number of new theatres and therefore reflecting improvement of economic conditions warranting the reopening of dark theatres, maintained a surprisingly constant rate throughout the country. All but four of the 31 film distribution territories reported increases, and one of these, the Milwaukee area, held its 1934 ground.

The distribution of the 15,378 operating theatres over the country is shown in the map on page 4, together with the total seating capacities and total number of theatres for each territory. The map also indicates the gains or losses in the number of theatres in each exchange district. The Dallas territory showed the largest increase—95. The area serviced from Boston reported an increase of 60 theatres; Charlotte, 50, and Detroit, 57. Albany lost 22, Des Moines 9, Buffalo 30. All the other territories reported gains ranging from eight to 47, with those in the twenties and thirties predominating.

Enterprise Optical Renamed Motiograph

AT THE ANNUAL stockholders' meeting of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company it was voted to rename the company as Motiograph, Inc. Francis E. Matthews of Chicago, Arthur T. Spring of Boston, and Joseph B. Kleckner of Chicago, became directors, and Mr. Kleckner assumed the office of president and general manager.

Formerly with the Continental Illinois National Bank, Mr. Kleckner became identified with Motiograph through purchase of the stock of O. F. Spahr. Mr. Spring is to be executive vice president; E. J. Wienke, vice president in charge of production; and W. H. Hirschfeld, heretofore general sales manager, is now vice president in charge of sales.

A number of new distributorships have been arranged, newest of which was closed by Mr. Hirschfeld as being located in the West Indies.

Develops Device To Balance Cooling

A NEW development in Kooler-Aire washed air system has just been announced by the U. S. Air Conditioning Corporation. It is called an "Equalizer." In its announcement the company stated:

"One of the serious problems of theatre air conditioning, as every theatre man knows who has operated a washed air cooling system, is the problem of satisfactory results on all the days when it is too cool to run the system at full speed. On a cooler day the audience will be too cool if the cooling system is run at full speed with full volume of air. If the blower is cut down to half speed, for instance, only half the volume of air will be delivered, but the velocity is also cut in half. The result is that the air does not have sufficient speed or force to carry clear to the back of the theatre.

"As the incoming air is cooler than the air in the theatre it has a tendency to fall and the result is that it 'dumps' on the front seats of the theatre. The people in these seats feel a draft and are too cool, and at the same time people farther back and in the corners of the theatre receive no air circulation and soon complain of the heat and the stuffiness. It is claimed that the 'Equalizer' solves this problem by maintaining the original velocity of the air for any reduced volume so that the air circulates throughout the theatre evenly and maintains a uniform temperature."

In this reproduction is illustrated the new support or brace which Edward H. Wolk of Chicago has developed and is marketing as a means of preventing any vibration of machinery housing or the heavier type projection lamps.

Construction Active; Reconditioning Grows

THAT THE year 1936 will not only see at least the maintenance of 1935's increased amount of theatre construction, but will witness the remodeling and reconditioning of even a greater number of theatres than were modernized in 1935, is indicated by developments in most sections of the country.

The demand for theatres in the Chicago area is the greatest in a score of years, according to those who are qualified to talk about the situation. From independent theatre owners to circuit heads come requests daily regarding theatres that can be bought, leased or built. Many others than theatre men have likewise found that business is on the upgrade after several very difficult years.

Better product than for several years, the stimulus of special attractions, and better times generally have accounted for the desire of many to get in the theatre business, according to exhibitors.

In downstate Illinois the three major independent operators have been following an expansion program. The Anderson circuit of Morris, the Alger Brothers circuit at Peru, and the McCullom group of Hoopeston have all built new theatres and remodeled old ones. Increased business is responsible due to better prices for farm products, upon which the territory they cater to derives its livelihood.

Publix-Great States theatres have also felt the need to go a great deal of remodeling, and in some cases new building. Two houses dark since the advent of sound are being wired for sound and opened this spring.

In Chicago proper Balaban & Katz have the new Will Rogers theatre in construction, and the old Hoyburn theatre in Evanston is being remodeled ready for opening this spring.

In the Kansas City area continuance of the strong gains of 1935 in the theatre equipment and supply business, running in some instances to 35 per cent over 1934, point to a good spring in theatre construction and remodeling in that area. There is probably more talk of new theatres and revamping than at any time last year, and enough new work has been reported, planned or begun to back up the talk about all this activity.

As in 1935, Walter Denney, manager of the National Theatre Supply Company, Kansas City, says most of this work is likely to take the form of remodeling. Remodeling will continue to stress comfort and efficiency on the inside—most of the money going to supply houses in 1935 went for carpets, redecorating, air conditioning, and seats. Projection hasn't quite kept pace with other phases of improvement, but is not far behind.

The most ambitious remodelings and most of the new houses have been modernistic with stadium type interior. The stadium type gets away from balconies while retaining the advantage of extra seats, and it is easier to get patrons to go to them by ramp than by stairs.

This type of construction was followed in Homer Strowig's Plaza, Abilene, Kan.; Dave Bisagno's Augusta, Augusta, Kan., and A. J. Simmon's Plaza, Lamar, Mo., as is the case with most of those planned by Larry Larsen, architect and theatre operator.

In comparison with revamping, there has been little actual construction of new houses. However, O. L. Sullivan is building an 800-seat house on the west side in Wichita. Mr. Sullivan operates the West there. At Topeka, Kan., McKinney's Kaw is a new 500-seat theatre.

John Goshen is building a 1,000-seater at Sedalia, Mo. He will continue with the Star there. Charles Barron, who operates two at Pratt, Kan., and Floyd E. Droz, who has the Novelty at Anthony, Kan., will be in partnership on another at Anthony, construction to start in March.

E. B. Danielson is building a second house at Russell, Kan. He operates the Dream there. The new Mecca will seat 500 and will cost $25,000. He is building the theatre from the ground up, in "modernistic" style. At Branston, Mo., the mayor, Jim Owens, will build a rustic theatre, "The Hillbilly," to replace his present Owens theatre.

Construction and remodeling in the Kansas City area is largely confined, however, to smaller cities. Recent remodeling projects in that region are Sam and Louis Sosna's work on the Fourth Street at Moberly, Mo., which they will rename the Sosna. A former Fox house, it has been dark several years. They operate the Variety at Manhattan, Kan. V. G. Green, brother-in-law of Elmer Bills, is remodeling his house at La Plata, Mo., while Bills is rebuilding his Lyric at Salisbury, Mo., recently destroyed by fire.

In New Orleans, following the statement there of H. H. Heinman of New York, credit executive, that business as a whole in 1936 will show an improvement of 10 per cent in 1936, theatre men expressed their belief to a representative of BETTER THEATRES that patronage there would be up at least 20 per cent this year. Four new theatres are under construction in Detroit.

The Schine circuit has an extensive remodeling and building program underway. One of the features of their plans is the provision of stages in houses which did not have them, indicating addition of vaudeville and presentations. Among the houses to be so equipped are the Rialto in Lockport, N. Y.; the Eckel in Syracuse, and in Ohio, the Strand, Delaware; Palace, Ashland; and Athena, Athens. Two new theatres will be built at Marietta, Ohio, for the M. A. Shea circuit.

Remodeling to cover six theatres in New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Chicago, has already been planned for immediate work by Warner. This circuit has announced its intention of spending about $500,000 in theatre remodeling this year.

Changes Made in Design of Chair

SEVERAL modifications calculated to effect improvements have been introduced into the design of the theatre chair manufactured by the John L. Cable Manufacturing Company of Jamaica Plain, Mass. One change is represented by a pin type hinge with a brake band reinforced by an angle iron and with rubber detachable bumpers. These bumpers act as stops for raising and lowering the seat. The hinge is also adjustable to give the seat the right tilt when installed. The pin hinge is three-eighths in diameter, made from cold rolled steel. It is riveted to the seat bottom frame bracket and has a fibre bushing covering as well as a steel brake around the pin.

Another change consists in a special patented floor bracket to make installing more simple and economical. One is completely concealed in concrete flooring when a new theatre is in the process of construction, while the other fits as an anchor bolt on the floors already in use by screwing the floor bracket to the floor and fitting hollow tubing legs over the bracket.

New Designs in Lighting Fixtures

A NUMBER of new designs for lighting fixtures especially adaptable to the theatre, particularly those having modern decorative treatments, have been developed by the Roman Art Company of St. Louis. The new styles include both wall and ceiling fixtures, while other designs have been added for lounges, foyers, etc. The fixture illustrated in the accompanying reproduction provides both direct and indirect illumination, and incorporated in its design is the new Lumiline lamp.

More Natural Sound Claimed for Device

A NEW SOUND device is being installed in large theatres as the result of two years of experiments by engineers of the MGM studios, developed under the direction of Douglas Shearer. The device is called the Shearer Horn System.

As described by Shearer, it is a two-way system dividing the power at 250 cycles between two sets of horns. The low frequency unit is an expontential horn with a mouth opening of 50 square feet and is approximately three feet deep. Four special 15-inch dynamic cones are mounted on the rear panel to actuate the horn. The high frequency unit is composed of a cluster of small exponential horns each having a mouth of approximately 60 square inches. The individual units are stacked in layers to form the large horn, the mouth of which is spherical in shape.

The Legality of Ordinances Limiting Theatre Properties

● Examining the licensing and regulatory powers of governments in the light of recent attempts by municipalities to restrict the opening of new houses

[This discussion has been prepared by two attorneys-at-law, writing independently of each other, and to some extent their methods differ. Mr. Parker has confined his investigations to the case books. Mr. Berger has sought, in addition to his own judgments, those of other members of the bar. Both are regular contributors to BETTER THEATRES.—THE EDITOR.]

By LEO T. PARKER
Member of the Bar, State of Ohio

A NUMBER of municipalities have enacted ordinances intended to reduce or prevent increase of seating capacity of theatres in certain localities. According to the apparent intentions of the framers of these ordinances already enacted in Baraboo, Wis., Alabama, Cal., and Sturgeon Bay, Wis. (as reported in Motion Picture Herald of January 11) and possibly other towns or cities, an "emergency" exists which requires strict supervision on the part of city officials in issuing licenses to those persons or corporations who desire to erect or open new theatres and increase the seating capacity of theatres collectively in the city.

It is intended by the formation and enaction of these ordinances to limit the number of seats according to the population of the city or town, in order to keep out new theatre operators.

Obviously, according to a long line of higher court decisions, any city ordinance is void and unenforceable if its terms (1) are unreasonable, (2) are discriminatory, (3) violate or contradict United States or State laws, or (4) contradict the federal or State Constitutions.

The fact that the ordinance specifies that it is intended to compensate an emergency does not in any sense render the law valid. The fact is that the courts will enjoin the enforcement of an unreasonable or invalid ordinance, when the enforcement of it would interfere with the reasonable conduct of any classification of business, or other property rights. It is true that a municipality may, without direct authority of its State's Constitution or statutes, enact valid ordinances under the guise of "police power." And this power is universally conceded to include everything essential to the public safety, health, and morals, and to justify the destruction or abatement of whatever may be regarded as a public nuisance.

VALID RESTRICTIONS

For instance, a city may pass a valid ordinance to prevent operation of theatres in certain districts or areas where it is known that their conduction will interfere with peaceful occupation and possession of private property for residential purpose. Also, an ordinance is valid by which the operation of theatres is controlled to avoid and reduce fire hazards. And in some instances ordinances have been valid which restrict the operation of theatres to certain localities. However, in order that any ordinance of this nature shall be held valid it must be shown that such restrictions are absolutely necessary to safeguard the general public against dangerous conditions.

And again, a city ordinance is valid which requires payment of the same license fees by the owners of the same classifications of business. However, any discrimination which requires persons who live outside the city, or for other reasons requires some owners of the same kind of businesses, to pay higher fees always is void (29 F. [2d] 789), (154 So. 201), (259 U. S. 530).

DISCRIMINATION

Any State statute or city ordinance is void, however, which is intended to limit the number of theatres in a certain city, or that is intended to limit the seating capacity of theatres which may be lawfully operated in that city.

The fact that a license is required to be obtained by a new theatre operator, and the city officials, on a mere excuse based upon discriminatory purposes, refuse to issue the license, is immaterial because the theatre operator may appeal to the court, which will promptly declare the ordinance void, or grant an injunction to prevent interference by the officials, or order the officials to issue the license. The following citations include many phases of the law on this subject: 38 A. L. R. 1533; 39 A. L. R. 1385; 8 A. L. R. 418; 5 A. L. R. 1312; 2 Ann. Cases (American) 313; 2 Ann. Cases (American) 701; 14 Ann. Cases (American) 865; 1916 B Ann. Cases (American) 496; 1917 E Ann. Cases (American) 505.

Of course, it is well established that a municipal corporation's power extends to the protection of the lives, health, comfort and quiet of all persons and the protection of property within the city. In the exercise of that power the city council may suppress and prohibit any trade or business, or may regulate any business in such manner as may be necessary for the safety, morals and welfare of the people. For example, a municipality could, if the theatre business were detrimental to the general public, suppress such business entirely and completely.

But for a municipality to decide and pass ordinances to the effect that a stipulated seating capacity in several theatres is proper and beneficial to the public, and that any seating capacity above that limit, or any new theatres, will prove bad for the "safety, morals, and welfare" of the people, is in a sense ridiculous and obviously an invalid ordinance.

Moreover, any requirement of obtaining licenses which has similar effect also is an invalid regulation. And if a law is formulated so that if the court holds any part void, the remaining clauses shall be valid, such provision is ineffectual as a device to make any unusual or discriminatory clauses in the ordinance valid.

DETERMINATION OF VALIDITY

When a city passes an ordinance prohibiting or limiting the operation of theatres, the question often arises as to whether the ordinance should be enforced with respect to a particular person or set of persons conducting or proposing to conduct such a business.

The answer to this question is not controlled by the manner in which that particular person, or set of persons, is conducting or will conduct his business, nor whether the business is a nuisance per se, but whether it may be, and often is, so conducted as to be a nuisance or deleterious to the public welfare. For example, in a very late case (159 So. 203) it was shown that a city passed an ordinance regulating specific places of amusements. The court promptly held the ordinance unenforceable, saying:

"A city has the right to prohibit an enterprise entirely, or to limit it to certain zones, when, as thus located, it bears some substantial relation to public health, safety, or morals. . . . But if a city undertakes to

The Thirsty Patron Deserves a Drink—of Clean Water

● And your bubbling fountain may be so designed that it offers a patron no more real safety than the outlawed common drinking cup

THE HOSPITALITY of a cool, refreshing drink of water is offered by most theatre owners to their patrons. From the patron's viewpoint, such simple—and yet when desired, such important—refreshment is one of the rudimentary modern comforts that they have come to take for granted in any theatre they attend.

The method of providing drinking water varies, however, with the house. It is often an indication of the quality of equipment and general management of the theatre as a whole. It does not take much imagination, for instance, to picture the motion picture theatre that offers thirsty patrons a drink of water from a common drinking glass, kept on top of a cooler or beside a faucet!

During the past 25 years most States have passed laws banning the common drinking cup from railways, boats, theatres and other public places where people gather. Most common cups in such locations have been replaced by paper cups, which are dispensed either free or from a penny-in-the-slot container. Bubbling fountains have also been devised as a sanitary substitute for the common cup.

Bubbling fountains are now found in a great many theatres. They are satisfactory from a sanitary standpoint if protected against human and mechanical abuses. However, to quote from Bulletin 87 of the Woman's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, "To our amazement," concludes Louis V. Dieter in an article entitled The Relative Sanitary Values of Different Types of Drinking Fountains, "we discover that instead of being a protection, our supposedly sanitary substitute for the common drinking cup is distinctly a menace to public health fully as great as the cup itself."

AVERSIONS OF PATRONS

Mr. Dieter is to be considered, of course, as one accurately informed in such matters. Nevertheless, it would probably be difficult for most people to believe that the bubbling fountain is not an improvement over the old common drinking cup. Some types of fountains are so designed that sanitation appears to be well provided for, the principal objection in such cases being that they make drinking somewhat difficult —one is not sure how much water is going to get into the mouth, and how much into the nose, eyes and ears.

Despite reasons for regarding the bubbling fountain as an aid to public sanitation (in contradistinction to the common cup or glass), and its wide acceptance as a safe way of getting a drink in a public place, there are people who shun it. They may be a bit squeamish or fastidious, but their attitude is none the less a real factor to be faced and practicably dealt with. Some mothers, in particular, are fearful of the bubbling fountain as a source of drinking water for their children.

What is below-standard drinking fountain equipment? Any type that is open to question by the health department as endangering the public health. Theatre owners, along with all who operate places open to the public, have a definite responsibility to their health departments. They must guard the health of patrons while in their houses. One of the important methods of operating within this law is to see that people do not swap germs with each other at the drinking fountain. Most of the common contagious diseases, such as colds, trench mouth, influenza, tuberculosis, measles, whooping cough, diphtheria, scarlet fever, mumps and lobar pneumonia, can be contracted by taking into the mouth germs left, for instance, by a previous user, on a cup that has not been thoroughly washed, or left on the spout or guard of a bubbling fountain.

By way of illustration, the recent spread of diphtheria in Lake School, Omaha, Neb., was blamed in part upon unsanitary drinking fountains by Dr. Millard Lanfeld, public health director. Calling school officials together, he urged that if some other way could not be found for supplying water safely to the children, the fountains should be turned off. He suggested that these particular fountains be replaced immediately with approved equipment.

A committee of the American Waterworks Association, after inspecting a large number of new drinking fountain installations, reported that less than 10% of the number of fountains inspected were of a design that prevents infection from being transmitted directly from one person to another—"and only 5% might pass Section 61 of the Railway Code."

Since few theatres in this country permit patrons to drink from a common cup, public health is menaced chiefly by misused, mechanically defective or unsanitarily constructed bubbling fountains. On this subject, Dr. W. W. Bauer, director of health and public information of the American Medical Association, said in a radio talk:

"I spoke before of the bubble fountain, which was supposed to be the final answer to the problem of the common drinking cup in public places. Yet experience has shown that there are bubble fountains and bubble fountains. The worst of them are not much, if any, better than the common drinking cup. Too many of the older types of bubble fountains permit the lips of the drinker to touch the fountain where the jet of water emerges, thus contaminating it as effectively as if the old-fashioned cup or glass were still in use. Fountains with vertical jets constantly contaminate themselves by allowing water and secretions from the mouth of the drinker to fall back into the fountain when the water is turned off. In some types the accidental plugging of the waste-water pipe would allow water to back up and flood the whole bowl, with consequent soiling of the outlet-pipe or outlet hole."

PERSISTENCE OF GERMS

Also on this subject of bubbler sanitation, an interesting series of studies was reported by an official bulletin of the Ohio State Department of Health. These studies showed that in fountains where the water bubbles straight up, germs left by a drinker were sometimes held in suspension and could be kept dancing on the column of water for as long as several hours before passing off as waste. It was proved, also that certain germs from the lips of an infected persons whose mouth touched the spout could be recovered several hours later.

Since a fountain ordinarily occupies a conspicuous position in the theatre, if it is of an old-fashioned, outmoded type, it can lend to the theatre as a whole an undesirable atmosphere of cheapness and antiquity. If the fountain is not of the bubling variety, an inexpensive substitution of more modern fixtures will probably bring it up to date.

On the other hand, if it is a bubbler, for health as well as esthetic and business reasons, the need for a change is far more urgent. Here again, the change can usually be effected simply by a substitution of fixtures. Any local plumber can probably do the work.

Regardless of the system employed, the important thing is to supply the drinking water in a sanitary manner that is beyond reproach from the viewpoint of both health department and patrons.—Walter F. Kohn.

A CHAT WITH AN INTERESTING PERSON OF THE THEATRE WORLD

VICTOR J. MORRIS, who says:

I Have Found That It Pays to Remodel

VICTOR J. MORRIS, who several weeks ago completed his twenty-fifth year as manager of the deluxe Loew's Orpheum theatre in Boston, is supervising the spending of approximately $50,000 in remodeling and renovating that downtown house in the New England metropolis.

The Orpheum, being an old house—in fact, the first that the Loew circuit established outside of New York—would fast be outmoded if close attention were not paid to its maintenance and modernization. That such outlays are well justified by increased patronage is proved by his experience, Mr. Morris told the writer in an interview.

Here is a change that may be significant in connection with patronage today. The fixtures of the women's lounge were not only replaced by those of latest design, but the size of the quarters was increased. A wall was knocked out and this area extended into the premises occupied by one of the city's largest department stores, a tenant of the theatre building. There is no passage between the store and theatre, however, although the shoppers are brought in close proximity with a theatre entrance by a special stairway to the store from the street.

This entrance is on Hamilton Place, which gives Mr. Morris a problem that may be of interest here. The approximately 150-yard blind street, running from Tremont Street to one end of the Orpheum, is privately owned. This leaves Mr. Morris a sort of combination street commissioner, police commissioner, etc. Snow removal, parking problems and the routing of traffic are a few of the details that otherwise occupy his busy day.

Whereas the front lobbies have heretofore been floored with marble, the stone is being chipped away and rubber matting installed. The previous material was not only hard on carpets, said Mr. Morris, because of the fact that dirt was carried into the theatre, but it was noisy and often slippery.

The exterior, as well as the interior, of the Orpheum is being done over. This house opening onto two main thoroughfares, presents a double problem in this respect. Inasmuch as one of the entrances is some 150 yards from the main street, as previously described, its front has to be particularly effective in order to attract passersby. A huge electric overhead sign, well blended as to colors and easy readable, combined with well lighted one-sheets help to do the trick in this instance.

The fact that the Orpheum has two widely separated entrances helps to give Mr. Morris a few of his more amusing moments, he admits. Patrons leave the theatre after seeing a show, walk around the block, and come back into the house through the other doors. There is a determined, and often disgruntled, demand for refunds.

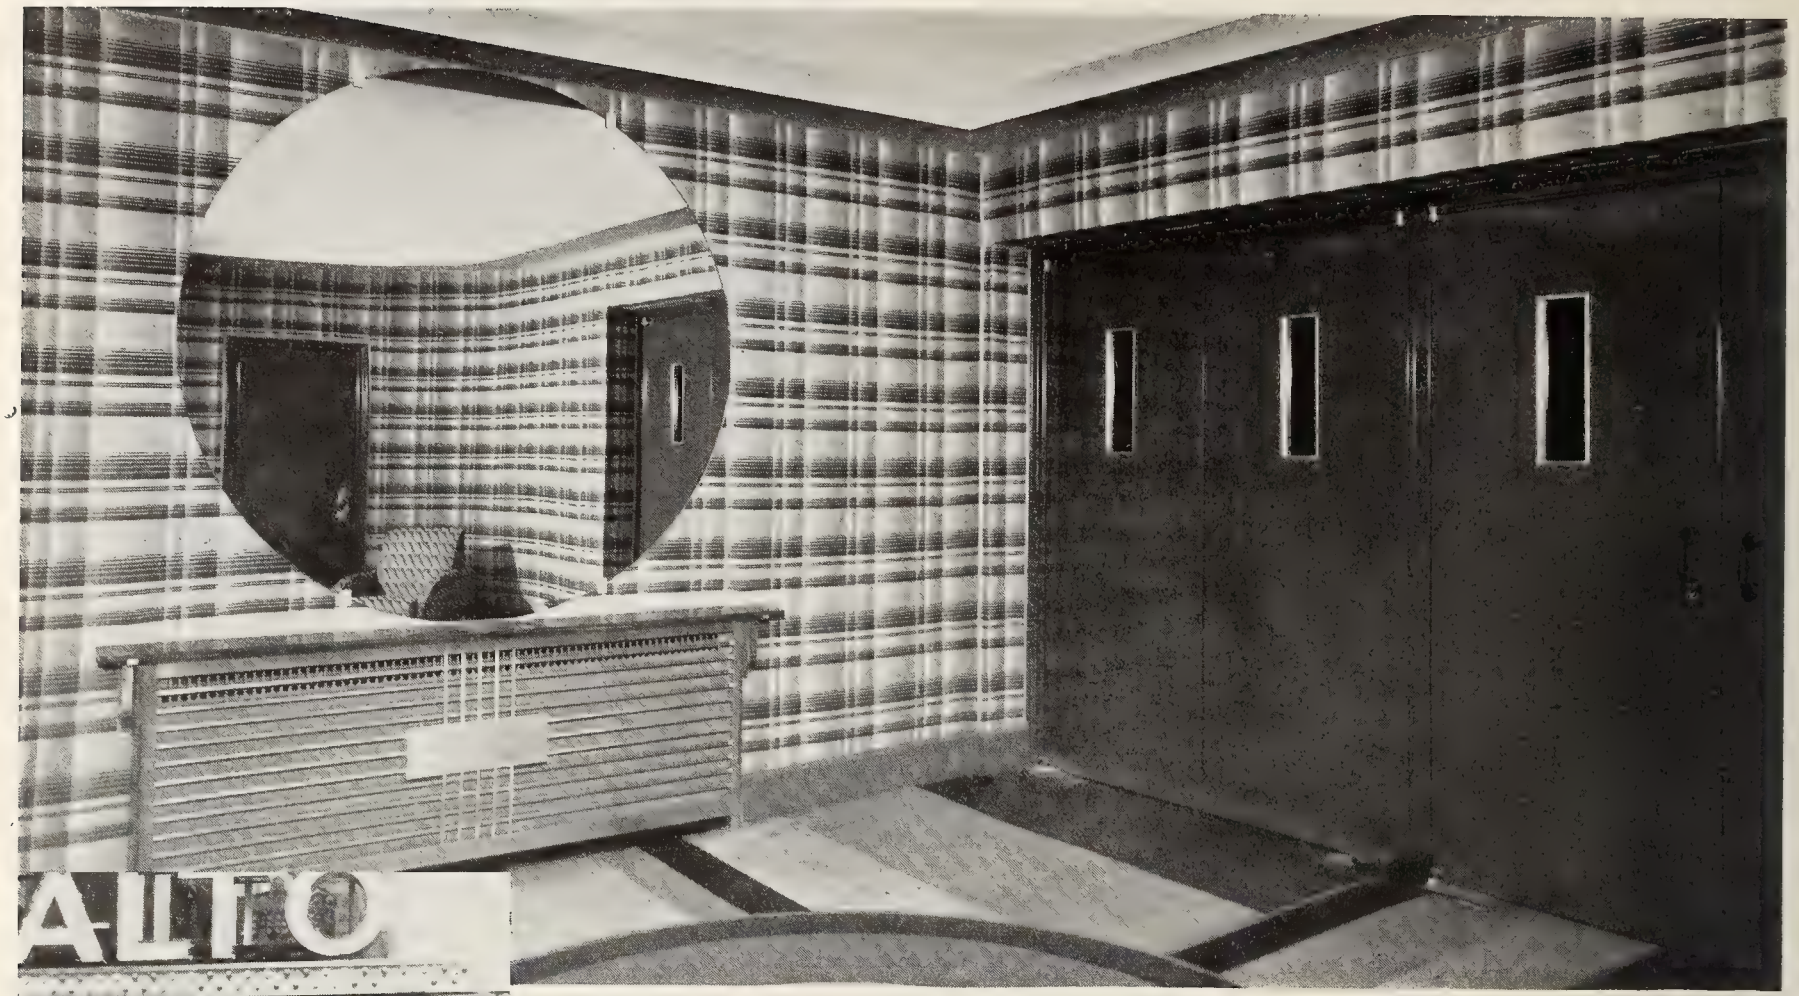
Two assistant managers aid Mr. Morris in operating the Orpheum. They are Arthur L. Tuohy and Vaughan R. O'Neill. Alton V. Freeman is treasurer.

A staff of eighteen ushers consists entirely of youths with college education. A school for ushers is conducted. Meetings are held three times a week. Ushers, because of their close contact with patrons, can be one of a theatre's most important assets, Mr. Morris has found. He gives particular attention to this branch of operation. Four cashiers work on different shifts each day.

A steady means of additional revenue for the Orpheum consists in candy slot machines that are installed on the backs of every third chair. These may have to be abandoned, however, as Governor Curley is supporting a bill to tax all vending machines five dollars apiece. This would mean a prohibitive bill of over $4,000 for the Orpheum. The merchandising of candy by means of a lobby counter is also proving profitable.

A cleaning company has been contracted to put the house back into shape after each day's performances. Mr. Morris finds that this is the most efficient and inexpensive way to handle this problem, at least in his case. Chairs are also carefully examined daily for structural weaknesses so as to checkmate possible accidents as well as claims arising from torn clothing.

Mr. Morris told, as the most extraordinary situation he ever had encountered in his career in the theatre, of the birth of a baby in the lounge of the Orpheum. A woman, seated in one of the upstair seats, started running for the women's lounge. She gave birth to a chilld therein and immediately deserted it, running from the theatre. A matron who had observed her strange actions found the child. An ambulance was summoned. The baby lived, and the mother was located later.



Victor J. Morris is a native of Liverpool, England. He came to this country at an early age and spent his boyhood in Chicago. He not only completed his education in Chicago, but made his first theatrical associations therein as an usher in the Academy of Music. He became connected with the Loew organization at the time Marcus Loew, in partnership with Adolph Zukor, began in the penny arcade business.

The veteran manager was married in New York City thirty years ago. He now lives with his wife in the suburb of Brookline, Mass. He is a life member of the Elks, Masons and Shriners, and is connected with a number of charitable organizations, both in his private and professional capacity. He belongs to the Allied Theatres of Massachusetts, Inc., the local M.P.T.O.A. affiliate, for which Joseph Brennan, his former business associate as manager of Loew's State here, is business manager.

The New Rialto Theatre At Forty-second 'n' Broadway

Immediately above, the Rialto entrance beckoning to the crowds of Times Square. The upper view is of the main lobby with its walls done in plaid homespun in terra cotta, blue and gold. The floor is covered with carpeting of geometric design in natural colors. Trimmings are in metal.

● A 750-seat cinema featuring "action" pictures and catering especially to the menfolks rises on a site long eminent in New York's theatrical history

SUPPLANTING abruptly the storied Rialto that in its day, and by leisurely, piece-meal remodelings, replaced the tradition-stained Hammerstein's Victoria at 42nd Street and Broadway, New York City, is a new Rialto theatre, one which demonstrates dramatically the utility, efficiency and prime practicability of modern theatre architecture and planning. Compact without crowding, intimate but not tiny, the house is noteworthy for its built-in showmanship. This new Rialto has a policy calling for screen attractions appealing especially to men.

Reputed the only theatre in the world with a subway entrance, the playhouse occupies a site evaluated on a square-inch basis, prohibiting frivolous furbelow in the use of space. None is wasted, naturally, but the design achieves an illusion of spaciousness only a surveyor's tape could dispel. The horizontal predominates in an over-all decorative scheme shrewdly restricted to small, plain figures steadily reiterated.

Surface entrance is from Broadway, which attains its pedestrian apex at this point. Across the street the Times Building flashes its running headline story of the world's news in electric lights to a passing and largely heedless multitude. Eyes are drawn more sharply to the trim marquee and snug lobby of the Rialto.

Between brightly lighted lobby and softly illuminated foyer, a small, chastely severe vestibule intervenes inconspicuously, shutting out street din.

The lobby opens directly into the auditorium, where 750 seats (by International Seating Company) are ranged in three banks separated by ample aisles, and at right down inviting stairs to a main lounge, which turns out to be, also, a sublevel foyer fed by a lower-level box office set flush upon a shopping arcade, whence come passengers arriving on the BMT, Interborough and Eighth Avenue subways. This double-purpose lounge, in common with the stairs connecting it to the upstairs foyer, is warmly decorated in plaid homespun of heavy texture, terra cotta and buff, with modern, chromium-piped chairs upholstered in the same material. Men's and women's lounges are located off this main lounge space.

The auditorium of the new Reialto seating 750 on a single floor. This view is toward the entrance. The general color scheme consists in terra cotta and buff carried out in a system of horizontal striping along the walls. The ceiling is painted a deep blue. Illumination is by cornice trough lighting.

Arriving by subway, the patron enters without exposure to weather, passes upstairs and through the street level foyer into the almost square auditorium, which is walled in terra cotta and buff applied on a pattern accenting a horizontal stripe that achieves a convincing impression of depth. Ceiling and carpeting are in deep blue, broken with small geometrical figures. Indirect lighting sheds a faintly golden radiance over the darkened interior. All seats are on a single level and are equipped with a Bilmarjac electrical seat indicating system.

The projection room is 12 feet deep, 22 feet wide and 14 feet high. It is lined with Accoustical Craftex to deaden working noise. Reproduction is by the RCA Photophone. Projectors, which number three, are Simplex.

Executive offices, ushers' quarters and footlight control rooms are on the second floor of the two-story building, which includes shop space for the diversified commercial requirements of the location. The exterior of the building, modern in treatment throughout, is done chiefly in Vitrolite and colored glass tiles.

Arthur L. Mayer, under whose administration the old Rialto made motion picture history, is managing director of the new house, which was erected for the Mid-Town Theatre Corporation. Thomas W. Lamb was the architect for the theatre portions of the building.

The building in which the Rialto is located, is itself noteworthy for other reasons. At its very 42d Street corner there is to be a tower, on which, when it is completed, will be emblazoned the name of Schenley, and advertising the liquor products marked under that name. Also, for the first use on such a scale in a building of this type architectural glass tiles are used. These tiles, manufacturing by Sealed Joint Products, Inc., are opaque and rough-textured, and are in various shapes to give a corrugated effect to the surface of the building.

The State: Western Modernism In a Capital of the Pacific

The auditorium and the facade of the State. The auditorium is a simple configuration of smooth curves. The exterior is finished entirely in marble.

MANILA, CAPITAL of the Philippine Islands, which are now enjoying their first months of probationary independence, has in the new State a motion picture theatre not only comparable to fine theatres of this country and Europe in its technical facilities, but one quite as expressive of contemporary Western notions in architecture.

The architect, Juan F. Nakpil. is a Filipino prominent in his profession in Manila. In his design for the State he has, in a manner common in America and England, combined fundamentals of Western classical tradition with the so-called moderne. He has fittingly introduced, however, various motifs of native origin—such plants as salacots and carabao as grille patterns, for example—in the decorative treatment. In adapting his design to a tropical region he has also provided "media aguas" for the windows and crowned the building with covered terraces.

The State is owned and operated by Luzon Theatres, Inc., which also owns and operates the Grand in Manila but a short distance from the State.

The whole exterior of the building is finished with a buff colored wash out marble, the only building so entirely finished. On the ground floor of the office building a shop is located and on the three floors directly above it are spacious offices. Viewed from the outside, the windows of these offices, protected by "media aguas," are tied together by sculptured bamboo frames which feature further accentuates the verticality of the building.

The most attractive and novel portion of the main elevation is the facade of the theatre proper, which is the principal motif of the entire building. Here the native touch is shown through the use of the coconut tree, "salacot" and "diliwari" leaves in the decorative design.

In the lobby, the walls are finished with real marble of ivory buff and brown color, the brown being the color for the longitudinal stripes. The color of the walls blends harmonizingly with the color of the floor and the ceiling.

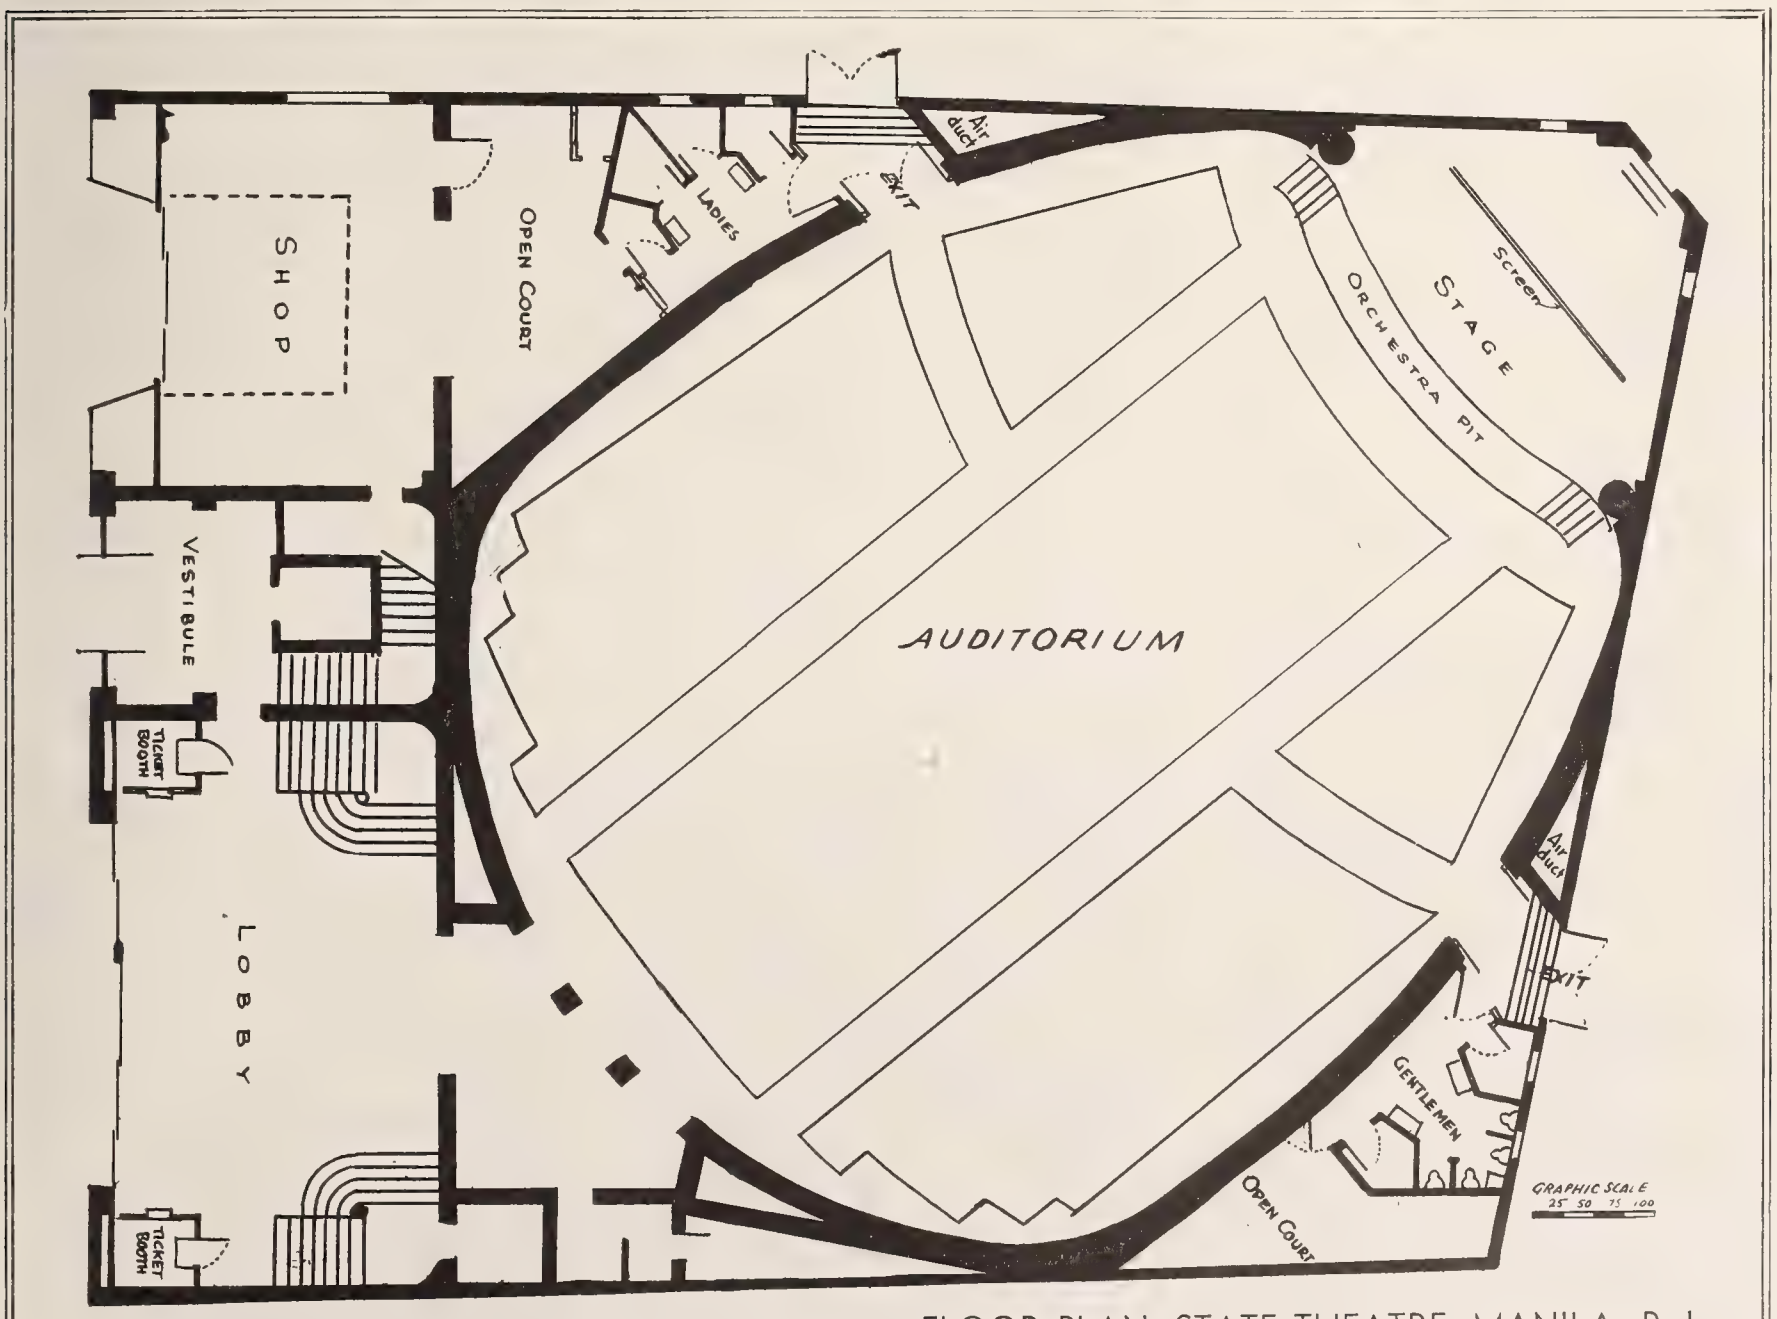
In place of ticket booths, small window openings covered with chromium-plated iron grilles of bamboo are provided in the walls. At the end of the lobby are the doors of the auditorium, and at the sides are stairs leading to the foyer above and thence to the balcony and loge.

The entrance to the balcony is through a small hall completely paneled with varnished wood of different shades, the design of which was inspired by the native sawali. Next to the hall is the promenade with stairs at its opposite ends leading to the balcony seats.



Although the foyer leading to the balcony and loge is only one flight up, the management has provided an elevator that empties into the foyer and enables patrons to reach the balcony and loge section by this means. The theater elevator, made by the Otis Elevator Company, is on the right side as one enters. The doors are colored burgundy, following the general color scheme. Uniformed elevator boys, working in two shifts, are on duty during show hours.

The foyer, which also functions as a spacious lounge.

The interior decorative effects are concentrated in the foyer. These are the murals representing music, which cover the four foyer walls; two bas-reliefs in silver, and a statue representing "State."

The auditorium is finished in neutral tones and its treatment is saved from severity by "streamlines' in curvature, and an overhead chandelier, the latter a combination of glass plane designs from the anahaw leaf. The streamlined recesses on ceiling and under balcony furnish diffused indirect neon tube lighting.

About People of the Theatre

NEWS OF THEIR ACTIVITIES REPORTED FROM ALL SECTIONS AND BRIEFLY TOLD

GEORGE SHARBY has reopened the Alley, Groveton, N. H., which had been destroyed by a fire.

EDWARD KENNEDY has been made assistant manager of the Empire in Portland, Me., replacing George Street, who recently resigned.

VERNON ADAMS, head of the Adams Amusement Company, has taken over the Pastime in Marlboro, Mass., from George Husson.

E. M. LOEW, well known New England independent circuit operator; E. Harold Stoneman, Allied executive and circuit operator; Joseph Cifre, head of a Boston Theatre Service Company, and Maurice N. Wolf, president of the Boston Friars Club, have gone to Florida to join Nathan Yamins, Allied head and circuit operator, who has been wintering there.

NAT WILLIAMS, acting for the Interstate Enterprises, has arranged for the installation of RCA-Sonotone hard-of-hearing aids in the Shaw theatre at Quincey, Fla.

S. K. Wolf. who has become active head of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. He was appointed executive vice president when Homer G. Tasker, president, was transferred to the West Coast by his employers, United Research Laboratories. Mr. Wolf is head of the acoustics department of Electrical Research Products.

JAMES MCALLISTER, assistant to Manager George French of Keith's Memorial theatre in Boston, will be married to Barbara Anderson of Stoneham, next month.

KENNETH DOUGLAS has returned to his desk at the Capitol Theatre Supply Company, where he is New England manager, after recovery from an appendicitis operation.

DONALD WHITE and Eleanor Monahan, both on the staff of the State, M. & P. house in Portland, Me., have announced their engagement.

WALTER E. KNOCHE is replacing the sound equipment in the Palace theatre at Fredericksburg, Tex., with RCA Photophone.

GEORGE FRIARY, formerly manager of the Central, in Biddeford, Me., has been appointed resident-director of the Broadway in Chelsea, which was recently reopened by M. & P. Theatres on a subsequent run policy.

AL KEHR, veteran showman who owns the Princess in Ogallala, Neb., recently opened the Prairie in the same city.

LAURENCE J. O'TOOLE of the Metropolitan in Boston, and Carlo Vannicola of RKO Theatres in New England, were recently featured on Art Moger's "Cartoonist School of the Air" over WCOP in Boston.

A. A. SPITZ, associated with Tony Romano in a number of motion picture enterprises, recently reopened the Park, in Auburn, Conn.

PHIL SELETZKY, chief booker for M. & P. Theatres in New England, and Mrs. Seletzky have become the parents of a boy.

JACOB LOURIE, executive of Netoco Theatres, and BEATRICE BUCKMAN, daughter of Nathan Buckman of the M. & P. Theatres, have announced their engagement. The wedding is planned for June.

THOMAS M. CURLEY, operator of the Queens, Ashland and Lee in St. Louis, Mo., has equipped the Queens with Photophone sound system.

W. D. LORD, who recently reopened the Star in West Pembroke, N. H., is also reopening the St. Croix Opera House in Calais, Me., which recently had been damaged by fire.

TRACY BARHAM, general manager of Southio Theatres, Inc., with headquarters at Hamilton, Ohio, has appointed JAMES STAMPER assistant at the Gordon theatre, manager of the Sorg at Middletown, Ohio. GEORGE GIBBS, JR., in charge of the Sorg, goes to the Gordon. ROBERT GIBBS, SR., who directed the Sorg, becomes advisor to the circuit executives. The two houses have just been acquired by Southio, which is a Paramount subsidiary.

VERNON H. ADAMS, former exploitation man for United Artists, recently took over the Pastime theatre at Marlboro, Mass., and has installed RCA Photophone.

H. W. WEINBERG, general manager of the Central States Theatre Corporation, has announced the purchase by that group of the Grand, at Estherville, Ia. Changes are to be made in the construction, maintenance and sound equipment of the theatre.

NATIONAL AMUSEMENT COMPANY, operators of the Fort theatre in Fort Atkinson, Wis., is completely remodeling the house, installing, among other things, new interior decorations and also air conditioning equipment.

ED THOMASSIE, formerly of the Hollywood theatre in Gretna, New Orleans, recently opened the Royal at Marrero.

G. C. LANTRIP, has purchased one of the new photophone sound reproducers for use in the Star theatre, Parrish, Ala.

D. TRIMBLE and T. MIKOLOWSKY, who operate the Liberty theatre at Masontown, Pa., have equipped it with RCA Photophone. Mr. Mikolowsky also operates the Rex in that city.

DAVID WEINSTOCK will open the Plaza, a 1,200-seat house, at Stamford, Conn., sometime in March.

WILL KERR, Cincinnati manager for RCA, reports installation of Photophone sound equipment at the Majestic, Crooksville, Ohio, the New Garden, an A. G. Constant unit at Portsmouth, Ohio, shortly to be reopened, and the Arista at Lebanon, Ky.

J. J. PARKER has opened his new United Artists theatre at Pendleton, Ore. The house, a 600-seater, has been entirely modernized and is under the management of Victor M. Keady.

J. T. and C. W. PHILLIPS are erecting a new 700-seat theatre at Swainsboro, Ga.

HENRY VANN, operator at Clinton, N. C., is planning the construction of a new house in that city.

LEWEN PIZOR is demolishing his Rialto in Phoenixville, Pa., and plans to erect a new modern house on the site.

The Use of Well Water in Air-Conditioning the Theatre

● There has been much digging of late, inspired by a hope for cheaper cooling, but frequently without consideration of the factors cited here

WATER, THOUGH many times causing theatre operators much trouble by finding its way into the theatre, is nevertheless a very important element in theatre operation. In air conditioning particularly it is of prime importance, and it represents one of the items of substantial proportions in determining the cost of air conditioning.

Water for a long time has been used in many ways as a medium of heat exchange or in the process of transferring heat from one substance to another. Perhaps the theatre manager most appreciates a large supply of cold water in the summer time because with it he can air condition his theatre, and air conditioning has proved to be an outstanding box office attraction in the warm season.

Because of the initial investment and the operating cost of mechanical refrigeration, theatre engineers and operators alike have been busy trying to find sources of water other than from the city mains for use in air conditioning. The search has finally resolved itself into trying to determine geographical locations where wells may profitably be dug with some reasonable assurance that water in sufficient quantity and at a sufficiently low temperature may be obtained at costs of digging and pump equipment substantially below the cost of mechanical equipment.

The digging of a well, in most parts of the country, is very speculative as it does not always produce the desired results. Though wells dugs in most localities will produce water the big gamble is how much and at what temperature. I wish to emphasize that the quantity and the temperature are all-important factors.

Well diggers are generally the most optimistic people; some of them would lead one to believe that a hole drilled into the ground in any location will produce all the cold water necessary for air conditioning. But such is not a fact. The course of subterranean or sub-surface waters has been the subject of study for many years by fine engineers and by the United States Government. Government engineers have drawn elaborate maps showing areas where they believe sub-surface waters exist, but even they can't state in exact terms that water exists in certain quantities and temperatures. Frequently some engineer or well-digging concern will have copies of such government maps, and it is well that the theatre manager or operator ask to see them.

DETERMINING VALUE OF WELL

THE EXPERIENCES of others in your locality is about the strongest factor in coming to a decision as to whether or not a well is feasible. Visit the dairies, breweries, ice plants and bottling works in the immediate vicinity, as they are large users of water, and determine from them whether they have wells and if so how much water they are getting and at what temperatures. It is only fair to state here that dry wells have resulted when dug within a hundred yards of a very successful well. There just is no positive rule for pre-determining the outcome before digging the well. This statement is made in spite of many claims of some engineers and well digging concerns to the contrary.

DRILLING PROVISIONS

If changes in the air conditioning system based upon well water are contemplated, it is much wiser to dig the well first and then determine the results before making commitments for new equipment. In some parts of the country some well digging companies will guarantee a definite quantity of water at not to exceed a specific temperature. If results do not measure up to the guarantee you just don't pay—the digger has taken the chance and lost. Such contracts cost somewhat more if the well produces the guaranteed amount of water at the guaranteed or lower temperature, but the extra cost might be considered insurance.

In some municipalities they refuse permission to discharge well water into the city sewer systems. This is presumably based upon the fact that as long as the water is not bought from the city the city sewers cannot be used to dispose of it after it has served its purpose in air-conditioning. Under such conditions it becomes necessary to dig a second well to carry off the used water. This, of course, runs the initial cost up.

PUMP EQUIPMENT

Practically all wells require pumping equipment in order to raise the water in sufficient quantity. There are quite a number of manufacturers who make good well pumps. Keep in mind that we theatre men hate to spend money for stand-by equipment and consequently, with one pump, the entire success of the whole plant hinges on the continuous performance of the one pump. So buy a good pump when you buy one.

Most wells are just a hole in the ground with a solid pipe down in it. On the end of the pipe where it enters the water bearing strata there is a bronze or brass pipe with holes of some size or shape in it. These strainers are anywhere from ten to thirty feet in length and their purpose is to hold out the gravel and silt so that the water may collect in them and then be lifted by the pump to the surface. Frequently, depending upon the nature of the water-bearing strata, it becomes necessary

VALUE OF FUELS: Natural gas has an average B.T.U. value of 1,100 per cubic foot. Manufactured gas (the kind most of us burn in kitchen ranges) has an average B.T.U. value of 550 B.T.U. (just half of natural gas). Fuel oils of the lighter grades, as burned in home boilers and in many theatres, has an average B.T.U. value of 140,000 B.T.U. per gallon. The heavier grades as used in industries and some few theatres has an average B.T.U. value of 145,000 B.T.U. per gallon. The average oil burner functions at about 75% efficiency.

Coals of the grade generally used in theatres have an average B.T.U. value of 13,000 B.T.U. per pound, and the efficiency of coal firing in the average theatre boiler is about 35 to 40%.

HEAT LOSSES: If your theatre has a wood roof 2 inches thick covered with tar and gravel roofing and no other insulation, you are, during these cold days, losing .242 B.T.U.'s per hour per square foot per degree of temperature difference between the outside air and the air in the attic space. Assume that the roof of your theatre has 8,000 square feet and the temperature outside is 20°F., the temperature in the attic 64°F. Sixty-four minus 20 is 44. So you have the following, .242 × 8000 × 44 85184 B.T.U.'s of heat being lost or dissipated each hour of operation from the roof; for an 11-hour day this amounts to 937024 B.T.U.'s lost.

Referring to the foregoing Tab.: Assume you burn oil of the 140,000 B.T.U. value at 5¼c. per gallon. That oil burner is only operating 75% efficient at best, so you only get 105,000 B.T.U.'s from the total of 140,000 per gallon that you buy. Hence 937,024 B.T.U.'s divided by 105,000 B.T.U.'s is 8.9; or your losses through the roof represent 8.9 gallons per day. There are about 200 days in the heating season, so 8.9 gallons X 200 days equals 1,780 gallons loss for the heating season. At 5¼c. per gallon this loss is $93.45 per heating season.

A roof of materials of poor insulating value lets heat come into the theatre in summer time just as it lets heat escape to the outdoors in the winter time. A well insulated roof saves and works for you the entire twelve months of the year.

TOILET STAINS: To remove urine stains from marble, the following procedure will be found effective.

Dissolve two pounds of trisodium phosphate crystals (obtainable from your druggist) in 1 gallon of hot water. Then mix with water to the consistency of a medium paste, 12 ounces of chlorinated lime. Next get a stone crock or an enameled or granite-ware 2 gallon pan and pour together the trisodium phosphate solution and the chlorinate of lime paste, and when mixed, thoroughly add enough water so that the entire mixture makes about 2 gallons. Use some of this liquid to add to quantities of powered talc to form a thick paste, then apply this talc paste to the stains about ¼-inch thick. The paste, being a strong bleaching agent should draw the stain out of the marble. When the paste has dried, wash off with water, and if necessary, apply another application of the paste.

NATURAL GAS: Is natural gas a good fuel to burn for theatre heating? Here are a few facts. With the flue gases from a gas heater leaving at 150° and burning a gas of B.T.U. (or calorific value) of 1,000, the efficiency of the furnace is about 88%, as against a steam boiler of 50% efficiency. Efficiency in any heating device is the ratio of the B.T.U. value of the fuel to the actual B.T.U. output or the B.T.U. that is converted into useful heat.

Gas furnaces, even when running at part load or possible poor regulation of the burners, still have an efficiency higher than the average steam boiler. If you operate a theatre in a natural gas belt you may be well repaid by giving some thought to changing the heating equipment of your theatre.

at one or two-year intervals to raise the pipe and clean the strainer. This process costs anywhere from twenty-five cents to sixty cents per foot of well depth, depending on how deep the well is.

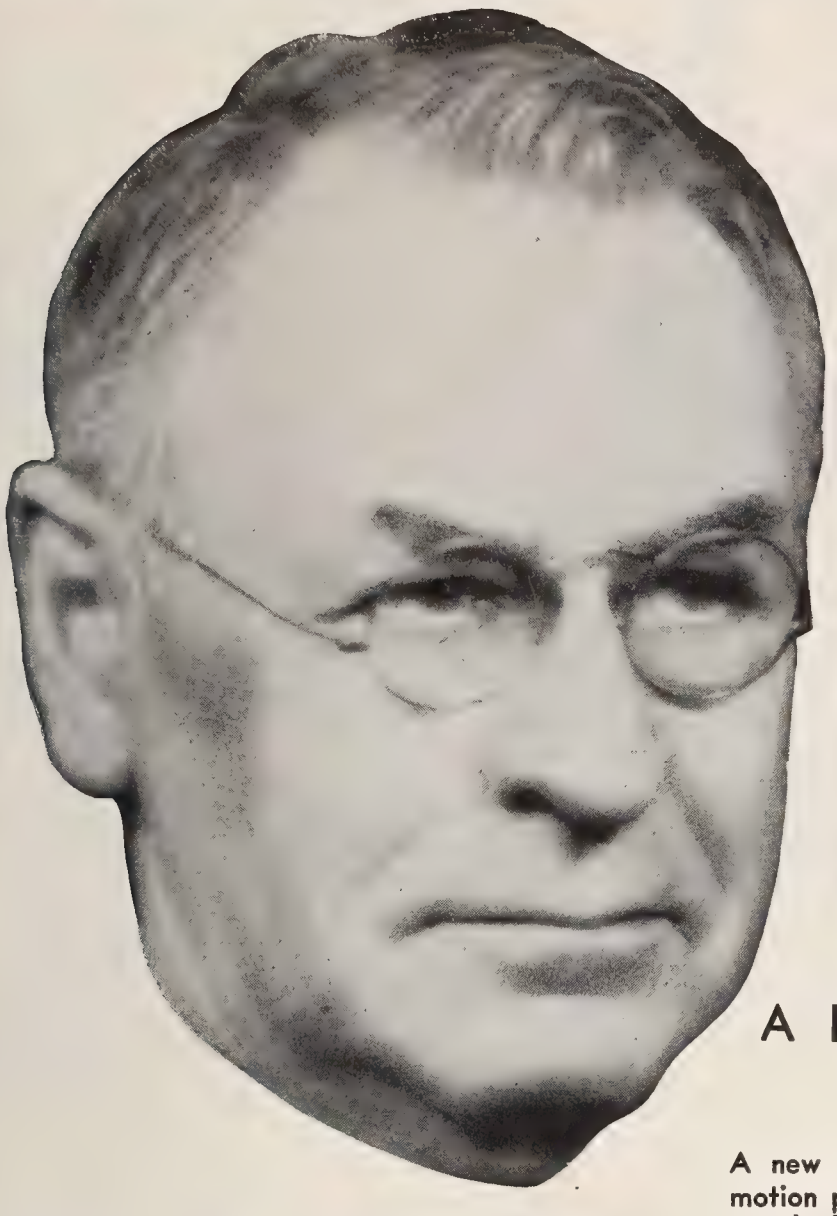
There is one other hazard—wells sometimes go dry. Quite frequently this can be corrected, if caused by a general lowering of the level of the sub-surface water, by pulling up the pipe and digging the well another thirty, 50 or 60 feet deep. In short, if at first you are successful in getting a well that produces, there is no positive assurance that your troubles are over.

There are parts of the country where well digging is uniformly successful and water in large quantities at temperatures in the low fifties (below the average dew point of the air) is obtained. In such instance the fortunate theatre operator has the equivalent of a refrigerating plant at an initial cost and an operating cost many times less than for mechanical refrigeration.

USING WELL WATER IN AIR-CONDITIONING

EVEN WITH mechanical refrigeration the cost of city water for condensing purposes, or the cost of a cooling tower is a substantial item. Frequently the temperature of the water in either case is hardly low enough to really operate efficiently, as the capacity of a compressor declines or falls off rather sharply with high temperature of the condensing water. Consequently if well water is available in sufficient quantity, even as high as seventy to seventy-two degrees, it is still worth while and will show substantial savings in the operation of mechanical refrigeration.

Wells generally cost about three to three and a half dollars per foot to dig and range in depth from sixty to six-hundred feet or more. The cost of operating pumping equipment is from three to five cents per thousand gallons. Compare this cost with your existing municipal water rates and see whether it represents a substantial saving. Of course the three to five cent cost is operating cost alone, it does not include interest, depreciation, insurance, tax or other fixed charges.



EQUIPMENT

Perhaps the foregoing may sound discouraging—it is merely presented in this manner to emphasize and impress upon you that wells are speculative. However, let's assume that there is a supply of well water at, say, 55 degrees temperature; under such favorable conditions a system most certainly should be designed to take advantage of it—and there are some definite advantages of the air washer over a coil installation. Manufacturers of cooling coils sometimes over-sell their product and tend to make the prospective buyer overconfident.

Whenever water is run through a metal pipe there is a very great possibility that dirt, scale and corrosion will in time take place in that pipe. The moment that this begins in water cooling coils the efficiency of the plant begins to drop sharply. Another point is that some type of throw-away filter is a practical necessity with a coil job, otherwise dirt carried in by the air will cake or adhere to the coils. Coils as designed today are not easy to clean—the most satisfactory method is live steam, but steam is not generally available in theatres in the warm season. Coils definitely have their place in air conditioning, but an air washer is a much better bet on a straight cold water job.

In designing a cold water job it has been

OF

A PRACTICAL GUIDE TO GOOD PROJECTION AND QUICK TROUBLE-SHOOTING

A new Bluebook by Richardson is always an event of signal importance to the motion picture industry. It is being issued at this time to meet the truly urgent demand of thousands of users of the old Bluebooks for an accurate, modern evaluation of the changes and refinements in the art and science of sound reproduction and projection including all the apparatus. Richardson's expert knowledge of the craft he has taught and followed for more than three decades makes this latest treatise, in the opinion of leading authorities, the most comprehensive, most useful projection manual ever published.

1 IN ONE HANDY VOLUME

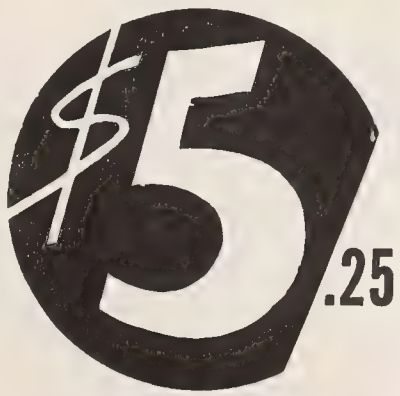
The new Bluebook is complete in one handy volume. It is a great improvement over the former expensive and cumbersome three-volume sets.

2 COMPLETE and UP-TO-DATE

The new Bluebook does a three-fold job: (1) it gives a detailed description of the construction, wiring and functioning of every piece of sound and projection apparatus used in a modern projection room. (2) It gives all the instructions for the operation and maintenance of this equipment and (3) it contains a complete trouble-shooting department as a first-aid in breakdowns.

3 QUICK-FINDING INDEX

An extremely simple but comprehensive indexing system makes the new Blue Book a truly great aid to working projectionists. Whatever problem comes up in the day's routine is covered on the instant with hardly more than the twirl of your thumb. Projectionists of long experience in the projection room will be first to appreciate this remarkable time-saver.



4 QUICK TROUBLE-SHOOTER

And it is, within its 700 pages, a practical trouble-shooter, which alone entitles it to a place in every projectionists tool kit.

714 Pages of Text, Charts and Data

The new Bluebook contains 714 pages and 153 illustrations—photographs and schematics of every description. It is 6x9 in size with large readable type for easy visibility in the projection room under all conditions. It is entirely original from cover to cover, not a line of type from any of the many previous editions being used. Its low price of $5.25 and its handiness in one volume are among the many innovations.

KEEP DIRT OUT KEEP PROFITS IN

The millions of particles of dirt and dust daily entering your theatre are like so many demons, eating away at your profits in a dozen ways.

An ounce of fine sand, imbedded in a carpet that has heavy travel, can ruin it in a few weeks by cutting the nap. Dust ruins decorations and equipment and makes frequent painting necessary. Dust mars motion-picture projection, interferes with stage performance and gives the theatre a "smell."

Why not remove this dirt and dust—just after the patrons leave and before it has a chance to spread?

Spencer Central and Portable Vacuum Cleaning Systems show the way. They save cleaning time, are efficient in operating and maintenance costs, and have proven their ability to produce results in hundreds of theatres.

found that not more than a 5-minute air change in the auditorium, or twelve changes an hour, is necessary. In calculating the air change at the above rate that rate, per seat, being less than 35 cubic feet per minute per seat, the fan capacity should be increased as 35 c.f.m. is a minimum requirement for a cold water installation.

OPERATION

In most of the atmospheric cooling jobs of the past the air velocity in the auditorium has been too great. This has resulted from too few delivery points and the effort to gain distribution by velocity of air alone. Of course, more delivery points add to the cost of the job, but that extra cost is justified because it will mean fewer complaints from patrons. Air velocities within the auditorium should never be in excess of fifty feet a minute.

Cold water air conditioning can be automatically electrically controlled about as successfully as a mechanical refrigeration job can be. Cold water air conditioning with air washers are more easily controlled and more flexible than when coils are used. With an air washer there is possible a percentage of cold well water being mixed with warmer, recirculated water, which feature is excellent for in-between seasons, early spring and late fall when the weather is not really warm; but the air in auditoriums becomes uncomfortable primarily due to the body heat and moisture given off by people.

It is worth while investigating the possibilities of well water in your locality. Before the hot weather really sets in and in a future issue of BETTER THEATRES a plan will be described showing how to make very good use of cold well water should the well produce proper temperature but insufficient quantity for straight evaporative cooling.—J. T. K.

REQUIREMENTS OF VACUUM CLEANERS IN THE THEATRE

A VACUUM CLEANER consists essentially of, first, an air suction pump or exhauster, connected by a pipe or tube or directly to a nozzle having a slot shaped orifice which is passed over the surface or material to be cleaned. The lip of the orifice must be kept in good and close contact with the material or surface being cleaned. Secondly, there is an air filter which removes the dirt from the air either before or after it enters into the exhauster. The filter serves at the same time as receptacle or chamber for collecting the dust and dirt. This receptacle is so constructed that the dirt can be easily removed. In the small domestic types of cleaner the filter and receptacle is commonly a bag.

STATIONARY SYSTEMS

Vacuum cleaners may be classed into two general types, stationary and portable.

VITROLITE fronts back up the box office

Your theatre can be made more attractive through the use of a modern colorful application of Vitrolite. For fronts, lobbies, ticket booths, lounges, or wash rooms Vitrolite, the colorful structural glass, gives a rich brilliant surface that appeals to your customers. It always attracts the crowds.

Vitrolite comes in many colors ideally suited for any decorative scheme, and combines beautifully with modern metals, chromium, and stainless steel. Unusual effects are obtained with sand blast and color inlay.

The splendor of its gleaming surface does not mar, check, or craze. It will last a lifetime and never grows dull. A damp cloth cleans it instantly.

Stationary or central vacuum systems are only installed in large buildings, office buildings, hotels, apartments and theatres. Such installations have a permanent system of pipes, with outlets conveniently located so that all parts of the building may be reached with a hose not less than 50 feet long. In such installations the suction is provided by pumps of the positive displacement type or the multi-stage fan type. The type of pump is determined largely by the type of work to be done by the cleaner. Generally a pump of the positive displacement type is capable of providing a stronger suction, but the multifan type is the one most used, inasmuch as the cleaning of rugs, carpeting and draperies does not require the suction that may be provided by a positive displacement pump if properly designed tools are used with the multifan type of pump.

In a multifan type of pump air sucked is at the rate of from 60 to 70 cubic feet per minute per nozzle, and within the system about 2½ to 3 inches of mercury vacuum is maintained.

While the positive displacement type maintains the higher vacuum, it moves less air. There is no question but that the 5 or 6 inches of vacuum of which it may be capable, will remove very heavy particles of grit or dirt that may have become imbedded in a rug, but there is, however, a question in some minds whether such suction applied to fabrics does not have a destructive effect. Certainly it does not help or improve fabrics.

The multifan type, carrying, as it does, a vacuum of 2½ to 3 inches and handling double the quantity of air, is the most satisfactory. From two to three inches of vacuum is enough to loosen the grit and dirt and other heavy particles, and when loosened it becomes entrained in the large current of air and is carried away. The additional volume of air provides additional air brushing effect on the carpet.

PORTABLE CLEANERS

These points are brought out here because much the same reasoning is to be followed in considering portable types of vacuum cleaners. Portable vacuum cleaners may be divided into two groups. One is the heavy duty truck type, very similar to the stationary plants, but of course much smaller and mounted on trucks with three or four wheels. This type of cleaner is too heavy to be transported to the various levels in a theatre except by elevator. In weight they range from 100 pounds to 225 pounds.

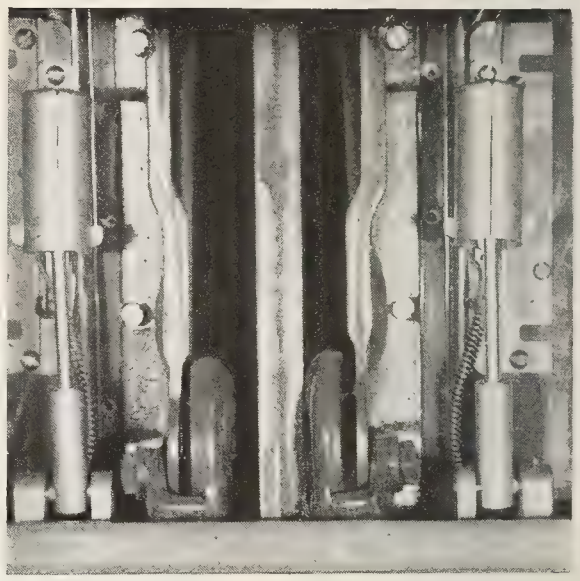
The second classification is the domestic type, designed especially to replace the broom and the carpet sweeper in the home. Everyone has a more or less general and intimate knowledge of this type of cleaner. Some makes of the domestic type cleaners have been developed purely and simply to meet and undersell the market. Such cleaners are not worth a quarter of what they ask for them. Other makes have been well designed and constructed in accordance with good mechanical principles and careful workmanship. cleaners range in weight up to 25 pounds.

The domestic type vacuum cleaners on the market are not satisfactory for theatre use for the following general reasons: they are (a) built too light to stand hard service; (b) powered too light to stand prolonged periods of operation; (c) designed to displace too small a quantity or volume of air at too low velocities to clean thoroughly; (d) equipped with motors not sufficiently protected against dirt; (e) without sufficient provision for proper lubricating of motor and fans; (f) generally not provided with ball bearings.

A satisfactory theatre type vacuum cleaner must overcome each of the abovementioned faults. To be specific, it should be capable of maintaining 3 inches of mercury vacuum (this is sufficient) and must move from 55 to 60 cubic feet of air per minute. It is to be assumed that in order to accomplish this it will have to weigh 50 to 60 pounds.

The real problem in vacuum cleaning in theatres is the stairways, the stepping in the balcony and the boxes or loges. Because of these situations the type of domestic cleaner which has the motor mounted on the housing forming the cleaning tool, absolutely cannot be used. There is one make, however, which has the suction and receiving elements in a "pig," to which a hose is attached, and this type may have some efficacy where stair flights are short.

To complete the list of troubles in connection with vacuum cleaners in theatres, mention must be made of one which is no fault of the manufacturer. The theatre vacuum cleaner gets the least amount of care or attention of any of the items of neglected theatre equipment. No one ever pays any attention to it until it stops functioning. Types and makes now used in theatres would give much better service if one hour each week was spent in cleaning and oiling them.—J. T. K.



SEAT INDICATING SYSTEM

TO KEEP BEFORE a manager, his assistant or other member of the house staff in charge at any time of patron traffic, a complete and accurate picture of the seats occupied and unoccupied and thus to facilitate the direction of patrons to available chairs, is the purpose of the seat indicating system which has been developed by the Bilmarjac Corporation of New York for adaptation to small as well as large houses. The present system represents comprehensive changes in the method of a similar system brought out some years ago and suitable only for the larger houses. It had its first installation in the 300-seat Pix theatre in White Plains, N. Y.

The system operates electrically with power taken from a transformer of either from 105 to 115 volts, or from 210 to 230 volts on the primary side, reduced, according to distance, to 5½, 6 and 6½ volts on the secondary side. Each seat is connected with a light box on the aisle seat, and the whole system is connected with a masterboard at the rear of the auditorium, or other convenient location. The wires from the transformer to the aisle box and to the switch transmit the current in multiples of two and feed the lamps on the masterboard and on the aisle box. The switch automatically makes or breaks the contact as the patron sits in or rises from a seat. When a chair is empty, a light in the aisle box at the end of its row goes on simultaneously with a light corresponding to that seat in the masterboard. The masterboard shows, of course, the entire seating plan in replica.

Close-up view of aisle box.

Switches attached to seats.

The wires in the cable are treated for the purpose of preventing shorts, while the covering is treated to resist attack by rodents. The cable covering is treated to protect the cable against fire.

Lamps used in the Bilmarjac system are especially made to have uniformity glow so as not to create a spotty appearance in the aisles.

The first unit of the Bilmarjac factory at Linden, N. J., recently completed, has 10,000 square feet of floor space, and ground is available for two more adjoining units. In addition to the major elements of the equipment now manufactured here, provision is being made for the manufacture after May 1 of the lamps used in the system.

The accompanying photographs of various elements in the system show them as installed in the Pix theatre, which was described in the January 11th issue of BETTER THEATRES. A similar system has been arranged for in the new Rialto theatre in New York, described elsewhere in this issue.

Chair developed by the American Seating Company especially for installation in the new Pix theatre, 300-seat house of novel design and construction recently opened in White Plains, N. Y. This type of chair was installed throughout the theatre. It has a spring-back and full-floating spring edge seat, and is upholstered in a coral shade of mohair. The standards are of special design decorated in colors to harmonize with the balance of the chairs and with the interior of the theatre.

Two Heating Systems for Theatres

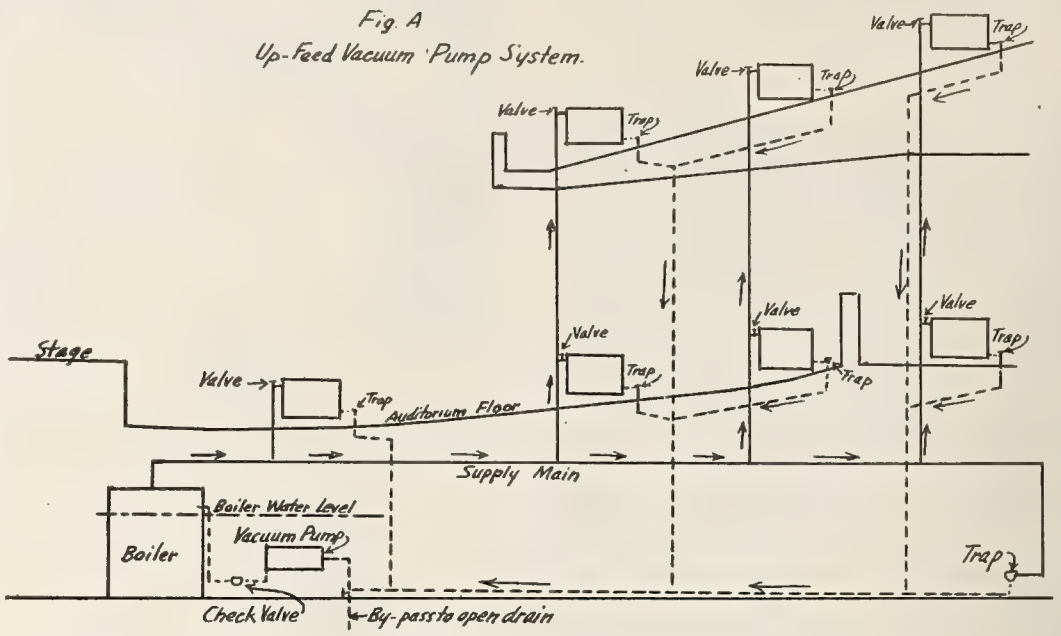

FIGURE A represents a heating plant operated on the principle of maintaining a vacuum in the return main. The return main is indicated by dotted lines. A vacuum in the return main is maintained at all times by automatic operation of the vacuum pump. In this type of system valves must be used on all radiator supply lines and thermostatic traps on all radiator returns. The main supply line should slope down away from the boiler and have a trap at the drip end where it joins or becomes the return main.. On some vacuum systems the individual risers, particularly if they are high and without pipe covering, are dripped (connected) to the return main and a trap must be used. For emphasis, on this system no connection whatever must be made from the supply side to the vacuum side of the system, except through a thermostatic trap. One of the great advantages of the vacuum system is quietness of operation. Such systems are economical to operate.—J. T. K.

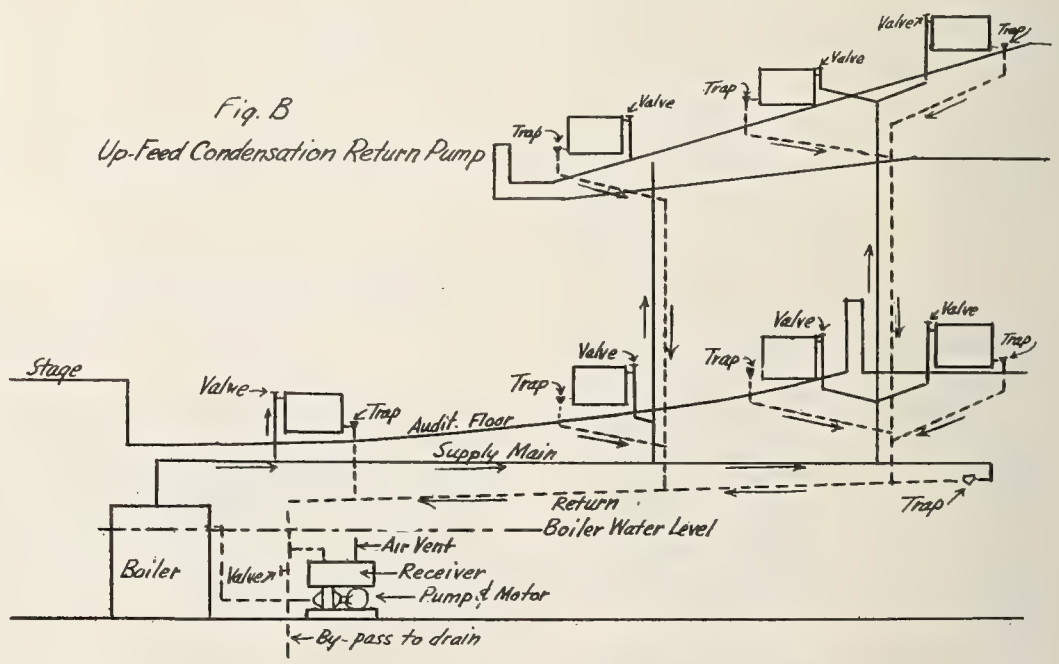

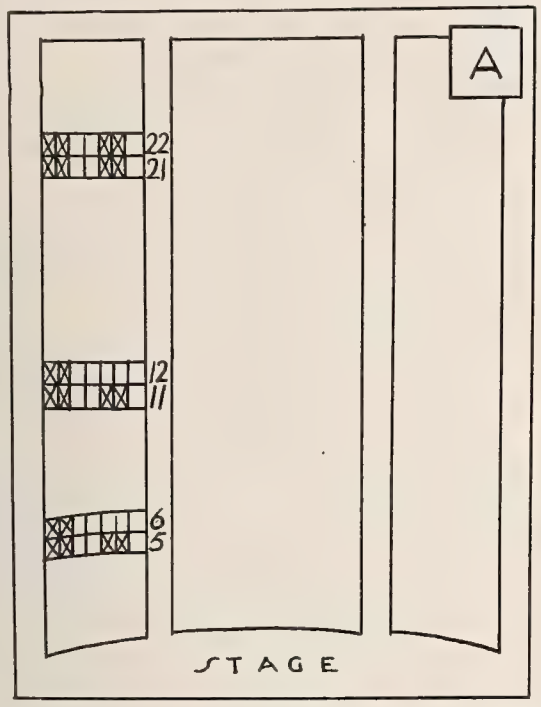

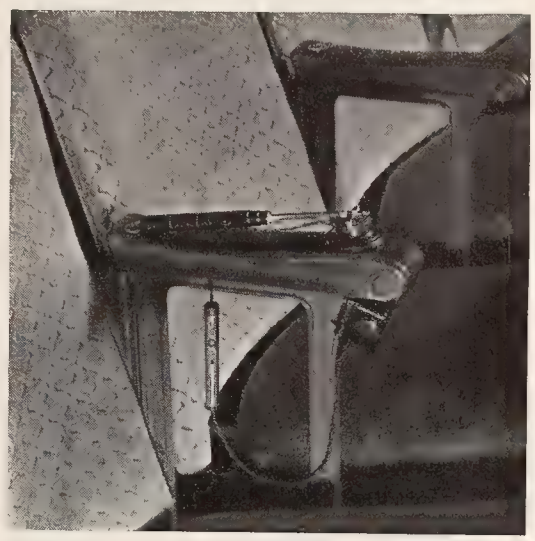

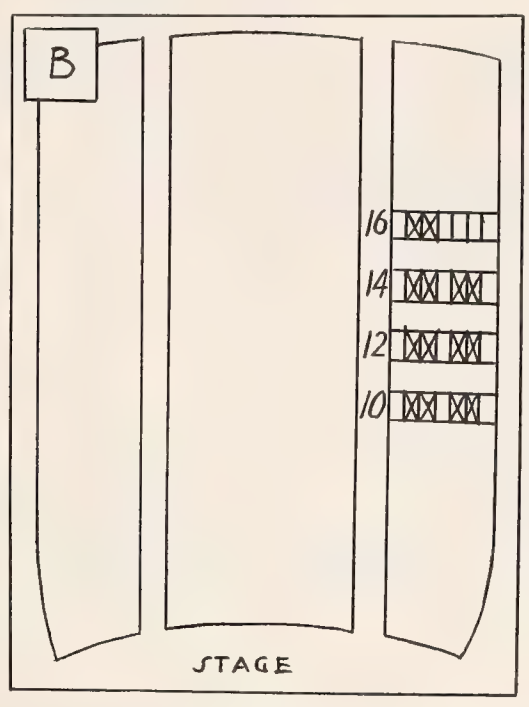

FIGURE B represents a heating system using a pump to return condensation to the boiler. This system is usually required when the elevation of the boiler with respect to the return main is such that the water of condensation will not return to the boiler by gravity. However, the idea may be used on any two-pipe system. Condensation pumps always pump from a tank (called a receiver) into the boiler. Condensation pumps are available in units where the receiver and pump are assembled together and may be installed as a unit. However, any tank may be used as a receiver and as the pump handles only water several different types of water pumps may be used to pump from the tank to the boiler. Condensation pumps should operate automatically from some type of float switch in the receiver, kicking on when the water level rises to a predetermined level and shutting off at a low limit. Condensation pumps may be used on any two-pipe system and on several types of one-pipe systems.—J. T. K.

SIDE LOCATION FOR THEATRE HEARING AIDS

Diagrams of two Acousticon installations in side areas (see text). Above is pictured a chair with the typical double-outlet jack-box serving two chairs. Receivers operate from a 3-watt amplifier, which has a capacity of 50 receivers.

SELECTION OF the chairs to be wired for theatre hearing aids may seem to be a fairly simple matter, yet it has caused much puzzlement to theatre operators. Inquiries received by BETTER THEATRES have afforded evidence of this quandary, while observation of actual installations discloses a vast difference of opinion of what the location of wired chairs should be.

Part of this variation in location is to be attributed, of course, to local differences, but a large part is due to the varying degree to which exhibitors insist upon isolating patrons with impaired hearing in the less desirable sections of the auditorium.

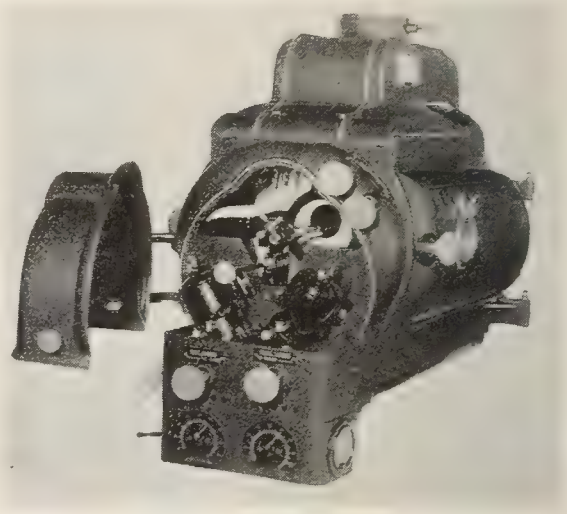
In the January 11th issue of BETTER THEATRES three seating diagrams were presented showing commendable compromises between the best and the worst seats on the main floor and in the balcony, based on the average choice represented in a certain group of installations. The diagrams accompanying these paragraphs show two actual installations of hearing aids and illustrate two different types of locations in the side banks of chairs on the main floor.

Diagram A represents the installation in the Orpheum theatre in Foxboro, Mass. Here the patron with impaired hearing is offered a rather choice of chairs with respect to distance from the screen. The inner chairs of the front group, of course, have a wide angle of vision.

Diagram B illustrates the method chosen by A. H. Eichorn for his Playhouse in Rye, N. Y. Here the patron is allowed less choice as to distance from the screen, but the location represents average preference in this matter, while all of the wired chairs are as far out of the extreme wide vision area as locations in the side banks of seats permits.

These installations provided for the patron's choice of either air-conduction or bone-conduction receivers. The ratios between the two types, according to the manufacturers of this equipment (Acousticon) are approximately eight to two, with air-conduction represented by the large figure. Lorgnette type (with handles) are preferred by approximately 75 per cent., according to this manufacturer, the remainder choosing headbands.

TWO-MOTOR PROJECTION LAMP



THE PROJECTION lamp recently developed by Walter Preddy, manufacturer and theatre supply dealer of San Francisco, for high-intensity screen illumination in small and medium-sized theatres, has, among its notable features, two motors for the purpose of providing feed mechanisms for each carbon entirely independent of each other. There are two complete motor speed controls. A special relay prevents the motors from operating until the arc is struck.

Crater guides are provided to keep each carbon tip in its proper position, and a voltmeter registers arc voltage across the carbons. All feed screws are protected from dust and copper particles by covers in order to insure against current waste through leakage set by such deposits.

A series type magnetic deflector maintains the tail flame in upright position. Both carbon carriers may be moved freely along the feed screws by pressing a lever. The carbon holders are adjustable to accommodate carbons of any diameter. The mirror is equipped with a shield for protection against pitting.

The mechanism is contained in a housing of baked enamel and crystal. Knobs and handles are of green quartz. Almost all of the construction is in cast aluminum.

The door is hinged at the top, and a large rear cover, which is easily removed, provides ready access to all parts thus protected. The ventilating flue is equipped with a damper.

time. He has the 1936 prospects of the erstwhile Boston Braves (now reorganized and renamed the Bees) all doped.

"They ought to finish well up in the National League. As for the Red Sox, I don't see how they can miss copping the American League pennant."

Which statements should indicate his enthusiasm for the local teams.

Mr. Morris was the first manager in the Loew circuit to be assigned to a motion picture theatre outside of New York. He came to Boston during December, 1910, and has directed the destinies of the 2,970-seat Orpheum ever since. Until a few months ago this theatre was one of the foremost vaudeville houses in the country. It has now gone on a date-and-date straight film policy (fluctuating between single and double features) with the newer Loew's State in the Back Bay section of the city.

"There is no indication at present that we will return to vaudeville," Mr. Morris said. "We get a far larger turnover with straight pictures. For instance, with "Strike Me Pink" we are grinding over six shows daily. The net is appreciably higher." And, by way of general comment on the present condition of vaudeville, regarding both the performers and the public reaction, he added, "We are drawing a different clientele since dropping stage shows."—BRAD ANGIER.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

A STEADY READER of your magazine wishes some information. I have some friends who are interested in building a theatre along the lines of the Pix theatre illustrated in your last issue. However, they have in mind a 700-seat house, all on one floor. They desire to know what size lot they will need, the cost of building, including plumbing, wiring, etc. They intend to use the same type of building material as used in the Pix house.

Although the above information is meagre, I hope wou will be able to enlighten us.—L. E. F.

The Answer:

FOR A THEATRE with a seating capacity of 700 seats, the most economical size of the ground floor would be 50 feet wide and 120 feet deep. The seats should be arranged with a center bank of fourteen seats across, and an aisle on each side, with two wall banks of seven seats each. This would require 25 rows of seats.

Since you are familiar with the design and construction of such a type of theatre as mentioned in your inquiry, and have read the article accompanied by illustrations in the January 11th issue of BETTER THEATRES, I suggest that you obtain information regarding the costs from the architects who designed this theatre. They are Bianculli & Ghiani, 18 East 41st Street, New York City.

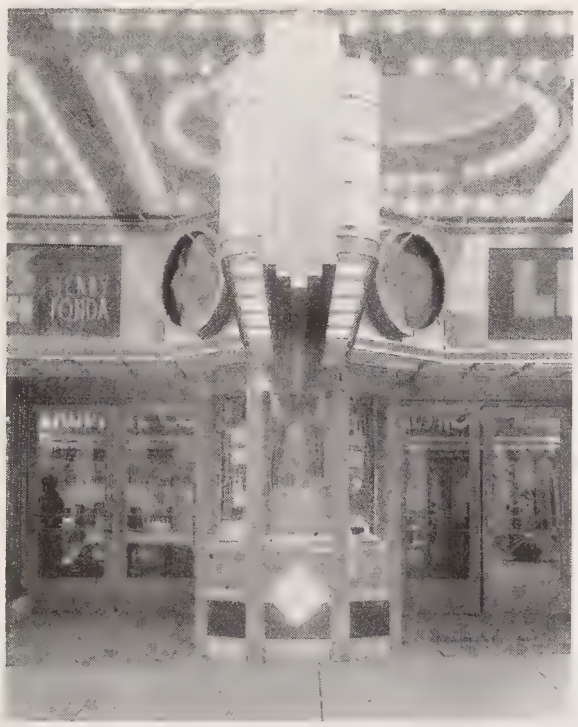
The Question:

IT IS OUR intention in the near future to remodel our theatre. From time to time in BETTER THEATRES section we have seen fronts and plans of different houses and wondered if you perhaps had some plans or suggested layouts that might fit our purpose.

The theatre now seats 470 downstairs, and 230 upstairs. The building is two stories and is about 110 feet by 60 feet wide. Any suggestions you may have, or plans, would be greatly appreciated.—L. K.

The Answer:



I REGRET that this department cannot furnish you with plans or suggested layouts (see editorial note at head of this department). The designs of different theatres in past issues of BETTER THEATRES might be gone over in an effort to get suggestions. I am quite sure that you will find something which will be adaptable to your requirements.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

For the remodeling of the front I suggest that you use structural glass or Formica, tile, etc. New display frames and attraction boards on the marquee will always make a great improvement.

If it is necessary to change the entire atmosphere of the interior, cover walls and ceilings with sound absorbing tiles, such as Nu-Wood, gypsum or Celotex. For wall covering, wood-grained sheetrock or painted pressed wood, applied with chromium or stainless steel strips is quite effective. Draped wall panels also will make quite a change, and of course new modern electric light fixtures are a very important factor in making a complete transformation. If, when you come to a decision concerning the style and layout, you have any specific questions, we shall be glad to answer them.

An interesting combination of glass, steel, porcelain and illumination in the new front of the RKO Palace in Columbus, Ohio. The design is very colorful, blending shades of red and blue, black and, in the trimmings, silver and gold. The light flows from a glass center piece above the box office and is reflected on to large illuminated attraction boards and is diffused over the frosted glass marquee ceiling. Total wattage (500 bulbs) is 50,000, exclusive of a vertical sign. The front was designed by Paul Cox and A. H. MacDowell, under the supervision of Nat Holt, division manager.

The Question:

WILL YOU kindly advise the largest possible seating capacity, both with and without balcony, to be secured on a lot 40x80 feet, and the probable cost of putting up a building not at all elaborate.

Quotations are to be of course exclusive of seats and booth equipment. Stage is not a matter of importance, and a false stage would be all that is necessary.

The writer is also in position to secure a lot 60x125 and would also like the cost as per above on this. Thanks for any information you can give me.—K. F. B.

The Answer:

THE MAXIMUM seating capacity for a theatre 40 feet by 80 feet would be 324 seats. The ground floor is really too small to justify the expenditure of building a balcony. The minimum cost of such a building should not be estimated at less than $12,000, this is exclusive of all equipment.

For a theatre on an area 60 feet by 125 feet the maximum seating capacity would be 870 seats on one floor, and the minimum cost of such a building, including general, plumbing, heating, ventilating, and electric wiring contracts, but exclusive of equipment, would be $30,000. A theatre of this size will be adaptable to a balcony from 250 to 300 capacity. It should also be provided with a large platform in the form of a stage for screen and horns and leaving enough room to stage small acts.

The construction of a balcony would increase the cost at least $4,000 on account of increased cubical contents.

The Question:

I HAVE BEEN planning to build a theatre of 350 seats for some time, and I wonder if you could give me some information. The theatre is to have 350 seats, 250 downstairs and 100 in the balcony for colored. How big should the lot be? How can the box office be fixed so that only one ticket seller would be necessary? How big should the foyer be?

How should the seats be arranged? Is it best to have the projection room above or below the balcony?

What would be the approximate cost of such a theatre? Should this theatre be located in the center of the business district (no competition)? Where can I get a plan for it?—L. S.

The Answer:

THE SIZE of the lot to accommodate a theatre as described in your inquiry should be at least 30 or 32 feet wide, and 100 feet deep.

I do not quite understand your question about the box office. Most box offices are arranged for one ticket seller (and scarcely big enough for one).

The lobby should be 12 feet deep, and the foyer can be from 6 to 8 feet wide for such a small theatre.

The seats should be arranged with a center bank of 13 or 14 seats in a row, with a wall aisle on each side.

It is advisable to place the projection room above the balcony.

The minimum cost of such a theatre should be figured at not less than 18 cents per cubic foot and as the approximate contents of such a theatre would be 95,000 cubic feet, the cost would be around $17,000. This, however, does not include equipment.

If possible, locate the theatre as near to the center of the business district as possible; even if there is no competition now, who knows when it may come, so select the best location.

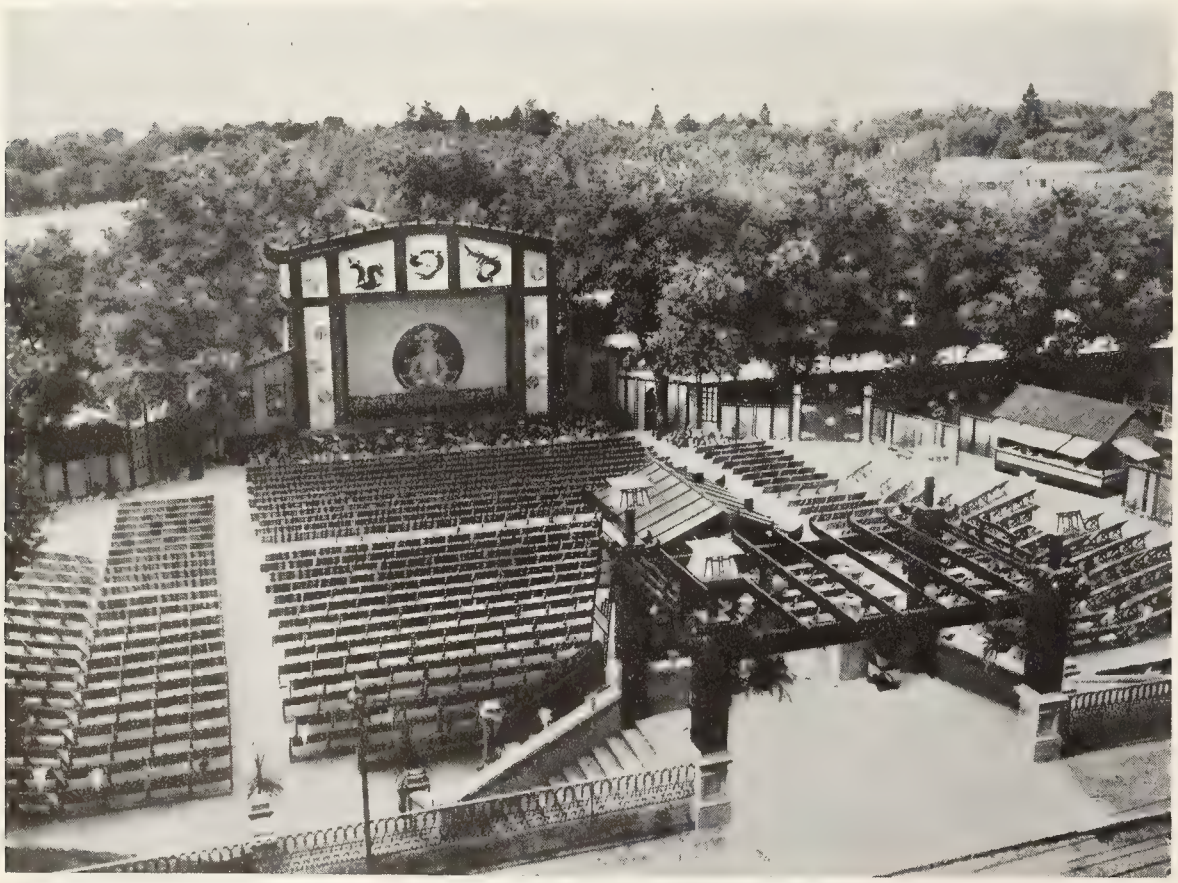
For plans I advise you to employ an architect—preferably one with experience in motion picture theatre designing.

The Question:

I'M FIGURING on changing or improving the front of my building but am not able to go to much expense. Could you suggest changes for me that will make it look better and that can be done by my local mechanics? I'm enclosing two snapshots for your convenience.—M. K.

The Answer:

TO IMPROVE the exterior of your theatre, I suggest that you install a marquee carrying name of the theatre, and with attraction boards with changeable letters. Provide corner poster frames at each side of the entrance, build a shadow box over front entrance doors. Most of this can be done by local mechanics.



A little paint goes a long way in making a front attractive, and by also using chromium metal strips for trimming your present front a great improvement can be made. Anything more than these changes would necessitate considerable demolition and reconstruction.

The Question:

I AM REMODELING a building in our town now to be used as a picture theatre. I need some assistance on how to make the inside of this building look attractive and wish you would please help me out in this matter. We only have a small town of about 1,500 population, but our people really like a good show.

The building to be used is 28 feet by 120 feet, a good brick building and well located. We will of course have to stay out of too much money in decorations, but I feel like that a small amount of money spent in the right way will help out a whole lot.—W. S. M.

With the approach of spring, there will probably be a recurrence of schemes for outdoor motion picture theatres. These usually provide space for automobiles, and although the one pictured above has no such provision, it offers suggestions for a decorative treatment for one that does. The pagoda-like structure just below the entrance suggests treatment for a projection house. This theatre is not located in China, but in Australia. It is the Chinese Gardens in Adelaide, operated by Waterman Brothers. The capacity is 600.

The Answer:

THE MOST inexpensive way to make the interior of your theatre attractive and at the same time modern is to use for wall covering some decorative and at the same time sound-absorbing tiles such as Nu-Wood or Celotex. By the use of a V-shaped plane, a very effective design may be obtained. Or cover the walls with wood-grained sheetrock, which comes in a walnut or knotty pine finish in sheets 4 feet wide and 10 feet long. Cover the joints with foil-covered or metal strips. The materials mentioned do not require decorating, and the walls on which this material is applied do not have to be plastered. How-advise you to fur out with wood strips.

You will get quite a few ideas out of the past issues of the BETTER THEATRES for decorative schemes. Also write the manufacturers of the aboved named materials for their catalogues, which show quite a few designs.

declare that a certain form of amusement is deleterious to the public welfare, when it has none of the elements of a nuisance, and has no capacity or tendency to become such, the act of the city in thus ordaining exceeds its power, for it thereby trespasses upon the constitutional rights of its citizens."

In other words, a city ordinance is void which regulates a portion of the businesses in the same classification, as theatres, and if the same regulations do not apply alike to all businesses in this same classification.

In another recent case (162 S. E. 497) the higher court laid down the law, as follows:

"There must be no discrimination among all within the same lawful classification. . . . The discriminations which are open to objection are those where persons engaged in the same business are subjected to different restrictions, or are held entitled to different privileges under the same conditions. . . ."

With respect to imposing an unreasonably high license a recent court (179 S. E. 837) held:

"The mayor and council of a city have not . . . the power to impose upon a useful and legitimate business a prohibitory tax which would require an abandonment of the business. . . ."

By M. MARVIN BERGER
Member of the Bar, State of New York

THE DEVELOPMENT in some localities of a movement to curtail, by local ordinance the building of new theatres or the reopening of closed houses, raises an interesting question of constitutional law. If pressure is felt from these local enactments, this question will undoubtedly be referred to the courts for solution.

The ordinances enacted in several communities are roughly of two types. One type, through the medium of a licensing system, attempts to limit the number of theatres in the locality in proportion to the population of the community—one theatre to so many thousand people. Additional licenses in excess of the quota are made a matter of discretion with local authorities.

The other type of ordinance prohibits the operation or control of a theatre for the purpose of " 'cinching a competitor' or preventing or destroying competition." Both forms of ordinances prescribe fines and prison sentences for violations.

In the opinion of the writer and of several attorneys experienced in motion picture law, these ordinances are clearly unconstitutional. The following may fairly be said to represent our reasons for the illegality of such local laws.

The fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution, provides, among other things, that no State "shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law; nor deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." A municipal ordinance, passed by a local legislative body under the general authority delegated to such body by the legislature of a State, is a State law within the meaning of the federal Constitution, and accordingly the protection of the fourteenth amendment extends against the acts of a municipality, town or city.

Specifically, what does the fourteenth amendment guarantee to a person? In the words of the Supreme Court of the United States, "upon this general question, we have said that the guaranty of the equal protection of the laws means that no person or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or classes in the same place and under like circumstances." And in another case, the Supreme Court has stated its interpretation in this language:

> The Fourteenth Amendment . . . undoubtedly intended not only that there should be no arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty or arbitrary spoliation of property but that equal protection and security should be given to all under like circumstances in the enjoyment of their personal and civil rights . . . that no impediment should be interposed to the pursuits of anyone except as applied to the same pursuits by others under like circumstances; that no greater burdens should be laid upon one than are laid upon others in the same calling and condition.

The only limitation upon the operation of the fourteenth amendment is found in what is known as the "police power" of a State. This is the power of the State or municipality to make such laws as are

Trick Sound Hook-Ups For Exploitation and Novelties

● Outlining the kinds, arrangements and costs of equipment required for various stunts that have proved effective in promoting business for the theatre

By H. C. ROLLS

ADDING SOUND to marquee exploitation presents endless possibilities in compelling attention that have only recently come into notice. Before the advent of reliable, low-cost amplifiers they would have been impractical. The Rivoli Theatre in New York, of which John Wright is manager, literally stops the crowds with a simple and highly effective gag tied in with "The Ghost Goes West."

A cut-out of the ghost, more than life-size, stands before the theatre. "Whisper in the ghost's ear," says the caption. The ghost's ear contains a microphone. The ghost's mouth hides a loud-speaker. A rapid-fire comedian in one of the offices answers all whispers with ready patter.

This trick requires two amplifiers, a large one for the loudspeaker and a smaller one for the microphone. The comedian wears headphones, of course, and doesn't require loudspeaker power. Phones are necessary in his case to avoid feedback. Otherwise the whisper in the ghost's ear, coming out of the comedian's loudspeaker, would enter the comedian's microphone, and from the ghost's mouth re-enter the ghost's ear, and so on, going round and round, amplified twice at each revolution, and in a fraction of a second the entire system would emit only one loud squeal. The same condition, as most theatre men know who have had any experience with microphones, will occur with only one amplifier if loudspeaker sound can re-enter the system and be amplified again and again. Hence the comic wears a headset, which saves all trouble in the course of installation and reduces the price of the amplifier that connects him with the ghost's ear.

All the equipment necessary for this simple trick can be bought for about $80. Any radio supply house will match it at that price, with volume enough for the ghost to be heard clearly across the street. The local radio dealer may be willing to rent it for less than that. If the theatre already has a public address system not in use at the time, the cost of the additional microphone, amplifier and headphones for the ghost's ear may be $30 or less.

CARDBOARD SINGER

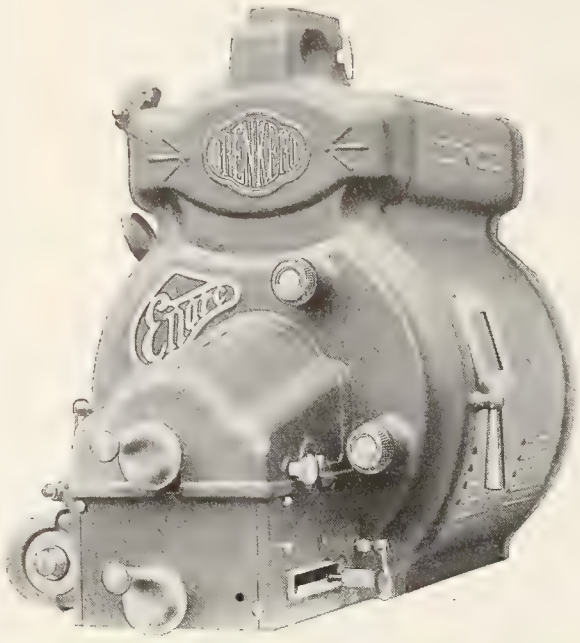
A somewhat similar but less elaborate tie-in between exploitation cutouts and sound consisted of a very elementary modification of an old trick. The use of an additional speaker above the box-office, to treat the street to a portion of the picture being shown, is well enough known. In the case of an operetta, the speaker was merely concealed behind the face of a huge representation of the feminine lead. When the projectionist threw an appropriate switch, the cardboard lady sang her favorite aria to all who entered the block.

Sound for this arrangement cost only the price of the speaker. Special provisions are sometimes necessary, however, to avoid interference with speaker line impedance match in the theatre itself. If it is unnecessary or undesirable to have the street volume very loud, the simplest procedure is to rent or buy a high-impedance speaker, perhaps of the permanent magnet dynamic type. They are available for six or seven dollars and will deliver approximately the volume of a good radio playing at more than medium setting. A speaker of that type is merely connected across the low-impedance line to the screen speakers of the theatre. Having a very much higher impedance (several thousand ohms, with its associated transformer) it will have little effect upon that line. But of course it will draw relatively little volume.

Where more power is required for the street, a good quality dynamic speaker should be used, possibly one of the theatre's spares. If the theatre sound amplifier has provision for additional stage speakers, the one used in the street can be added precisely as if it were to be wired up behind the screen. Where no such provision exists, it may prove necessary to add it, by changing the amplifier's output transformer, at a possible cost of $20 or thereabout, or adding a matching transformer, which may cost less, depending on the amplifier used.

TALKING BILLBOARD

More elaborate arrangements have been used by Al Sindlinger, now publicity director of "The March of Time." One of the most effective is the talking billboard, which may be any billboard. It can be wired to the theatre (any telephone company, anywhere, has lines to rent), but in that case it will need an amplifier at the billboard, as well as a speaker, to provide sufficient volume. High volume cannot be sent over the average telephone line. The connecting line can be avoided by using an electric phonograph (cost about $25 without amplifier or speaker).



TRANSCRIPTIONS

The phonograph is particularly useful if arrangements can be made with a local radio dealer, or with a radio supply house, to provide records carrying a special message. The theatre can also purchase recording equipiment and make its own records at a cost, for blanks and needles, of about 60 cents per record. The equipment itself, however, is moderately expensive, running into two or three hundred dollars if really good recordings are desired. At that cost, however, it is possible for a moderately skilled man to make recordings equal to the commercial product.

TRAILER CUT-IN

Another interesting gag of Mr. Sindlinger's was used in connection with a Mae West trailer, and involved nothing more than an extra speaker mounted above the proscenium arch. The trailer, picture and sound, went off as usual, except that when Mae said, "Come up and see me some time," an alert stagehand saw to it that her voice came from 'way up yonder. It was good for more than a laugh—it was worth telling friends about.

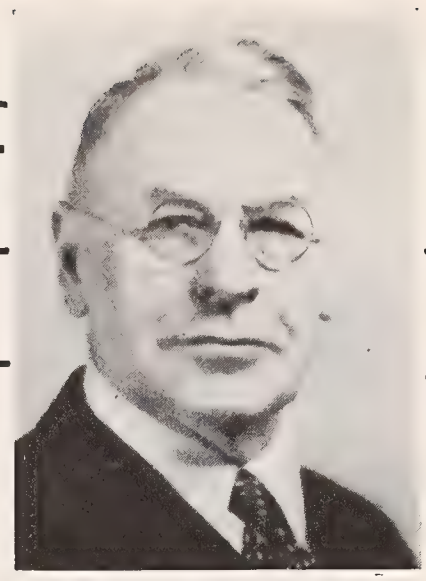
TRUCK BROADCASTING

Portions of the show have also been broadcast up and down streets and alleys by means of a sound truck and short-wave radio. The five-meter equipment necessary is very inexpensive, costing about $25 for the receiver in the truck, which ties into a P.A. system and loud speakers, and $30 or thereabout for the broadcasting apparatus at the theatre. The reliable range is several miles. The catch lies in the fact that a federal license is necessary, and that apparatus suited to operation on the wavelengths the government will authorize for such purposes may be more expensive.

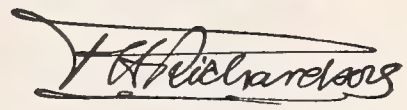
H. D. Grove, of the Fort Theatre at Rock Island, Ill., recently used a powerful public address system, audible at half a mile distance, to allow those outside to listen in on the awarding of prizes at the theatre. Grove has done the same with the proceedings on amateur nights. Speakers were mounted on the roof of the theatre.

A system capable of that volume is moderately expensive. You can buy one for $250 or $300, if the police will let you use it. Equipment in that power range, however, is not readily convertible to operation on a sound truck, where the only source of current is the truck's battery. The battery doesn't have power enough. A gasoline-driven generator, which will cost another hundred dollars or so, is usually mounted in trucks sporting power of that kind. The smaller amplifiers already mentioned, however, including equipment as powerful as the theatre's sound system, are commercially available in models that can be operated either by storage battery in a truck, or by line a.c. in a theatre. Public address systems of that flexibility cost, roughly, 50% more than straight a.c. apparatus of the equivalent power.

AUDIENCE PICK-UP



An old use of public address apparatus is to pick up, by means of microphones, audience comment on the picture. The microphones may be placed to hear comment in the theatre itself, or in the lobbies as crowds are leaving. The result may be caught by the manager alone, for his own information, or, if comments are favorable, broadcast to the street. The latter (although it has been used) is naturally a dangerous proceeding. Microphones may overhear things not intended for them!



This arrangement requires several microphones of unusual sensitivity, and is correspondingly expensive. Microphones suited to such work will cost about $25 each and they need a high-gain amplifier. Microphones used in the footlight trough for reinforcement of stage shows will do admirably, and, of course, the amplifier used with them will be wholly adequate.

If projection is poor, the show is second-rate, no matter what the picture.—F. H. R.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

HOW LITTLE CAN THIS INDUSTRY AFFORD TO PAY PROJECTIONISTS?

I RECENTLY received a letter from Illinois that I did not believe until investigation showed it to be correct in its statements. The facts are as follows:

The chief executive of a circuit of almost twenty theatres evidently firmly believes in cheap labor and does not think that experience, skill and knowledge play any part of importance in motion picture projection. Having successfully prevented the organization of the projectionists of his circuit, he is hiring the cheapest men he can get, paying as low, in some instances, as $10 per week, with $20 as top figure, and this in cities, too! For the $20 wage, his men are on duty from 50 to 55 hours per week, without even a thank-you for overtime. One of his men was kept on continuous duty, not setting a foot outside the projection room for 9½ hours, without one cent of extra pay.

In view of the very obvious damage worked by such proceedings—damage to the arts of Hollywood, the owners of the films, the equipment manufacturers, the theatre-going public and the motion picture industry as a whole, let us examine into this matter in the light of reason and common sense.

Surely the most hide-bound low-wage man must and will admit that unreasonably low wages cannot and will not attract to any trade or profession men of high calibre, or men possessed of much knowledge or ambition to excell in their work. In projection we today place men in direct charge of costly, sensitive, often highly complicated apparatus, which may be expected to function exactly in accordance with the intelligent, expert care given it and the manner of its handling. If the care be unintelligent, careless or slip-shod, it will function expensively in both power consumption and up-keep cost, to say nothing of the shortening of its useful life, and therefore necessity for more frequent replacement as compared with equipments having better care.

It seems incredible that any business man would even consider placing a modern projection installation under the charge of any other than at least reasonably competent man. It seems unbelievable that any man would hold a school boy, or even a man of mature years but poorly equipped with practical experience and knowledge, to be competent to handle a modern projection installation.

And now here is the part that, were it not rather sad, would be amusing. Some of the theatres in the circuit in question are each week offering substantial prizes in an effort to boost box office receipts—that while its projectionists are not paid enough to live on! I wonder if its executive officer has considered the effect of the "prize" stunt. Has it occurred to him that while it probably is quite true that a land office business is done on prize days, a very large percentage of it is subtracted from the business of non-prize days? There are many who deliberately wait for prize days.

On the whole I am of the opinion that a far greater gain would result from a sincere attempt to improve presentation of the pictures. It is admittedly very hard to get some managers to see this. They can actually see and count the prize night gain. They cannot actually see, in an immediate and tangible form the financial gain brought about by insistence upon high-quality operation.

What has high wages got to do with the matter? Let us see. The common laborer receives low-pay—the lowest, I thought, until I heard of this case. The skilled laborer receives, laying the effects of organization aside, from two to five times as much. The highly competent engineer may and does receive from three to ten times as much as the skilled workman. Why? As soon as a man begins to "use his brains" his value automatically rises. This is true in all walks of life.

By this time, surely, one can expect theatre executives to have discarded the old, old notion that projection equipments can be operated by unskilled labor in a manner to produce good results? Projection processes today call for a great deal of technical knowledge and a high sense of responsibility.

Please clearly understand, in this I am not fighting either the union's or any other battles. I am trying to set forth obvious facts for the honest consideration of those who may be inclined to employ men of little experience and knowledge merely because they are "cheap." As a matter of fact, they are not cheap. Instead, when it is all figured out, "cheap" employes where skill and pride of workmanship are required, usually prove to be very, very expensive. The box office, and the maintenance and operating budgets sooner or later demonstrate the truth of this.

NO STRAIN INCREASE WITH 2,000-FOOT REEL?

HARRY G. WALDRON, proprietor of the Blue Moon theatre in Lindsay, Okla., writes interestingly, as follows:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I have noticed references in your columns, by projectionists, regarding greater strain being placed on the film sprocket holes, the sprockets, etc., when 2,000-foot reels are used, than was imposed when the smaller ones are in use. Although now the proprietor of a group of theatres, the writer, has been a projectionist and a reader of your writings ever since 1909. I therefore am able to speak of such things from experience as well as theory.

"It is perhaps natural to regard large reels of film as placing greater strain on the sprocket holes and the sprocket, but as a matter of fact exactly the opposite is true, because the hub and rim of the large reels are more nearly in proportion than they are on the small reels. The only parts subjected to greater strain are those between the power source shaft and the take-up driving pulley, the take-up belt, take-up spindle and the dog on the take-up pulley.

"Greater torque is delivered to the take-up spindle, but since the pull on the film, once the diameter of the small reel film roll is passed, is lowered proportionally because of its greater radius from the spindle. The tension on the film at the large diameter hub of the large reel is far less than it was at the small hub of the smaller reel, hence its pull on the sprocket is less. The difference as between starting and ending tension is in direct proportion to the diameter of the film roll at all times, since the amount of pull is unvarying from start to finish. It is of course understood that the amount of pull should be only that sufficient to keep the reel in motion until all the film is taken up or rewound. Anything more than that represents abuse of both the film and the lower or take-up sprocket.

"It is easily understood that if the reel is to be kept rotating until the film is all rewound, the tension or pull on the film when it starts to rewind on a small-reel hub (usually 1.72 inches in diameter) will be pretty high, and that it will gradually decrease as the film roll becomes larger.

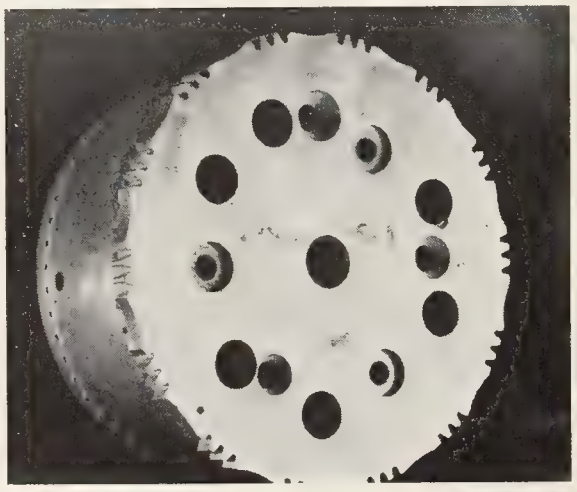
"A comparison of circumference works out as follows: A 10-inch reel has a circumference of 31.4160 inches, and its 1.75 inch hub a circumference of 5.4978 inches, which means a hub tension on the film and a sprocket pull 5.71 times greater than when the film roll is 10 inches in diameter. The 15-inch reel has a circumference of 53.1240 inches; its 5-inch hub a circumference of 21.7080 inches, hence the hub pull is only 2.45 times that of the rim pull, which is less than half the difference existing in the small reel.

"It may be stated in another fashion: Let us assume 10 ounces of pull as necessary when the film roll has reached its maximum diameter. With a 10-inch reel the strain at starting would be 57.10 ounces, whereas with the 15-inch reel it would only be 24.5 ounces, which difference represents graphically the amount of wear and tear the use of the large reel obviates.

"The 10-inch reels have ripped and damaged the sprocket holes in millions of feet of film. They have caused more damage than any one other projection factor, especially on Powers projectors having oily cast-iron and fibre take-up discs. The fact is that the Powers take-up discs operate best when bone dry, but many "operators" have had a mistaken idea that oily discs are best. This does not apply, however, to Simplex take-up leather discs. They function best when oiled.

"To sum all this up, I assert positively that best results will be had with the new 15-inch reel, provided the take-up tension is properly adjusted. We will not permit our projectionists to place a small reel on any projector in our theatres, save possibly in an emergency."

While I have not checked through on the figures supplied, in general the argument seems quite right except for one or two things. The chief damage of excessive take-up pull, it seems to me, is to the rear or non-working side of the sprocket holes, and by reason of tight pressure (with possible slight slippage) during the first end of the run, which will of course cause the pressing in of small particles of hard substance dust (from a cement for example) into the emulsion, and thus make rain "spots," usually of short length.



Another thing Friend Waldron has overlooked is the fact that unless the upper magazine reel be properly braked, there will be over-runs of the reel, with slack film as a result and a sharp jerk when it is taken up, and this jerk will be far more serious with the large than with the small reel. I mention this as a warning to projectionists to be very careful in adjusting the upper reel brake. Not only be very sure there is enough to prevent over-run under any condition, but be equally careful there is no excess, for if there is—well, toward the last end of the run the upper sprocket may be doing pretty heavy service.

We thank Waldron for bringing this matter up and dealing with it so exhaustively. I will be glad to hear from others as to just how they are accustomed to adjust both take-up tension and upper reel braking friction.

A RELIC OF EARLY PROJECTION EXPERIMENTS

WHEN last in Washington I had a long chat with Thomas Armat, inventor of the maltese cross intermittent movement for motion picture projection. After my return to New York came this letter:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I am enclosing a photograph of the driven member of the Jinkins-Armat patent you asked about.

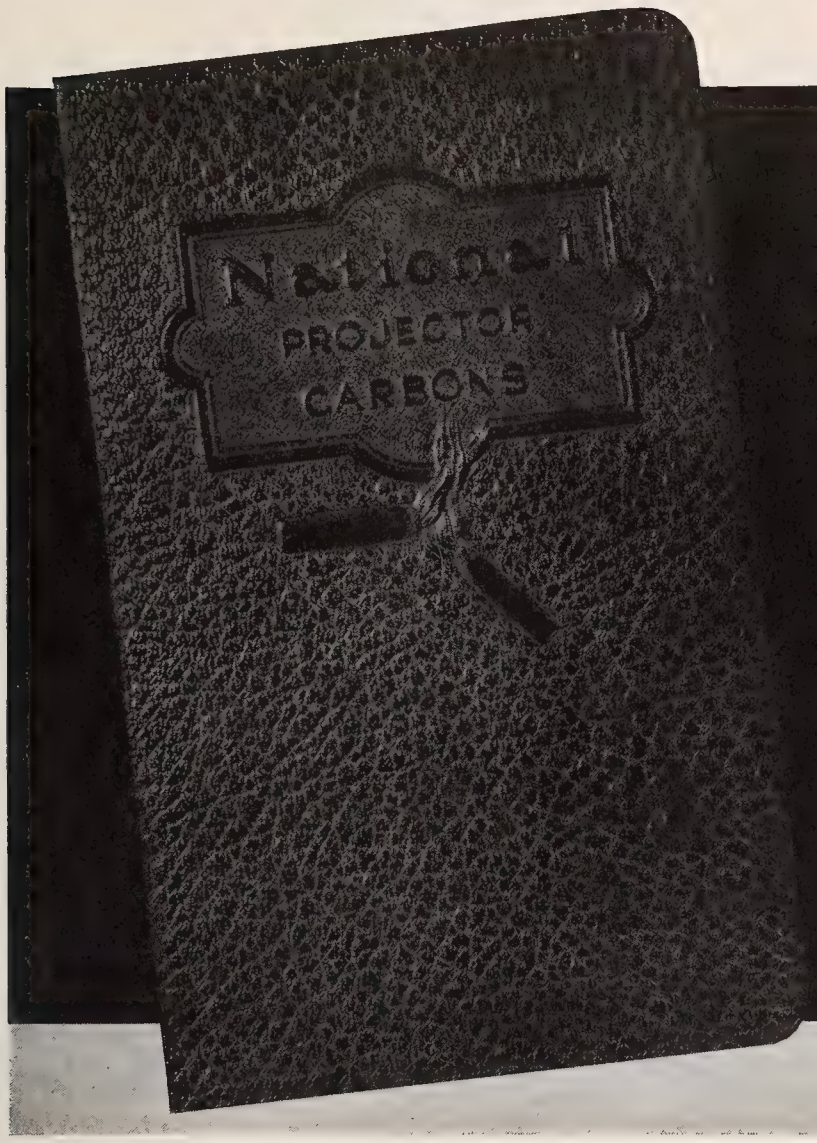
The mutilated gear was braised to an Edison kinetoscope sprocket, which was 3¼ inches in diameter. The gear weighed a bit more than one pound. You may therefore imagine what a noisy and wholly impractical thing it was. After a few times running, the locking part of the gear became so battered up that it could be made to operate no more. It was never run outside my office. No duplicate was ever made.

"Immediately after this failure I developed a projector with the Demeny camera movement that eventually became the so-called Edison Vitascope. It was covered by my patent No. 673,992, filed February 19, 1896. This was superseded by the projector (my patent No. 578,185, September, 1896), in which for the first time a gradually accelerated stop-and-start motion was given the film by means of the present type of intermittent movement."

BOASTING? PERHAPS, BUT ANYWAY—

IF A MAN does a job which he believes to be a good one, and he learns that upon becoming familiar with the nature of the job, many others think so too, a bit of pride in his achievement may be pardoned. At any rate, I hope so, for here in my columns devoted to the welfare of projection and projectionist, I am going to tell you (albeit, as modestly as I can) some of the nice things that are being said about my new Bluebook of Projection. To keep from "blowing my horn" too long and too loudly, I have selected only a few of the letters received from those who have acquired copies of the new edition, and will quote as briefly as possible.

I rather like the way the letter from Barney DeVietti starts off. Mr. DeVietti is director of projection for the Huish Theatre Enterprises, which has its headquarters in Helper, Utah. He writes, "Your new Bluebook has been in my possession for a month, which I believe is ample time to form an opinion concerning it. I would first like to state that the only books I own are your Bluebooks of Projection. I have, nevertheless, at different times had occasion to examine other projection text books, and I can truthfully say that there is no comparison between them and your Bluebook. In some, the authors seemed intent only upon compiling a mass of facts. . . . In contrast your Bluebooks have been written for those for whom they were intended, the projectionists. They are entirely and completely understandable. . . . The indexing system that you have developed for the sixth edition sure is fine and very, very helpful."



I take great pride in the fact that my books are wholly understandable. They should be. I was a projectionist myself, have worked closely with projectionists for many, many years, and know their needs and their language.

But let's get on to a few more letters. First, a statement very much to the point from A. L. Cooper, projectionist of Toronto, Kan.: "The most valuable book a projectionist can own."

Reports John J. Cuddy, projectionist of Palmer, Mass.: "The new Bluebook came about a week ago. Believe me, it is a dandy! Stayed up all the first night, so interesting was it. Best wishes."

"I regard the new Bluebook as the best edition yet published," writes Walter Dinsmore, projectionist at the Colonial theatre in Machias, Me. "It is complete, with clear, understandable illustrations and diagrams. Anything it treats of may be found quickly and easily with the new indexing system. I certainly would not like to be without a copy."

The above excerpts were selected to represent the reaction of projectionists in the smaller cities and towns. There are many letters as enthusiastic that represent other projection groups. One is from Mr. Joseph Basson, president of Local 306, New York. I believe the remarks of Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, former president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, have been widely publicized in advertisements. Herbert Griffin, general sales manager of the International Projector Corporation calls the new Bluebook a "Godsend." And from Walter Green, head of the National Theatre Supply Company: "This company is well pleased to be able to offer its customers such a complete projection book."

Just one more—this one to close with because of the manner in which this projectionist obtained his copy. "My boss," writes E. H. Toidt of Nashville, Ill., "brought up the Bluebook he had bought the other day for me to read and study. I quite agree with the projectionist who declared it to be 'worth its weight in gold.' Now that I have an opportunity to examine it, I would not be without it."

For all these and the other expressions in kind, I am very grateful.

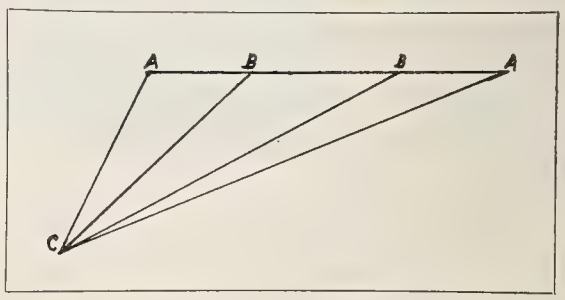
SCREEN SURFACE AND DIMENSIONS

EUGENE DE WITT, PROJECTIONIST with the Osage Amusement Company of Shidler, Okla., inquires: "The company is preparing to erect a new theatre that will have an auditorium 85 x 44 feet, seating approximately 600. The question of screen image dimensions is now under consideration.

In the theatre now in use we project a 15-foot picture, but the projection distance is 105 feet and the auditorium only 28 feet wide, with the rear seats 100 feet from the screen. I do not believe we need a picture that large in the new theatre, judging from information gained from your Bluebook and from past experience. Would it be troubling you too much to ask for an expression of an opinion on this matter? Also, we would like to know what type of screen surface you would recommend."

What do you mean troubling? That is what I am paid for—to give such aid as I can to theatre men.

Answering your last question first: The type of screen surface required for best results in any theatre is dependent wholly upon viewing angles in that theatre. Assuming your Bluebook is the latest (sixth) edition, if you will turn to page 141 you will find the whole matter of screens pretty thoroughly discussed, including viewing angles and their effect, type of surface required under varying conditions, etc. By using Figure 49, on page 154, and the text relating thereto, you certainly should be able to decide exactly what type of screen surface will give best results in the proposed theatre. To discuss the matter in full detail here would not only require several pages of space, but also that I know the exact dimensions of your seating area and distance from front row of seats to screen.



And now as to the screen image dimensions. First of all, as I have many, many times said, having a certain quantity of light available, it naturally follows that the less space you spread it over the more brilliant will be the illumination. Moreover, a 15-foot, well illuminated picture is amply large for a 105-foot viewing distance, at least for folks with normal eyes. People with normal eyes will be able to discern all picture details with ease at 105 feet, so that takes care of the rear seats.

Let us now examine the front end, remembering that just as much is charged for them as for seats farther back. Plain, ordinary horse-sense tells us a large picture is not in the least necessary for people in the front half of the theatre. Let us see why it is highly objectionable.

First, let your manager go down front, close to the screen—say, 10 feet from it—and observe how fuzzy it seems, how thoroughly unbeautiful it is. Then let him slowly move back facing the screen all the time, observing how the image becomes better defined. Probably he knows that already, but such an experiment will tend to bring home the damage done to the value of seats down front, remembering that every increase in picture size beyond that necessary for comfortable viewing from the rear seats, adds to the distance at which the bad effect is visible, hence increases the number of rows of front seats from which vision is poor.

But that is by no means all. Remember that the eyes of theatre patrons follow moving objects on the screen, and down front especially, as the picture size is increased the necessary eye movement is increased and therefore physical strain on the eye muscles is increased. This is another reason why picture size should be no larger than is necessary.

But that still is not all. Examine the accompanying drawing, in which AA and

BB represent screens of different widths, and C the position of an end seat of the front row. As explained in the text accompanying Figure 50 of your Bluebook, whereas objects on screen AA nearest to C will appear but little distorted (vertical distortion), those on the other side will seem to be very thin and much taller than they really are. So great will be the effect that to the discriminating observer seated at C, the picture as a whole will have a rather ridiculous appearance.

It is quite true that on screen BB the distortion will remain unaltered, still the whole picture will be on that surface and the distortion will be far less apparent to the eye because the extreme differences as between AB and BA will not be in evidence.

Answering your question briefly, I would say that I would regard 12 and 15 feet as the acceptable limits of screen image width in the proposed new theatre, the first preferable if the front seats are within, say, 12 feet of the screen; the later if the distance be, say, 18 feet or more. Without knowledge of the distance from screen to front seats, I can only say that I would regard a 13.5-foot screen image as safe.

And here is another inquiry on the same subject, this one from William Wilson, president and general manager of the Lycoming Amusement Company, Inc., of Williamsport, Pa. He writes:

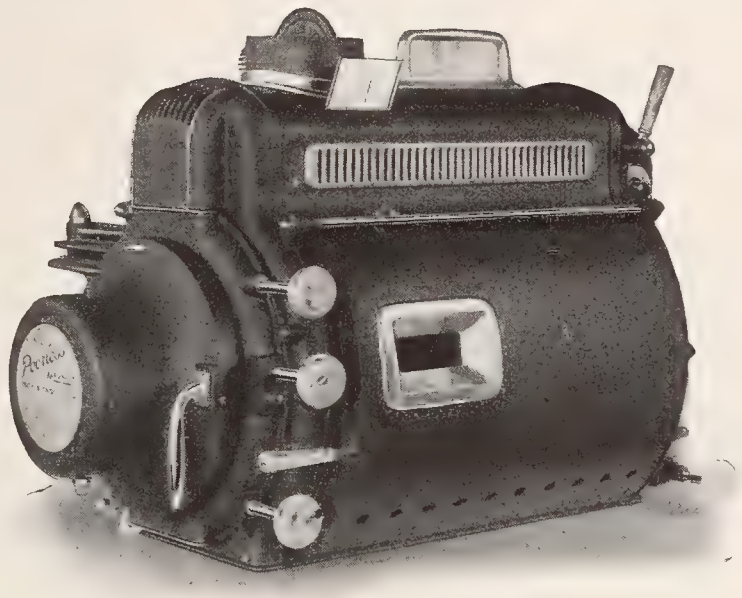
"We read your various articles with a great deal of interest. We are about to install a new screen and would appreciate the benefit of your advice as to what is best, both as to screen and dimensions. Here are the salient facts:

Auditorium 45 feet wide. Proscenium arch to last rows of seats, 134 feet. Height of ceiling at front row, 39 feet. Balcony is 45 feet wide and 64 feet deep. Stage is 10 feet deep. Proscenium opening 18x26 feet. Present screen is 16x26 feet and is placed in front of the proscenium arch, 12 feet from the front row of seats. Projection lens, Ross 1.25-inch E. F. Use Peerless hi-lo lamps.

"Should we have plain white, silver or gold screen? What should be dimensions of screen image? We would appreciate any other necessary information.

First, why have you placed your present screen in front of the arch? It should by all means be as nearly as possible against the back wall. As it is you have a 25-foot screen image located 12 feet from the front row of seats, which is presumably at least 30 feet long, under which conditions no one will occupy any seats in the front rows, especially those near their ends. Go down yourself and look at a picture from either front row end seat. Observe the fuzzy appearance it presents. Note how thin all objects on its opposite sides seem.

You can very largely remedy all this and make your front seats very much more valuable by (a) reducing the size of your screen image, and (b) moving the screen back just as far as you can get it. Much of what I have said concerning DeWitt's case above, applies also to your situation.



Here is what I would do were the theatre my own. First, I would select a white screen having high diffusing power. The auditorium is wide and unless your screen has pretty good powers of diffusion there Understanding experience, advanced design and creative engineering have earned for Peerless their traditional reputation of superiority.

The Peerless Magnarc is the only low voltage high intensity lamp that is the same today as it was when first put on the market and yet Peerless is still far advanced in design.

If you did not purchase Peerless Magnarcs—what are your orphan lamps worth now?

Answer this question fairly and you have undeniable proof that—Real economy lies not in a low first cost or can be had in any other lamp.

will be fadeaway, which means the picture will be brighter when viewed from a point straight in front than from the sides. I would then change my projection lens and project a picture 18 feet wide. This may seem like a radical change to you, but a well illuminated picture 18 feet wide is amply large to afford a perfect view for normal eyes at 140 feet, and people with weak eyesight can go farther down.

I would border the screen in dead black, letting the black extend into the picture itself by one or two inches, and to the sides about 12 inches, beyond which I would gradually taper it off to match the surroundings. The black may be velvet, or even a paint. I should prefer to use the velvet.

When all this was done I would cover the stage floor with black cloth, stretched taut, or I would paint it black. Then I would see to it that as I sat in either end back row seat there was no glare spot of light visible to the eye anywhere. If there was I would dim it down, either by an ornamental cover or otherwise, so that I would not be really aware of it in viewing the picture.

SEEKS BACK ISSUES OF 'BETTER THEATRES'

GEORGE A. BISHOP, JR., of Fall River, Mass., "In your Comments in BETTER THEATRES of November 16, is something that tempts me to write. I most sincerely agree with you that many of the papers published in the SMPE Journal are pretty thick stuff for theatre people.

"I received your Bluebook of Projection and wish to say that the more I study it the better it gets.

"Will you inform your readers that I would like to purchase some back issues of BETTER THEATRES prior to July 1, 1933. Glad to hear from any one who would part with them; also, where can I obtain a sample copy of the American Projection Society Bulletin?"

Presumably Friend Bishop subscribed in June 1933, and has found BETTER THEATRES so helpful that he wants to get copies even farther back than that.

As to the Bulletin, address the American Projection Society, 257 West 42d Street, New York City.

WANTS TO INCREASE IMAGE BRILLIANCY

JOHN L. MILLER of Hagerstown, Md., writes, "I am operating a 400-seat house with a projection distance of 94.5 feet. Width of auditorium, 35 feet. My greatest handicap is projection. Am now using a 12-foot picture, which it is impossible to enlarge because of a very low ceiling. What I would like to do is increase the picture brilliancy by installing a new type of screen. I now have a resurfaced screen, which does not seem to give the proper brilliancy.

"Would appreciate your advice as to the best type of screen for an auditorium of this size. For some time I have had in mind the installation of a silver screen, but am afraid it might kill my front seats, which are exactly 16 feet from the screen. Am using two 25-50-ampere generators designed for low-intensity work. May I have your valued advice?"

In order to answer such a question intelligently I must know the width of the seating space, particularly the distance of front seats from screen, and the width of front rows. One you give, Friend Miller, but not the other. However, assuming the front seats to extend across the auditorium except for a 4-foot side aisle at each I find you would have approximately a 28° side angle from an end side seat with the side of the screen nearest to it, but at the screen center this mounts to about 35°, and at the further side to about 40°.

Now this all means that without a pretty good diffusing surface you would have a very much brighter screen on one side than on the other, as viewed from the front end seats. Also, you would have quite a bit of side distortion at the farther side of the screen from these seats, which means objects on the near side will appear proportionally wider to a patron in an end front seat than will objects on the further side. However, this last is true, regardless of what type of screen is used.

My conclusion is that you must have a pretty good diffusing surface if these front side seats are to be well served. However, with a 12-foot picture and 50 amperes available there is no reason, save current expense, why you cannot have at least as brilliant a screen as is advisable. If you secure greater brilliancy by installing a new screen it will be either because of its higher reflection power, or because it concentrates a large proportion of its reflected light in more or less narrow angles at the center of the theatre, with fade-away beyond those angles.

Just what it is best to do I cannot say, not being able to examine personally your screen. Have you examined into the work of your projectionist? It is possible to lose enormously by improper handling of the light itself, or by having the "spot" too large, or by having projector rotating shutter blades too wide, or by failure to get all the light into the projection lens.

FILM DAMAGE AND TENSION

LETTERS AND SAMPLES of damaged film reach me every week with requests that I pass judgement upon what caused the injury. In almost every instance there is a dispute between the film exchange and the maanger, though once in a while a projectionist has been asked by his manager to pay for damage done to film.

With the aid of such knowledge as I have gained through the years and aided by the use of a powerful telescope, I usually can form a pretty good guess at the seat of trouble. At other times neither myself nor others to whom I may submit the film too for examination, can say with any degree of surety just where lies the seat of trouble. There are so many different things that can cause certain types of damage, and no one can possibly say which one is the responsible element in some instances.

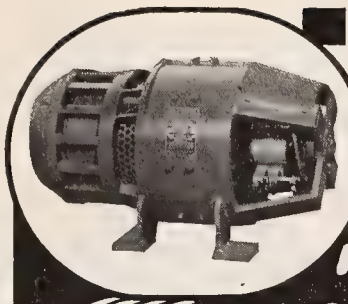
However, many of the cases are strained, cracked or ripped sprocket holes of green film. In such instances almost invariably there will be evidence of deposit on the tension shoes, which of course greatly increases the strain of pulling the film down against the roughened surface of the shoes. Oddly enough, it rarely seems to have occurred to the projectionist that possibly those shoes are exerting unnecessary pressure upon the film—excessive aperture tension. Yet even one moment of consideration should certainly convince one that such excessive tension increases the possibility that the shoes will pick up deposits of soft emulsion.

That is one reason why I have, without result thus far, insisted upon the desirability of tension adjustment in some really practical form. With such an adjustment available, when a green, unprocessed film is to be projected the tension could immediately be reduced to the lowest practicable point, and thus automatically reduce the probability of trouble and film damage.



But projector manufacturers to date have turned a deaf ear, and when I asked projectionists to help correct this condition by writing a letter expressing their desire for such an improvement in projectors, instead of receiving several thousand answers, I got relatively few.

I well know the studios should process the film. The point is, however, not all of them do, and we must deal with conditions as they are, and as they are we have green, unprocessed film to deal with. Then too, there are other reasons why a tension adjustment is needed, but it must be in practical form—not merely a little screw that gets so hot it cannot be touched with anything but plyers or asbestos gloves. It must be a suitable thing (knurled thumbscrew, for example) located entirely outside the heat zone and in reasonably convenient position. It can be done.

A PUZZLING CASE OF FUZZY PICTURE

K. MARSHALL of the Rialto theatre in Missouri Valley, Ia., has a trouble, the seat of which seems to be the screen surface. He says: "Have been a reader of your Comments for quite some while. Now I come to you for help, aid, assistance or what have you. The trouble is poor light and fuzzy picture. Have tried everything I can think of that might affect results, but without improvement—new lenses, new pads, new tension shoes. Even moved the screen all over the stage. But the picture just cannot be put into sharp focus. Use Bausch and Lomb lenses, 4.5 inch e.f. Projection distance, 83 feet. Screen image 15 feet wide. Projectors 5 feet apart. Projection angle, 11°. Angle of screen, 1°.

"Projection room is at one side of the theatre. One projector has a straight shot. The other must shoot on an angle.

The projection lens is the neck of the bottle through which all of the qualities of a film must pass. The art of the camera man, the acting of the cast, the skill of the director, in fact, all of the qualities of a film are aided or retarded by the projection lens.

That is why so many of the leading theatres use the Super-Cinephor—the projection lens which keeps company with a full till box.

FOR - BETTER - LIGHT

THE NEW HURLEY SOUND SCREENS

THEY - STAY - WHITE

HURLEY SCREEN CO.
24-15 Forty-third Avenue
Long Island City, N. Y.

This might effect results on one projector, but not on the other. Have Simplex, with RCA sound. I clean the lenses every night before the show.

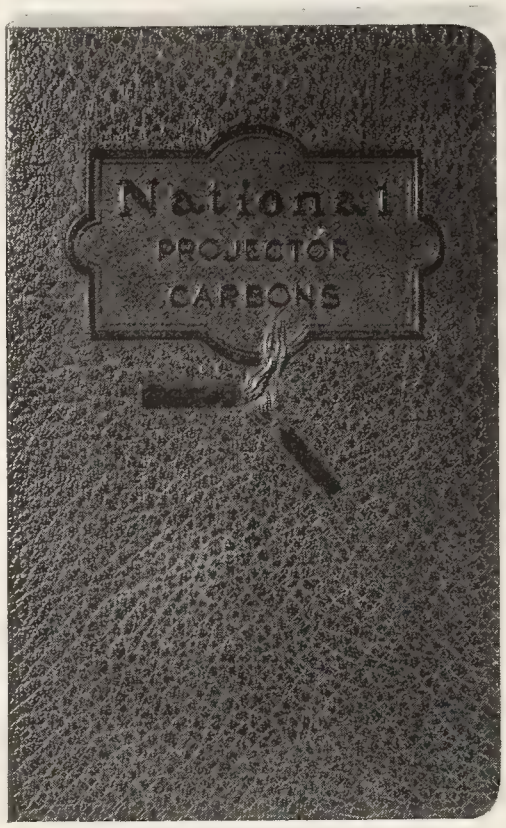
"As to the light, I use 38 amperes, 90 volts, with National SRA carbons, Peerless low-intensity lamps bought in 1928. The reflectors are both new and both kept clean. Reflector is 18 inches from film. Have tried moving lamphouse back and forward, but with no improvement in results. The trouble is the light is brown. Have had other projectionists try to fix it for me, but they all admitted they could not located the trouble. I do hope you can and will be able to offer some helpful suggestions."

Information quite complete, but the case is a puzzle. I would say you either had one of the elements on your projection lenses reversed, or that their inner surfaces needed cleaning, but apparently the result from both lenses is identical and if you have tried other lenses with the same results, well that seems to be definitely out.

In fact, everything that I am able to think you seem already to have tried. The projection room being off center would enable you to sharpen one side or the other of the screen image, but you are unable to sharpen it anywhere. It is not the prints, for certainly all of them could not show up the same. Oil on the film deadens the focus considerably, but it has a mottled appearance.

The effect started only six months after the screen was installed. Possibly some chemical change has taken place. Secure from your printer a sheet of print paper and suspend it across the screen, up and down or (preferably) sidewise. If the focus is okay on it—well, that's the answer. If not, I'm afraid you have me stuck. Has anyone ever encountered this before?

FILM OUT-OF-FRAME AT CHANGEOVERS



I HAVE an inquiry from Frank G. Comstock of Ovid, Michigan, as follows: "Have too many misframes on changeovers when leaders are threaded in frame. What is wrong?"

It is obvious that if the outgoing film is in frame, and the leader is in frame and spliced to the main title in frame, there cannot possibly be any out-of-frame when the main title and picture comes on. There is of course exactly one frame to each .75 of an inch of film. This is just as true with SRP leaders as with the title and picture itself, hence if there is no misframe in the leader and the leader be threaded in frame—well, there can be no possibility of a misframe at changeover, it being inconceivable that the leader would climb a sprocket hole.

There is one other possible cause, provided it is meant that the whole thing is out-of-frame. Threading may be done while the rotating shutter master blade is in front of the lens and therefore the intermittent movement is not on the lock and the intermittent sprocket is partly moved through its quarter cycle. It seems incredible, though, that anyone would make that error several times and not find it out.

NEW BOOK IS ISSUED ON CARBONS

A NEW BOOKLET on carbons has been issued by the National Carbon Company, entitled "National Projector Carbons," in the pages of which the carbon arc and National carbons are fully discussed. It contains many illustrations, graphs, tables, etc., relating to the projection arc. I recommend that the National booklet be placed in the library of every projectionist. It may be had merely by addressing the National Carbon Company, Cleveland, Ohio, naming the theatre you are employed at. I would regard it as a valuable supplement to your new Bluebook because of the details contained in it on carbon manufacture and, to some extent, carbon use as well. The cover of the booklet is shown in the accompanying cut. The booklet is 6¾ inches high and 4¼ inches wide, and contains 112 pages.

AN INQUIRY FROM KUALA PUMPUR

F. R. KON of Kuala Pumpur in the Federated Malay States, writes: "I shall be obliged if you will enlighten me on the following: I notice in a catalogue of Simplex parts there are various dimensions of aperture plates; viz., No. 1, silent or disc film aperture; No. 2, sound film; No. 3, sound film, proportional opening; No. 4, sound film, magnascopic opening."

The No. 1 is the old-style silent aperture. The No. 2 is the new standard aperture, .600 by .825 of an inch in dimensions. No. 3 is the duplex movable tab type that was used for both silent (or disc) and sound-on-film. It now is obsolete. No. 4 is an aperture supplied to permit projectionists to file an outline to suit their own ideas. They are not carried in stock but may be ordered.

The catalogue Mr. Kon has is evidently a very old one. The International Projector Corporation is sending him a new one. Exhibitors, managers and projectionists, especially those in far off locations, would do well to obtain new catalogues at least once a year.

GOOD PROJECTION AND THE BOX OFFICE

FROM A MAINE city comes this letter (for obvious reasons neither sender nor town are named):

"I am confronted with a very serious condition and turn to you for helpful suggestions. It is my earnest desire to put a creditable picture upon the screen and to produce naturalness in sound, but the manager of this theatre is more interested in box office receipts than in the quality of projection. All my arguments and pleadings are in vain. He just will not purchase those materials and parts that are absolutely necessary to the production of good or even passably fair results.

"Some of the things I am obliged to contend with are improper lenses, a dusty, streaked, torn screen, the surface of which is uneven. The motor-generator set is antiquated and in need of repairs. My argument that poor projection reacts to cut down box office receipts apparently has no effect. I therefore am forced to do the best I can with what is provided. The result is nothing to be proud of."

My friend, in saying your manager is interested in box office receipts you erred. Were he interested in box office receipts, then certainly he would see to it that projection in his theatre was the very best possible.

Not long ago I visited a theatre where in years past I was most unwelcome. To my surprise the manager greeted me not only kindly but cordially, calling my attention to the excellence of both image and sound, which I pronounced to be beyond criticism. He then took me to the projection room, where everything was in good order, clean as a new pin and the equipment of the best. That room had been an eyesore when last I visited it about three years ago.

We returned to the office. I then asked, "Say, what's happened, anyhow? Last time I was here I was about as welcome as a blizzard in June. You had punk projectionists and punker equipment. Now everything is changed. Then I could do nothing but keep still or roast. Now I can do nothing but keep still or praise. Said he, "Don't use my name or the name of the theatre if you publish anything, please." Then he went on:

"Richardson, I give you credit. It was you that brought about my change of attitude. For a long while I read some of your stuff and honestly thought it the bunk and you more or less crazy. But bye and bye I began to see you were anyhow right in some things. Finally one week you published an article in which you compared silk and cotton goods, and good and poor results in picture and sound. Somehow that one article gave me a different viewpoint and in projection I began to build up. I began to see 'cotton goods' in many things I thought were all right before. Today I guess I might be called a crank on projection. Richardson, you have been right all the way through!

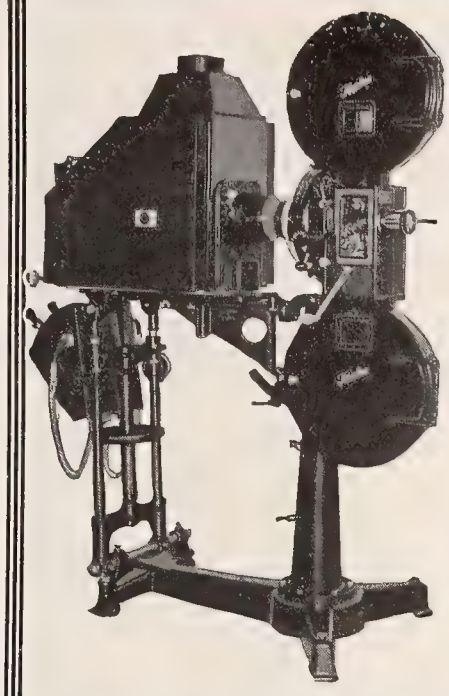
"The expenses of this theatre are more than they then were, but compared with income they are much less. In other words the margin of profit is greater and that's what counts."

The silk-cotton goods article was to the effect that if silk and cotton goods were placed on sale at the same price, the silk would far outsell the cotton, and that good projection represented silk in this business.

This is so obviously true that one is amazed to find theatre managers still selling "cotton goods" when at relatively small added expense they might lay "silk" before their customers. Mediocre or poor visual and sound results are business destroyers.

USING RECTIFIERS OF VARIED VOLTAGE

G. J. SLICKMAN of the Majestic theatre in Oran, Mo., reports trouble which he describes as follows:



"From a dealer we recently purchased two Peerless lamps and two Strong Tungar tube rectifiers, all of which equipment had been used. The dealer told us they had been in a large theatre and represented them as being in the very best possible condition. Upon their delivery, however, we found one of the rectifiers to be 110 volts, and one 220 volts, the dealer claiming that such a combination was quite all right; that it was used in many theatres, the truth of which statement is one of the main reasons for this letter.

"We are in a very small town, but our equipment is good, nevertheless. Previous to installation of the above described equipment we were using Mazda for projection. It gave us good results. We feel that the 110-volt rectifier is the cause of our present trouble, which is that the light fades, and it is very noisy when the carbons are frozen. Can you help us?"

Possibly there are theatres that do use one 110-volt and one 220-volt rectifier to supply two projector light sources, but if so I have never heard of it. To do so is to unbalance the theatre load by the amperage supplied the projector light source, every time the 110-volt rectifier is used. I should suppose the power company would kick about that. It represents extremely poor practice. It is a stunt I never before heard of, save in a case of emergency.

Another reason for preferment of 220-volt rectifiers is that as a general rule power companies offer a somewhat lower rate where power is taken from the 220-volt mains than where it is taken from one side or the other, this for the reason that they know the load is kept balanced.

As to the light fading and being noisy, the remark about the carbons being "frozen" is not clear. If the carbons were frozen (in actual physical contact) there would be no light at all. The Peerless arc control is good equipment. Properly cared for, adjusted and handled, it will maintain the arc at approximately constant length. I think it highly probable the arc control is not in proper adjustment, in which case it is probable the arc will be either too long or too short (in your case too short), in which event the light would not only fade away, but probably be more or less discolored. This condition might also induce sputtering.

DEFINING SOME TERMS IN SOUND

JOHN C. LATTIMER, of Boston, Mass., writes, "Have heard sound engineers use certain terms I do not know and cannot find the meaning of. Have asked several of the men here, but without satisfactory results. Will you therefore advise me as to the meaning of the following?—inductive coupling, modulated wave, amplification factor, galvanometer, superheterodyne reception.

It is probable the men you asked knew perfectly well, but were unable to explain understandingly. Taking the terms in their order:

An inductive coupling is the association of one circuit with another through or by means of inductance common to both of them.

A modulated wave is one of which either the phase, the amplitude or the frequency has been varied in accordance with a signal.

Amplification factor is the measure of the effectiveness of the grid voltage with relation to that of the plate voltage in its effect upon the current from the plate.

A galvanometer is an instrument by means of which the varying currents resulting from sound are converted into oscillating light beams.

Superheterodyne reception is a method of sound reception from the air in which the voltage received is combined with the voltage from a local oscillator and converted into voltage of an intermediate frequency, which may be and ordinarily is amplified and then detected to reproduce the original signal wave.

ARE YOUNGSTERS WHOLLY RESPONSIBLE?

WENDELL C. TURNER projectionist of New Holland, Ohio, may reap a shower of cobble stones from the younger men whom he suspects, but if so he need not mind. I've lived through countless such showers and prospered, too. The thing to be certain of when uttering suspicions is that they have at least a good basis in fact. He says:

"Have read BETTER THEATRES, for quite some while, particularly your own columns. I have been much interested in the letters from brother projectionists and your answers thereto. Have received much needed advice and suggestions from your

ADDRESSING LETTERS TO F. H. RICHARDSON

Mr. Richardson does most of the actual writing for his columns at his home in Scarsdale, N. Y., a suburb of New York City. Therefore mail addressed to him there usually reaches him a little sooner than that addressed to him at his office. His home address is No. 3 Tudor Lane.

Comments. In October 19 I saw the reproduction of sadly mutilated film and it raised my 'dander.' Had one not long ago that was about as bad. It is a goat-getter to one who takes pride in the excellence of his work and tries his best to excel therein to have a thing like that come through like the blast of a cannon in sound and terrible in the picture.

"I have been thinking, Mr. Richardson, that a lot of this outrage is perpetrated by the many 'kid' operators (I cannot call them projectionists) and inexperienced men who work for that amounts to cigarette money. Such men neither understand nor care. Young boys, of whom many are employed in small town and village theatres, have little, if any, sense of responsibility. They really don't quite understand that they are doing any particular damage.

"Another bad thing is that, at least in this territory, there are so many who double up 1,000-foot reels for projecting, just slap them together again for shipment any old way—often without even bothering to match the sprocket holes. Occasionally one of these slips through the exchange and unless every reel is carefully inspected before projection there is likely to be trouble —perhaps serious trouble, too. It certainly will be a relief when the 2,000-foot reel finally becomes standard.

"Recently we installed a new amplifier which supplies two loud-speakers—one for the low, and one for the high frequencies. It is really two amplifiers in one. On some W. E. recordings we experienced trouble with a cracking or popping which comes only when film is being projected. Upon examination it was found that the sound track bore little white specks about the size of a pin head. Would that cause such trouble? One reel had such specks all through the track; the next one was free from them and did not pop."

Certainly such specks would cause the trouble. Had you told me the make of the film and sent a small sample of the sound track I would have taken the matter up with the distributor.

As to the youngsters and cheap men, what you say is not at all impossible or even improbable. Times without number I have told exhibitors that too much cheapness in wages reacts against the theatre, and through damaged film, against the industry. To have reasonable assurance of even passably good work, sufficient wages must be paid to cause the projectionist to set some value on his job. That is just plain common sense. If the man cares little about his job he will be careless, negligent and what have you, to the damage of both the show and the equipment.

As to young boys, what Brother Turner says is also correct. Boys of tender years in the very nature of things have little sense of responsibility. Damage, such as punching holes in film, may not impress them as having any particular consequences. They are not yet old enough to look beyond their own noses and realize or even very much care what happens after the films leave their own hands. To them punching holes is just fun. Nor are they to be too much blamed. The man who employs them is the offender, though back of that is the exchange whose property is being outraged. As pointed out many times, exchanges could put a sudden stop to all this did they instruct and oblige their inspectors to check up on where the damage occurs. With that knowledge in hand, a couple of good stiff bills to the exhibitor and you can bet there would be no more punching done there. It probably would not even be necessary actually to force collection of the bills.

Your letter is interesting, Friend Turner, but you omitted one very important point by failing to advise us as to what, if any, improvement your people noted in sound after installing the double speaker.

PROJECTION IN A 200-SEAT THEATRE

A. M. PUBLICOVER of Chester, Nova Scotia, writes, "Received my copy of the Bluebook. Many thanks for the unbiased information therein contained. It is very difficult to obtain facts unaccompanied by the usual, or should I say, the inevitable sales talk.

"Am planning a new 200-seat theatre. Would appreciate advice concerning the following: There will be a center bank of 16 rows of seats of 12 seats each; front row, 15 feet from the screen. Wish to use my present 900-watt mazdas, with plano-convex condensers. Powers 6-B projector mechanisms. Projection distance, 60 feet. Screen image, 10 or 11 feet wide. Please supply information on following:

"Would a cloth screen, as per Bluebook, coated with aluminum paint, compare favorably with a beaded screen? Can a half-size projection lens be fitted in the old-style front plate of the Powers, using an adapter, without striking the driving spindle?"

I certainly would not myself advise an aluminum paint screen. If an aluminum screen is to be used at all it should be in the form of dry aluminum powder spread on a partly dry ("tacky," painters call it) oil or varnish surface, to which sufficient powder will adhere to form a solid surface, the surplus being swept off. But I cannot recommend even that. An aluminum paint such as is proposed is very likely (a) to impart a harsh tone to the light, (b) to cause reflection that will have the effect of superimposing a sort of haze before the screen, and (c) to be subject to discoloration from atmospheric action, except in very dry climates.

As to the lens matter, whether or not a 2.5-inch diameter lens will serve better than a 2-inch one depends wholly upon whether or not the all light beam will enter the 2-inch lens. If it does, then a larger diameter will serve no good purpose. If it will not, then the large diameter lens will serve better. The matter is easily determined. Get a 2-inch one first, with privilege of exchanging if you wish to. Using the light as in normal projection, blow smoke into the mechanism casing and observe the light beam between aperture and lens. If it all enters, well and good. If it does not, then install the larger one.

legitimately designed to promote the health, welfare, safety or morals of the community. The power is a broad one and it has been held that in pursuance of it, a city may, for example, prohibit the carrying on of certain business, i.e., tanning or glue-making in specified areas, may limit the height of buildings or their location by zoning ordinances and may even put certain classes of business under license.

The validity of a law enacted under the police power must depend on the circumstances of each case, and the character of the regulation, for the purpose of determining whether it is arbitrary or reasonable and whether it is really designed to accomplish a legitimate public purpose.

But—and this is the fatal weakness of the theatre limitation ordinances—a law enacted under the police power must bear down equally and may not discriminate in favor of certain individuals to the detriment of others similarly situated. In the words of another famous Supreme Court opinion, passing upon an ordinance enacted under the police power:

> While such regulations are subject to judicial scrutiny upon fundamental grounds, yet a considerable latitude of discretion must be accorded to the law-making power, and so long as the regulation in question is not shown to be clearly unreasonable and arbitrary, and operates uniformly upon all persons similarly situated in the particular district, the district itself not appearing to have been abitrarily selected, it cannot be judicially declared that there is a deprivation of property without due process of law or a denial of the equal protection of the law within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment.

And so even though the theatre limitation ordinances pretend to be enacted under the police power, for the purpose, as is stated by one of them "to protect the citizens in the safety of the theatre going public, to preserve the general welfare and to preserve for the citizens proper theatre surroundings," by attempting to help the "ins" at the expense of the "outs," such enactments defeat their own purpose.

Kooler-Aire Equalized AIR CONDITIONING

A few pointers about the "EQUALIZER"

Eliminates all drafts — cold spots — overheated areas—dead air pockets.

Gives exactly the amount of cooling needed to keep your patrons comfortable on all days when it is too cool for full volume operation of system.

Gives perfected air conditioning results all Spring, Summer, Fall — ideal for Winter ventilation.

Guarantees uniform temperature and even air distribution throughout the house—on cooler days as well as hot days.

Reduces operating cost in proportion to amount of cooling needed.

The "EQUALIZER"—a sensational new development by Kooler-Aire—is the crowning achievement of twelve years of progress and pioneering in theatre air conditioning. It is the perfected result of more than three years of engineering research and exhaustive tests. We guarantee its performance, when installed according to our specifications.

The "EQUALIZER" gives you results never before possible with any plain air or washed air cooling system. It is as important an advance in air conditioning as "talkies" were to motion pictures. It is included in our 1936 "Equalized" Kooler-Aire System. It can be added to systems already installed.

Don't buy any cooling system until you find out what "Equalized" Kooler-Aire offers you. Don't buy just a "cooling" system for hot days only—get an air conditioning system for year 'round use. Investigate—send the coupon today for book, "Equalized Air Conditioning."

THE STARS OF 'OF HUMAN BONDAGE' HOLD OVER 2ND WEEK WITH A HIT HAILED AS 'SEVEN TIMES BETTER THAN THE AVERAGE MELODRAMA'!

"Seven times better than the average melodrama. An excellent film...filled with excitement, humor and romance. Beautifully written, superbly acted, robust melodrama. There is an atmosphere of brilliant writing as well as excellent acting about every moment of it. Indeed the whole thing is played so richly, so rightly that the film emerges as a work of distinction."—World-Telegram

"Excellent. Robert E. Sherwood's stage hit of last season has been admirably transferred to the screen. Delightful, enormously effective entertainment."—Journal

"A production of most distinguished calibre. Tense, swift, hot melodrama and blazing action. This is, perhaps, Mr. Howard's finest role." —American

"Animate and vital. The Warners continue to display their skill at transcribing plays into film. With their excellent version of 'Ceiling Zero' scarcely out of the first running they now have wrought an entirely satisfactory screen edition of 'The Petrified Forest', one of the graces of the theatre last season." —Times

"Returned from the Hollywood studios even more effective than when it left Broadway as a stage play!" —Sun

"Thrilling and absorbing. Howard gives the same compelling performance which he gave on the stage and opposite him Bette Davis gives one of her finest performances on the screen". —News

"Absorbing, brilliantly written, splendidly directed, handsomely produced."—Mirror

THE NEEDLE'S EYE

WHEN St. Luke—Chapter 18, Verse 25—was trying for a metaphor denoting the extremely difficult, he wrote: "For it is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle," etc.

That probably referred not to a sewing needle but was a picturesque designation of the narrow slitted, one-man side gates of the walled cities of Syria.

However, the putting of the camel through the needle's eye is no considerable undertaking as compared to the performance of the motion picture projector which puts maybe a billion and a half dollars' worth of entertainment in the United States each year through an aperture about the size of a postage stamp.

No other art or industry in the world narrows down the essence of its success in performance and delivery to quite such a needle's eye as that through which all of the motion picture has to pass.

The job is done in the continuous miracle of the screen by a man and his machine, the projectionist and his projector. They both have to be endowed with a competency close to perfection.

A theatre may have acres of carpets, miles of seats, tons of machinery, an army of staff, but the supreme essence of what it is all about goes through a spot 0.600 of an inch high and 0.825 wide—the picture opening in the aperture plate. Back of that stands the whole of the great production plant from Hollywood to London, and in front of it is the fate of the box offices of the world.

Projectionists have become so competent, machines so perfect in function, that we often tend to forget about projection. But after all it is not, in all of its perfection, automatic. High standards of projection are to be maintained only by unrelenting vigilance, constant, unwavering attention to that needle's eye of the industry. Ten thousandths of an inch, hundredths of a second, matter vastly at the needle's eye, and again out on the screen. In a considerable number of theatres, still, despite all of the facilities available, projection is yet to be brought up to the best attainable standards.

A great deal has been set down about refinements and enhancements of sound recording in "wide range" and "high fidelity" and much has been said about the necessity for bringing sound reproduction channels up to capacity to deliver all that the sound track carries. Meanwhile refinements of the camera, lenses and photographic emulsions, studio lighting and actinic values have also given to today's negatives and prints a new range of values in tone and quality that can be delivered to the audience only by the best of equipment and projectionist skill.

BELLS, BY MR. PIDDLER

JUST supposing: What if the motion picture industry bought some time from National Broadcasting Company to advance argument in behalf of the screen and embellished its message with decorations of drivel by such a genius as Mr. James Piddler saying, for instance:

"Now I am going to tell you about lipsticks, cosmetics and cosmeticians"—two bells—"that's for Tangarine, a two bell lipstick. Its texture and color are handsome and if the direction of the compounding of some of the ingredients had been more skillful it would be close to a three bell lipstick.—Now for the news—the report that Miss Tangarine was in Reno to establish residence for a divorce is entirely in error. It was, in fact, another girl by the same name.—The fine publicity story that the president of the Tangarine company has dyed his hair is just another mistake—the truth is that he only traded in his old toupee. Gossip of a romance between him and Miss Goody Two Shoes is unfounded. The fact is that they have not been speaking since a week-end at Palm Springs just before Christmas."

FASHIONS

THE increasing importance of male stars in Hollywood as compared with the status of the women of the screen is the subject of some reporting of the observations of Mr. Darryl Zanuck by Mr. Edwin Schallert in the Los Angeles Times.

Mr. Zanuck seems to think that the men of the screen today have ceased to "resort to artifice or aping," more assured in their own personalities, while many of the feminine stars, just copy kittens imitating each other, can hardly be told from their stand-ins.

The observations of this astute producer may be correct enough in terms of technology, but they do not take account of the fact that the customers are copy cats, too. If that were not true there would be no fashion business, the customers of which are all women.

THE fan riots around the Rivoli in New York's Broadway on the occasion of the Chaplin "Modern Times" opening cheerfully demonstrates that the consumers are rapidly recovering to their standard abnormancy. The customers will never be smart, but they can be indifferent. Again showmanship and its time-proven devices are vindicated. The future is safe.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Regulation

Distributors are within their rights in regulating, by contract clauses, the policies of theatres in so far as double features, minimum admission charges and the like are concerned. So ruled the United States district court at Minneapolis, in refusing to independent exhibitors an injunction to restrain the selling companies from enforcing contract clauses prohibiting duals and enforcing minimum admissions. The decision, of importance to thousands of exhibitors, and to all distributors, both of whom have been vigorously debating the question, is reported on page 13; the decision itself in complete text appears on page 59.

TVA and Theatres

Hundreds of motion picture theatre owners in Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi and Tennessee who are now saving as much as 50 per cent on the costs of their electric power, as provided by the government's TVA, stand to lose thousands of dollars annually if the United States supreme court declares the Tennessee Valley Authority Act unconstitutional, as charged by private utilities in a test case that is about to be determined by the nine justices of the Supreme bench.

The extent to which exhibitors are directly involved in the TVA and the significance of a supreme court decision either way is told on page 16.

No Music Tax Help

Music tax relief for exhibitors and other users of copyrighted compositions appears doomed at this session of Congress due to several factors, chief of which is a strong countermove by the music industry, authors, composers and publishers to force through the Daly bill.

Too, Congressman William I. Sirovich, chairman of the House patents committee, opposes the Duffy bill as not giving adequate protection to American film producers and creative workers abroad.

The many conflicting interests involved and the fact that a majority of the committee members are new appointees will also militate against early action on copyright legislation in the House See page 36.

Canada Looks Up

An increase of 1.5 per cent in average receipts of all theatres in Canada was recorded last year, according to the Dominion Board of Statistics, in the first Government compilation of aggregate attendance. Film exchanges showed a 9.4 per cent gain of business, to a total of $7,618,700.

Attendance at 799 theatres totaled 107,718,000, receipts $25,280,300, as against $38,479,500 in the peak year 1930.

Receipts in six of the nine provinces were in excess of those of the previous year, British Columbia showing the greatest advance with 6.6 per cent and Ontario 3 per cent. The greatest falling off was in Quebec, where the decrease for the year was 3.2 per cent. Manitoba and Prince Edward Island were also down. Aggregate attendance in Ontario was 45,747,000, while that for Quebec, which was second in the standing, was 24,466,000.

Among the cities, Toronto held the leading position with receipts of $4,778,500 and an attendance of 19,242,000 persons for 89 theatres. Montreal, the largest city of the Dominion, but with only 56 theatres, had aggregate receipts of $3,938,000 and an attendance of 18,578,000. Theatres in Toronto reported an increase in receipts of 2.6 per cent, while in Montreal receipts fell off 3.5 per cent, compared with the previous year. Vancouver stood third with an attendance of 7,752,000, and Winnipeg fourth with 6,066,000 admissions.

Political Films

Exhibition of political pictures became an issue this week when the Ohio censors banned "The Amateur Fire Brigade" as disrespectful to President Roosevelt. Chicago censors also showed opposition to the caustic satire on the New Deal, and organized labor in Toledo has launched a fight.

Which brings up again the question of industry participation in political campaigns. Industry spokesmen caution that exhibitors who lend their screens to political attacks, without giving the other side an opportunity to present its views, are "leading with the chin." See page 24.

Museum Opens

Following the formal dedication on Lincoln's Birthday this week, the New York Museum of Science and Industry was opened to the public in its new permanent home in the RCA Building, Rockefeller Center.

The motion picture industry plays a prominent part in the exhibition in the elaborate display prepared by members of the laboratories of the Eastman Kodak Company.

In the Eastman exhibit it is shown how pictures are registered on film, the developing process and finally the projection of motion pictures by means of a machine which the visitor works himself.

Developments in the field of color photography are also covered in the Eastman display with an exhibit which shows the principles underlying the reproduction of color in photographs.

Le Baron Chief

Following weeks of executive conferences between studio and home office officials of Paramount, during which time arose many rumors concerning a successor to Ernst Lubitsch as head of Paramount production, John E. Otterson, president, this week announced appointment of William LeBaron to the post. This development and releasing sales and theatre matters before the company are discussed in detail on page 30.

Novels Lead

The medium of the printed page, in the form of novels and published magazine stories has established itself, for the first time in years, as a greater source of material for the motion picture than the original story. In January, 18 published manuscripts were purchased by the studios, together with five plays, and 14 originals. See page 55.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

In the Middle

Innocent victims in radio's quarrel with Warner Brothers over the right to broadcast its music, theatres are finding themselves in the middle when broadcasters refuse the usual air publicity.

Broadcasting thus is waging a punitive campaign for being compelled to pay a double music tax. All mention of Warner films or Warner music in other pictures is barred in many instances, and there are other forms of retaliation.

A suit for $995,000 against National Broadcasting Company, withdrawal of another for $670,000 filed against Columbia Broadcasting System, and an action for $100,000 against Warner highlighted this week's story of music litigation. It's on page 32.

Warner-Koplar

The three Warner brothers—Harry, Albert and Jack—went into Wilmington courtroom this week to defend Harry Koplar's minority stockholder's suit in which the plaintiff demands the return by the brothers of some $14,000,000 to the corporation.

The Warners will fight the case to a finish in an attempt to put to rest definitely and for all time "the wild and groundless claims of minority stockholders who seek to benefit personally by their ability to involve the company in litigation." Opening arguments and exhibits traced the history both of the brothers and their company, embracing the beginning of sound, and are reported on page 50.

Gala Premiere

Surpassing any premiere of the last five years, Charles Chaplin's "Modern Times" opened February 12 at Grauman's Chinese theatre to one of the most enthusiastic audiences ever to witness a Hollywood first night. While thousands thronged the sidewalks, a great assemblage of film favorites and motion picture executives filed past a battery of newspaper and newsreel photographers to attend the long-awaited event.

Attending the premier in company with Paulette Goddard, Mr. Chaplin broke a precedent and made a speech from the stage in which he introduced Miss Goddard to the audience.

Among those present were Mary Pickford, Samuel Goldwyn, Douglas Fairbanks, Jesse Lasky, Walter Chrysler, Amelia Earhart Putnam, Alfred G. Vanderbilt, Jock Whitney, Marlene Dietrich, Leopold Stokowski, Norma Shearer, Irving Thalberg, Franchot Tone, Louis B. Mayer, Sid Grauman, Ernst Lubitsch, B. P. Schulberg, Harry Rapf, Freddie Bartholomew, Warren William, Groucho Marx, Dolores Costello, Otto Kruger, Alan Dinehart, Hugh Walpole, Edward Arnold, Vicki Baum, Charles Boyer, Joe E. Brown, Virginia Bruce, Harold Lloyd, Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler, Sally Eilers, Leo Carrillo, Claudette Colbert, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Joseph Schenck, David Selznick, Fred Stone and Walter Wanger.

With seats selling at $5.50, the house was completely sold out five days before the opening. Meanwhile, in New York, the picture has been building steadily at the Rivoli, the seventh day of the run reported exceeding both opening day and first Saturday with more people entering the theatre than on any day in the 18-year history of the theatre. At the Erlanger theatre, Philadelphia, "Modern Times" is said to have passed the attendance mark set by "City Lights" and police were required to control the crowds attending the opening in London, England, February 12.

Through the terms of a deal just closed by telephone between Joseph R. Vogel in New York and Charles Chaplin in Hollywood, the Loew's circuit will show "Modern Times" in its metropolitan theatres as well as out of town.

The picture opened in New York at the Rivoli last week. More than 70,000 paid admission the first four days, according to United Artists.

For Small Exhibitor

Industry leaders from coast to coast have been invited to the 23rd annual convention of the Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, now definitely set for the Carolina hotel at Pinehurst, March 1 and 2. A program has been arranged by President Charles W. Picquet, as follows:

Major Edward A. Bowes will speak at the banquet Monday night. His radio stars, the Florida unit, will offer an entertaining program. Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, will interpret the country's reaction on the ASCAP problem; the Pettengill bill; threatened invasion of the legitimate motion picture theatre by outside commercial interests; taxation and numerous other problems that beset the path of the exhibitor. The governors of North and South Carolina both have been invited.

This is a convention for the smaller exhibitor.

Other exhibitor organization developments of the week, detailed on page 30, include affiliation of the Intermountain Theatre Owners' Association with the MPTOA, indications that independents of Connecticut will form their own organization.

Fading Cause

While a system of self-regulation for the industry is to be discussed at the annual meeting of the board of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in Miami, March 5th and 6th, Ed Kuykendall, president, said this week there was scant hope for early realization. The obstacle, he explained, is that legal means of enforcing decisions is lacking.

Discussing numerous trade problems at a meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers last week, the exhibitor leader pleaded for a "better break" for the "small exhibitor."

Exhibitors find it increasingly difficult to operate at a profit, he said, naming the reasons, which are reviewed in the story on page 22.

For Fair Practices

The report of the MPTOA president, Ed Kuykendall, on the eagerness of exhibitors for industry self-regulation, which cannot be effected because of the lack of legal means for enforcement, was followed this week by the appearance of two plans from the outside to effect smooth relations between buyer and seller:

(1) The American Arbitration Association, to which the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors belong, started a campaign to place uniform arbitration statutes on the books of the 48 states, thus paving the way for upholding arbitration agreements entered into between exchange and exhibitor, among others.

(2) The National Industrial Council's Siegfried Hartman offered a program for establishing, by legislative enactment, an official industrial court for enforcing fair trade practices. Both programs are reported on page 23.

Sales Tax Test

Application for a writ of certiorari was made to the state supreme court in New York Tuesday by the New York City United Artists exchange in preparation for an appeal of the city's recent decision holding the film rentals of the exchange to be subject to the city's two per cent sales tax. Ordinarily, such applications are granted as a matter of course by the court.

The city will have 20 days in which to file its answer to the writ before a hearing date on the appeal can be set by the appellate division. As the United Artists assessment is the only one to be made by the city against a Manhattan exchange the appeal is viewed by distributors as a test case.

This Week in Pictures

WATERFRONT INTERVIEW. By New York ship's reporters, with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., on his arrival from England, where he recently completed "The Amateur Gentleman," in which he co-stars with Elissa Landi. This is the first production of Criterion Films, which Mr. Fairbanks organized over there. Release is by United Artists.

AMONG THOSE PRESENT. At the opening of "Charlie Chaplin in Modern Times" at the Rivoli, New York. Many were the celebrities. Here we give you Eddie Cantor, another United Artists star and comedian.

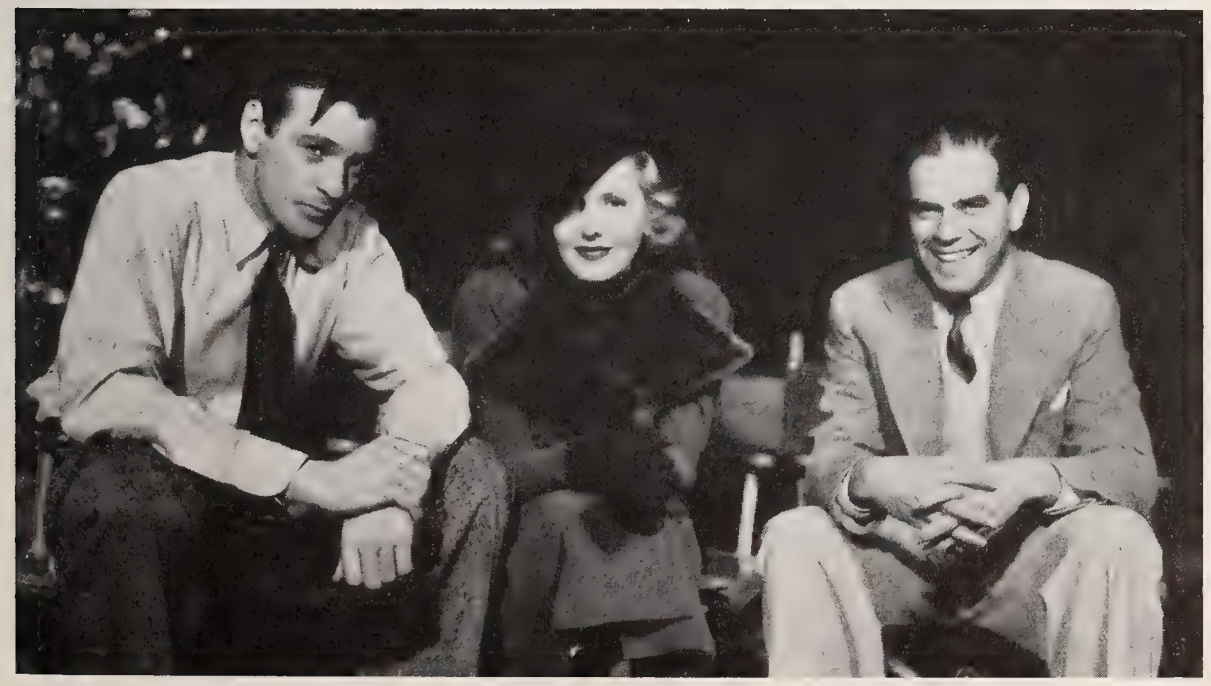
FIRST ONE DONE. (Below) Leads and executives as work ended on "The Dragnet," first of new Burroughs-Tarzan group: Ben Cohen, president; Rod La Roque, Marian Nixon, Ashton Dearholt, production chief.

TO STAR IN BRITAIN. Constance Bennett (below) as she sailed from New York, accompanied by her husband, the Marquis Henri de la Falaise, for England, where she will make two Gaumont British pictures, "Everything Is Thunder" and "The Hawk."



CLASS IN FILM APPRECIATION. Sponsored by the National Board of Review during its convention in New York. This group of school children, all members of Young Reviewers, is shown at a screening of the 20th Century-Fox picture, "Every Saturday Night," which was afterward discussed under the guidance of review board members.

AS A LAD. Anthony Adverse will look like this, which is to say like Billy Mauch. That is before the title character of Warner's "Anthony Adverse" grows up to be Fredric March.

CO-STARS AND DIRECTOR. A canny camera study, below, of Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur and Frank Capra, disclosing them frantically at work upon a new Columbia production tentatively called "Chapeau de l'opera," or "Opera Hat."

EN ROUTE. Edmund Lowe in New York, at this moment having completed just half a journey from Hollywood to England to keep an appointment with Gaumont British to appear in "The Invisible Menace."

CLOUDS IN THE MAKING. With silver linings just a matter of craftsmanship, as may be gathered from the picture below, showing a step in the process. These clouds will appoint heavenly regions in Warner's version of "The Green Pastures."

STRUTTING THEIR STUFF. Marie Wilson and her shadow, who (if we may continue the duality) are featured in goings-on like this, and otherwise, in Warner's "Men on Her Mind." Warren William and Bette Davis head the cast.

MODEL SIGNED. Anita Counihan, New York photographers' model recently given a long-term contract by RKO Radio, as she was good-wished Hollywood-ward (Gosh, we sound like Winchell!) by John Powers, her manager, and sister models.

REPRESENT THEATRE IN BASKETBALL LEAGUE. Members of the staff of the Coolidge Corner theatre in Brookline, Mass., who compose a team representing the theatre in the Brookline Municipal Gymnasium League basketball contests. They are (rear) D. Agnew, J. Sheehan, J. Kenney, J. Abramson, captain; (front) S. Mahoney and W. Murphy. J. Markle, the manager, is the coach. (And win or lose, it's good exploitation!)

DISTRIBUTORS MAY DIRECT THEATRE POLICY, IS RULING

Companies Have Right to Decide on Minimum Admissions and Double Billing, Says Minneapolis District Jurist

The United States courts are at loggerheads over the right of distributors to control theatre policy by enforcing contractual limitations in the matter of double featuring, minimum admission charges and the like, thereby creating confusion among exhibitors and the selling companies who have been arguing the question vigorously of late.

The United States district court in Philadelphia the other week, in the Perelman case, armed theatre owners with a decision preventing distributors from enforcing a contract clause prohibiting double bills, but now comes the district court at Minneapolis, after considering the Philadelphia decree, with a ruling that the companies are entirely within their rights in telling owners what minimum admissions may be charged and whether they may show two features on a single program.

Shubert Theatre Players Company, a corporation operating the Palace theatre, Minneapolis, and Lyceum, at St. Paul, had appeared before the United States district court, fourth division of Minnesota, at Minneapolis, on an application for a temporary injunction to restrain Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, Radio-Keith-Orpheum, Twentieth Century-Fox, United Artists, Universal and Warner Brothers-First National from (1) conspiring to prohibit the exhibition of features distributed by the defendants in conjunction with other full length pictures on double feature programs; (2) conspiring not to provide films to the two complaining theatres unless the plaintiff entered into an agreement to charge an admission to the Palace and Lyceum of not less than 15 cents; (3) conspiring to penalize the plaintiff's theatres by charging unreasonable rentals unless the plaintiff abided by the foregoing contractual orders.

Injunction Refused

Federal Judge Gunnar Nordbye denied the injunction, held that no conspiracy had been shown in violation of the Sherman and Clayton acts, and upheld the right of the distributors to conduct their business in such a manner as to protect the showing of their pictures licensed to exhibitors. (The complete text of Judge Nordbye's decision starts on page 59.)

Thousands of exhibitors the country over, for many years privately or otherwise, have challenged the right of distributing companies to control theatre policy in the manner at issue. The recent eastern decision, as exemplified by the Philadelphia district court, was advanced by independent owners as an important victory. They now find last week's Minneapolis decree to be in sharp contrast, Judge Nordbye taking the extreme opposite attitude of Philadelphia's federal court, by holding that the distributor has an interest in theatre policy where his pictures are played and that the safeguarding of that interest by contract clauses which regulate policy may be valid; that, when those contract clauses are similar to clauses contained in the contracts of other distributors, this, in itself, is not evidence of concerted action in violation of the anti-trust laws.

Paul C. Thomas, St. Paul attorney, appeared in behalf of the plaintiff independent exhibitors, and Shearer, Byard and Trogner, of Minneapolis, appeared in behalf of the defendants, excepting Warner Brothers, which is represented by Kellogg, Morgan, Chase, Carter and Headley, of St. Paul.

For the first time, a United States court, in the Minneapolis instance, concluded that distributors have a direct interest in the admission price of a theatre where its pictures are exhibited, from the standpoint of their effect on the subsequent who is required by the distributor to charge a certain minimum admission in order to avoid "ruinous competition" between the prior run and the subsequent.

"If the public was aware," said the court, "that a picture could be seen at a second-run theatre a short time after its initial showing at a price substantially less than the price charged by the first-run theatre, it is apparent that the public would refuse to pay the advanced prices charged by such first-run theatres, with the resulting effect on the exhibitors' rental and percentage" charged by the distributor to the first-run.

The court at this point struck a sore spot in distributor-exhibitor relations. For years the argument has been raging whether lower-priced subsequent-runs made serious inroads on the business of the de luxe, higher-scaled downtown theatre with its stage show, orchestra and better appointed features of entertainment, as compared with the less elegant, limited and older entertainment features of the subsequent.

"It becomes necessary," the court concluded, for distrbutors to adopt "certain policies" with reference to clearance, admission price, and the exhibition of a feature film with another feature film on the same program. The court thereby approved of the limitations placed by distributors on all subsequent runs either through the rules and regulations of clearance and zoning schedules or by contract. Such procedure by the distributors, continued the court, "are the results of the distributors' own individual experience and are dictated by its individual initiative for its own benefit", and, therefore, do not show that they were shaped by reason of any conspiracy.

Calls Policies Necessary

"That the provisions in the distributors' contracts against double features and the establishment of a minimum admission price may work an apparent hardship in individual cases, and that it may be difficult to establish such business policies so that they are entirely equitable between competing theatres," is freely admitted by the federal court. Too, "the zoning of theatres which compete with one another may in some instances seem arbitrary, but the court does not find on this showing that the business policies of these defendants, as expressed in the provisions complained of, are the result of any attempt on the part of these defendants to injure the plaintiff's business, and any inequities that may now exist in regard to the matters herein have not come about by reason of any designedly unfair business practice," said the court. It would appear, then, that the situation about which the two independent theatres complain, and which is similar to that of thousands of independent operations the country over, does not, in the opinion of this federal court, warrant court relief.

"Restrictions in the license contracts regarding the (minimum) admission prices and double features do not tend to substantially lessen competition in contravention of the Sherman Act or the Clayton (anti-trust) Acts, and do not tend to create an illegal monopoly in interstate commerce," said the court.

The court official said that it "has given due consideration" to the recent Philadelphia case, in which independent owners won a victory over distributors.

MAJORS RUSH NEW PHILADELPHIA PLEA

Major distributing organizations are expected to file their application for a rehearing of the Perelman double feature case in the United States circuit court of appeals at Philadelphia late this week, it was revealed in New York. The distributors have until the end of the week to make their application and it is expected their legal representatives will do so well within the deadline.

The circuit court of Philadelphia last month affirmed a decision of the United States district court there holding the exhibition contract clause which prohibits the playing of a second feature with any other covered by the contract to be a violation of the anti-trust laws. Indications are that if the motion for a rehearing is denied the distributors wil take the case to the United States supreme court.

Judge Refuses Injunction; Says Companies Have Right to Protect Film Showings; Contrasts with Perelman Ruling

Re-Creating "Sutter's Gold"

Immediately above, Edward Arnold is shown in the title role of John Sutter, piloting the slave ship over which he assumes command. The upper still pictures the battle at Fort Sutter between Americans and Mexicans.

Noting in advance stills and descriptive comment on the Universal production, "Sutter's Gold," an epic of early California. This is one of a series of HERALD features devoted to pictures in production.

CAPT. JOHN SUTTER has been fascinating writing people for quite some time. During the last three-quarters of a century, more than 150 biographers and historians have interested themselves in the Johan Souter into whose lap an amazing Fortune tossed an empire in the far new world of California. Now the story is being told for the screen in Universal's "Sutter's Gold."

Perhaps few characters in American history are so well adapted to the dramatic requirements of the motion picture as this hardy Swiss adventurer. For the interpretation of him and the essential narrative elements of his life, Edmund Grainger, the producer, chose Blaise Cendrar's novel as a basis, while in making the adaptation, Gene Fowler has adhered closely to the historical facts. The picture is being directed by James Cruze, who has been identified with many a production of similar sweep—the director, it is pertinent to recall here, of "The Covered Wagon."

The role of Sutter is played by Edward Arnold, whose fitness for the part of a resourceful, virile adventurer like Sutter may be judged from his effectiveness in "Diamond Jim" and "Crime and Punishment."

The principal feminine role belongs to Binnie Barnes. She portrays the Countess Elizabeth Baroffski, whose charms, potent enough to win John Sutter from his wife, are also greater than her loyalty to him. Lee Tracy has the role of Pete Perkin, Sutter's usually staunch friend.

Others in the cast are Montagu Love, John Miljan, Harry Carey, Katherine Alexander, Addison Richards, Morgan Wallace, Mitchell Lewis, Frank Reicher and

Robert Warwick. In addition to the principal members of the cast, the production employs about 2,500 extras.

Though this is a story of the Californian frontier, the narrative moves through many and widely diversified locales. Some 75 sets have been used for action laid in Switzerland, New York, Hawaii and Washington, D. C., as well as the mountains and plains and towns of the Spanish and American West.

This variety of setting is repeated in the musical score by Franz Waxman, who has blended selections ranging through Swiss, Hawaiian, Spanish, Russian and early American compositions.

The story takes Sutter, believing himself a wanted man, from Switzerland to New York. Here, working as a strike breaking horsecar driver, he meets Perkin. Together they go West. In Vancouver, Canada, unable to get a California boat, they ship to Hawaii. Elevated to the status of a General by the glib Perkin, Sutter is cordially received by the King. Bound for California, Sutter discovers the vessel, commanded by a cruel captain (Montagu Love), is a slave ship. Sutter takes command and frees the Kanakas from their chains.

In California, the Spanish governor gives Sutter an enormous land grant. Reducing the Kanakas to practical peonage, he founds New Helvetia. Later Sutter makes a deal with the Russians to take over their California domain. Fort Sutter is built and Sutter becomes the dominant figure of the Pacific Coast.

Sutter becomes attached to a Countess (Binnie Barnes), who remains his guest for several years. Mexico, fearful of United States expansion, demands Sutter's empire, but its army is defeated by that of General Fremont, and the American flag is raised over Fort Sutter.

Simultaneous with the discovery of gold at Sutter's Mill, Tracy reveals to the countess that Sutter is a married man. That is the beginning of the end. Deserted by all, Sutter's fortune collapses, and he returns to Switzerland.

In California again, Sutter institutes thousands of law suits to regain his once vast fortune. Defeated in every court, Sutter is derided, abused and stoned. Sutter goes to Washington, where through three Presidential administrations, the tormented man pleads for justice. He dies, victim of a cruel ruse, at the moment he believes he is triumphant.

While the term "Sutter's Gold" is irrevocably associated with discovery of gold by John Marshall on Sutter's property in California, and the event is illustrated to denote the important influence it had on Sutter's future, the film distinctly is not to be regarded as a glorified Western of the "forty-niners." It has been the writer's privilege to see much of it in the process of production as well as having several conversations with those most intimately associated with its progress. "Sutter's Gold" is a faithful re-creation of John Sutter's mature life.

BIG SAVINGS IN EXHIBITION REST ON SUPREME COURT'S TVA RULING

Total of 1,270 Theatres in Five Southern States Where TVA Operates with Its 50 Per Cent Reduction in Power Rates

Several hundred theatre owners stand to win or lose many thousands of dollars annually on the United States supreme court's decision, expected next Monday, on the constitutionality of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act and its low rates for power.

President Roosevelt's Administration, hundreds of private power companies and scores of thousands of electric power consumers also are awaiting the session of the supreme court at which the fate of the TVA will be announced by the nine black-robed justices.

Tension was heightened last Monday by the failure of the court at Washington to give its decision, which has been awaited each Monday, the court's meeting day, for the last month.

Theatres rate very highly in their communities as large users of electric current, and for years have been campaigning for more favorable power rates. They have succeeded in few instances, but the TVA gave them the first real wholesale benefits, in Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi and Tennessee, where the TVA provides government power at rates 40 to 50 per cent lower than those charged heretofore by the private power companies which were the exclusive power suppliers until the TVA was injected into the picture by the New Dealers as a competitor.

A factor, too, is the employment for large numbers of workers on such Government projects, with the spending money for amusement thus made available.

There are some 1,270 theatres in the five southern states where the TVA now operates—230 in Alabama, 221 in Georgia, 426 in Kentucky, 160 in Mississippi and 233 in Tennessee, but there is no way of telling at the moment how many exhibitors are now supplied with power by the TVA as against the number that continues to buy power from the old-line private utilities.

High Prices If Negative Ruling

It was the private utilities which, suffering from the low rates effected by the TVA, challenged the TVA's constitutionality in the supreme court, charging that the government power agency is ruining the companies with its cheap rates. Any decision by the supreme court wrecking the TVA on grounds of unconstitutionality would start a movement by the private companies to return some semblance of high rates in those areas where consumers now are being served by TVA and where the utilities again would be called on to provide the power that now is coming through the TVA feed lines.

The New Deal has frankly called the TVA its "yardstick" for measuring in the future the cost of electric power supplied to consumers, and establishment of its constitutionality in the present controversy, say New Dealers, would result in the private companies being compelled to lower their rates in order to compete, with consequent reduction in rates to exhibitors by private companies where TVA power is not available.

Extension of Service Seen

Establishment by the supreme court of the TVA's constitutionality also would bring a wholesale extension of TVA facilities to parts of the country outside of the five-state area which it now serves in the South.

The most important single Government electrification development at the moment is the Tennessee Valley project. The TVA has a permanent rate schedule for various classes of buyers of power and does no retail business whatever, its industrial schedule being for manufacturers. Under the TVA set-up, however, current is sold to power companies of various types, many of them directly subsidized, and contracts for such current supplied by the TVA carry the TVA's schedules at which the power is to be resold to the consumer by the private TVA distributor. There is, however, no prohibition set down by the TVA against the private contractee further reducing the TVA-scheduled rates.

Thus, theatres in the territories served with TVA current deal with local power distributors as do those in any other area, but the private TVA distributors are compelled to charge on the average of 50 per cent less than the rates before the TVA.

Of considerable importance to exhibitors outside of the TVA area is the fact that the TVA's cheaper power rate already is beginning to be reflected in lower rates effected by private utilities, although the reductions by the private companies are to a much lesser extent than the 50 per cent cut brought about by the TVA.

In other sections of the country served by United States Government-owned generating plants the situation eventually will be much the same as that created in the five southern states by the TVA, principally in New England, where Passamaquoddy Dam now is being built, in the Northwest where power eventually will be drawn from the Grand Coulee Dam, and from Boulder Dam in the Southwest.

While the Roosevelt Administration admittedly would like to cut electric rates to the bone as a way of advertising the advantages of Government ownership of public utilities, it dare not reduce them to a point where operations would show a loss, which would provide excellent ammunition for opponents, political and industrial, who already contend that the rate schedules do not reflect all costs incident to capital investment and operation.

Pettengill Bill is Made Part of Present Session House Business

Public hearings on the anti-block booking bill sponsored in Congress last session by Representative Samuel Pettengill, of Indiana, will be held in two weeks, when a subcommittee will be formed by the House of Representatives' interstate and foreign commerce committee to take charge of the legislation.

The Pettengill film measure was this week made part of the present program of business of that committee. Representative Pettengill said he would not accept the committee chairmanship and had urged Representative Rayburn, head of the House interstate commerce committee, to select a chairman and membership of impartial men. He indicated he was not entirely satisfied with such legislation and desired opinions from men who have no interest in the matter.

Representative Pettengill's bill, introduced in March, 1935, would prohibit block booking and blind selling. No consideration was possible at the last session because of the pressure of important New Deal legislation.

From Washington came word this week that Representative Pettengill now is confident that House approval can be secured, once the bill is reported favorably by the subcommittee, but on the Senate side doubt is expressed whether a vote could be reached this year, in view of plans to end the session as early as possible.

Allied States Association is the notable faction campaigning for its passage.

A Senate subcommittee, headed by Senator Neely and including Senators Barkley, Benson, Metcalf and Davis, start February 18th to consider the Neely bill to prohibit block and blind booking.

Warner Quarterly Net Estimated Over Million

Warner Brothers net profit for the quarter ending February 29 is expected to be in excess of $1,000,000, according to report current this week. For the preceding quarter the company showed a net of $1,031,315 after interest, amortization, depreciation, Federal tax and other charges.

The Facts Behind "The Informer"

An Obscure Novel Plus a Clouded Star and a Determined Director Equal a Screen Classic

by WILLIAM R. WEAVER

Exhibited July 26 through August 5, 1935, at the Little Carnegie theatre, New York, and repeated September 27 through 30, "The Informer" was revived on being singled out for critical honors and nears the end of its seventh week at this playhouse as this is written, and with the front of the theatre dressed as the illustration shows.

As new, critic poll-inspired bookings on "The Informer" pass the thousand mark, climbing steadily toward a possible record gross for prestige pictures, artistic triumphs, trade interest turns back to beginnings, explores sources, production personnel and processes responsible for a picture opposed in kind and content to accepted box office tenets yet recorded in black ink on a snug majority of exhibitor ledgers and in the account books of the producing company.

In its seventh week at the Little Carnegie theatre, New York City, returned for its sixth revival at the Liberty in Pittsburgh, "The Informer" is playing to better business, often at higher rental, than when released on May 24, 1935, with the nation's newspaper critics chorusing its praises and paying patrons about evenly divided as to the accuracy of their pronouncements.

Topping the New York newspaper critics' consensus of Ten Best lists, singled out for special report by the Committee on Exceptional Photoplays of the National Board of Review, high on every reputable national or regional list and nominated for consideration by the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences, "The Informer" came to this commanding position, like many or most genuinely memorable productions in screen history, through no orderly sequence of good-better-best development on the part of its principal personnel.

Its immediate forerunner, likewise starring Victor McLaglen directed by John Ford with Cliff Reid as associate producer, was "The Lost Patrol." This readily forgettable item was Director Ford's second venture into the no doubt artistically commendable business of making pictures without women (he had made "Men Without Women" from a story by himself) and a picture that only the critics could love. Their cheers were only slightly less lusty than the protests of the payees, whose number became fewer and fewer day by day as the picture ran its course.

If anything in "The Lost Patrol" warranted confidence in "The Informer" it was Victor McLaglen's performance as the stolidly heroic Legionnaire, sole survivor of a detachment surrounded and tediously slaughtered by tribesmen in a desert outpost. Sharply discounted by a stubbornly protracted series of sez-you-sez-me castings stemming from "What Price Glory," McLaglen's work in "The Lost Patrol" reminded its small public of better things and in some degree restored his actor status.

It set him up, so to speak, for the next assignment, but private experience predating his actorship and paralleling roughly the colorful personal adventures of Liam O'Flaherty, author of "The Informer," unquestionably account for the striking veracity of his portrayal.

London born, his youth spent in South Africa, where his father was Bishop of Clermont, McLaglen had run away from home to join the army, one of five brothers in the war, and served throughout the conflict in the Near East, finally as provost marshal of Bagdad. Liam O'Flaherty, born forty years ago on the Isle of Aran off the coast of Ireland, was doing his bit for the same king and country on another front.

Author of eleven novels, five volumes of short stories, the Irish writer whetted his powerful pen and zest for life in many strange ways and places, as a lumberjack in Canada, a dishwasher in Rio, a printer's devil in Boston, a waiter, a day laborer, here, there and everywhere, winding up two years of assorted adventures recorded and published under the title, "Two Years," by returning to Ireland when the revolution started and organizing a company to take active part therein. A subaltern in that company provided the pattern for the character, manner and mental makeup of the traitorous Gypo Nolan in "The Informer."

For rough-and-tumble McLaglen to understand a Gypo Nolan created by hard-bitten O'Flaherty required, then, no miracle. For John Ford, close student of Irish literature and history, to make a polished production of an inherently unpolished story was wholy expectable by precedent. He had made "The Iron Horse," ever green in box office memory, and he had made "Mother Machree." He had made "The Black Watch" and "Arrowsmith." He came to the making of "The Informer" as well prepared as its author and star to capture and transmit the spell of revolt-torn Dublin and goes on, sustained by recognition of that accomplishment, to direction of Sean O'Casey's "The Plough and the Stars."

Production cost of "The Informer" wore out no adding machines.

Including all items spanning a short year of preparation and a regularly allotted percentage of studio overhead, the figure nudged $340,000. Actual cost charged directly to the picture from acceptance of the final script to completion of the film was $285,000.

All the shooting was done indoors. A single set erected on two stages reproduced the Dublin streets and buildings required. Up and down and in and out of this set the inexpensive cast worked out the slowly mounting tempo of Dudley Nichols' sparsely worded script.

Robert Sisk, newly come to Hollywood but drawn inevitably to a production of Irish antecedent, looked in and donated suggestions based in avocational devotion to his rich personal collection of Celtic lore. The negative was completed in four weeks.

Says S. Barret McCormick, director of advertising and publicity for RKO-Radio, "We knew we had a good picture, but a picture with a problem, so we followed our customary policy of telling the whole truth about it and we got the result we wanted."

But Mr. McCormick understates.

The situation was not importantly different from that which confronted him when "The Lost Patrol" came from the camera. That, too, was a good picture, with a problem, and presumably the whole truth about it was told as per customary policy, but the critical hosannas it won were forgotten when, on exhibition, it folded like a Legionnaire's tent about Mr. Exhibitor's ears. This time Mr. McCormick organized the critics, without their knowledge, by an advertising stroke that warrants quotation.

CITES ATTENDANCE RISE IN LEGION'S CAMPAIGN

Secretary Daly Points to "Money Making Stars"; Says Decency Unit Is Permanent

Motion picture attendance has increased 25 per cent in the two years that the Legion of Decency has been conducting its campaign for a moral screen, the Reverend Joseph A. Daly, Ph. D., the League's executive secretary, told the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the Hotel Astor, New York, on Thursday.

In his first public address since his recent appointment to direct the Legion's activities on a permanent basis, Father Daly answered a number of objections which he said had arisen in connection with the movement. As far as the industry is concerned, he declared, the Legion has justified its existence by stimulating attendance.

"Those are cold facts, capable of being substantiated by the industry's own figures," he added.

Cites "Money Making Stars"

Father Daly cited the money-making stars survey of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, in which the independent exhibitors of the country chose Shirley Temple and the late Will Rogers as the box-office leaders of the year, as important indication that theatregoers did not want "pictures of indecency or vulgarity."

The speaker was presented by Mrs. Mary Harden Looram, chairman of the motion picture bureau of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, who said the Catholic world "rejoiced" in Father Daly's appointment by Cardinal Hayes to assume direction of the Legion. Father Daly, she declared, "has a genius for accomplishing things and is the best man in the country the industry can deal with."

Pointing to "the fine things accomplished in raising the tone of film advertising and publicity," Mrs. Looram added that "we know the problems of motion picture men and that much advertising has to be sensational to get people into theatres.

"But we know, too," she said, "that sensational publicity detracts as much as it attracts."

Cooperation Emphasized

She bespoke continued close cooperation with the industry's advertising code administration and lauded the work of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America in this connection.

Explaining the purpose of the Legion of Decency as involving "three r's," in that the industry seeks returns, the public recreation and the church respectability, Father Daly declared that the Legion "has succeeded in aiding all three."

While thousands have been drawn back to films who had been alienated by inferior standards, and while the public is now finding more than adequate entertainment and has proved it by attendance, "there still remains the other half who must be brought back," he went on.

These, explained Father Daly, are the families, "and in the work of the Legion of Decency there is the best basis for their return to the motion picture theatre." Though a denominational organization, the Legion nevertheless commands the respect and attention of others, who call upon the Legion for its rating lists and film selections, he said.

"The Catholic church, with its 22,000,000 communicants in the United States, would be recreant in its duty if it failed to safeguard the morals of its people," Father Daly said. "The church did not care to see its work undone by such a powerful force as the motion picture industry."

It was because of the important aspect of the industry in influencing morals that the Legion was established, he explained.

Reaching Six Millions

Emphasizing the deep impress that the Legion's activities are making, Father Daly told the advertising men that its listings are being sent to all interested Catholic organizations and to more than 90 Catholic newspapers reaching more than one million homes and "over 6,000,000 people." The lists are going to the churches, schools and similar institutions, he added.

Father Daly pointed out that more persons see film advertising than the pictures themselves and hence it is the industry's obligation to maintain a high moral tone in the publicity. Here he praised the work of J. J. McCarthy, administrator of the industry's advertising code, and Joseph Breen, production code administrator.

"We want to feel that we stand 100 per cent behind the work Mr. Breen is doing, and we hope to sustain him in his valiant fight," Father Daly said.

Declaring that "we want to disabuse the notions of some elements in the industry who believe that now that the Legion has accomplished its objectives they can return to the old standards," Father Daly indicated that the Legion will be permanent.

He served warning also that "any attempt to incorporate the socalled 'Lubitsch touches,' which have appeared in recent films, will be taken cognizance of in the Legion's reviews."

The Broadway stage in the last 10 years gradually has disintegrated, a process beginning with "What Price Glory," said Father Daly.

Opposes Critics' Attitude

Terming the attitude of New York film reviewers and columnists as not representative of the mass of theatregoers, he deplored the producers' willingness to accept their appraisals, and said, "It is not possible to gear the morals of Broadway to the great mass of theatregoers, especially in the smaller communities, without giving offense."

He warned that sophistication in films again would alienate thousands and that "the industry will find it more difficult to bring them back a second time."

"Those in the Legion are not bluenose reformers," he said. "We are actuated by the moral obligation of the church. To the industry decency means dollars. Dirt means deficits."

Paul Graetz, who has the leading role in Warner's "Mr. Cohen Takes a Walk," was introduced by Gordon S. White, president of the association.

'Lonesome Pine' Premiere

World premiere of Walter Wanger's all-outdoor color production, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," released through Paramount, has been set for next Monday at the Colony theatre in Miami Beach, Fla.

27th, saluted readers with: "A Prediction—RKO-Radio Is Convinced that Every Critic in America Will Place It on His List of the Ten Best Pictures for 1935." The year was young, production schedules were plump with promise of tremendous triumphs to come, but Mr. McCormick knew his critics, as witness the following from a cluster of eighteen reviews quoted three weeks later:

"Nothing can keep it from my Ten Best list."—ANDREW R. KELLY, Washington Times.

"I would place it among the five best pictures produced since the coming of sound."—DONALD KIRKLEY, Baltimore Sun.

"When the motion picture roll of honor for 1935 is written out 'The Informer' will rank high on the list."—GORDON HILLMAN, Boston Daily Record.

"Here is the probable choice for the No. 1 picture of the year."—GEORGE HOLLAND, Boston American.

"Awarded the blue ribbon with palms—should be among the strong contenders for the Motion Picture Academy's award this year."—GILBERT KANOUR, Baltimore Evening Sun.

Of course it may not have been necessary, this telling the critics what to tell their readers, and in another journalistic era it might have backfired fatally, but there it was—and there is "The Informer," as of today, precisely where the critics were told to place it.

Box office history of "The Informer" in the interval between first run and revival was not sensational. The picture was not a "Box Office Champion," according to MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S recorded grosses and monthly postings. Exhibitors' reports show it spotty as to draw, big here, bad there, but loyally insist it's a fine picture. The title did not incite to pell-mell assault upon the ticket wicket. The London Times had called the novel Liam O'Flaherty's best, but what are The London Times and Liam O'Flaherty in Oskaloosa? And MacLaglen-fans, wearied and wary of the McLaglen-Lowe studies in stupidity, were not exactly hungry for sight or sound of the only exploitable personality in the cast. So the picture had just about cleared the investment when the Ten Best lists came out. The new bookings will push it over on the plus side.

RoxyReorganizing Declared Nearer

With marked improvement shown in the financial condition of New York's Roxy theatre, reorganization of the property is in sight, said White and Case, attorneys for the bondholders' committee, this week.

Emergence of the bankrupt estate from federal court supervision hinges, however, on a number of factors, and while a number of reorganization plans have been discussed, none offers sufficient advantages to warrant abandonment by the committee of a plan of its own, it was said.

It appears very probable that Howard S. Cullman, operating-trustee, will be retained by the bondholders on the basis of the job he has performed, but that, too, depends on reorganization developments, it was pointed out.

Among those understood to have submitted reorganization plans to the bondholders are Fanchon and Marco, the present operators of the theatre; Haring and Blumenthal, real estate operators, and the Brandt brothers. Recent interest in the house displayed by Paramount ended with the death of Samuel L. (Roxy) Rothafel, who would have returned as operator under Paramount's proposal, it is understood.

Continuance of an adequate film supply is definitely linked with the bondholders' reorganization discussions, and in this connection Warner Brothers is reported interested.

A dozen reorganization plans have been presented to the bondholders at various times, the attorneys said. While as an officer of the court Mr. Cullman cannot bid for the property, his associates are understood to have submitted a proposal.

The bondholders' committee is continuing negotiations for a $850,000 loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and ultimately may adopt this means of refinancing if other reorganization plans fall through, said the attorneys.

Art and the Box Office At the Roxy

Trumpeting from the heights of page 1, section 5, of a recent Sunday edition, motion picture critic Richard Watts, Jr., of the New York Herald-Tribune saw fit to upbraid Howard S. Cullman, managing director of the Roxy Theatre, for bluntly voicing plain principles of program selection in an address delivered at New York University and, more specifically, for choosing Roxy attractions on a basis "more like a shoe buyer looking over the fall line than a connoisseur inspecting works of art," a simile coined by Mr. Cullman. The critic also chides him for declining to follow the late Samuel Rothafel's example in exhibiting "such works as 'The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari,' 'The End of St. Petersburg,' 'Passion' and 'Nanook of the North.'"

As a matter of record, only the second named picture, "The End of St. Petersburg," was presented at the Roxy, and its gross of $134,109.25 for a two weeks run may be correctly appraised by reference to the following table presenting, direct from the theatre's books, actual records of the fifteen top picture grosses prior to its entry into receivership and the fifteen top grosses registered under Mr. Cullman's regime. Drastic scaling down of admission prices, accompanying proportionate reduction of operating expense, accounts for the sharply diminished totals.

The entertainment is to be in charge of Hal Horne, Edward McNamee, Arnold Van Leer, W. R. Ferguson, Irwin Zeltner, Morris Kinzler, Phil De Angelis, Kay Kamen, Hazel Flynn, Leon Bamberger, Tess Micheals, Patricia Reis, Bessie Mack, Mabel Drew and G. R. O'Neil.

Dinner arrangements will be in charge of Marvin Kirsch and Paul Benjamin, and Paul Benjamin will also have charge of tickets.

The reception committee includes the following: Bert Adler, James P. Cunningham, Ben Atwell, Mable Drew, Tess Michaels, Raymond Gallagher, Tom Hamlin, Ruth Weisberg, Hortense Schorr and Bruce Gallup.

A special souvenir program will be prepared with Milton Silver editor and Paul Benjamin business manager. Other members of the staff are Maurice D. (Red) Kann, James P. Cunningham, John Flinn, Martin Starr, Jack Harrower, Herbert S. Berg, Edward McNamee, Ted Sullivan and H. S. Fuld.

The advertising will be handled by Milton Silver, chairman, Silas F. Seadler, "Hap" Hadley and Ralph E. Lund. Those in charge of publicity are: Edward Finney, Chairman, Irwin Zeltner, Jack Harrower, James P. Cunningham, Al Sherman, Herbert S. Berg, Tess Michaels, Hortense Schorr and Ruth Weisberg.

Monday Nighters Group Incorporates

A New York unit of the Variety Club is expected to emerge with the incorporating of the Monday Nighters, composed of 50 exhibitors and exchange men.

Officers are: J. Louis Geller, president; Henry Brown, vice-president; Max A. Cohen, secretary; Moe Morris, treasurer, and Nat Cohn, sergeant-at-arms. The board of governors has Harry Shiffman as chairman and these members: Charles A. Moses, Edward M. Schnitzer, Charles L. O'Reilly and Simon Manheimer. The legal adviser is Elihu J. Zwilling.

Pedigreed Pictures Formed; Paramount Will Release

Pedigreed Pictures, Inc., has been formed to produce a series of short subjects for release through Paramount. Mrs. Milton Erlanger is president of the new company, with Mrs. Sylvester Stern, vice-president, and Thomas Frelinghuysen, secretary.

The series is to trace the breeding and care of thoroughbred dogs.

SELF-REGULATION MOVE SCUTTLED ON ROCK OF ENFORCEMENT PROBLEM

Exhibitors and Distributors Favor Idea but Making Board Rulings Stick Is Something Else, —Kuykendall; No Convention

While thousands of exhibitors are eager for some form of voluntary self-government of the industry, there are no indications pointing to its early realization, declared Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in New York this week, at the conclusion of a tour of the country analyzing exhibitor ideas.

His principal New York activity was to lay plans for the annual meeting of the MPTOA board of directors March 5th and 6th at the Biltmore hotel in Miami.

He also discussed the status of exhibition at a meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers on Thursday.

The stumbling block to self-regulation, Mr. Kuykendall said in an interview, is that no legal means have been evolved whereby the decisions of conciliation or arbitration boards, or any other quasi-judicial setup, can be enforced. Practically all the large distributors have signified their intention of participating in such a move if it can be undertaken within the bounds of existing legal procedure, he added.

The exhibitor leader was in Washington this week inquiring into legislative developments and was to return to his home in Columbus, Miss., later in the weeek. While in New York he also attended a discussion meeting of the National Board of Review, which was holding its annual conference.

Most of the large distributors favor action to settle trade practice disputes because it would remove a lot of "petty difficulties" and litigation, both of which have increased greatly since the demise of the NRA, Mr. Kuykendall said.

His proposal for local conciliation boards would provide for equal representation of exhibitors and distributors and between independents and affiliated factors, with manpower that has the confidence of the industry. Mr. Kuykendall believed a board composed of six industry members and an impartial seventh would be practicable.

Mr. Kuykendall said he would submit this plan to the 26 MPTOA directors in Miami. Besides the officers, the board consists of one representative from each of the 20 MPTOA units in as many exchange territories. These units informally have gone on record favoring local conciliation boards, it was said.

There will be no annual convention of the membership this year, said Mr. Kuykendall, the directors' deliberations covering all problems. The present national officers are slated to be reelected. Mr. Kuykendall is willing to accept the presidency for another term if the vote is unanimous, it is understood.

Nontheatrical competition is one of the major issues to come before the board, this being a "serious menace to exhibitors," the MPTOA president went on. He indicated that whether any action would be taken against the General Motors caravan presenting free shows in 40 cities and towns starting in Miami February 17 would depend on the outcome of an investigation. He said this type of show hurts the small town exhibitor.

The MPTOA office is receiving fewer complaints from exhibitors on their treatment by the large distributors, he reported, but they still are protecting such perennial matters as insufficient cancellations, unreasonable percentage terms and the score charge.

Mr. Kuykendall saw no hope for cooperative action with Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, agitation for which was revived recently by J. B. Clinton, president of Allied of the Northwest. He said he objected to some of their national leaders and that he did not believe he ever could see eye to eye with them on important policies, and, furthermore, since they object to him, a reconciliation could not take place as long as he remained president of the MPTOA, at least.

At the Ampa luncheon meeting on Thursday, Mr. Kuykendall launched into an all-inclusive discussion of major problems confronting exhibitors. He said he had conferred with all strata of theatremen on his tour.

First, he said, he was impressed with the general view that it is becoming increasingly difficult to operate a theatre at a profit. He attributed this in part to the distributors' sales policies, but added that he was "not going to condemn the producer and distributor."

As a second serious threat he named legislation and taxation.

"This business has become cockeyed and the balance of power is moving rapidly to one side, the production side," Mr. Kuykendall continued. "The reasons for it are not clear, but it probably started during the business debacle when the industry's money was poured into Hollywood."

The attacks leveled at the industry now strike primarily at the theatre, he said. Specifically, he mentioned the Legion of Decency movement.

"I am proud that Hollywood heeded the warning," he said. "The studios performed their job intelligently, and the decency movement has brought back Mr. and Mrs. Smith to the motion picture theatre where they hadn't been for years. It has made the alienated patrons again 'picture minded,' especially in the smaller communities. It is now our obligation to continue what has been started."

Points to Elevated Standards

The MPTOA head said he had been generally misquoted on his remarks in Hollywood on the production of classics.

"What I did say," he explained, "was that we were reaching a dangerous stage in the production of artistic and classical films where the percentage would be above the appreciation of the masses, that we needed a better balance in film fare.

"It is our responsibility to make artistic pictures and to run them even at a loss.

"It is further our obligation to meet the demand of and cooperate with the women's clubs, parent-teacher organizations and better films groups," Mr. Kuykendall said, and with a delegation from the National Board of Review annual conference present at the meeting, described them as "these splendid men and women who devote their time to the cause of better films and who have done much to raise screen standards."

Mr. Kuykendall urged support of the Duffy copyright bill, declaring that the law should be so amended as to give the exhibitor equal rights with the composer and author in fixing royalty rates.

"Quickies" and Double Bills

He linked double featuring with the increase in production of "quickies." He said it would be salutary if fewer and better pictures were made.

He blamed nontheatrical competition largely on distributors and equipment companies seeking to increase their business.

Without mentioning names, Mr. Kuykendall assailed "the 10 per cent minority of obstructionists who are unfair and insincere in their advocacies,"

R. F. (Pete) Woodhull, a former president of the MPTOA, was master of ceremonies at the Ampa meeting. Gordon S. White, Ampa president, introduced a number of exhibitor figures on the dais, including M. B. Horwitz of Cleveland, Walter Reade, Sidney Wilmer, Arthur Mayer, and Pete Wood and Max Stearn of Columbus.

Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York, deplored the trend in exhibition toward giveaways and chance games.

Walter W. Vincent, chairman of the Republic Pictures board and head of the Wilmer and Vincent circuit, pleaded for "truth in advertising about motion pictures."

EXHIBITORS INVITED BY MPTOA BOARD

While the annual meeting of the MPTOA board of directors in Miami March 5 and 6 is in no sense a convention, the organization this week invited exhibitors generally to attend for informal round table discussions "to improve standards of exhibition, theatre management and attendance at theatres, to improve public relations and the standing of the exhibitor in the community."

Among the topics due for discussion are self-regulation and arbitration of commercial disputes, cut-rate competition, multiple featuring, unreasonably low admissions and giveaways, "the music tax extortion," labor relations, unfair and discriminatory taxation imposed and threatened, arbitrary regulation of the business by statute, unfair allocation of prices by distributors after pictures are exhibited, restrictions on Sunday operation, free shows and unfair nontheatrical competition, local censorship, and "the menace of 'irresponsible' shoestring exhibition."

NEW PLANS TO REGULATE PRACTICES ARE PROPOSED BY OUTSIDE SOURCES

Arbitration Association Enlists Many Varied Groups to Work for Uniform Statutes for All 48 States; Cooperation Seen

Attention of the motion picture industry, as represented by the large corporate interests in New York, was directed this week to two moves launched outside to smoothen difficulties between buyer and seller:

(1) The American Arbitration Association, to which the large distributors belong, along with 300 others, for the first time enlisted industrial, judicial, legal and professional groups to place uniform arbitration statutes on the books of all 48 states;

(2) Siegfried Hartman, attorney and member of Major George L. Berry's National Industrial Council, offered a plan for establishing, by legislative enactment, an official industrial court for enforcing fair trade practices in business.

The large distributors said this week, through the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, which represents them in the AAA, that they are in sympathy with the American Arbitration Association's move to have uniform arbitration laws enacted in all states. Such laws now exist in only nine states, and in the others no agreement made between exchange and exhibitor in advance to arbitrate any dispute that might come up subsequently, is binding because there is no state law in those 39 states which protects the arbitration principle.

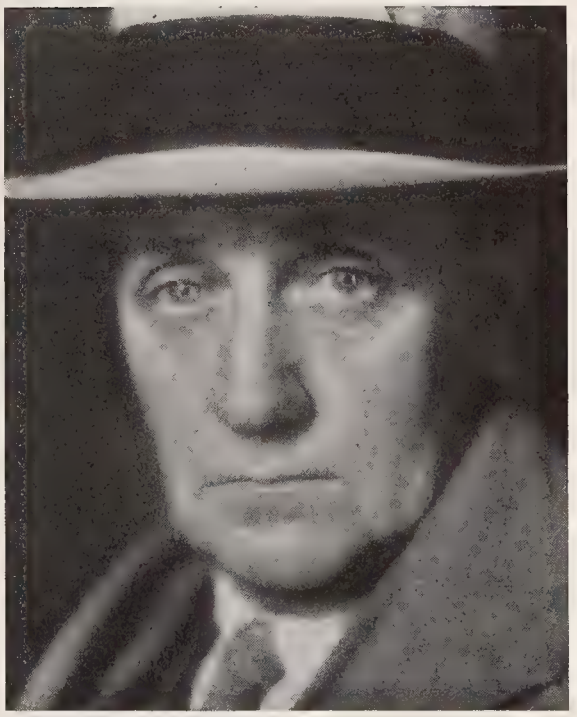
While the motion picture industry has its own peculiar problems to work out in connection with establishment of any arbitration system, the distributors now look to the American Arbitration Association's campaign for nationwide uniformity of state laws as a step in the right direction, solving at least the problem of protecting the arbitration agreement in a state after it has been voluntarily entered into both by exhibitor and distributor.

More than 600 representatives of New York City's business and professional life last week heard Thomas J. Watson, president of the arbitration association, outline an educational program to settle commercial disputes, taking such disputes out of the courts. Mr. Watson described arbitration as the "peaceway" upon which "both local business and international commerce can travel smoothly, expeditiously and, above all, silently and economically."

Present at the session were: Judge William L. Ransom, president of the American Bar Association; George S. Van Schaick, former New York State Superintendent of Insurance; Franklin E. Parker, Jr., American Arbitration Association; Blanche Yurka, Actors' Equity Association; Vladimir Eitingon, the fur industry; Charles R. Saul, furniture warehousing; Frank R. Hope, stock exchange firms; Arthur Besse, wool industry; Dr. Claudius T. Murchison, cotton textiles; A. D. Walker, silk and allied industries; Thomas S. Holden, building trades; Louis J. Robertson, shoe and leather industries; Justice Pelham St. George Bissell, representing the courts, and James S. Carson, foreign trade.

Actors Equity's participation in the proceedings were explained by Alfred Narding, of Equity, as follows: "Actors' Equity Association believes in arbitration so much, that it was and is willing to fight for it. One of the principles that was voted for in connection with our effort to establish our association in the theatre, was the inclusion of an artibtration provision in every contract of employment, and therefore, as far as we know, we were the first labor union to adopt arbitration for all such cases."

Siegfried Hartman explained that his plan would involve the following features:



1. A single tribunal having two coordinate branches: (a) A body similar to the Federal Trade Commission to which complaints may be submitted and in which proposed remedial action shall originate, and (b) A body, a sort of industrial grand jury, consisting of representatives of industry acting as such, who must approve any proposed remedial action before it may become effective.

2. Provision for extensive jurisdiction for the industrial court, so that it may be empowered to restrain continuance of all unfair competitive practices, including the use of loss leaders, sales below cost and other protested practices which may not be illegal under existing law.

3. Provision for expeditious action by the industrial court, including a grant of summary power to issue temporary restraining orders so as to afford immediate relief in the case of palpable industrial abuses.

4. A complete statutory technique to encourage the making of voluntary agreements between members of an industry relating to wages and hours and to fair trade practices and which, when approved by the industrial court, would be exempt from anti-trust laws and would be endorsed by the industrial court.

O. P. HEGGIE

O. P. Heggie Dies, Veteran in Films

O. P. Heggie, veteran character actor, died late last week at his hotel in Hollywood from pneumonia. He had been a resident of the United States for about 20 years. having come to this country following a successful career on the English and Australian stage. He was a native of Australia.

Among the recent pictures in which he appeared are "Anne of Green Gables," "Peck's Bad Boy," "The Count of Monte Cristo" and the recently completed "The Prisoner of Shark Island."

Mr. Heggie is survived by his widow, Lillian Clara Heggie; two daughters, Barbara and Kean, and a son, Peter.

National Council Member Suggests "Industrial Grand Jury" to Correct Abuses While Blocking Government Interference

Would Block U. S. Interference

Whatever may be its objectionable features, Mr. Hartman told New York reporters, in his personal opinion, such a plan, if properly administered, would provide a prompt and efficacious remedy for industrial malpractice without bureaucratic control of industry and with so great a measure of industrial control as to constitute, in effect, a plan for industrial self-government.

The theory underlying the suggestions for the establishment of an industrial grand jury, Mr. Hartman pointed out, "is analogous to that underlying the criminal grand jury system, which has been recognized as a bulwark of liberty through the check which it imposes upon arbitrary action by prosecuting officers."

The "industrial grand jury," he said, would block governmental action destructive to industry.

Method of Selection

A group of several hundred representatives of industry might be appointed annually by the executive, perhaps after representative and qualified trade associations have been permitted to make nominations. This large body would then constitute a general panel from which small groups would be chosen by lot to serve for limited periods of time.

Provision could also be made, Mr. Hartman added, for establishing the groups so as to locate one in each of various stated regions.

Mr. Hartman said that it would be necessary also to consider the advisability of including in the panel representatives of labor.

POLITICS-ON-SCREEN ISSUE GETTING WARM WITH ANTI-NEW DEAL SHORT

"Amateur Fire Brigade" Picture of Sentinels of the Republic Barred in Ohio, Fought by Union, Disputed in Chicago

When Alfred E. Smith a fortnight ago fired the signal of revolt against the New Deal, thereby launching what Washington observers predict will be the most hectic presidential campaign since Lincoln, the screen again arose conspicuously as a medium for influencing public opinion, and the question was revived as to industry participation in political campaigns.

Already controversy is being waged as to what may or may not be exhibited in the way of political motion pictures.

While the industry itself—through the newsreels—will continue its traditional policy of treating the two large political parties with equal consideration, quasi-political interests independently of the industry threaten to involve exhibitors in a quarrel which, according to industry spokesmen, it would be wise for them to avoid.

Probably the most extensive special use of motion pictures for campaign purposes is being made with a collection of anti-New Deal films circulated by an organization known as the Sentinels of the Republic, Inc. These showings have encountered opposition among some official censors and many Roosevelt adherents. Organized labor is agitating for a nationwide boycott against the films and the state of Ohio has banned them, following labor protests.

Ohio's division of film censorship objected to the animated cartoon, "The Amateur Fire Brigade: A Fable of the New Deal," on the ground it "encourages disrespect for the office of the President of the United States."

Censors Bar Picture

The censors at Columbus had reviewed the picture four times and called in representative citizens. On Tuesday the board announced no permit would be forthcoming, because the film is "not harmless and seeks to arouse passions, emotions and prejudice."

In Chicago, Lieutenant Harry Costello, city censor, thought the film political blasphemy and attempted to suppress it "pending an investigation of the producers." Police Commissioner James P. Allman, however, rushed to defense of the freedom of the screen, saying that "as the pictures violate no law, we cannot refuse a permit."

Police Explain

Lieutenant Costello's explanation was: "After all, he's our President and he shouldn't be held up to ridicule."

The program was being presented this week in the old Grand Opera House on Clark street in Chicago, on a schedule of 1 to 11 p. m. daily. No admission is charged.

In Toledo, delegates to the Central Labor Union voted to employ "every possible means" to prevent showings of the film there or elsewhere. The state censor's ban followed.

The union voted mass picketing of any theatre showing the picture. The showing, tentatively scheduled for February 19 and 20, was to have been sponsored by a group opposed to labor, the union charged. It is known that Chamber of Commerce interests were among the sponsors.

Refusal of Howard Feigley, manager of the Palace at Toledo, to rent the house for the showings aroused comment.

Martin Smith, operator of a number of neighborhood theatres and president of the Ohio Neighborhood House Association, cautioned exhibitors against booking the film.

New York also heard of a flurry of opposition in Minneapolis, although a week's run in Philadelphia passed peacefully and 30,000 persons saw the picture there, according to Sentinels of the Republic.

Anti-New Deal newspapers have hailed the films as a stroke of smart political strategy. The New York Herald Tribune reproduced four stills.

The Chicago Tribune detailed the continuity of the controversial film as follows: "Its purpose is to portray what the New Deal is doing. It shows what happened when a fire starts in Uncle Sam's farmhouse. The New Deal Fire Company, headed by President Roosevelt and composed of 'brain trusters,' answers the alarm. The movie pictures them as doing everything imaginable except putting the fire out."

Dialogue by Pitcairn

The cartoon's continuity is accompanied by the running comment by Raymond Pitcairn of Philadelphia "who conceived and directs the show," said the Tribune. He is national chairman of the Sentinels of the Republic.

The two-reel "Amateur Fire Brigade" is surrounded by six other reels of animated political cartoons and speakers. One is entitled "Bulwark of Liberty, and there is also depicted the "New Deal debt, which equals a chain of dollar bills seven times to the moon and back." The films of the newsreel type were supplied by the newsreels, according to New York report.

Mr. Pitcairn gave the Sentinels their first peep at a convention in Philadelphia. More recently Seymour Wheeler, vice-commander of the Crusaders, presented a "preview" at the Palmer House, Chicago.

Crusaders Cooperating

A spokesman for the Crusaders at national headquarters in New York said the organization is cooperating in promoting the shows as "helpful and educational to the public." He said the aims of both organizations were to "uphold the Constitution," and that in objectives they were similar to the American Liberty League. The show is scheduled for New York later in the campaign, he added.

Formed in 1922 by a group of constitutional lawyers as a "patriotic organization," the early years of the Sentinels were devoted to lobbying in Congress.

Originally organized to work for repeal of the eighteenth amendment, the Crusaders since repeal have become conservative in policies and are known as a "small American Liberty League."

Underwritten by "Angels"

While the Sentinels exist on dues from members and contributions, the source of revenue for producing and distributing the films and renting theatres was explained with the statement that "it is frequently quite simple to interest an angel in underwriting something of this kind."

The Sentinels' Raymond Pitcairn is described in Who's Who in America as a lawyer and philanthropist, a graduate of the Academy of New Church in 1905 and recipient of the degree of Bachelor of Laws from the University of Pennsylvania in 1908.

The chief Sentinel is president of the Pitcairn Company and vice-president of the Loyal Hanna Coal and Coke Company. He is a director of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, Pittsburgh Valve and Fittings Company, C. H. Wheeler Manufacturing Company, Cairnbrook Water Company and Equitable Supply Company.

His office is in the Land Title Building, Philadelphia, but he spends much time in Washington at the national headquarters of his organization.

SCREEN AVOIDS TAKING SIDES ON POLITICS

Political partisanship is traditionally opposed by the motion picture industry, and the policy will be maintained, industry spokesmen said this week in New York, declaring that the screen should not be used for personal attacks, and that both sides should be given their say.

So careful have the newsreels been not to take sides that in the 1932 campaign a tally showed a difference of only six feet in the footage given to the Republicans and Democrats. The campaign managers know that every effort is made to match footage, it was said.

So long as the films distributed by the Sentinels of the Republic do not involve theatres in actual operation, they will not present a problem, but any exhibitor who runs them as entertainment or rents his theatre for the purpose is inviting attacks, it was felt.

Despite the widespread film campaign in behalf of the Republican party, it is spending about $1,000,000 on radio propaganda this year. The Democrats are said to have a smaller radio budget, and motion picture plans have not been made known.

Small Town Girl
(MGM)
Drama

Labeling this feature a special, Radio is producing and will exploit it in a manner that in its opinion will justify the application of that term. When the recent Ben Ames Williams Saturday Evening Post story was selected for picturization, and even before camera work started, the yarn, illustrated by James Montgomery Flagg, was serialized in scores of newspapers. It is intended to further the interest which this serialization developed by means of a complete and comprehensive commercial publicity program.

Certain that names always sell tickets and are the first thing for which exhibitors look, and convinced that Janet Gaynor has a large patron following when appearing in the right kind of story, the producers selected her for the title role. Opposite her they placed Robert Taylor, who scored notable successes in "Broadway Melody of 1936" and the current "Magnificent Obsession." To lend emphasis to the value of the leading names, Binnie Barnes, soon to be seen in "Sutter's Gold"; Lewis Stone, Andy Devine, Elizabeth Patterson, Frank Craven, James Stewart whose work in the forthcoming "We Love Again" is sure to bring him to favorable notice, Douglas Fowley and Isabel Jewell, all wellknown players, were included in the supporting cast. Production of the picture was assigned to Hunt Stromberg, maker of "Rose Marie," "Naughty Marietta" and "Ah Wilderness," and direction was placed in the hands of William Wellman.

The title graphically signifying the story's character, it is that of a girl who tired of the old home town. Wedded in a "gin marriage" to the scion of a blue blooded Boston family, she immediately comes into dramatic conflict with the girl to whom her husband was engaged. Made to suffer the heartache of much snobbery and intrigue, she is of the stuff that not only makes her husband come really to love her by an action she is courageous enough to assume at the time her mate most needs help, but also wins the admiration and affection of both those who envied and admired her.

Mystery

Recessing his adventurous 'round-the-world tour, Charlie Chan in this story solves his most baffling case. The final three words in the title graphically establishing the locale and definitely hinting the scope of production effects, the story moves to the tune of weird and breathtaking mystery. Differing greatly from any of the previous Chans, it forces the famous detective into situations which in addition to being highly dangerous to his own welfare take him into a field of crime perpetration and solution heretofore strange to him. Wading through the long sequence of baffling and confusing situations, defying the detective abilities of the most astute amateur sleuths, Chan brings retribution to a man who had disguised himself as a beast, thinking, thereby, that he could commit the perfect crime.

The story, suggested by the original Earl Derr Biggers Chan character, is a screen play by Robert Ellis and Helen Logan. Harry Lachman, who made "Dante's Inferno," is directing.

Warner Oland again will be seen in the role he created and again he has Keye Luke, currently in "Anything Goes," with him as his son and aide. Included in the supporting cast are George and Olive Brasnos, the midgets seen in "The Mighty Barnum"; Francis Ford, Maxine Reiner, John McGuire, Shirley Deane, Paul Stanton, J. Carrol Naish, Boothe Howard, Drue Leyton, Wade Boteler and Shia Jung.

The Barnes Circus having been used as a background for production settings, the picture will present in part practically all the color that is associated with a regular circus performances, among them the animals, acrobats, clowns, and freaks.

Intended to be graphicaly different from the routine Chans, it is the sponsoring company's belief that the picture will permit of the application of all familiar exploitation used in connection with Chan attractions and suggest the introduction of much that is new.

The Puzzle of the Briar Pipe
(Radio)
Mystery

With James Gleason in the role of Inspector Oscar Piper, but with Helen Broderick succeeding Edna May Oliver as the amateur sleuth Hildegarde Withers, this is a continuance of "The Penguin Pool Murder" and "Murder on the Blackboard" series.

Based on a published story by Stuart Palmer, with screen play by Dorothy Yost, the production is being co-directed by Edward Killy and William Hamilton, who collaborated similarly on "Freckles" and "Seven Keys to Baldpate."

The story, which has many complicated twists in order to obtain the desired baffling quality while majoring in mystery, is not without its comedy counterpart contributed mainly by the leading pair, also romantic intrigue, melodramatic menace and suspense laden excitement, all of which are combined to accentuate the motivating force of mystery. Similarly, situations and the various conflicting relationships of the players together with their actions and movements are being so blended as further to emphasize that quality.

The cast supporting the leading artists is composed of players who are generally familiar to exhibitors and theatre goers, as but one comparative newcomer, Louise Lattimer, is presented. Among those who will be seen are Leslie Fenton, John Carroll, Owen Davis, Jr., Sheila Terry, Gustav von Seyffertitz, John Arledge, Dewey Robinson, Spencer Charters, Christian Rub and Willie Best.

The Drag Net
(Burroughs Tarzan)
Drama

For the first feature on its new program Borroughs-Tarzan has elected to produce Willard Mack's well remembered stage play, "The Drag Net." Basically a drama, spun around the alluring entertainment premise of political intrigue and murder, it also carries a well molded love interest contrast. It tells how a young attorney, bounced out of a sinecure in his father's office because of playboy proclivities, finds solace in the company of a girl newspaper reporter, the companion in his career of revelry as his father gets him an assistant district attorney's job. Celebrating in an underworld night club, he is whirled into the vortex of political conspiracy and crime that keeps an innocent man in jail, brings on the murder of the prisoner's wife, gets him into a predicament that makes it logically appear that he is a killer, but results in a daring adventure that permits him to establish his own innocence, break up the crime ring, and, as the drag net is spread, round up the murder culprits.

The picture will present Rod LaRocque, now in "Preview Murder Mystery," as the young lawyer. Marian Nixon is his newspaper reporter companion, who proves to be the kind of resourceful friend most needed when LaRocque is in a jam. The three heavies are John Dilson as a grafting political boss; Jack Adair a night club owner, and Edward Keane a dishonest assistant D. A. John Bantry is the man they kept in jail and Betty Compson his wife whom the trio murdered. Donald Kerr is a gossiping Broadway columnist and radio commentator. Other roles are filled by Joseph Girard, Ed LeSaint and Sid Payne.

With adaptation of Mack's stage play by James Mulhauser, direction is in the hands of Vin Moore.

The Gentleman from Big Bend
(Warner)
Comedy Drama

This is an adaptation of George M. Cohan's stage play, "The Hometowners." The screen play is by Roy Chanslor. Direction is by William McGann. Warren William, whose immediately preceding picture probably will be "Men on Her Mind," in which he appears with Bette Davis, is starred. June Travis, whose work in "Ceiling Zero" has brought her to favorable public notice, will be seen in the leading feminine role. The third most important personality in the story is Gene Lockhart, whose well meant efforts to protect William become the peg upon which practically all the production's drama and romance are hung. Other players are Barton MacLane, Kathleen Lockhart, Dick Purcell, Craig Reynolds, Granville Bates and Dorothy Vaughn.

In theme the story moves to comedy that is the result of funny and unanticipated situations, but it is not without a dramatic import such as characterized the original Cohan stage production. In the surprise introductory sequences, the gentleman from big bend, William, amazes everyone by announcing he will marry June Travis. No one is more stunned than his old friend Lockhart who thinks that June's parents, Granville Bates and Dorothy Vaughn, are penniless and that they are using their daughter as bait to get hold of William's fortune. Finding out that he is wrong in having chilled June's affection for William, he makes use of a dramatic theft ruse to get the lovers together again and establish tranquillity all around.

The moral of the picture, a demonstration of the theory that minding one's own business is best no matter what the provocation to butt in, seems to offer an exploitation angle.

LE BARON PARAMOUNT'S CHIEF OF PRODUCTION

Wanger Releasing Arrangement Discussed; Paramount Gets New Option on Blank Circuit

The long arm of Paramount's management reached out this week from the Times Square headquarters in New York to the studio in California to consummate final rearrangement of executive personnel, appointing William LeBaron to be producer in charge of all production, moving Ernst Lubitsch, former production head, into the berth of an independent producer for the company, and installing the unit system of production throughout the studio.

And while John Edward Otterson, Paramount president, was personally effecting the top-rank changes in production, the management was busy elsewhere on the following matters:

Mr. Otterson was discussing with Walter Wanger and Watterson Rothacker the continuance of Mr. Wanger's relations with Paramount as an independent producer.

Neil F. Agnew, general manager of distribution, was preparing for his first inspection tour of all Paramount exchanges in the country.

Sales executives were negotiating an important rental contract with all Schine theatres in New York and Ohio.

Paramount obtained a new option to buy back a 50 per cent interest in the A. H. Blank midwest circuit.

The name of Publix Salt Lake Theatres was changed to Intermountain Theatres, Inc.

Sir William Wiseman, former Paramount director, was ordered to submit to examination before trial in the trustees' case against former directors.

Quashing rumors of a possible realignment of major executive personnel at Paramount, Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board, this week said: "I wish at this time to reaffirm the confidence in John E. Otterson which I expressed when he assumed the position of executive head of Paramount. Rumors of any change in the executive setup within the company are groundless."

Charles E. Richardson, a director and former trustee of Paramount, has tendered his resignation from the company's board, it was learned Wednesday. Action on the resignation is expected at the regular board meeting, February 27. Mr. Richardson was elected a director last June for one year, but found his business interests in Philadelphia required his entire time.

Appointment of Mr. LeBaron as head of all future production at the Paramount studios came as a direct announcement from Mr. Otterson. Mr. Lubitsch had been supervising all work at the studios, sharing the responsibility with Henry Herzbrun, and his plans for the present call for a tour of Europe in search of new talent and stories. Following his return he again will join the Paramount production staff as a unit producer. Mr. Herzbrun's status remains unchanged; he will work with Mr. LeBaron as he did with Mr. Lubitsch.

Mr. LeBaron's new position was further announced in Hollywood as being only a temporary arrangement during the establishment of several other units similar to the one which will be headed by Mr. Lubitsch, who is scheduled to make four pictures a year under the new deal, directing two himself.

Following completion of the transition to the new system, Mr. LeBaron will be placed in charge of one of these units. The decision to establish the unit system is the result of several weeks of executive conferences at the studio.

Mr. LeBaron, who was born in Elgin, Ill., was educated in Chicago University and New York University. He became managing editor of Collier's Weekly in 1918 and remained in that post a year. He then joined General Cosmopolitan Productions and in 1924 became an associate producer for Famous Players Lasky Corporation at their Long Island studios. Three years later he was elected vice-president of FBO Studio where he remained until 1929, when he became vice-president in charge of production at Radio. He held that post for two years, joining Paramount as a producer in 1931.

Wanger Releases Discussed

Concurrent with other problems that he has been tackling while in Hollywood, Mr. Otterson has been discussing with Walter Wanger and Watterson Rothacker the future release of Mr. Wanger's product by Paramount. At present Paramount is preparing to release on March 13th the producer's Technicolor feature, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," and it is said that there are ten others on this year's list scheduled for production.

In New York, on the other hand, Neil F. Agnew, general sales manager of Paramount, is preparing to leave on a general tour of his company's exchanges, arriving in Hollywood late this month.

Paramount's deal with the Schine circuit of upstate New York and Ohio has been delayed pending the return of George Lynch and Louis Schine to Manhattan from Gloversville, N. Y. Meyer Schine is in Florida but is expected to return to New York as soon as preliminary details of the contract discussions are underway.

New A. H. Blank Agreement

A new agreement has been concluded under which Paramount is given the right to exercise an option to purchase from the operators the 50 per cent stock interest in the A. H. Blank and Karl Hoblitzelle circuits, it was revealed in New York. The original buy-back privilege expired last December 31 after having been extended several times.

Under the agreement, Paramount is privileged to purchase from Blank his 50 per cent stock interest in the Iowa-Illinois circuit up to April 1, and from Hoblitzelle a 50 per cent interest in the Texas circuit up to April 4.

At the same time the Publix Salt Lake Theatres has changed its name to Intermountain Theatres, Inc., in line with the recently adopted policy of local operation of the 16 Utah and Idaho houses, and affiliation with Paramar Theatre Company, Ogden, Utah, and Menmar Theatre Company, Boise, Idaho. Officers of Intermountain are: Y. Frank Freeman, president; Harry David, vice-president and general managers; Fred J. Ewald, secretary-treasurer.

The United States circuit court of appeals in New York this week affirmed a decision by Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe which held that Sir William Wiseman, partner in Kuhn, Loeb and Company, and a former Paramount director, must submit to examination in connection with suits instituted by the Paramount bankruptcy trustees to recover from former officers and directors of the company for losses involved in certain official actions prior to the bankruptcy.

21st Unit Joins MPTOA; Allied to Change Presidents

The Intermountain Theatre Owners' Association this week became the 21st state affiliate of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Ed Kuykendall, president.

At the same time Allied States Exhibitors, Nathan Yamins, new president, decided that hereafter national presidents will be rotated from year to year.

The Intermountain unit at one time was affiliated with Allied States. Charles E. Huish of Eureka, Utah, is president of the organization, which covers Utah, Idaho and Nevada. John J. Gillette is vice-president, John Rugar, treasurer, and Beverly S. Clendenin, secretary and general counsel.

Other exhibitor organization activities were reported from Connecticut, New Jersey and the Carolinas.

Independent members of the MPTO of Connecticut are expected to form their own exhibitor organization, separate from the affiliated theatre members, within the next few weeks, according to some independents. Consideration is being given to an affiliation with Allied by the independent group. There is said to be a feeling of resentment against Edward G. Levy, general counsel of the MPTOA and re-elected secretary of the Connecticut group. It is claimed by the independents that he has attempted to bring the local unit into line with the larger organization.

Two meetings a month, instead of four, one to be held at the unit's headquarters at the Lincoln in New York, and a second in a New Jersey city is the new plan of Allied of New Jersey.

The annual convention of the MPTO of North and South Carolina, which has been postponed several times, is now scheduled for March 1 and 2, at Pinehurst. Major Edward Bowes will be a guest of the meeting, and Mr. Kuykendall will attend.

TRADE VIEWS by W. R. WILKERSON

•SIDNEY Kent is faced with an unusual situation. He has so many big pictures to set for release that he confronts quite a problem in the handling of them. After looking at the pictures which are now ready and parts of others soon to be completed, Kent wired John Clark to come out and sit in on the situation.

Kent must be a happy guy when Zanuck hands him so many big attractions that he finds it hard to place them. It's a new sort of situation for him, since he took over Fox. But it is a burden he is glad to shoulder.

Zanuck has shown the Century-Fox president "The Prisoner of Shark Island," "The Country Doctor," and "Message to Garcia" in their completed form. Kent has also viewed lots of the footage of "Under Two Flags," "Wooden Crosses." In addition to these, he must find places for the two new Shirley Temples: "Captain January," and "Poor Little Rich Girl."

Zanuck unquestionably has a very important group of pictures. He is spending more on "Under Two Flags" than he ever sent into a picture before. He believes, as does every other person who has seen "The Country Doctor," that even without the quintuplets it is one of the greatest attractions the Century production head has ever had.

Fox in 157 Chicago Spots for One Day

CHICAGO, Feb. 9.—A new booking record was set here one day last week when Twentieth Century-Fox pictures were shown in 157 Chicago theatres. This is the largest number of bookings any one company has had in local history. Practically all "C" week and first and second week release houses played the company's pictures.

Advertising in the papers showed that 95 theatres out of 124 advertising, were playing product from the company.

Chicago is but one of many! Exhibitors have demonstrated an overwhelming preference for those great 20th Century-Fox productions. And every release date proves more conclusively the wisdom of their choice!

THEATRES CAUGHT IN MIDDLE OF RADIO'S MUSIC TILT WITH WARNER

Local Stations Refuse Usual Gratis Publicity to Warner Pictures and Songs from Company's Subsidiaries

Motion picture theatres are caught in the middle of the radio industry's quarrel with Warner Brothers over music licenses, and some unusual repercussions are resulting which, according to reports from the field, are reducing the exploitation possibilities of films considerably.

Because Warner is compelling them to obtain a license in addition to that from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, local radio stations, especially the smaller ones, are refusing the usual gratis air publicity to Warner pictures and songs from other films which are claimed by the Warner music subsidiaries.

Chief among other developments was the increase to 29 in the number of suits filed by Warner against unlicensed broadcasters for alleged copyright infringement with the filing of an action against National Broadcasting Company, Inc., seeking $995,000 damages.

Herman Starr, vice-president of Warner in charge of music subsidiaries, let it be known that the company favors taxing the producer at the source for use of music, indicating that there will be no levy on exhibitors.

Withdraws CBS Action

Columbia Broadcasting System gained a point when Warner withdrew an action for $670,000 filed last week. Warner attorneys said the suit probably would be refiled, but the network insisted the issues could be fought out in a similar action pending against it.

In retaliation against Warner's drive on the radio industry, the radio stations are reported eliminating "plugs" usually given to films on the air. In eastern territories where Warner operates theatres, this has amounted virtually to a boycott on the part of the small stations, which hitherto have been cooperating closely with local theatre managements. Even organ programs broadcast from Warner theatres have been barred in some instances. The change in policy has had a vulnerable target in the Warner theatres with limited advertising budgets, which have depended on the free air programs for publicity.

Film companies are finding it difficult to obtain radio "plugs" of their pictures where, as in the case of Paramount's "Anything Goes," the compositions are controlled by Warner. While some 230 stations are licensed by Warner, the large networks still are holding out, and more than 300 commercial stations are unlicensed.

Commentators Restricted

The broadcasters' punitive campaign has extended in instances to forbidding film commentators on the air to mention Warner pictures. Too, dramatic companies which use motion picture scrips for program material are not permitted by some stations to broadcast Warner scenarios.

Station WDGY, Minneapolis, a Warner licensee, is reported retaliating by omitting the titles of Warner music when broadcasting it or mentioning the film in which it is heard.

SO COMPOSERS SUE OVER 'I WANNA WOO'

While Warner Brothers was filing numerous suits over music licenses in its breach with the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, it found itself a defendant when Mabel Wayne and Arthur Swanstrom, composer and author of "I Wanna Woo," brought action in New York supreme court Tuesday for $100,000 damages.

The plaintiffs alleged that the number was delivered to Harms, Inc., a Warner subsidiary, a few weeks before the company withdrew from ASCAP on January 1, that it was broadcast by Fred Waring and gave indication of becoming a hit and then with the bottling up of radio outlets the song died aborning.

The suit alleged that Warner fraudulently concealed the fact it was withdrawing from ASCAP. Benjamin Shriver, attorney, said a similar suit would be filed late Thursday on behalf of other composers.

Warner said that prior to January I it had been common knowledge for weeks that the company was planning to quit ASCAP. Warner received a letter from the plaintiffs asking $5,000, and the suit was filed immediately thereafter, it was said.

Warner favors elimination of the music tax for theatres as a matter of policy and the payment of music royalties at the source, meaning the producers. The company believes this should apply for radio broadcasting and other fields in which music is processed and remarketed. The company is studying the situation with a view to putting that policy into effect.

Motion picture producers for years have felt the music industry should permit this plan and that the tax should be applied only in recording. ASCAP and the Music Publishers Protective Association are agreeable, but since it would mean a great increase in the amount originally paid for music, which in turn would be passed to the exhibitors in the form of higher film rental, no agreement could be reached.

Opposes Double Tax

Metronome, professional musicians' publication, quoted Mr. Starr as saying: "The performing rights business is a new one with us and we are studying a number of angles. We believe, for instance, that all performing rights fees should be paid at the source and for that reason are not interested in whether hotels have radios in their rooms or not. What's the difference if a man catches a radio program in his home or in a hotel room? We do not propose to tax hotels for the use of our music.

"Likewise, we see no point in imposing a double tax on pictures—at the source and in the theatres where they are showing—and are studying the situation with a view to simplifying the matter. While the ultimate amount paid for the use of music in pictures should not be any less, we believe the producer should pay the whole amount."

While the radio stations defending Warner's suits will have other attorneys of record, Nathan Burkan, counsel for ASCAP, is cooperating with them. At their request, Columbia Broadcasting System, National Broadcasting Company and individual New York stations involved in the actions have been granted an extension of 20 days to file their answers.

Company Sues NBC for $995,000, Making 29th Action Filed on Infringement Charges; CBS $670,000 Suit Withdrawn

NBC Sued for $995,000

M. Witmark and Sons on Monday filed suit in the federal district court in New York against National Broadcasting for damages of $995,000 and an accounting of profits for the alleged infringement in 199 separate performances of the number "Painting the Clouds with Sunshine," used on four network broadcasts of approximately 50 stations each, on the basis of $5,000 for each performance. This is the largest suit filed to date. The number is from the Warner film, "Gold Diggers of Broadway."

Wattenberg and Wattenberg, Warner attorneys, also announced suits had been filed against WMCA, New York, for $20,000 damages and WNEW, Newark, for $5,000. Actions also were instituted against KFI, Los Angeles, and WWL, New Orleans, each for $5,000.

The total damages sought from broadcasters to date is approximately $2,800,000, and additional suits are in preparation.

Warner attorneys explained they decided to withdraw the $670,000 action against Columbia because there was some doubt as to the allegations. Columbia in a statement said this "came as no surprise" in view of its determination that the songs in question had not been broadcast and its "belief that the suit could not have been supported upon any theory." Warner's suit for $895,000, also filed last week, will serve the same purpose, said Columbia.

Many Numbers Cleared

ASCAP on Tuesday informed all licensed stations that they can use a large number of songs claimed by Warner and that the Society would protect them against infringement suits.

ASCAP's claim was challenged by Warner on Tuesday. ASCAP's statement that the small performing rights of various numbers are not necessarily withdrawn from the Society's repertoire is "erroneous and misleading," Warner said, cautioning that if this statement is "relied upon by stations which have no license from us it may result in many actionable infringements."

Inasmuch as the musicians' unions are demanding payment for broadcasting on a commercial program basis when titles of numbers are mentioned on a sustaining program, ASCAP is canvassing member composers to determine if they agree to broadcast without "plugs" of the title. ASCAP takes no stand in the matter, and will forward its findings to the broadcasters.

20 PER CENT CHANCE GAME TAX PROPOSED TO ERASE PRACTICE

Theatres Wouldn't Be "Semi-Gambling Houses and Grocery Stores" If Organizations Had Progressed, Says O'Reilly

Legal, legislative and industry efforts having failed to control the chance game system of stimulating box-office receipts, Charles Lee O'Reilly, pioneer theatre leader, as president of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, one of the oldest exhibitor organizations, has presented to exhibitors a plan for stamping it out through a 10 or 20 per cent tax on its use at theatres.

Mr. O'Reilly addressed his proposal to exhibitor leader guests last week at the luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers of New York. These included Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Sidney Wilmer, president of the Wilmer and Vincent circuit; Arthur Mayer, New York independent; R. F. (Pete) Woodhull, former MPTOA president; P. J. Wood, business manager of the Allied affiliate in Ohio (the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of Ohio); M. B. Horwitz, Ohio exhibitor representative, and Walter Reade, New York and New Jersey circuit owner.

Mr. O'Reilly criticized the country's exhibitor organizations for their inability to control giveaways and chance games, declaring, "Had theatre organizations made as much progress in the past few years as production the theatre today would not be semi-gambling houses and grocery stores.

"If the industry can't survive on what it is predicated upon, it cannot survive at all," he said. "The time has come when organizations of exhibitors must get together and bring back showmanship and eliminate gambling."

And while Mr. O'Reilly and the country's exhibitor organization leaders thus were weighing the problems of chance games, the practice continued to be the subject of wide conversation both in the industry and in the courts in the field, in Colorado, Connecticut, Illinois, Maine, Massachusetts, Missouri, New Hampshire, New York, Ohio and Texas.

Colorado witnessed adoption of further new chance game forms.

Maine and New Hampshire state authorities endorsed the practice.

Missouri exhibitors agreed to effect a voluntary ban.

New York's authorities moved to bring citywide prohibition.

Ohio arrests were in view following orders to abandon the system.

Texas owners were disturbed over its growth.

Two new money giveaways have started in Denver with the inception of a cash night, beginning with $100 and adding $25 twice a week at the Englewood and Gothic theatres in Englewood.

The Lucky Seven group of theatres have discontinued weekly auto giveaways, but have substituted "Dream Night," held weekly and calling for a $500 cash prize. The same seven theatres operate a weekly Bank Night with a $400 prize.

In Connecticut, Bank Night has instituted copyright infringement suits in New Haven federal court against the Whalley, Howard, White Way and Fishman theatres in New Haven, the Strand, Wellingford and Colonial in Southington. These theatres have been featuring Cash Night.

In Chicago Bank Night matinees are proving popular, and all circuits using the game have adopted the plan.

Legalized in Two States

Bank Night is now legal in two New England states. The New Hampshire supreme court ruled that the game is not in violation of the lottery laws of the state. The Maine prosecutions were withdrawn last week. In Boston, however, the case against Charles Wilson, manager of the Hamilton theatre in Dorchester may be settled out of court. The case was appealed to the superior court following Mr. Wilson's conviction.

In Kansas City, Mo., it was revealed that practically every member of the Independent Theatre Owners had signed an agreement to abolish giveaways provided all other Kansas City exhibitors do likewise. It was stated that Attorney General Roy McKittrick of Missouri will re-investigate the details of Bank Night to determine its legality. Early last year it was pronounced a lottery by Mr. McKittrick's department.

New York exhibitors, both national circuit and independent, this week failed to act to drop giveaways and various other devices and games aimed at increasing attendance when License Commissioner Paul Moss put the matter before them at a gathering in his offices. About 30 theatre men attended the session, representing Loew's, RKO, Skouras and other circuits and individual theatres.

In addressing the gathering, Mr. Moss said he expected that chance games would be declared illegal and that he would have it in his power to cancel the licenses of the theatres using them. He then proposed that the houses voluntarily agree to discontinue them. The exhibitors seemed to be willing to act provided their competitors would do likewise, but no definite agreement was reached. It was suggested that Mr. Moss be named as mediator.

Following announcement in Cleveland by Police Prosecutor Perry A. Frey that he would arrest theatre operators using Bank Night as violators of the lottery laws of the state, Stuart Cagney, manager of the Windawere, East Cleveland, was arrested on a charge of operating a lottery. A hearing was set for Friday before Police Justice Myran J. Penty.

The Bank Night operations of the Interstate and Horowitz theatres at Houston, Texas, caused a group of small theatre operators to call upon Mayor Oscar Holcombe and ask for relief, claiming that the use of the game by the two theatres constituted unfair competition. The mayor promised to place the matter before the city council.

BANK NIGHT JUDGE TAKEN AS 'CHISELER'

The first attempt at chiseling in the Sweepstakes giveaway pool took place at the St. John, Kansas City, the other night. One of the judges selected from the audience took the ticket drawn and held it behind his hat to check the name.

That's where Robert H. Rolsky, son of E. Rolsky, ITO president, became suspicious. He knocked the hat away, revealing two tickets in the judge's hand.

"What difference would it make to me?" asked the "judge" as he clutched the two tickets.

"About $1,100," snapped Mr. Rolsky.

Mexican Duties to Help Americans

by JAMES LOCKHART

Mexico City Correspondent

American film companies are expected to benefit by new duties the Mexican finance ministry has established, and which the government estimates will settle friction of long standing between it and the cinematographic industry.

The new levies encourage the use of the "Movietone" process over discs and are much lower than the former rate of $9.72 a kilogram for an annual quota of up to 100,000 meters for each importer and $19.85 for each kilogram in excess of the maximum quota. New duties are classified as follows:

Sound-on-film, more than 20 millimeters wide, in languages other than Spanish and with music, when brought in within an annual quota of 100,000 meters per importer: $5.60 the kilogram, and $11.20 a kilogram for imports that exceed the 100,000 meter yearly quota;

Negative films, more than 20 millimeters wide, without direct sound application, and which have titles: $2.25 a kilogram; the same rate for such films in languages other than Spanish that have music;

Discs in Spanish or with music to be used in synchronized form with films: $7 each; discs in languages other than Spanish and which have music: $14 each.

A non-progressive income tax of five per cent on gross receipts is also established for distributors. Producers who derive their income from the exploitation of made-in-Mexico pictures in Mexico or abroad are exempt from income tax on these revenues.

These measures have just gone into effect.

A new circuit comprising nine cinema theatres, five of which are operating and four to be put into service this winter, has been organized in Mexico City to feature Metro productions. One of the cinemas, the Iris, a one-time stage house, is to abandon showing of European pictures to be the key of the circuit, which includes two other first-run houses and the others neighborhoods.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

To the biggest Negro metropolis in the world, to rhythmic, racy Harlem on the fringe of New York's Manhattan, goes the March of Time, current release, to catch a super-sensation—the hysterical hullabaloo for a 55-year-old black mystery man called Father Divine. His followers are convinced that he is God. Through Harlem spread his business holdings, shops and restaurants, beauty parlors and stores, where prices are incredibly cheap for those who use the passwords "Peace!" and "Thank you, Father!" All day and all night his headquarters, "Heaven No. 1," echo with the worship of his flock. To this mecca, where no collections are taken but whence manna flows miraculously, come followers from all over the country. Most popular of all heavenly events, basis of Father Divine's success, is the banquet he serves twice daily. Upstairs in his inner sanctum he runs his vast organization and, as the spirit moves him, broadcasts over a loudspeaker messages of cheer to his followers below. Pondering the power he has over his growing flock, Father Divine cogitates on the contemporary parade of other American messiahs—Townsend, Talmadge, Landon, Borah, Smith. He realizes that 1936 is a year for national political conventions and decides to give some thought to politics himself. Surrounded by his aides, he shapes up his plans, announces a three-day "International Righteous Government Convention," drafts a political platform. In exclusive pictures, March of Time shows the convention to which flocked thousands of Father Divine's ardent supporters. Also came many a political opportunist and missionary from other political camps seeking to win support and votes. Thus, the Negro chants are his campaign songs, and the word "Peace!" is his slogan, as into the cluttered ring of national politics steps this dusky little figure whose promise of "unlimited blessings" are believed by tens of thousands because they believe he is God.

Maybe NBC did not look far.

Mr. Laughton's remarks on the air were interesting enough, including the story of the southern hotel keeper who was startled to find "Abraham Lincoln the tyrant was poisoned last night" scrawled on the wall of one of the rooms of his inn two weeks before the president was assassinated. The register showed the occupant of the room to have been a wandering actor by the name of John Wilkes Booth, who so shortly after murdered the president.

ARISTOCRATIC BLUE-BLOODS of Park Avenue and the cinema ostentatiously pranced down the carpeted aisles of Broadway's Rivoli theatre the other evening, paying $5.50 admission, to witness the world premiere showing of Charles Chaplin's $2,000,000 worth of "Modern Times." And we wondered as we observed the elaborate show of the first nighters in their jewels and ermine, and top hats and tails whether Mr. Chaplin was remembering that sultry summer day in 1913 when, backstage at the Hammerstein theatre on Broadway, he refused Adam Kessel's offer of $75 a week to leave the stage for Keystone comedies in film. Reflecting for a moment on what he considered to be the insignificance of the movies at the time, Mr. Chaplin admonished Mr. Kessel with a "what the bloomin' 'ell — — No!"

Charles Spencer Chaplin was fresh from a traveling troupe of strolling British players from England's music halls, with memories still alive of childhood penury. He was doing nicely on the stage, eating regularly, and was taking no flyers into the up an' coming movies—until Mr. Kessel finally raised the ante to $150 a week. So, in November, 1913, Mr. Chaplin took his baggy pants, old shoes and bamboo cane out to the Keystone lot in California. "What the 'ell" was ahead he did not know, but in his wildest imaginations he never dreamed of one day spending $2,000,000 of his own money on a single motion picture. 'Tis a long bridge that spans 23 years from Chaplin's first picture, "Kid's Auto Races," to his "Modern Times" of today.

Terry Ramsaye, in historically research-ing for his "A Million and One Nights," learned how Charlie acquired the gait and mannerisms that had been so successful in the comedian's early music hall appearances, and which brought him a bid from the motion picture. It was a bit of a trick Charlie had picked up while laboring as a child in a London toy factory, imitating a wretched old bar fly who hobbled about at the Queen's Head, a London beer place, to hold the cabbies' horses for them while the roistered inside. Charlie's mother had reproached him mightily for making sport of the old unfortunate. He was the inspiration that brought Chaplin world wide acclaim and a fortune of millions.

Within two years Chaplin's success was so great that many deep plans were laid by competitive producers for his capture from Essanay, which, sensing the raid, tightened the restrictions at the studio, and it became most difficult for strangers and emissaries from the home offices in the East to see the star.

Jay Casey Cairns, a press agent hero of John R. Freuler's Mutual Film, being in California at the time, was assigned to talk to Mr. Chaplin. His approach to the Essanay studio by way of the front office was repulsed.

The next day Cairns appeared at the Essanay corral attired in sombrero, chaps and spurs to mingle with the cowboy extras. With them he rode into the studio on an Essanay horse to see Chaplin. It was a victory for the cavalry. A few weeks later, sitting on the mezzanine floor of Broadway's Hotel Astor, on a Wednesday night in February, 1916—preceding by 20 years to the night the "Modern Times" premiere of last Wednesday—Charles Chaplin signed with John Freuler for Mutual at a salary of $10,000 a week, payable each Saturday morning, and a bonus of $150,000 for signing the contract, payable on the spot, for a total $670,000 for a year's work.

Nathan Burkan, attorney for Chaplin in that deal, demonstrated his genius even at that early date by selling his six-dollar Waterman fountain pen, with which the contract was signed, to Mr. Freuler for $35.

Charlie took the certified check for $150,000, turned to his brother Sydney as they reached Broadway, and concluded: "Guess I'll go and buy myself a whole dozen ties."

Mr. Chaplin, in turn, gave his word to Mr. Freuler that he would make 12 two-reel motion pictures and also would remain within the borders of the United States, a simple safeguard against the war situation in Europe and the possible whimsicalities of some English draft officer who might cause Charlie to be held up for cannon fodder on the battlefields.

SEAT TAX RELIEF FOR EXHIBITORS FADES WITH MUSIC INDUSTRY ATTACK

Measure Introduced by Patents Committee Member Would Nullify Many Provisions of Duffy Copyright Measure

Music tax relief for the exhibitor and improvement in the copyright status of motion picture productions appears doomed at this session of Congress as a result of a strong countermove launched by the music industry and others to kill the Duffy copyright bill pending in the House or weaken it by amendments.

Action on the Duffy measure, which passed the Senate at the last session, was set back also with the statement by Congressman William I. Sirovich of New York, chairman of the House patents committee, that he would favor entry into the Berne copyright convention only if it meant action to cope with "discrimination by the dictatorial countries of Europe against the motion picture producers, authors and composers and others who earn their livelihood through artistic endeavor." At the same time he announced that his committee soon would open hearings on the entire copyright situation.

While incorporating various provisions amending the copyright law of 1909 and affording greater protection for the users of copyrights, including motion picture exhibitors, the Duffy bill primarily was sponsored by the United States Department of State to permit this country's entry into the international copyright convention. Secretary of State Cordell Hull is represented as being little concerned over the form of the bill so long as it permits international affiliation.

Interests Conflict

There are, however, numerous conflicting interests, divided into two main camps, those who benefit from drastic copyright restrictions and the users of music and other copyrighted works who would like to see the restrictions relaxed. The Administration, it was reported, does not care to force the issue at the present session, but prefers to wait until the differences are harmonized.

That the music industry has launched a strong fight against the Duffy bill—which is favored by theatre interests, the radio industry, hotels and others—is evident in the introduction of a measure by J. Burrwood Daly, Philadelphia Democrat and member of the patents committee, which would nullify many of the Duffy bill provisions.

In industry circles the Daly bill is regarded as a maneuver to force amendments to the Duffy measure in conference with the Senate. With its introduction all the controversial issues of the copyright subject again are brought to the fore, and it is indicated that if the House commmittee reports the measure substantially as submitted and the House approves it, considerable difficulty will be experienced in obtaining Senate agreement. In the Senate there has been less inclination to give copyright owners all the privileges which they have demanded.

From Washington comes word that indications are that the House committee is prepared to throw the Duffy Bill overboard in favor of the measure submitted by one of its own members. Its protection for copyright owners goes further than the Duffy legislation and its penalties for infringement are stronger. When hearings start before the copyright subcommittee, Congressman Daly is expected to be chairman.

OUSTING OF PATENTS COMMITTEE URGED

Members of the House at the capital were being urged Thursday by Congressman Zionchek of Washington to sign a petition to discharge the patents committee from consideration of the Duffy copyright bill so as to bring it up for immediate action.

The petition was filed, the Congressman explained, because Representative Sirovich, chairman, "refuses even to hold hearings on a bill that the Senate passed unanimously." Mr. Sirovich's stand, he charged, was "arbitrary and capricious."

The new bill is said to be more along the lines favored by Congressman Bloom of New York, himself interested in the music industry, and others in Congress whose sympathies lie with the authors, composers and publishers.

During its hearings the subcommittee is expected to delve into the question of score charges and music taxes, but it does not seem yet to have been decided whether this subject is considered one for special investigation. The matter has been broached to individual members of Congress.

Would Reinstate Penalty

The Daly bill would strike out the provision in the Duffy measure eliminating the $250 minimum penalty for each infringement of copyright, at the same time reinstating the present penalties providing for that minimum and $5,000 maximum damages. Theatre interests have been depending on that clause to bring them relief from music royalties, while the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and its members have expressed fears that it would wreck the Society.

Film producers consider themselves hit by the Daly bill provision extending copyright protection to the "interpreter and or performer" of any work, as it would give actors and others who perform in pictures a continuing copyright on their work. There are other provisions in the measure "which have no business there," said E. P. Kilroe of the Twentieth Century-Fox legal department, chairman of the producers' copyright committee.

Covers All Recordings

Congressman Daly did not have actors in mind when he framed this clause, but it would have unforeseen effects, it was pointed out. His bill is an aftermath of the recent suit of Fred Waring, band leader, against Radio Station WDAS, Philadelphia, in which the court ruled, in a decision affecting the entire broadcasting industry, that an artist has a proprietary right in his recording.

However, the Daly bill covers recordings and arrangements of whatever nature. The changes are sought by the National Association of Performing Artists and ASCAP, which has contended that it is possible under the present law for anyone to make an "arrangement" of a composition without violating its provisions. The orchestra people have complained that they make arrangements and then they are recorded and used without any return to them.

Controversial Phases of Copyright Issue Revived with Daly Measure; Administration Reported Favoring Delay

Of importance, too, to the film industry is the omission of the provision in the Duffy bill making the right to exhibit part of the right to make pictures. In the absence of such a provision, it is represented, demands upon exhibitors for royalties would be possible. The Duffy clause providing that the right to produce is the right to exhibit would leave matters in status quo, said Mr. Kilroe, and the Senate copyright committee has reported that this refers only to literary material in films. Theatre interests, however, believe the courts would interpret this clause as freeing them from music tax obligations, placing the responsibility entirely with the producer.

Provides Further Protection

The Daly bill would give arrangements further protection by adding to the copyright privileges that of performing or having performed publicly for profit "any rendition or interpretation of a work by any mechanical means." The bill sets forth "these rights are not intended to interfere or curtail the right of the authors of any composition or work . . . and are created to be in addition to same, and to protect such persons who render or interpret them."

Further in the bill it is provided that in the case of records, discs, sound tracks, or other means of carrying renditions and interpretations of performances, any affidavit accompanying copies deposited for copyright shall set forth the name, place and time of manufacture, and in the case of those performed by broadcasting, the date, hour and place of broadcast. Short term protection is provided for broadcast continuities.

The injunctive provisions of the Duffy bill have been dropped entirely, as have been the provisions releasing newsreel producers from infringement responsibility where mere incidental music appears in topical pictures, as for instance copyrighted numbers picked up in picturing a band in a parade.

Duffy bill provisions are retained, however, with respect to the continuance after assignment of copyright of the author's right to object to mutilation. This, however, safeguards the rights of a producer to make changes in a work necessary for its filming.

Congressman Sirovich said he favored an automatic form of copyright, which, he said, would prevent plagiarism of American works abroad.

He pointed out, also, that such situations as the recent objections of the Spanish government to Paramount's "The Devil Is a Woman" and the Turkish ban on "The Forty Days of Musa Dagh," withdrawn from production by MGM, should be covered in new legislation.

She grabbed her a boat
an' she crossed the foam
To that frost-bitten,
gal-forsaken place called Nome...
It sure didn't take her long to break the ice...
An' to get the boys a yellin'
"Are we men or mice?"
She tossed 'em a smile
an' she sang 'em a ditty
An' them sourdoughs they give her the skiis of the city...

The big bold miner tries to stake a claim to Annie's heart of gold

III

One ole bennie
he got hit so hard . . .
He asked her to be his lifetime pard . . .
An' some say as how Annie she give 'im the wink
When who comes in but that 'Frisco Chink

"Can't you boys learn to play?"

IV

The slant-eyed villain
he was ready to nail 'er.
But in blows a roarin',
brass-jawed sailor.
He deals that Chink
a couple o' rights
And the Chink begins to see Northern Lights . . .

"You're no erl painting, but . . ."

V

An' Annie starts a cooin' like a turtledove
"You ferocious monster," says she, "I'm in love.
You're no erl painting,
You're a tough two-fister . . .
But you can take Annie to the preacher, mister."

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Series

With MGM casting a more than interested eye at the Agatha Christie novels, there's another indication that 1936-37 will find the popularity of series production at its highest.

Charlie Chan proved a steady box office success for Fox, and his happy adventures are being continued by Twentieth Century-Fox. This company leads in interest in series at the moment. Some months ago, announcement was made of plans to star Arthur Treacher in a succession of films as Jeeves, P. G. Worehouse's comic British butler. This month, Darryl Zanuck decided to keep the cast of "Every Saturday Night" intact and bill it as "The American Family" in a list of domestic comedies of feature length.

MGM did well with the "Thin Man" series and with the Philo Vance tales from S. S. Van Dine, although a number of different stars played the central character. That studio plans to keep Jean Hersholt looking for clues all through the Agatha Christie films in the person of her famous detective, Hercules Poiret.

RKO-Radio's team of Edna May Oliver and James Gleason built a strong fan following for their characters of tough detective and acid amateur sleuth in "The Penguin Pool Murder," "Murder at the Blackboard" and "Murder on a Honeymoon." That series will be continued, though Helen Broderick has fallen heiress to the Edna May Oliver roles. RKO-Radio has negotiations under way for a western star to be featured in a series of action films of one character.

Warner continues with unabated devotion recountal of the adventures of Perry Mason in the Erle Stanley Gardner stories with Warren William in the name role.

Harry Sherman's "Hopalong Cassidy" films for Paramount release already are established successes.

Cagney Again

James Cagney again is warring against Warner Brothers, this time through the superior courts. Cagney has charged Warner with breach of contract for violation of an agreement to assign the actor to only four pictures a year. Judge Douglas L. Edmonds has ordered the company to show cause why it should not be restrained from interfering with Cagney obtaining work at other studios. W. I. Gilbert represents the actor. . . . Ben Goetz is on the Coast to confer with MGM executives on British production plans. . . . The legal batteries of both Fox West Coast and Thomas L. Tally, allied with the Corbar Corporation, have started a court tussle on Tally-Corbar's petition to have the FWC bankruptcy adjudication set aside. . . . Frank Gillmore held a general meeting at the Masonic Temple for Actor and Writer Guild members. Amalgamation of the Actors' Equity and Guild organizations was suggested by members. . . . Herbert J. Yates left for New York after a week at Republic studios. Herman Rifkin, head of Republic's Boston distribution office, who came here with Mr. Yates, is staying on for awhile. . . . James Cowan, general manager of Walter Wanger Productions, also was off for Manhattan with a print of the Technicolor film, "Trail of the Lonesome Pine." . . . Kay Brown, story head for Selznick International and Pioneer, with her assistant, Dorothy Modisette, joined the group heading East. . . . Dick Pearl will remain with Talisman Studios as general manager for an additional year, on an extended option. John F. Meehan has joined Mr. Pearl's department. . . . George Browne and Steven Newman are in town for final settlement of remaining IATSE jurisdictional problems. The question of soundmen's jurisdiction will be decided February 15, union officials said. . . . Harold Lewis, former production manager for Eddie Small's Reliance Company, has joined B. F. Zeidman in a similar capacity.

In Rehearsal

Charlie Chaplin, who held no press preview of "Modern Times," presented the picture to the newspaper corps at a midnight showing at Grauman's Chinese theatre last Friday. The picture starts a regular run Wednesday at the Chinese.

It is a tribute to Chaplin's personal popularity that there were no complaints from the scribes who started assembling at 11:30 but were not admitted to the theatre until 12:15, after the crowds attending the regular show had left.

Busier

The production mill is singing a merrier tune. February's first week saw ten pictures started. Half of them are independent contributions. Story, character and cast for all, however, are of major caliber. In the same period, seven pictures were finished.

A new independent company, Zeidmann Productions, makes its bow. Headed by B. F. Zeidman, long associated with major studio production, the organization's initial feature is "Angels in White." Principal players cast to date are Ian Keith, Tala Birell, Ferdinand Gottschalk and Ferdinand Munier. Karl Brown is directing.

Lesser Productions started "O'Malley of the Mounted." George O'Brien is starred, supported by Irene Hervey, James Busch, Victor Potel and Stanley Fields. David Howard is directing.

"Along Came a Woman," a William Berke production and the last to bear the Mascot trademark, went into work. With Lewis D. Collins directing, the cast lists Eddie Nugent, Ann Rutherford, Louise Fazenda, Maude Eburne, Hedda Hopper, Franklyn Pangborn, Arthur Hoyt and Shaw and Lee.

Excelsior Pictures started "Trail's End." Tim McCoy and Lois January are featured with Ralph Byrd, Frank Glendon, Earl Hodgins, Ted Adams and John Martin also in the cast. Direction is by Sam Newfield.

At Republic "West of God's Country" started. With Joseph Kane directing, John Wayne and Muriel Evans are featured.

Majors Also Active

Two pictures were started by Paramount. "Border Flight" lists John Howard, Tom Brown and Frances Farmer as the principal players. Otho Lovering is directing. In "Florida Special" Jack Oakie, Sally Eilers and Kent Taylor head the cast. George Nichols, Jr., is the director.

Columbia started "Roaming Lady." The cast includes Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy, Preston Foster, Edward Gargan, Paul Guilfoyle, Arthur Rankin and Barnett Parker. Al Rogel is directing.

Warner put "Lawyer Woman" before the cameras. Being directed by William Clemons, the cast lists Glenda Farrell, Margaret Lindsay, Lyle Talbot, Craig Reynolds and Eddie Acuff.

Radio started "The Witness Chair." Ann Harding is starred, supported by Walter Abel, Moroni Olsen, John Halliday, Louise Lattimer, Maxine Jennings, George Offerman and William Benedict. George Nichols, Jr., is directing.

Productions Completed

After a lengthy production schedule, but still within the time limit, Warner finished "Anthony Adverse." Directed by Mervyn LeRoy, the cast includes Fredric March, Steffi Duna, Rafaela Ottiano, Donald Woods, Anita Louise, Paul Stoloff, Anne Shoemaker, Gale Sondergaard, Clara Blandick, Edmund Gwenn, Claude Rains, Fritz Lieber, Mitchell Lewis, Marilyn Knowlden and many others. The same studio also finished "Murder by an Aristocrat," which will present Lyle Talbot, Margaret Churchill, Virginia Brissac, William Davidson, Gordon Elliott, Claire Dodd, Joseph Crehan, Florice Faire, Stuart Holmes, Lottie Williams, Mary Green, John Eldredge and Milt Kibbe. Frank McDonald directed.

Two pictures likewise were finished at Paramount. In "Thirteen Hours by Air," Joan Bennett, Fred MacMurray, Adrienne Marden, Dean Jagger, Fred Keating, Brian Donlevy, Alan Baxter, John Howard, Zasu Pitts, Ruth Donnelly, Gertrude Short, Jack Mulhall, Grace Bradley, Granville Bates and Paul Berrett will be seen. Mitchel Leisen directed a second picture, "Too Many Parents," directed by Robert McGowan (Our Gang), will present Buster Phelps, George Ernest, Billy Lee, Howard Hickman, Porter Hall, Colin Tapley, Frances Farmer, Henry Travers, Sherwood Bailey, Lester Matthews, Norman Ainsley, Ed LeSaint, Bruce Wyndham, Douglas Scott and Doris Lloyd.

Columbia finished "Music Goes 'Round." Cast includes Harry Richman, Rochelle Hudson, Walter Connolly, Edward Farley, Michael Riley, Onyx Club Orchestra, Etienne Girardot, Lionel Stander, Henry Mollison, Victor Kilian, Wryley Birch, Walter Kingsfor and Gene Morgan. Victor Schertzinger directed.

"Charlie Chan at the Circus" was completed at 20th Century-Fox. Starring Warner Oland for the eleventh time, the support lists June Lang, Keye Luke, John McGuire, the Brasnos, Frances Ford, Wade Boteler, J. Carroll Naish, Shirley Dean and Drue Layton. Harry Lachman directed.

Last of the completed group is a Universal, "Love before Breakfast." It will present Carole Lombard, Preston Foster, Janet Beecher,

The Return of Jimmy Valentine

(Republic)

Melodrama

A Chicago newspaper reporter's search for the all but forgotten Jimmy Valentine, fiction's favorite cracksman at the turn of the century, animates the generally interesting sequence of complications and surprises composing this all-purpose melodrama. Roger Pryor's temperate depictment of the determined newsman, pivotal character of the picture, is a dependable anchor on the side of credibility throughout. Robert Warwick's orthodox portrayal of the reformed bank robber, now a banker in a small Indiana city, is as staple as the actor is veteran. Lois Wilson, as his wife, has little to do, but does it well. Edgar Kennedy's numerous interludes, set into the action for comedy relief, are funny in the Kennedy way, but slow up the story. Although generically a crime story, by strict definition, no shots are fired, no heads broken, and the appeal to interest rooted in memory or hearsay recollection of "Alias Jimmy Valentine" is altogether legitimate. Probably the carry-over of that appeal in both title and content is the picture's most practical selling aspect from the box office point of view.

Production is standard or better, dialogue glib and unlittered with newspaper slang or underworld jargon, and a novel angle is touched at the start of the picture when executives of the newspaper sponsoring the hunt for Valentine exchange views on the current topic of radio's inroads on newspaper advertising revenue. Maybe it's an idea to let the newspapers in on this aspect of the picture before it opens, on the theory that their natural desire to publicize their side of the story may incite to the use of white space in support of the attraction.

The story centers around Gary Howard (Roger Pryor), star reporter of a Chicago newspaper, who learns that success of a radio program based on the Jimmy Valentine theme has caused the cancellation of a $30,000 dental paste advertising contract, suggests that the paper offer $5,000 for discovery of the present whereabouts of the vanished cracksman, and sets out to find him. The search takes him to Riverside, Ind.. where a young lady (Charlotte Henry), interested in winning the reward money for charity, seeks him out to tell him that Red Dolan, the only intimate associate Valentine ever had, has been chauffer for her family for 20 years. They fall in love. From this point on he is in steady telephonic communication with his newspaper, which headlines the stories of his discoveries.

While he is trying to find Valentine, assumed to be in the area on account of Dolan's presence, Tony Scapelli (J. Carroll Naish), son of "Crazy" Scapelli, executed when Tony was a child after charging his betrayal to Valentine and instructing Tony to revenge him, arrives in Riverside, taps Howard's telephone in order to find Valentine and kill him. Tracing a letter he has received asking him to abandon his search because discovery of Valentine will injure three innocent persons, Howard discovers that the banker father of the girl he has fallen in love with is Valentine. She is told the truth at the same time, tries to dissaude him from sending the story to his paper, but he declines. Scapelli kidnaps both of them, learns Valentine's real identity, then forces Howard to make an appointment to meet him at the bank to buy him off. Howard goes through with this until, while Valentine is being forced at gun point to crack his own bank vault, Howard manages to sound an alarm which results in the capture of Scapelli and his men and brings about the happy ending, Dolan having gone to the Chicago newspaper and, claiming to be Valentine, collected the reward and brought a stop to the search.—WEAVER, New York.

The Voice of Bugle Ann

(MGM)

Man-and-Dog Story

Quite a bit out of different from usual entertainment material, this picture evidences definite possibilities for reaching audience popularity. At the same time it makes available an unusual brand of potentially effective selling showmanship. It is the story of a man and his dog. Heroizing the man and his four footed friend, it does so in such a manner that the necessary commercial elements of drama, romance, comedy, contrasting love interest, thrill, heartache, tragedy and triumph are logically incorporated to become a part of the motivating plot. Predominantly dramatic in atmosphere, that quality always has an aura to inspire sympathetic human interest.

Localed in the Missouri Ozarks, the story deals with mountain folk who live human lives and react humanly to some of the inhuman things that are part of their existence. Spring Davis finds his greatest joy in fox hunting. He has one dog, Bugle Ann, so named because of the quality of his voice, to which he is deeply attached. Into the neighborly community comes Jacob Terry, to surround his property with fences that are sources of danger to the free running dogs. Though Spring's son, Benjy, and Jacob's daughter, Camden, are attracted to each other, their parents quarrel. One night Ann disappears and Spring believing that Jacob has carried out his threat to destroy the dog, shoots his neighbor.

Sentenced to prison, Spring dreams only of his dogs as he wonders if he will ever be with them again. In the meantime, as action drifts to the romance growing between Camden and Benjy, it is evident that something serious is troubling the girl. Influential in obtaining a pardon for Spring, the old man is welcomed by his neighbors. Hearing a familiar voice in the distance, he takes up the trail and comes across a litter of hound pups. It is revealed that Camden accidentally had injured Bugle Ann. Through the years, however, she nursed her and though she had been the direct cause of a tragedy, she kept her secret until Bugle Ann really did sacrifice her life in bringing a new family into the world. One of the litter, inheriting the voice of its mother, a forgiving Spring is happy to know that he will have another fine dog to follow. Of course, there is a fullfilment of the romantic ambitions of Camden and Benjy.

Not only is there much in the picture of more than ordinary interest to dog lovers, but for that segment of audiences that thrills to the worth of a well told dramatic story there is plenty to hold attention. Showmanship that appeals to the sentiments of both, from theme of story and manner of production to worth of cast names, is ready and waiting for intelligent application.

Murder in the Studio

This picture combines the entertainment and showmanship worth of a novelly concocted murder mystery story with a new kind of slant of revealing behind-the-screens picture making technique. The motivating story, embellished by romantic love interest and comedy and spun to the tune of suspense as it approaches its material from a novelly refreshing premise, is interesting enough in itself, no matter what the locale or occasion, to be worthy mystery amusement. The manner in which it is produced, with a preview theatre and a movie lot the backgrounds, gives it intriguing backgrounds as the picture's auditors will be taken on a complete tour of the Paramount Studio and shown practically every detail of the art and mechanics of making pictures. This time inside peaks are not threaded to the idea of satire or burlesque, but while comedy has its part in the delineation, the studio tour is semi-educational.

In the plot, terrorized star DuBeck fears that he never will live to see his latest picture previewed. At a theatre, in which all the hubbub of a preview night is illustrated, the carefully guarded star is found in his seat, murdered. Almost simultaneously, but in the studio, the picture's director, Smith, also is murdered. Police, led by McKane, come to investigate, but publicity director Moran, aided by his secretary, Peggy, gets on the job to protect producer Hewitt's interests. As the ensuing action rolls all over the lot, through all the various departments from front office to film vault, smart Moran gradually is getting to the bottom of the mystery. In true motion picture fashion and also following logical police procedure, he traps Strange, an old star, as the killer who believed that DuBeck and Smith had ruined his career.

Suggestions for any amount of fresh new showmanship being available in the story, the exploitation possibilities attached to the picturization of studio operation are practically unlimited.

Previewed in Fox Boulevard theatre, a neighborhood house quite a bit removed from Hollywood. Patrons hardly more familiar with studio workings than residents of midwest or eastern towns demonstrated by applause that they appreciated the story worth and highly enjoyed being taken inside the gates.

Klondike Annie

(Paramount-LeBaron)

Drama

Here is a story of San Francisco in the nineties, aboard ship and in Nome, Alaska, in the gold rush days.

Frisco Doll is the white paramour or kept woman of the Chinaman Chan Lo. Desiring freedom which Lo refuses, she kills him and the stabbing is shown in all gruesome detail. Fleeing the police, she takes passage with Fah Wong aboard a Nome bound vessel commanded by Bull Brackett, and is housed in Bull's cabin. The sight of the ravishing creature immediately arouses Bull's passion to the tune of action and dialogue, with "give a man a free hand and he puts it all over you" as its inspiration. Fah Wong leaving the boat at a port of call, an evangelist, Annie Alden, takes her place as the Doll's cabin mate. At the same time, much to Bull's disgust, it is evident that police led by Forrest are on the murderess' trail. Treating in a light but sneering way Annie's pleas to seek the right path, the Doll nevertheless nurses her when she becomes mortally ill. Annie dies as the police come to trap the Doll. Dressing herself up in the evangelist's robes, she clothes the corpse in the attire of a professional prostitute and makes up the face and hair to further the impression, an effective but not conclusive alibi as far as Forrest is concerned and a cleverly accomplished piece of business from Bull's viewpoint.

The boat docks at Nome. Continuing the impersonation, the Doll is accepted as the genuine evangelist, Annie, by the sincerely innocent group of religious workers headed by Brother Bowser. With a grand demonstration of sex lure and to the tune of methods that wild and wooly dance halls might have used to lure their patronage, "Sister Annie" conducts a revival that brings salvation to Nome's heterogeneous habitues. Getting religion herself, in a vague sort of way, she turns against Forrest, who loves her with a pure love, and against Bull, whose yearnings are of a more passionate nature, to return to San Francisco to face the murder charge.

Previewed in the Alexander Theatre, Glendale. Audience reaction vividly denoted thrill and surprise that might be interpreted as shock. For any kind of preview the lack of applause upon conclusion could not help but be noted. If creating controversy based upon objections to the moral and ethical character of the picture can be construed at this time as being desirable exploitation or interest-creating asset, audience reaction gives every indication that this should appease the most rabid.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

It Had to Happen

(20th Century-Fox - Zanuck)

Drama

Situations which this story creates, rather than the story itself, are the elements in which probably is the most entertainment for audiences, and for showmen the best angles for exploitation to arouse patron attention. Semi-topical in nature, the picture is character and career drama, which rings in a unique dramatic romantic counterpart and is not without a good share of comedy. It moves speedily, on the whole is well acted and presented and combines its respective elements in a manner to result in acceptable entertainment.

Aboard ship, immigrant Enrico Scaffa and Giuseppe, who is the comedy contrast, come to the attention of Beatrice Newnes. In New York, Scaffa and Giuseppe get municipal laboring jobs, where again the hero, this time filled with the importance that waving a danger flag gives him, again comes forcibly to the notice of Beatrice. Riding with her fiance, Drake, a political boss and the mayor, his actions earn him the dislike of the girl and Drake, but the mayor takes a liking to him.

Through the years, Scaffa advances in political prestige and as a leader of his countrymen. A bank collapses, threatening the wrecking of many small savings. Scaffa, who knows the inside workings, quickly has Drake on the spot. Though Drake has married Beatrice, the now prominent Scaffa still has romantic ambitions towards her. Put on the spot where his own future or that of Drake is at stake, Scaffa proves regular by sticking to his guns while Drake turns coward and flees. Forcing a grand jury to return the right kind of an investigating report, Scaffa, whose relations with Beatrice have become strained, convinces her that he disappeared only so he could protect the interests of her, himself and his countrymen as well as the political and financial reputation of the city. The reward is that which is expected.

While there is much imaginative fiction about the story, there are also several realistic instances that undoubtedly will strike home to patrons who have experienced similar situations. The combination permits the selling of the picture as of topical interest with the element of entertainment as the principal feature.

Previewed in the Fox Ritz Theatre, Los Angeles, neighborhood first-run house. Reactions of the audience indicated they quickly grasped the picture's idea and that they understood and appreciated the entertainment it provides.

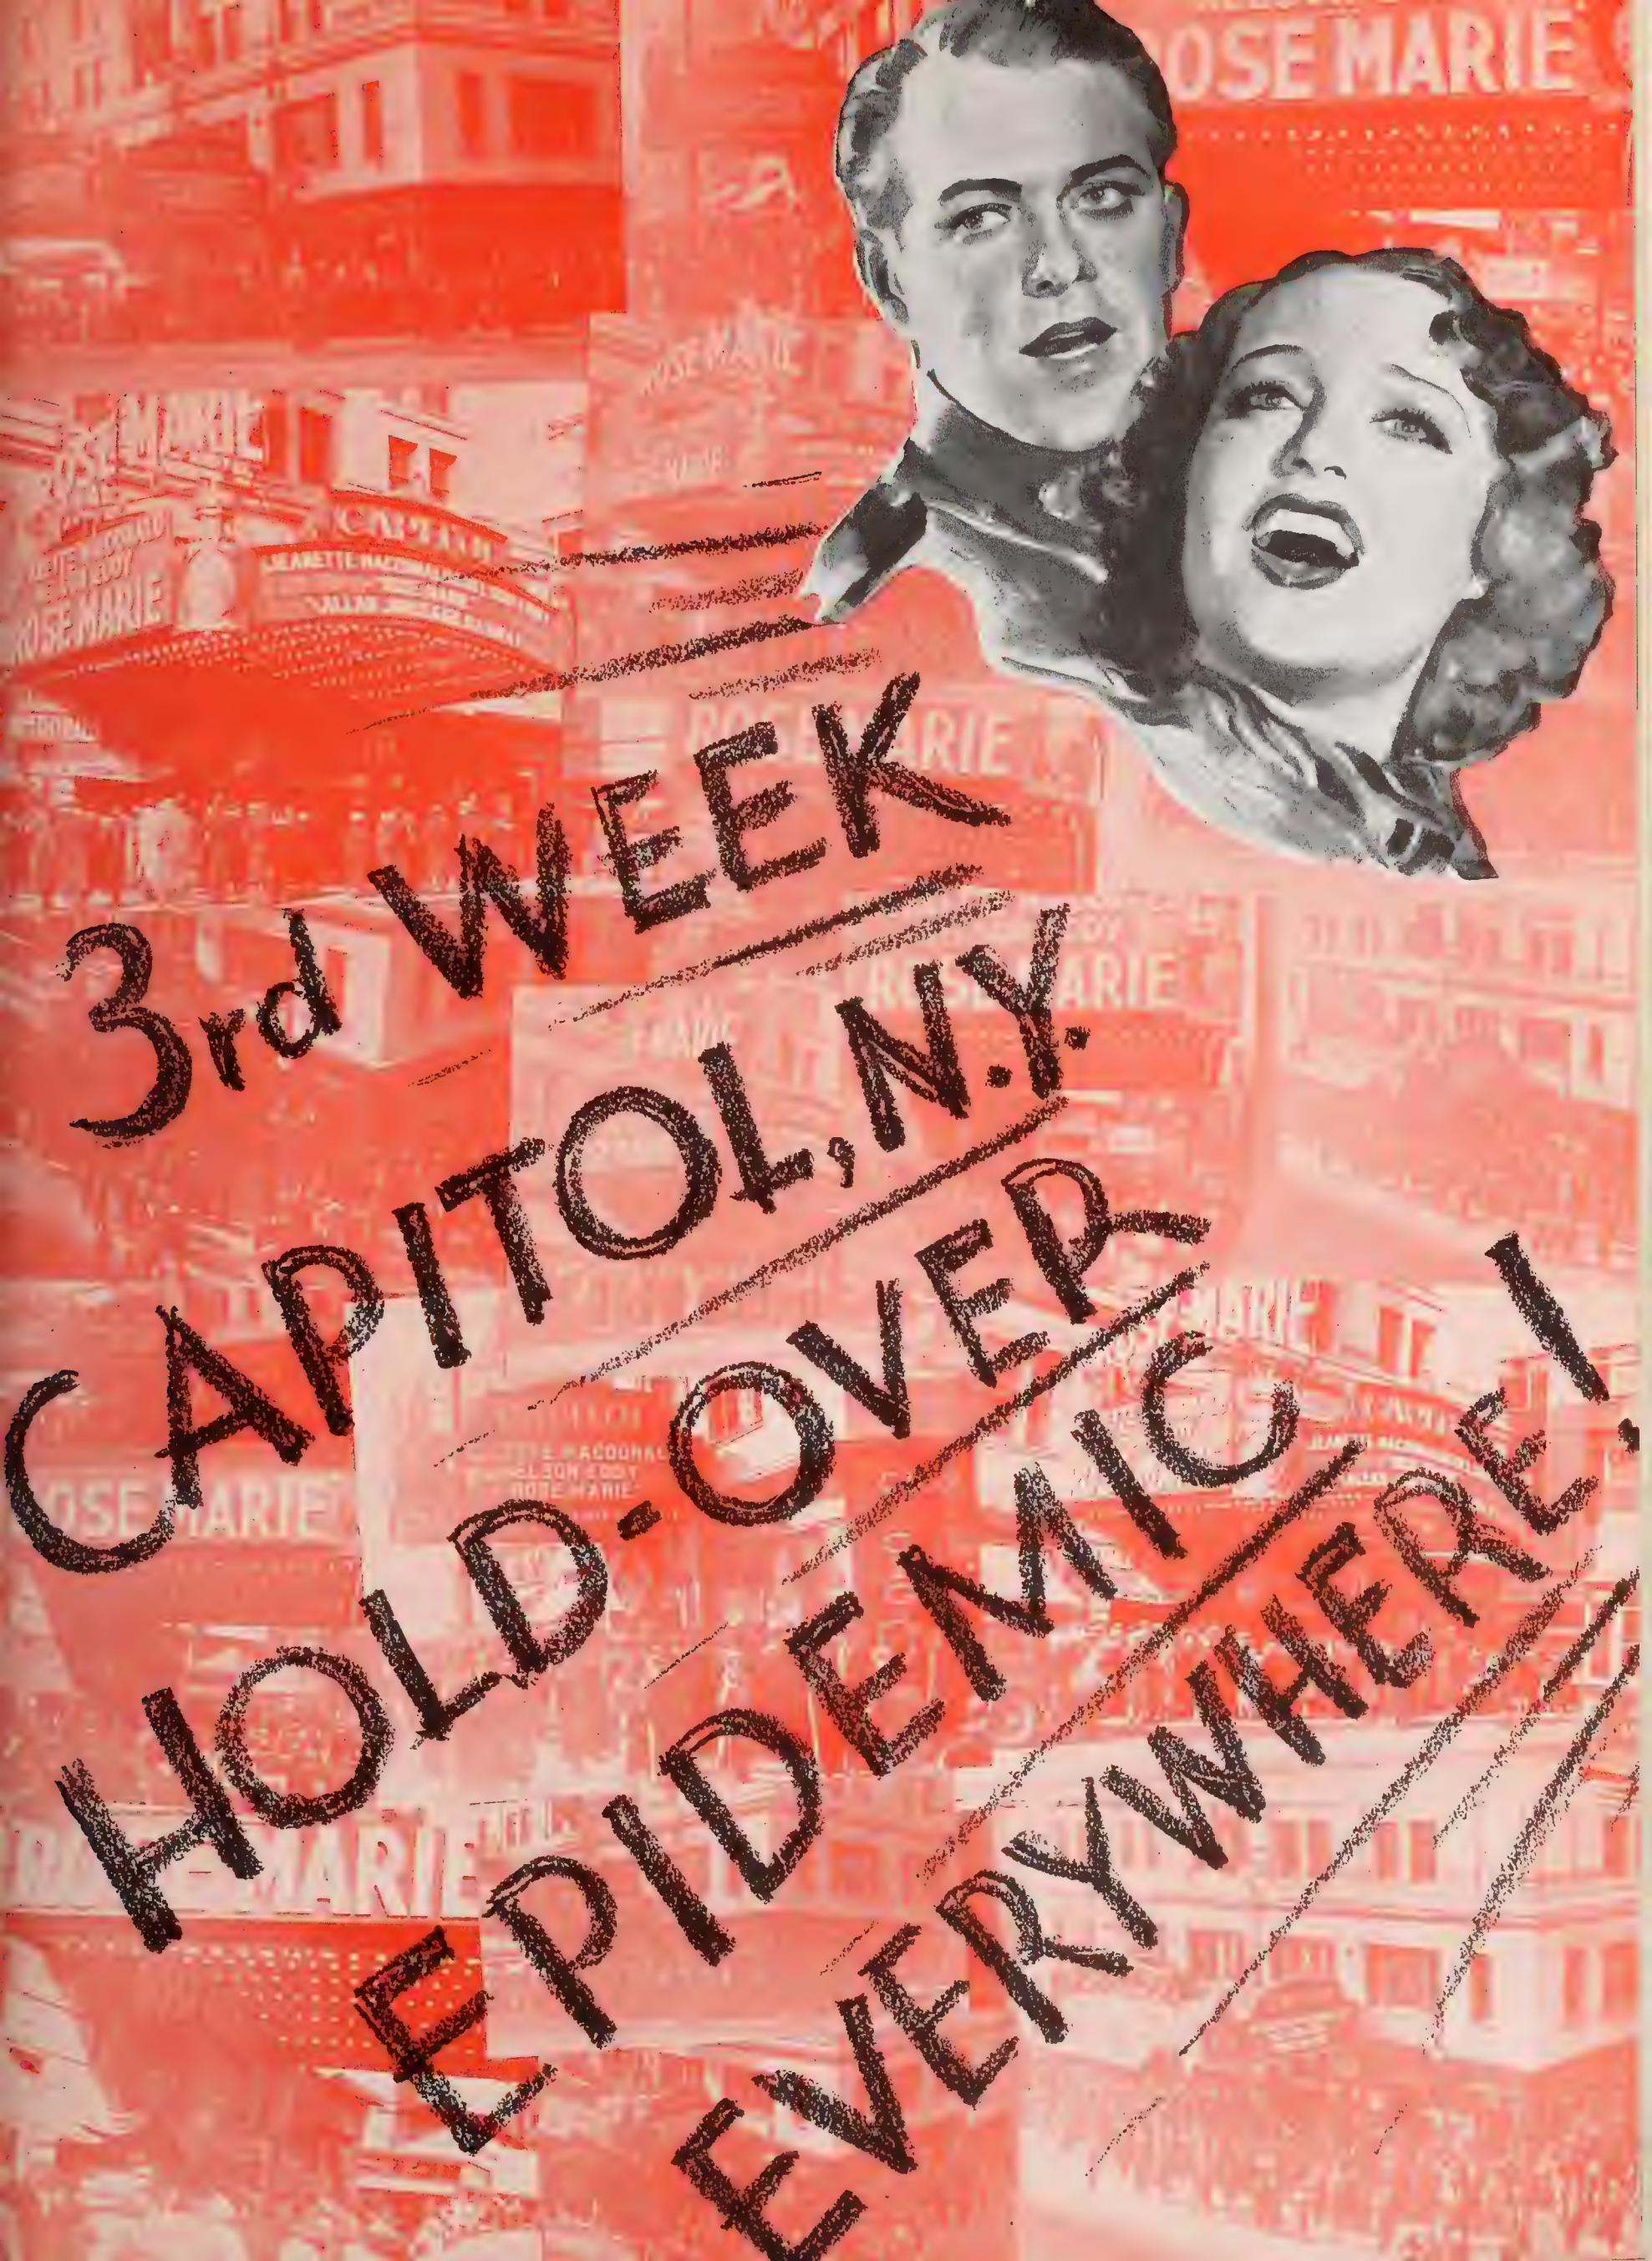
Shadows of the Orient

(Empire - Larry Darmour)

Drama



A skillful blending of ingredients that excite the enthusiasm of thrill adventure fans as well as those who like to hurray for the hero and hoot the villain, meanwhile being sympathetic for the girl who seems determined to toss herself into bad company, this production measures up to all the demands of the action audience. A story of gangsters, Chinese smugglers and a new kind of resourceful government crowd, the immigration service, it majors in drama, carries an effective contrast of dramatic love interest and is not without its share of comedy. Moving fast, the production wastes no time on inconsequentials, but plunges into the plot immediately and maintains a suspense laden interest.

Opening to the tune of a raid on a Chinese gambling layout, veteran inspector Sullivan permits the two key figures King Moss and Viola Avery to slip through his fingers. Demoted for his carelessness, Sullivan is assigned to be the aid of youthful Baxter. Suspicioning that Viola may know something about the activities of a ring smuggling Chinese into the country, Baxter saves her from an embarrassing situation with her father and newspapermen. Pursuing his friendship which brings on romantic conflict between him and the girl and Moss, Baxter shows Sullivan how the new style investigation makes use of deduction to gather clues.

Convinced that Moss has a lot to do with the activities of the smuggling ring, he applies for the job of flying the human contraband into the country. Put on the spot by Nolan, who suspects his identity, Baxter is rescued by Sullivan. In the meantime Moss has made Viola the tool to smuggle Chinese. In sensational aerial scenes Baxter forces her plane down. Surprised to see how she has involved herself despite his many warnings, he takes off after Moss. When he shoots him down, the finale reveals the girl in guise of an undercover agent employed by Baxter to break up the racketeer ring.

Well produced, relying upon the values in action, dialogue and situation calculated to evoke the most interest, the show is of the caliber

"BIGGEST GROSSES IN HISTORY!"

—wires I. Libson, from Cincinnati

"Congratulations, M-G-M. 'Rose Marie' destined to be among the topnotch musicals ever made. The Albee this week will do one of biggest grosses in the history of the house and the picture will undoubtedly do four to five weeks in downtown Cincinnati."

—I. LIBSON

"HUNDREDS COMING BACK!"

—wires Chas. A. Midleburg, Charleston, W. Va.

"First four days nearly doubled the first four days of 'Marietta.'

"Had we been able to take care of the crowds, our receipts would have been hundreds of dollars more.

"Receipts on the fourth day fifty percent more than on opening day. Patrons are returning by the hundreds to see it a third and fourth time. Thousands stood outside in zero weather trying to get in.

"It will break all existing records."

"THREE TIMES 'MARIETTA'"

—says Mr. Wilson, of Williamsport, Pa.

In the face of the worst possible weather conditions Rialto opened yesterday on "Rose Marie" to what we believe to be the largest number of paid admissions in the history of the theatre for a mid-week opening

The gross was more than 300 per cent of the opening day on "Naughty Marietta."

Words fail me to express the comments of our patrons. Practically each one of the thousands enthusiastically endorsed it as the best picture in years. Congratulations!

FLASH FROM ICY DENVER!

"Number of admissions Saturday broke every existing record in the Orpheum Theatre, even surpassing the week they had Ben Bernie in person and also the week they had Sally Rand. Also surpassed the number of Saturday admissions on 'Top Hat' which pulled the house record. There were 8300 admissions on Saturday. 'Mutiny' at the Denver Theatre on Saturday, November 9th, played to 8022 people. Sunday attendance was approximately 8500 people, making a total of 60,800 admissions over the week end, which is a lot of sugar!"

IMAGINE! TWO FIRST RUNS ON SAME STREET!

—Miami makes theatrical history!

"After screening 'Rose Marie' we realized picture had exceptional box office possibilities. Accordingly, plans were quickly made to present simultaneous twin engagements in our Colony and Community Theatres, Miami Beach, which are located on Lincoln Road directly across street from each other. Picture doing biggest business in history of Miami Beach. Continuous lobby holdouts both theatres matinee and evening. 'Rose Marie' is a history maker as superlative entertainment as biggest local grosser and as first picture to play first-run engagement simultaneously in two theatres."

Soak the Rich

(Paramount)

Comedy

Chronic dissenters Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur, writers, directors and producers of this creaking vehicle for varied talents, appear to have set out with at least semi-serious intentions of propagandizing either to left or right and then tossed them lightly overboard when their somewhat ribald and never restrained comedy sense got up full steam ahead. The opening sequence, the only one pertaining to the title, promises a Walter Lippmannish treatment in the Noel Coward manner of the contemporary economic and social status of the nation, but ends in a black-out. From there on the picture is little more than a series of not too closely related or smoothly connected sketches lampooning, ridiculing, burlesquing radicalism and capitalism, in terms of low-comedy representatives of each, in turn and collectively and impartially.

The first sequence and several others could be presented independently as very short shorts acceptable for drawing room or little theatre purposes. Strung together, they unfold an undergraduate romance that would rate as routine if the precocious adolescents performing it were not crammed full of Hecht-MacArthur wisecrack and sophistry. As is, the plain cash customer is quite likely to consider it a highly artificial and probably not at all necessary business. At two or three points beyond midpicture the story seems to have ended, such is the construction of its triple-threat sponsors, but it regains headway and continues on and on to the customary clinch, still without lining up on either side of the capitalism-radicalism theme with which every situation is shot through, but definitely on the side of Hecht-MacArthur buffoonery against the field.

Exploitation bearing down on the fact, belied by the title, that the picture is strictly a comedy may tend to condition patrons for the swift, suave and sometimes dubious dialogue that drew occasional guffaws from a sparse midday audience at the Astor on Broadway. Reference to past performances of Walter Connolly, who has a characteristic role here, should work out beneficially. Of course the Hecht-MacArthur insignia is top flight copy or better forgotten, according to the team's standing in the box office radius. Billing pertaining to capitalism, radicalism or other isms, delicate stuff at best, would not be supported by the picture in any case and could be expected to backfire in sundry unpleasant ways. Save in the extremely rarefied, if existent, zone of sophisticated patronage, the production is by no means a self-seller.

The college angle is heavily stressed but not in a way that will make anybody happily helpful except, perhaps, the lunatic fringe of the student body. If there's a trunk-line approach to a single sector of the population that can be depended upon for bulk attendance it's to the pseudo-sophisticates of boulevard and cocktail lounge, to whom the name of Hecht is ample tip as to what's on tap.

The story opens with Humphrey Craig (Walter Connolly), an incredibly rich and simple millionaire, reading a "soak the rich" headline and deciding to telephone the White House about it. Home from Europe come daughter Belinda (Mary Taylor) and Miss Beasely (Alice Duer Miller), her traveling companion and mentor, ultra-smart moderns and thorns in his domestic side. Arrival of a bomb and subsequent harmless explosion of same put an end to necessary establishment of cast identities and the whole matter of politics.

Resuming ignored classes in a university named for her father, its founder, Belinda meets student-revolt leader Buzz Jones (John Howard), seeking reinstatement of a suspended radical faculty member. Falling in love with the otherwise personable young insurgent, Belinda joins the student radicals, urges her father to reinstate the professor, quarrels with him, leaves home and donates her cash and jewels to the student cause. Comic-opera G-men called in to investigate the origin of the bomb begin search for the girl they assume to have been kidnaped. After a series of tiffs with the campus Stalin, Belinda is kidnaped by a plausible maniac who believes himself the one-man answer to humanity's problems.

The G-men rescue her and she returns home. The college communist tries to communicate with her but is prevented by her father, who steam-rollers a long planned match with a favored suitor. On the night before she is to marry him she learns that Jones has been trying to see her, tells her father's choice an exaggerated version of her romance with the liberal, of which he promptly informs her parent. At this time a student parade arrives at the Craig estate, clamoring for reinstatement of the radical professor, and Craig invites the leader in, agrees to his demands, adds his consent to his marriage with Belinda, which is agreed to after a shot-gun incident funny or not according to taste.—Weaver, New York.

The Rest Cure

(Regal Productions - Hirliman)

Comedy Drama

Done in color, this feature not only makes available the publicizing of that departure as a means of stimulating public interest, but also provides a substantial, well developed comedy action thrill story to talk about. Basically the story is a Foreign Legion yarn, the amplifying background and locales of which readily lend themselves to the application of tints. As such it carries the supplementary values of romance, drama and excitement. Generally, though, it has been treated from a comedy standpoint, save in but one sequence which has a punch of brutal melodrama wherein is shown to what lengths the Legion goes to preserve discipline.

The motivating story, which gives peculiar significance to the title, is uniquely and logically developed. Ex-racketeers Linton and Connover, believing they are on the spot, are hiding out in Paris. At a sidewalk cafe they become involved in a flirtation with Mrs. Rillette and Naomi, an interlude interrupted by the appearance of gangster Perrelli, supposedly carrying a machine gun. Taking Mrs. Rillette at her word, they enlist in the Foreign Legion for a rest cure. En route to Africa, they get in dutch with Captain Rillette.

Once in the Legion the boys are continually in hot water as they break every regulation. They get sore at each other as Linton butts in on a date that Connover has with Honey Evans, exotic dancing girl. Reunited when both are disciplined, they again violate the rules when they rescue Mrs. Rillette, Naomi, and the general's wife from kidnaping Arabs. Sentenced to a disciplinary camp, Linton heads a mutiny when a prisoner dies a victim to Legion brutality. Meantime, Rillette's car carrying his wife and Naomi is attacked by Arabs. Getting safely into camp, which is then besieged, Linton and Connover heroically and comically lead the Legionaires to victory over the enemy. Rewarded by promotions, Linton has the further reward that Naomi will always be close at hand when he calls.

Motivated by comedy, but nevertheless alive with action and thrill, the show has much for the adventure fans. As good judgment has been evidenced in the application of color, particularly in relation to natural and architecturally decorated backgrounds, this feature can readily be utilized as a means of arousing more than ordinary interest.

The Lone Wolf Returns

(Columbia)

Mystery Drama

Picking up the shreds of the career of that international jewel thief, Michael Lanyard, created by the pen of the late Louis Joseph Vance, this production makes for good entertainment. Lanyard, or the Lone Wolf as he is more familarly known, returns after a period of lawabiding to his first love, crime. Playing the lone hand as of always, Lanyard accomplishes three difficult robberies and is well on his way to recapturing the reputation he formerly commanded. But he loses interest in crime as a career when he meets Marcia Stewart and falls in love with her. When the Stewart jewels are stolen Lanyard is suspected. Instead, he recovers the jewels and wins Miss Stewart.

The followers of the Louis Joseph Vance novels are numbered in the legions and the pictures that preceded this provide a ready-made audience. The fact that the picture is a combination of mystery and drama and plays up a type of criminal that is probably more pleasing to women patrons than other thieves would seem to indicate a campaign directed towards both sexes.

The performance of the cast is pleasing, with some excellent characterizations by Melvyn Douglas as Lanyard, Raymond Walburn as Lanyard's valet and Thurston Hall as the detective nemesis of Lanyard. Others in the cast are Gail Patrick, Tala Birell and Douglas Dumbrille.

In the story, Lanyard steals the Bancroft jewels and makes his escape from the house though it is surrounded by police. He joins a masquerade party next door to the Bancroft house and dances with the hostess, Marcia Stewart. Discovering two jewel thieves in the party are after the Stewart jewels he beats them to them. After they have left he returns the jewels to the safe and instead steals a photograph of Marcia. The jewel thieves lure Lanyard to a gambling house but he escapes when his ingenious valet, Jenkins, has the place raided.

Then the Stewart jewels are actually stolen and Marcia, who has confessed her love for Lanyard, believes he has duped her to get at the jewels. Crane, the detective called in by the police from retirement to catch Lanyard, accosts him at his apartment. Lanyard escapes but promises to meet the detective at midnight with the gems. He discovers the place where they have been hidden, retrieves them and makes his escape when the perpetrators of the robbery return. Crane, following Lanyard, discovers who really stole the jewels and arrests the thieves. Lanyard returns the jewels to Marcia and is forgiven.

The production is not by any means heavy drama, as it depends on a combination of light drama, romance, comedy and the element of mystery. These are merged successfully into an amusing and pleasing picture.—MOONEY, New York.

Here Comes Trouble

(20th Century-Fox)

Dramatic Mystery

Pretty much ado about nothing, although about half a dozen conflicting and counteracting subplots are hitched on to the basic motivations, the show is dramatic mystery with an angle of comedy romantic love interest rung in. As it comes up on the screen it's a sort of application of the "Grand Hotel" idea applied to a miscellaneous collection of folk travelling via ship from New York to Havana and back again.

The skeleton idea is that two gangs of crooks, one just a set of common ordinary thieves, the other a pair of polished crooks, know that a gem merchant is going to buy a valuable jewel. Both know that the other party is going to try to steal it. For romantic contrast to that, the ship's engineer, stoke hold boss, falls in love with the boat's manicurist. She gets jealous when the feminine lure of the slick crook duo seems to be driving a rift between her and her brawny boy friend. There's a lot of funny doings in Havana. Homeward bound, the gem is stolen all right; there's the dramatic threat of a boiler explosion; the loot is ostensibly smuggled past customs officers, but in the finale, with sequences showing how a monkey upsets the well laid plans, the comedy relief is the gent who puts the fingers on the slick crooks and clears the way for the engineer and manicurist to pick up their interrupted romance.

Just so much film footage, showmanship faces as many headaches as undoubtedly did those who made it.

Previewed in the Uptown Theatre, first-run neighborhood house, to a confused audience.

Entertaining

Three topics in the foreground of current reader interest, one a staple, the others timely, make up No. 2 of Volume 2. Most important, as pertains to the number of persons interested, is the story of Dentist Leroy Hartman's recently announced and promptly adopted dental anesthetic. The discoverer's long search for the formula and the extent of its importance to practicing dentists and their patients are thoroughly delineated. Second in point of interest, perhaps, is the presentation of the incredible Father Divine, so named, whose faithful flock in darkest Harlem believe he is God and swarm his headquarters, known as Heaven No. 1, to receive material blessings which, strangely enough, are provided. A modern phenomenon, this dusky medicine man's sway over his superstitious followers is a fantastic fact of the era. The remaining sequence consists of a reportorial inspection of Russian conditions as the second Five Year Plan makes its functioning manifest in the Soviet set-up. Practical aspects of the speed-up policy are shown. Social status of the citizens is variously portrayed. As to selection of topics, the release rates high in its succession. The crisp, impartial style of narration is maintained.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Ali Baba

(Celebrity)

Snappy Color Cartoon

Departing only pardonably from the text of the original tale, swiftly animated robbers, citizens, tradesmen and so on scamper through this Comicolor cartoon without a letdown in pace or type of humor. Ali Baba & Son, street merchants, stumble upon the robber baron's treasure cave, enter by use of the magic phrase, "Open Sesame," and are caught by the returning bandits.

Tom Thumb

Politely Diverting

Taking but moderate liberties with the story familiar to the youngsters it appears primarily intended to amuse, the animators have turned out a pleasant little item suitable for combining with practically any program, preferably one designed for family patronage. No fantastic flights of fancy are indulged and nothing that happens couldn't, if it be granted that there was a Tom Thumb. Faces of parents or other adults are never shown, concentration on the tiny figure of Tom and his animal associates heightening the effect of realism.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Toonerville Trolley

(RKO Radio)

Stimulating Cartoon

Fontaine Fox's enduring cartoon characters, the Skipper and Katrina, gain life and vigor by the brilliant coloration and adroit animation given them in this exceptional short. Without sacrifice of the curiously awkward mannerism imparted to the figures in the daily newspaper comic, speed and precision vital to the success of cartoon animation are achieved in high degree. It's hard to conceive of a program that would not be gainer by addition of his short.—Running time, seven minutes.

WARNERS FIGHTING KOPLAR TO END MINOR-GROUP RAIDS FOR ALL TIME

Attacking "Wild and Groundless Claims" of Those "Seeking to Benefit Personally" by Litigation, Court Is Told

by GEORGE L. PATZER
Wilmington Correspondent

Seeking to end once and for all "the wild and groundless claims of minority stockholders who seek to benefit personally by their ability to involve the company in litigation," Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and its directors are throwing every effort into the battle being waged before Judge John P. Nields in the United States district court at Wilmington, Del., in trial of the case brought against the company and its directors by Harry Koplar of St. Louis. The trial opened last week and may last several more.

Mr. Koplar seeks to have the directors of the company, including the three Warner brothers, Harry M., Albert and Jack L., return some $14,000,000, said by Mr. Koplar to have been the value of the stock given in 1928 by the company, part to Renraw, Inc., a family holding corporation of the Brothers Warner, and part to Goldman-Sachs & Co., investment brokers.

Coincident with the opening of the trial, counsel for Warner Pictures representing its officers and directors issued a statement, not part of the court records, which gave the background of the suit, mentioned Mr. Koplar's previous suits against the company, and concluded:

"The officers of the company stated they would welcome the opportunity to air this entire situation in court so that there can for all times definitely be put to rest the wild and groundless claims of minority stockholders who seek to benefit personally by their ability to involve the company in litigation."

Says Forced Sale Was Aim

The statement also said that Mr. Koplar "instituted receivership actions in St. Louis, and in the trial of those cases the courts found after a full examination of the facts that Mr. Koplar had brought the actions for the purpose of forcing a sale of his stock at an exorbitant price. The court found that his purpose in prosecuting this suit was an attempt to force Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., to purchase his stock at his price or suffer the consequent loss incident to litigation."

The $14,000,000, Mr. Koplar says, was the value of blocks of common stock of Warner Brothers, which, the plaintiff alleges, were fraudulently issued by the company, part to the brothers' Renraw, Inc., part to Goldman Sachs, of which Waddill Catchings, a director of Warner Pictures, is also a partner. He holds further that in 1928 Renraw entered into an agreement with Warner Brothers Pictures whereby Renraw would "sell" the services of the three Warner brothers exclusively to Warner Brothers Pictures for an aggregate of $10,000 a week for six years.

The plaintiff also charges that apart from this contract of employment, Renraw received 90,000 shares of Warner Brothers Pictures common stock, then valued at $11,000,000; that this stock, given to Renraw by the company of which the three Warner brothers were directors and officers, too, was not in consideration for any services; that the issuance of this stock to Renraw was a violation of the Delaware state constitution and that the issuance of the stock was fraudulent; and that in 1928 the company gave a block of stock to Goldman, Sachs and Company, valued at $9,000,000, to sell and that Goldman Sachs received in return 25,000 shares of common stock of the picture company then valued at $3,000,000.

Wilkinson Presents Koplar Case

The charges of fraud on the part of the defendant company were included in the opening statement of Ernest L. Wilkinson of Washington, D. C., of counsel for Mr. Koplar, whose suit against the company, of which he is a minority stockholder, and the directors has been pending since 1932.

"The theory here is," Mr. Wilkinson told the court in his opening, "that Waddill Catchings, a partner of Goldman Sachs and also a director of Warner Brothers Pictures, was under obligation to the picture company to act fairly when his partnership was dealing with the picture company."

Mr. Wilkinson argued that the 25,000 shares remuneration was excessive and represented an abuse of the duties of the directors of Warner Brothers Pictures.

He further argued that the presentation of these 25,000 shares of stock was "an illegal gift" and amounted "to fraud on the part of the defendant corporation."

Defense counsel told the story of how Samuel Warner worked in the company's studio, producing "The Jazz Singer."

"They carried Samuel Warner out on a stretcher from that studio," Joseph I. Proskauer, counsel for the defense, said, "and he died on the night 'The Jazz Singer' opened. But the three brothers carried on and that picture revolutionized the movies."

Mr. Proskauer told how neither banks nor other companies making contracts with the company would conclude contracts or agreements unless the Warner brothers were personally responsible for Warner Brothers Pictures.

"The Messrs. Warner were the goodwill of the company," Mr. Proskauer said.

He attacked the allegations of Mr. Koplar that the stock given Renraw and Goldman Sachs was worth in 1928 the millions Mr. Koplar says it was. "In that year there wasn't a nickel of the company's assets applicable to the common stock—except the Warner brothers," he added.

Mr. Proskauer also gave details of the Warner-Stanley deal made by two groups of "hard fisted men," and out of that deal, he said, came the demand from Stanley that a new employment contract be made between the Warner company and the Warner brothers.

"There is no question as to the legality of these transactions," Mr. Proskauer told Judge Nields, "but at the moment I am giving your honor a story of honesty."

He called the judge's attention to the findings of the courts in St. Louis in a suit Mr. Koplar had brought against Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc. Mr. Proskauer quoted from the St. Louis court's findings that Mr. Koplar's "purpose in prosecuting this suit was an attempt to force Warner Brothers Pictures to purchase his stock at his price or suffer the consequent loss incident to litigation."

Koplar on the Stand

Mr. Koplar took the stand on the afternoon of the opening day and the following morning was still on the stand just before the plaintiff closed its case. Mr. Koplar was the only witness to take the stand.

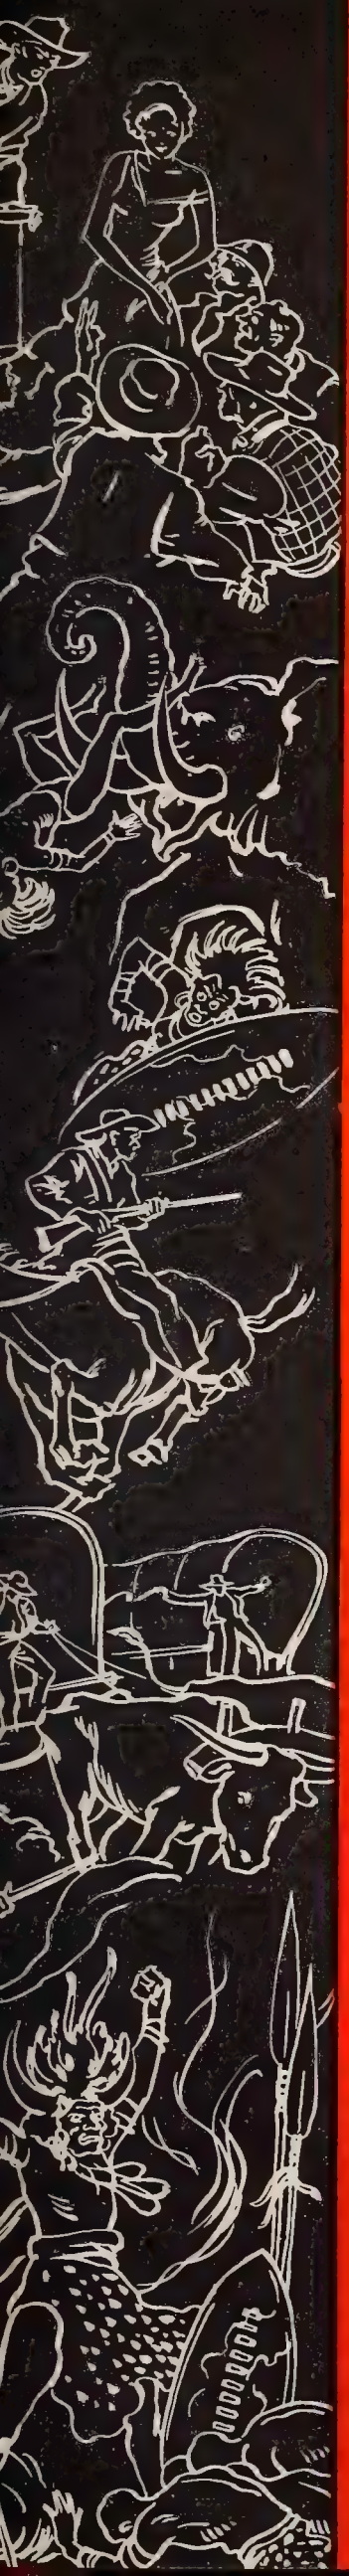
Mr. Koplar testified he had 5,000 shares of Warner stock, 1,200 of which were in his own name and the remainder in the names of brokers originally. He said he now owns 1,581 shares of the stock.

Mr. Koplar told of the Skouras deal with the Warners, recalling that in a conversation Major Warner had said they had been "stalled long enough by the Stanley company and couldn't wait any longer" and that they wanted the Skouras holdings.

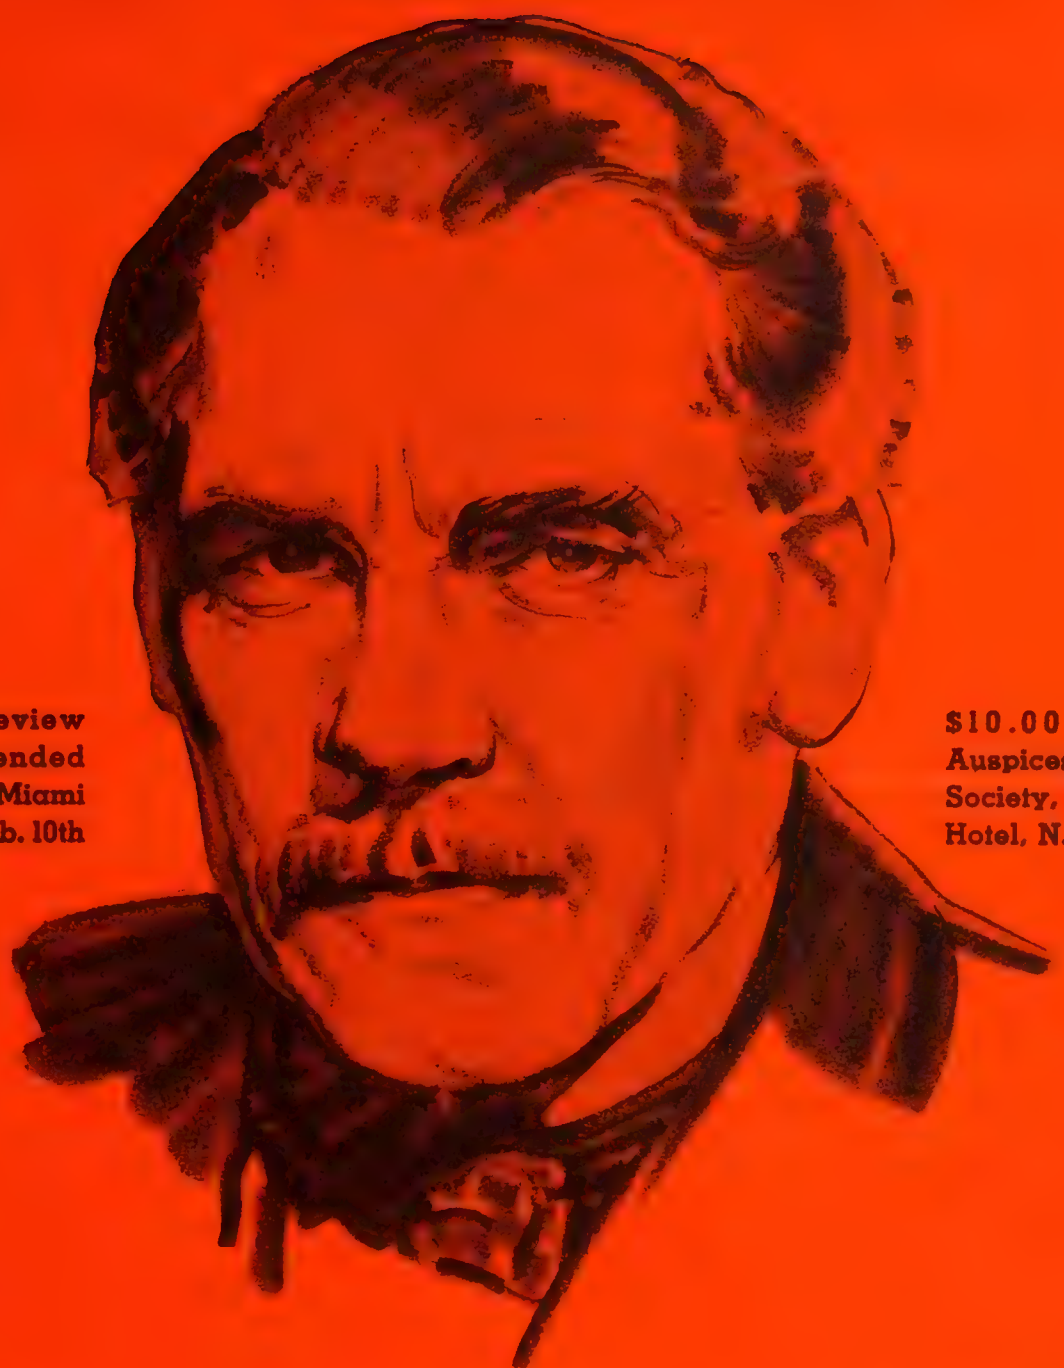
He recalled that Spyros Skouras on Nov. 10, 1928, sold all his Class B stock of the Skouras corporation for an equivalent of $3,640,000. It was from this deal that Mr. Koplar acquired his Warner holdings.

Before the plaintiff closed its case Friday morning, a number of stipulations were made with the defense. The defense conceded that the three Warner brothers had received compensation from the company at the rate of $100,000 a year from April 1, 1924, to Aug. 31, 1928. Among other points conceded by the defense was that from Sept. 1, 1928 to Dec. 29, 1928, the three brothers each received cash compensation of $16,666 from the company.

One of the high spots of Mr. Catchings' testimony was his version of the contribution by the Warner brothers of 50,000 shares of their common stock of the company to aid in securing a $4,000,000 long-term loan for the company.



An attempt to have Renraw, Inc., described as a device was made Wednesday in the cross-examination of Mr. Catchings. He said he would not call Renraw a device but a legal method of private individuals incorporating themselves.



Recalled in the questioning were the golden days of 1928 when Warner Pictures common stock was being traded for $114 and $122 a share.

COMMUNISTS FAIL TO SUPPORT OWN PICTURE

Certain patriotic organizations in Boston, that have been considerably excited in the past because of the alleged support being given by Communists to foreign propaganda films and who have even gone so far as to introduce a bill into the legislature designed to ban such pictures, are a little relieved today and perhaps a bit surprised.

The reason is that only 23 persons turned out for the scheduled showing recently at the Tremont Temple of "Moscow Today." In fact, one of those prominent by his absence was the projectionist, and as a result the film remained in the can. The American Friends of the Soviet Union sponsored the almost-showing.

ACADEMY NOMINEES PICKED IN 14 GROUPS

Write-in Privilege in All Classes Except Art Direction; Final Awards To Be Made March 5

Twelve feature pictures, eight short subjects and a varied numerical assortment of actors and actresses, directors and assistant directors, original script writers, adaptors, music writers, musical scorers, art directors and studio sound experts have been nominated by members of Hollywood's Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for the eighth annual awards in their respective divisions, to be announced at the Academy dinner in California on March 5th.

The 1936 Academy awards committee has decided that a "write-in" privilege will be accorded members in the balloting, in all divisions excepting art direction. It is unlikely, however, that the following nominees will receive any new competition.

Features Nominated

"Alice Adams," Radio; "Broadway Melody of 1936," M-G-M; "Captain Blood," Warners; "David Copperfield," M-G-M; "The Informer," Radio; "Les Miserables," Twentieth Century; "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," Paramount; "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Warners: "Mutiny on the Bounty," M-G-M; "Naughty Marietta," M-G-M; "Ruggles of Red Gap," Paramount and "Top Hat," Radio.

Actors

Clark Gable, for "Mutiny on the Bounty"; Charles Laughton, for "Mutiny on the Bounty"; Victor McLaglen, for "The Informer"; Franchot Tone, for "Mutiny on the Bounty."

Actresses

Elizabeth Bergner, for "Escape Me Never"; Claudette Colbert, for "Private Worlds"; Bette Davis, for "Dangerous"; Katharine Hepburn, for "Alice Adams"; Miriam Hopkins, for "Becky Sharp"; Merle Oberon, for "Dark Angel."

Although the selection of more than three artists in the actor and actress groups was unusual, it complied with Section F. Rule 6 for the awards of merit competition, which reads: "If any individual receives nominations for two or more achievements, a total number of votes which equals or exceeds the third highest vote for any single achievement, then there shall also be included on the final ballot the one of the achievements of such individual which polled the highest vote."

Directors

John Ford, for "The Informer"; Henry Hathaway, for "Lives of a Bengal Lancer"; Frank Lloyd, for "Mutiny on the Bounty."

Best Original Script

"Broadway Melody," "Gay Deception" and "The Scoundrel."

Best Adaptations

"The Informer," "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" and "Mutiny on the Bounty."

Assistant Directors

Joseph Newman, for "David Copperfield"; Eric Stacey, for "Les Miserables"; Clem Beauchamp and Paul Wing, for "Lives of a Bengal Lancer."

Music Writers

Irving Berlin, "Cheek to Cheek," in "Top Hat"; Jerome Kern and James McHugh, for "Lovely to Look At," in "Roberta"; Harry Warren and Al Dubin, "Lullaby of Broadway," in "Gold Diggers."

Best Musical Scoring

"The Informer," "Mutiny on the Bounty" and "Peter Ibbetson."

Studio Sound Achievement

Universal, for "Bride of Fankenstein"; Warners, for "Captain Blood"; Samuel Goldwyn, for "Dark Angel"; RKO, for "I Dream Too Much"; Columbia, for "Love Me Forever"; M-G-M, for "Naughty Marietta"; Republic, for "One Thousand Dollars a Minute," and Twentieth Century-Fox, for "Thanks a Million."

Short Subjects

Cartoons—"The Calico Dragon," Harman-Ising; "Three Orphan Kittens," Disney; "Who Killed Cock Robin?" Disney; Comedy shorts—"How to Sleep," M-G-M; "Oh, My Nerves!" Columbia; "Tit for Tat," Roach; Novelties—"Audioscopiks," M-G-M; "Camera Thrills," Universal; "Wings Over Mt. Everest," G. B. Of these, one award will be given jointly for the outstanding production in each of the three classifications.

Art Directors

Samuel Goldwyn's "Dark Angel," Paramount's "Bengal Lancer" and the RKO "Top Hat."

Photography

"Barbary Coast," United Artists; "The Crusades," Paramount; "Les Miserables," United Artists.

Film Editing

"David Copperfield," Metro; "The Informer," Radio; "Les Miserables," United Artists; "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," Paramount; "Midsummer Night's Dream," Warners, and "Mutiny on the Bounty," MGM.

Mrs. Slater Handling French Output

A plan is being worked out whereby six Interstate Circuit neighborhood houses in Dallas, Texas, in association with the Parent-Teacher Association, will give special Saturday matinees for school children. James Owen Cherry, Interstate city manager, is handling the details.

Elstree Studios Ravaged by Fire; Work Goes On

Buildings and equipment valued at approximately $2,250,000 were destroyed last weekend in a fire that in less than four hours left five acres in the center of England's film industry at Elstree a mass of twisted ruins and smoking equipment.

British and Dominion Films lost three studios and British International Pictures two. The remaining seven stages on the lot were undamaged and work is being carried on at a normal rate.

All negatives were saved from the flames and workmen still at the studios were able to save costly sound-recording apparatus along with them before the flames got out of control. All the scenery built for "Love in Exile" was destroyed, however, before it could be moved. The stage on which Elisabeth Bergner and Laurence Oliver are making Shakespeare's "As You Like It" was untouched by the flames.

Most of the stars engaged in work at the plant lost valuable personal property when their dressing rooms went up in smoke, among these being Clive Brook, Tullio Carminati, Leslie Banks and Helen Vinson.

Insurance completely covered all losses sustained, it was stated by studio officials. British and Dominions have no plans for immediate production, however, and upon their plans for the future will depend the rebuilding, it was said. In the meantime, Capitol Productions, engaged in work in one of the destroyed stages, has leased space at Warton Hall and Paramount is moving a production to Rock Studio.

The Ministry of Labor will receive a delegation from the Association of Cine Technicians, regarding the employment of foreign technicians in British studios.

The abandonment of the action of Gaumont British against the Kinematograph Renters' Association was foreshadowed in London this week by intimation that proceedings against individual companies would be dropped.

Max Schach of Capitol Film Productions and Maurice Silverstone of United Artists have signed contracts for the world distribution by the latter's company of the product of Schach's newly formed Trafalgar Film Productions.

18 PRODUCERS GET '36-37 SEASON GOING WITH 37 STORY PURCHASES

Published Book and Magazine Stories Supplant Originals as Supply Source for First Time in Years; Compilation Given

For the first time in years the original story has given way to the published book and magazine story as the main source of supply for the motion picture. In January, eighteen books and magazine yarns and five plays were acquired for feature production, as against only fourteen original manuscripts. Eighteen Hollywood producers thereby started their 1936-37 feature schedules in construction, having but little left to do now to round out 1935-36 production.

Heretofore originals have led published stories by better than three to two, but the appearance at the turn of the new year of an unusual number of fine books and magazine stories with good screen possibilities evidently diverted the attention of producers away from the original to the printed medium.

Outstanding among the book acquisitions by Hollywood in January were Jack London's stories of "The Road," James Fenimore Cooper's "Deerslayer," Eric Hatch's "My Man Godfrey," "The Bell Ringer," by Curtis Kenyon, Zane Grey's "King, of the Royal Mounted," Charles Booth's "The General Died at Dawn," "Cabin Cruise," by David Garth, Alfred Batson's "African Intrigue," and "The Curfew Girl," by Stephen Marbett—all authors of note.

January's 37 story acquisitions were about the same, numerically, as the purchases of December and November, when 38 and 39 properties were acquired, respectively. These compare with previous months as follows:

Month	Originals	Books	Plays	Totals
February, 1935	21	17	3	41
March	28	15	5	48
April	43	44	13	100
May	23	19	9	51
June	24	19	7	50
July	41	12	10	63
August	21	7	4	32
September	34	53(a)	4	91
October	7	5	2	14
November	22	12(b)	5	39
December	22	12(c)	4	38
January, 1936	14	18(d)	5	37
TOTALS FOR 12 MONTHS	300	233(e)	71	604

(a) Including 4 published magazine stories.
(b) Including 1 published magazine story.
(c) Including 2 published magazine stories.
(d) Including 4 published magazine stories.
(e) Including 11 published magazine stories.

Few of the January purchases are to be adapted to this season's schedules, stories for which have been in the process of acquisition since last summer, and with current schedules now nearing completion the studios are turning to the business of organizing plans for 1936-37 insofar as story material is concerned.

Paramount and Warners led all companies in January story activity, each buying six. Other companies participated in the story market during the month as follows:

JANUARY TOTALS	14	4	14	5	37

Outstanding among the magazine stories acquired in January for release in film form next season were Sarah Addington's Saturday Evening Post yarn, "Bless Their Hearts"; Frederick Irving Anderson's "Sophie Lang" stories, and "Taxi, Please," by Octavus Roy Cohen.

The Broadway stage play, "Parnell," was quickly gobbled up from Robinson Smith and Frederick Ayer, young legitimate stage producers, by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. George M. Cohan's play, "The Big Hand," and the Brewer-Block play, "Dark Victory," were other play acquisitions. Willard Mack sold his "Drag Net," and Charles Bruce Mulholland his "Faun." Mark Reed's "Petticoat Fever" became the subject of another future motion picture.

January purchases, with authors' names and all other available credits, were as follows:

AFRICAN INTRIGUE, a book, by Alfred Batson, purchased by Walter Wanger Productions (Paramount release), for Henry Fonda.

ALL BRIDGES BURNED, original, by Arnold B. Armstrong, purchased by MGM.

BALLOTS OR BULLETS, original, purchased by Warners, for Edward G. Robinson, Humphrey Bogart and Barton MacLane.

BIG HAND, by George M. Cohan, purchased by Warners.

BLESS THEIR HEARTS, Good Housekeeping Magazine story, by Sarah Addington, purchased by Columbia, for production by B. P. Schulberg, direction by Elliott Nugent and adaptation by Doris Anderson.

CABIN CRUISE, book, by David Garth, bought by Paramount, for production by A. M. Botsford.

CURFEW GIRL, book, by Stephen Marbett, purchased by B. F. Zeidman Productions.

Selznick Buys Play

DARK VICTORY, play, by George Brewer, Jr., and Bertha M. Block, purchased by Selznick International Productions (United Artists release), for Merle Oberon.

DEATH VALLEY DAYS, original, bought by Warners, for production by Leon Schlesinger.

GENERAL DIED AT DAWN, book, by Charles G. Booth, purchased by Paramount, for Gary Cooper and Carole Lombard, for direction by Lewis Milestone and production by William LeBaron.

GOLDEN ARROW, original, purchased by Warners, for production by Sam Bischoff, direction by Alfred E. Green, with Bette Davis, George Brent and Kay Hughes.

KING, OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED, book, by Zane Grey, purchased by Sol Lesser Productions (Twentieth Century-Fox release).

Stars Assigned

KNIGHT WITHOUT ARMOR, book, by James Hilton, purchased by Erich Pommer Productions (United Artists release), for Merle Oberon and Richard Donat.

LISTEN TO FREEZIN', original, by Al Boasberg, purchased by RKO, with Mr. Boasberg directing.

LLOYDS OF LONDON, based on Curtis Kenyon's book, "The Bell Ringer," purchased by Twentieth Century-Fox, for production by Darryl F. Zanuck, who assigned W. P. Lipscomb to prepare the scenario.

MARK OF ZORRO, adapted from an "All Story Weekly" magazine story titled "The Curse of Capistrano," by Johnston McCulley, purchased by Twentieth Century-Fox, from Douglas Fairbanks production, which made it years ago as a silent. Lawrence Tibbett to star.

MURDER IN SING SING, original, by Jonathan Finn, purchased by Warners, which assigned Robert Andrews and Joe Hoffman to write the screen play.

MY MAN GODFREY, book, by Eric Hatch, purchased by Universal, for William Powell, for direction by Gregory LaCava and adaptation by Zoe Akins.

NO PLACE LIKE HOME, original, by Frank Craven, purchased by Universal, for Edward Everett Horton, with adaptation by Ben Markson.

"Parnell" Play Purchased

PARNELL, play by Elsie Schoeffler, purchased by MGM, as a possible vehicle for Brian Aherne, with John M. Stahl directing.

PETTICOAT FEVER, play, by Mark Reed, purchased by MGM, for Robert Montgomery and Myrna Loy, with Bernard Hyman assigned to production and George Fitzmaurice to direction.

PRINCESS AND THE PAUPER, original, by Lynn Root and Franklin Fenton, purchased by Samuel Goldwyn Productions (United Artists release), for Miriam Hopkins; screen play by Sam and Bella Spewack.

RANDLORDS, original, by Paul Emden, purchased by London Films Production, Alexander Korda (United Artists release).

Court Orders 64 Trust Complaint Charges Stricken

An order striking 64 sections from the $3,146,912 anti-trust damage suit complaint of A. B. Momand, Shawnee, Oklahoma, theatre operator, against distributors and virtually necessitating filing of amended charges against 21 large film producers, was signed last week by Judge Edgar S. Vaught of federal court at Oklahoma City.

Judge Vaught ruled that the 64 sections of Mr. Momand's petition, charging monopolistic practices by large film companies, were vague. He sustained motion that they be stricken and made more definite.

Mr. Momand instituted the action in 1931, naming Paramount and 20 other large film corporations as defendants.

He claimed they had conspired to refuse release of desirable pictures for his theatres, then operating in Capitol Hill, Shawnee, Seminole, Okmulgee, Pawhuska, Wewoka, Holdenville, Hartshorne, Alva and Clinton, all in Oklahoma.

Among the sections stricken by Judge Vaught was one charging the "conspirators" obtained leases on theatres "by means of threats" and another charging the producers "induced many of the stars of independent producers to leave their employ and enter employ of the defendant producers."

Judge Vaught held that before the latter allegation could be continued in the petition, the stars would have to be named and the accusation made more specific.

More Details Asked In Suit at Lincoln

Further details on the amended bill of complaint of the State Theatre and Independent Theatres in the $444,000 and $1,353,000 conspiracy and restraint of trade suits, in Lincoln, Neb., against United Artists, Universal, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, RKO Radio, Vitagraph, Paramount and Twentieth Century-Fox are being sought by the defendants.

Attorneys for the majors want the amended petitions made more specific on whether the plaintiff is alleging renewed conspiracies or additional conspiracies.

Burroughs-Tarzan Adds Six Selig Productions

Six features produced by Colonel William N. Selig will be released by Burroughs-Tarzan Pictures, raising the releasing total to 18 features and two serials. The Selig features will be "The Drag-Net," "The Girl with the Red Feather," "Why Love Is Blind," "Going Straight," "City Pavements" and "The White Glove."

Films to Hear Sirovich Plan

Views of leading motion picture industry figures are to be sought at hearings which will start next week in Washington on the House resolution to create a Department of Science, Art and Literature under a Secretary who will serve in the Cabinet, Congressman William I. Sirovich, chairman of the House Patents Committee, said in New York this week.

The representative said the bill he introduced in the last session was merely for the purpose of initiating committee hearings and that its scope would be extended to include motion picture production, as explained in last week's HERALD. He added his plan is to have an undersecretary for drama.

Congressman Sirovich said his intention was to "help the motion picture industry and the spoken drama" and that he proposes to devote the federal admission tax revenue of "about $4,000,000" annually from film theatres to financing motion picture producers who need such assistance. He estimated that it would require from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000 to get his entire plan underway.

"The intention is to make the department eventually self-sustaining, through its various activities," Congressman Sirovich said. "There is no reason why the loans to the film producers could not be collected in full and show a profit."

Status of Fox West Coast As Bankrupt in Air

Arguments on the status of the Fox West Coast bankruptcy waxed eloquently this week in federal court at Los Angeles, where, before Judge Alger Fee, Walter K. Tuller was the principal witness. Mr. Tuller maintained that the resignation of Arthur W. Leeds as officer and director of FWC prior to the original bankruptcy makes no difference in the present status of the case.

The petition of T. L. Tally and the Corbar Corporation charges that Mr. Leeds resigned because the bankruptcy was scheduled to come before his father-in-law, Federal Judge William P. James, but Mr. Tuller claimed the relationship is immaterial.

Mr. Tuller further attacked the conspiracy claim in the petition, quoting numerous court decisions to show that conspiracy is not subject to civil action although damages resulting therefrom may be. He also denied the existence of intrinsic fraud.

William Neblett, counsel for the petitioners, also testified on dividends at a later session.

Court Rules Allied Is "Company Union"

The Allied Moving Picture Operators' Union "at all times was and still is a company union" and its ten-year contract with the Independent Theatre Owners' Association, representing more than 100 theatres, is "against public policy," Supreme Court Justice Frank F. Adel ruled last week in Brooklyn. He denied Allied's motion for an injunction to force ITOA theatres to fire members of Local 306, and replace them with Allied operators.

The Terminal, Atlantic and National in Brooklyn, operated by Terminal Associates and DeGrow Amusement Company, have been employing Local 306 operators and some time ago joined the ITOA. Allied, which has a 10-year master contract covering all members of the exhibitor organization, demanded that its projectionists replace Local 306. In denying the injunction the court also assessed Allied for the costs.

Justice Peter P. Smith in Brooklyn Supreme court last week dismissed the application of Harry Glover, president of Allied, for an injunction restraining Estates Operating Company from employing others than members of his union as projectionists in the Avon, Garfield and 16th Street, Brooklyn houses operated by Estates, which is a member of the ITOA.

Loew Subsidiary Cuts Loss

A reduction of loss was reported this week by Loew's Theatre and Realty Corporation, wholly owned subsidiary of Loew's, Inc., a holding company owning leases and operating a number of Loew houses. The net loss for the year ended August 31st was $14,498 after expenses, taxes, interest and other deductions, compared with $239,544 loss the previous year.

THE MINNEAPOLIS DECISION

The right of distributors to control theatre policy by enforcing contract clauses prohibiting dual feature showings and establishing minimum admission prices has finally been established in the United States courts. Judge Gunnar Nordbye, in Minneapolis district court, ruling in the case of the independent Shubert Theatre Company versus large distributors. The significance of Judge Nordbye's decree is noted in the story on page 13; the decision itself appears herewith.

United States District Court,
District of Minnesota, Fourth Division.

No. 2848 Equity—Shubert Theatre Players Company, a corporation, Plaintiff, vs. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, a corporation, et al., Defendants.

Findings of Fact
and
Conclusions of Law.

The above-entitled matter came before this court on an application for a temporary injunction, as prayed for in the bill of complaint, (1) commanding the defendants, and each of them, to cease and discontinue their agreement, combination, and conspiracy to prohibit the exhibition of the feature films distributed by the defendants in conjunction with other feature films on double feature programs; (2) commanding the defendants, and each of them, to cease and discontinue their agreement, combination and conspiracy not to furnish films to the plaintiff unless it will enter into an agreement to charge an admission to the Palace and Lyceum theatres of not less than fifteen cents per adult person; (3) restraining the defendants, and each of them, from making such prohibitions a part of any contract with the plaintiff, and from penalizing the plaintiff in any manner because of the exhibition of their feature films on double feature programs in conjunction with any other feature film, or for charging admission to said Palace and Lyceum theatres of less than fifteen cents for adult person, and restraining the defendant distributors, and each of them, from discriminating against the plaintiff in any way in the matter of rental of films and from charging as rental for films any sum except that comparable to that charged by them to immediately adjacent theatres, having regard for the seating capacity; (4) restraining the defendant distributors, and each of them, from enforcing the provisions above complained of in said contracts; and (5) declaring the aforesaid provisions of said contracts null and void.

Conspiracy Charged

At the time of the hearing on said motion, the plaintiff amended its bill of complaint and alleged that the refusal of each of the defendant distributors to sell and distribute feature films to the plaintiff and other independent exhibitors, except upon their agreeing to execute a contract containing a minimum fifteen cent adult admission clause and a prohibition against double features, to be, in and of itself, apart from the alleged unlawful agreement, combination and conspiracy, a violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act, and it was agreed that said amendment to the complaint should be incorporated in the notice of motion as one of the grounds for the granting of the temporary injunction.

Mr. Paul C. Thomas of St. Paul appeared in behalf of the plaintiff in support of said motion;

and

Messrs. Shearer, Byard & Trogner of Minneapolis appeared in behalf of the defendants Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, RKO Distributing Corporation, Columbia Pictures Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., and United Artists Corporation;

Messrs. Kellogg, Morgan, Chase, Carter & Headley of St. Paul appeared in behalf of the defendant Vitagraph, Inc.

The action as against William Hamm, Jr., as Receiver of the Minnesota Amusement Corporation, was dismissed by order of this Court on the 24th day of July, 1935.

Upon the verified pleadings and the affidavits submitted, the Court makes the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I

That the plaintiff now is, and at all the times herein mentioned was, a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware and is a citizen and inhabitant thereof, and has registered to do, and is actually doing, business in the State of Minnesota with its principal place of business at 300 Shubert Building, St. Paul, Ramsey County, Minnesota; that the plaintiff is the owner of a lease upon the Palace Theatre in the City of Minneapolis, and is also the owner of a lease upon the Palace Theatre in the City of Minneapolis, and is also the owner of a lease upon the Lyceum Theatre in the City of St. Paul, and now is and for some time last past has been operating the said theatres as moving picture theatres.

II

That the defendant Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation is a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York; the Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation is a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware; the defendant RKO Distributing Corporation is a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Maryland; the defendant Columbia Pictures Corporation is a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York; the defendant Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., is a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware; the First National Pictures, Inc., is a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware; the defendant Vitagraph, Inc., is a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York; the defendant Fox Film Corporation is a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York; the defendant Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., is a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware; and the defendant United Artists Corporation is a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware.

III

That each of said defendant companies has its principal place of business in the city of New York, state of New York, with the exception of Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation and Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., which have their principal places of business at Wilmington, Delaware. That all of said defendants have registered to do, and actually do, business in the state of Minnesota and operate a registered office in the city of Minneapolis, state of Minnesota.

IV

That the plaintiff brings this action under Sections 1 and 2 of the so-called Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 USCA 1, 2) and Section 3 of the so-called Clayton Act (15 USCA 14).

V

That the above defendants, hereinafter referred to as distributors, produce motion picture films, either through their own companies or through affiliated or subsidiary companies; that the studios and laboratories of the various defendant distributors are located outside the state of Minnesota, and the motion picture films so produced are shipped into this state and distributed through channels of interstate commerce and are then distributed and exhibited at various theatres in this state.

VI

That the Minnesota Amusement Corporation, which company is not a party defendant, owns and operates, or controls and operates, a chain of theatres throughout the state of Minnesota and the Northwest, and of said theatres there are approximately six located in the city of St. Paul and approximately ten or eleven in Minneapolis; that all the capital stock of said Minnesota Amusement Corporation is owned by the Paramount Pictures, Inc., which is the parent company of the defendant Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation; that the defendant Vitagraph, Inc., distributes the pictures produced by Warner Bros., Inc., and First National Pictures, Inc.; that United Artists Corporation is exclusively a distributing organization and not a producer of motion pictures; that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, and Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., distribute films produced by affiliated companies; that defendant Columbia Pictures Corporation is both a producer and distributor; that defendant Fox Film Corporation is a producer and distributes films produced by itself, together with films manufactured by others; that the RKO Distributing Corporation is in some manner affiliated with the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, which owns theatres in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

VII

That the defendant producers distribute in this vicinity a large number of so-called feature films, which are the films in which the high-priced moving picture stars appear; that plaintiff avers that some 318 feature films are produced or distributed by the defendants, and that some 60 to 72 feature pictures are produced by other producers and distributors; that defendants, however, aver that they distribute some 361 feature films, and that approximately 119 are released by others than the defendants herein. The Court is unable to determine on the showing herein the exact number of films produced or distributed by the defendants or by other companies, but the exact number is not determinative of the issues presented on this motion for a temporary injunction.

VIII

That the Palace Theatre is located at 444 Hennepin Avenue in the city of Minneapolis and has a seating capacity of approximately 1,600 persons; that the plaintiff pays a substantial monthly rent for said theatre, and in the operation thereof emplys a number of persons whose salaries amount to a substantial sum; that the Lyceum Theatre is located at 479 Wabasha Street in the city of St. Paul and has a seating capacity of approximately 1,550 persons for which plaintiff pays a substantial rent, and in the operation of which it employs a number of persons whose monthly salaries amount to a substantial sum.

IX

That the motion picture business has made great strides during the past thirty years. It has developed from a showing of silent films in small and incommodious halls and theatres to the exhibition of talking pictures in modern up-to-date theatres built especially for that purpose. The first silent feature films were introduced some twenty years ago, costing from fifteen to forty thousand dollars to produce. The average talking feature film now costs One hundred fifty thousand to one million dollars to produce and the film rentals have necessarily increased and the admission prices have correspondingly advanced. Each film is a copyrighted production and is licensed to a theatre for a definite and limited period. After a particular film is completed, positive prints suitable for exhibition are furnished to the exhibitor, and after the theatre has completed the showing of the film for the period stipulated in the license contract, the film is then returned to the distributor. The films are not sold to the exhibitor, nor are they, strictly speaking, leased to the exhibitor, but are merely licensed for exhibition under the terms and conditions stipulated in the license contract. The revenue-producing period or life of a moving picture film is relatively short. Over fifty per cent of all revenue obtained by the distributors from a particular film is usually obtained from the first showing of the picture in various parts of the country. Obviously, the initial showing of a film in any territory commands a higher rental than subsequent showing in such territory and for some years the various distributors have, in connection with the licensing of certain films, required by way of rental therefor, not only a flat rental, but a percentage of the gross receipts obtained by the theatre from the exhibition of such films. The high cost of production of the modern motion picture film requires an arrangement between the distributor and exhibitor whereby the former may be assured of a sufficient source of revenue to repay the costs of production, with a profit. The distributors, therefore, have a direct interest in the admission price of the theatre where its pictures are exhibited, not only to enable the exhibitor to pay a flat rental, and in some instances a percentage, but to protect the first exhibitor from ruinous competition, which would result if the second or subsequent runs of the film in other theatres were exhibited at a price, or under circumstances that would influence the theatre-going public to refrain from patronizing the first-run theatres. If the public was aware that a picture film could be seen at a second-run theatre a short time after its initial showing at a price substantially less than the price charged by the first-run theatre, it is apparent that the public would refuse to pay the advanced prices charged by the first-run theatres, with the resulting effect on the exhibitors' rental and percentage.

NEW ST. LOUIS CASE PROGRESSES

Directly related to the Minneapolis decision favoring distributors who seek to control duals and low admission charges, insofar as its anti-trust status is concerned, is the long drawn out battle of the United States Government against alleged distributor discrimination against the Fanchon and Marco independent interests in St. Louis. Although differing in cause, both court actions charge the same result: refusal of the large distributors to supply a flow of product to the independents.

And while the industry was studying the Minneapolis decision this week, reports were heard that the Government will reinstitute its heretofore unsuccessful St. Louis prosecution, not in the locale of the original complaint but rather in district court in New York, with three judges, instead of one, presiding at the trial in equity.

Further evidence that the Attorney General again will bring the distributors to trial came during the week when the Justice Department indicated that it is already definitely engaged in preparing a new suit and that it has no intention of abandoning the alleged conspiracy charges against the sales companies. While the new suit may not be filed immediately, it will not be delayed any longer than is necessary. The Government had withdrawn its charges in St. Louis without prejudice in order to file a new action. Specifically involved are Warner, RKO and Paramount, as defendants.

X

That the distinction in point of time between the first and subsequent showing of the same film in any locality is generally referred to as "clearance," and throughout the country there has grown up a practice which is generally recognized as necessary and desirable by the distributors and the exhibitors, whereby certain clearance is agreed upon by and between the distributor and the exhibitor between the initial showing of a particular film and the second run, and the clearance between the second run and so-called subsequent runs of said film. A film by reason of its novelty and newness has a much higher rental value at its first showing, and the initial licensing of a film may produce several thousands of dollars by way of rental, but the last run, after the said film has been divested of its freshness and novelty by the passage of time and frequent exhibitions, may bring by way of rental a sum less than $100.00. It therefore becomes necessary for the distributor, in order to secure its pecuniary reward for its copyrighted film, to license the same for such a price and under such circumstances as may be consonant with sound business policy and foresight, and with that end in view, all of these defendant distributors have adopted certain policies which are varied in various particulars with reference to clearance, admission price, and the exhibition of a feature film with another feature film on the same program.

XI

That all of these defendant distributors have either directly refused, or have announced generally that they will not license the plaintiff to exhibit in the Palace or Lyceum theatres any pictures produced or distributed by them at a price less than fifteen cents adult admission. Two of the defendant distributors, namely, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation and Fox Film Corporation, do not at this time make any license agreements in this locality permitting the exhibition of their pictures at a price less than fifteen cents adult admission. The RKO Distributing Corporation, Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, United Artists Corporation, Columbia Pictures Corporation, and Vitagraph, Inc., will only license their products at less than fifteen cents adult admission price in the city of Minneapolis in the so-called Gateway district of that city. The Universal Film Exchange now has an existing contract with plaintiff's Palace Theatre permitting a ten cent admission charge, but it has announced that such a contract adversely affects its revenue in this district, and that it will not renew or continue to furnish plaintiff films on that basis. It further appears that all of the distributors have provisions in their license contracts prohibiting double feature programs, and while it has not been satisfactorily established at this showing that all the defendants have directly refused plaintiff a license contract with the elimination of this provision, it fairly appears that if such a request were made by the plaintiff, the various defendants would refuse.

XII

That the showing herein does not justify a finding that the practice and policy with respect to the establishment of a minimum admission price in the license contracts of the exhibitors and the clause therein prohibiting double features, arose or was adopted, arranged, dictated, or shaped by reason of any conspiracy, agreement, conference, or understanding, express or implied, between or among the defendants herein, and a finding that the practice of the defendants in this regard and the policies followed are the results of the distributors' own individual experience and dictated by its individual initiative for its own benefit, is just as consistent and consonant with the showing made herein as plaintiff's claim that such policies are the result of an illegal agreement or conspiracy in violation of the anti-trust laws of the United States.

XIII

That the so-called Gateway district, where the practice is followed by some of the distributors to enter into license contracts permitting minimum ten cent admission prices, and at least contenancing double features; is located in the area of the city of Minneapolis which is not competitive with the so-called better class theatres in the Loop district of said city; that the patronage of such Gateway theatres is largely derived from transients, lodging house inhabitants, and the large group of unemployed that congregates in that area. The Palace Theatre, on the other hand, by reason of its location, appurtenances, and capacity, is in competition more or less with the theatres that usually exhibit the first and second runs of moving pictures. If the policy of the distributors regarding the minimum admission price clause and the provision prohibiting double features is dictated by the individual policy of the distributor and uninfluenced by any arrangement, understanding, or concert of action with the other distributors, such provisions are not unreasonable or unfair to the plaintiff, and are reasonably necessary to secure the distributor a remuneration for its copyrighted film.

XIV

That the provisions in the distributors' contracts against double features and the establishment of a minimum admission price may work an apparent hardship in individual cases, and it may be difficult to establish such business policies so that they are entirely equitable between competing theatres. The zoning of theatres which compete with one another may in some instances seem arbitrary, but the Court does not find on this showing that the business policies of these defendants, as expressed in the provisions complained of, are the result of any attempt on the part of these defendants to injure the plaintiff's business, and any inequities that may now exist in regard to the matters herein have not come about by reason of any designedly unfair business practice.

XV

That the prohibition against double features forbids the exhibition by the exhibitor on any one program of more than one feature film. Such a provision, however, is not primarily directed against the showing of a film of a competitor with a film licensed by any exhibitor, but such a prohibition in the contract seeks to prevent the practice of showing any two feature films on the same program, whether distributed by the same licensor or not.

XVI

The Court finds on this showing that the policy of these defendants with respect to the establishment of a minimum admission price and the prohibition of double features in the theatres in this vicinity where their films may be licensed, is predicated on long years of experience in the moving picture field, and that such policy has for its purpose, and does tend to secure to the defendant distributors, a better remuneration for their copyrighted motion picture films, so licensed and to be licensed.

XVII

That the showing made herein does not justify a finding that the Minnesota Amusement Corporation had dictated the policies of the defendant distributors with reference to minimum prices or double features, nor on the affidavits submitted is the plaintiff entitled to a finding that the Minnesota Amusement Corporation has entered into any arrangement, understanding or conspiracy with the defendant distributors in contravention of the so-called Sherman Anti-Trust Act or the Clayton Act.

XVIII

That none of the defendant distributors individually produce or distribute a sufficient number of motion pictures to monopolize or control the available motion pictures for license among the various theatres in this vicinity, and the restrictions in the license contracts regarding the admission prices and double features do not tend to substantially lessen competition in contravention of the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act, and do not tend to create an illegal monopoly in interstate commerce, if it be a fact that such contracts are promulgated by their own individual experience and uninfluenced or supported by any arrangement, understanding or contract, express or implied, with any other distributor.

The Court makes the following

Conclusions of Law

1. That the court has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter herein.

2. That the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief prayed for herein, and its motion for a temporary injunction is in all things denied.

Dated this 30th day of January, 1936.

GUNNAR H. NORDBYE,
United States District Judge.

Memorandum

The Court regrets the delay in disposing of this motion. The final briefs, however, were not submitted until December 5, 1935, and since that time the Court has been engaged almost continuously in the trial of jury cases.

An application for temporary injunction under the circumstances herein should be granted with caution, and particularly is that principle impelling when the charge of conspiracy is positively denied. The Court is quite clear that, in absence of a satisfactory showing that an unlawful conspiracy exists, no injunction should be granted. The business policies of the various defendants, of which there is complaint here, are reasonably related and connected with the rights of the respective defendants to obtain remuneration for their copyrighted films, and if such policies, as expressed in the various license contracts, are promulgated as the result of individual experience and foresight, uninfluenced by any agreement or concert of action actively or tacitly agreed upon among the defendants, an injunction should not issue.

The Court has given due consideration to the affiliation between Paramount companies and the Minnesota Amusement Corporation—the number of theatres owned and controlled by the latter organization, the similarity in the license contracts dealing with double features and minimum admission prices, and the inability of the so-called independent theatres to continue in business unless they obtain defendants' films. Further, the Court has given due consideration to the recent case of Vitagraph, Inc., et al., vs. Perelman, United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, filed January 16, 1936, but the Court is constrained to the view that the granting of any relief by way of injunction, if it is to be granted, should abide the hearing of the case on its merits, when the witnesses are before the Court, and at which time the Court will be in a much better position than it is on this showing by way of affidavits to determine the merits of plaintiff's charge of an illegal combination in violation of the anti-trust laws of the United States. This view is also sustained by the fact that the relief that plaintiff seeks is not the maintenance of a statu quo, but injunctive relief, which is in effect the relief which plaintiff seeks to obtain after a full hearing on the merits.

It should be noted that any views expressed in these findings are necessarily predicted on the Court's consideration of the affidavits submitted, and any apparent finality expressed therein is subject to such change and modification that the trial on the merits may justify.

Let this memorandum be made a part of the foregoing findings of fact and conclusions of law.

GUNNAR H. NORDBYE,
United States District Judge.

COURT TURNED STATISTICAL

Judge Gunnar Nordbye's decision last week in Minneapolis granting distributors the right to prohibit duals and enforce minimum admission charges at theatres, deviated from the subject matter at one point to commental statistically on industry operations. In this connection he concluded that the eight large companies produce and distribute some 361 features annually; and that approximately 119 are released by others than the eight, for a total annual output of 480 emanating in Hollywood yearly. With others, of course, the market in this country approximates 650 to 700 features yearly, as is generally known. Judge Nordbye said that the production cost of features has increased in 20 years from an average of $15,000 to $40,000, to the present-day average of $150,000 to $1,000,000.

Revelation May Produce in U. S.

Revelation Films, Ltd., of London, producer of industrial pictures for the British market, may produce advertising reels in this country, according to Stanley Neal, head of the company, who described his current visit here as being in that direction. Mr. Neal said that Revelation would offer 27 industrial films next season, six to be cartoons made here by Celebrity Productions. He said the advertising reel was an accepted business factor in exhibition abroad and that royalties paid to exhibitors by his company last year approximated $750,000.

Earl Carroll Predicts New "Gag" Timing Device

Earl Carroll, producer of girl revues, predicted last week the invention of a motion picture device which will permit an operator to time picture "gags" with audience laughs. Explaining such a device would hasten the trend from "Flesh and blood" revues to motion picture musicals, Mr. Carroll said producers of the present musicals were handicapped by an inability to "know which gags will take and which won't."

If a screen joke brings an outburst of laughter, such a device as Mr. Carroll envisions will permit the operator to delay continuation of the picture until the laughter has died down. If a joke falls flat, the operator can speed action of the picture with the device. Mr. Carroll predicted that when this device is perfected and other technical improvements are made the motion picture revues will gradually displace the stage shows.

Mussolini Starts Italy's "Hollywood"

Premier Mussolini in Rome last week officiated at the beginning of work on "Cinematographic City," which, it is hoped by its promoters, will become the Hollywood of Italy. Ready for production in a year, the plant is said to represent Italy's bid for European supremacy in the industry.

Included in the project will be 45 buildings, with stages, warehouses, offices, hotels, projection rooms and a fire station in the center of a 150 acre location about five miles south of Rome. It is the plan of the promoters to make it the most completely equipped and modern studio in Europe.

GB Field Changes

Scott E. Chesnutt has been named GB district manager for Atlanta, Charlotte, Memphis and New Orleans, with headquarters in Atlanta. Herman L. Booth has been appointed Cincinnati branch manager, with Rudy Knoepfle to have a new assignment. Reg Wilson, special home office representative, returns to the East following the premiere of "Rhodes" at the new Lincoln in Miami Beach. Twenty men are being added in the field.

Booth Tarkington Prophesies Extinction of Literary Works

"The novel and the poem may become extinct in 200 years, 100 years, or in much less time," is the opinion of Booth Tarkington, noted Hoosier author, as expressed in Indianapolis last week. "Radio and talking pictures already have displaced books in many homes, and television—near the threshold of American homes now—will injure the popularity of books. Other unforeseen inventions probably will have the same effect.

"The average reader reads for entertainment, and with a television box in his home, he will be able to get his entertainment cheaper," he said. "The television might eventually displace the theatre itself," he declared. Discussing the influence of radio and films from another angle, Tarkington said they had decreased the quality of books "because many authors write stories with Hollywood in mind. He pointed out that story writing and film writing call for different technique, and that the two should not be combined in one story."

Major Film Securities Listed

Statements for registration of securities by Major Film Productions, Inc., of Wilmington, Del., have been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, it was made known last week in Washington. The company is offering 16,000 shares of preferred 6 per cent non-cumulative stock of $5 par value and 4,000 shares of common stock of $5 par value in units of four shares of preferred and one of common at $25 per unit. The statement lists Fred Church, Hollywood, as president of the corporation. The offering is to be made through C. Wayne Could and Company, Los Angeles.

International Club Opens

The International Club opened its new clubrooms last week in New York at 165 West 46th St. The club's affiliations include The Buccaneers' Club of Berlin, Travelers' Club, London; Interallie, Paris; The National Sporting Club of Buenos Aires, and the International Club in Shanghai. M. Rorstrom, formerly of the Governor's Island Club, is operating.

World Hotel Information Bureau

Hotels of the World, Inc., has opened a chain of 40 offices to collect and distribute free information on hotels. The corporation, with headquarters in the International Building, Rockefeller Center, New York, is headed by Alfred A. Neuwald. In charge for America is Milton V. O'Connell, former hotel advertising manager.

Schine Circuit Expands

The Schine Theatre Circuit in Ohio last week acquired three more houses with the acquisition of the Majestic and Ohio in Athens and the purchase of a half interest in the Strand, in Delaware. The circuit now operates houses in Wooster, Mt. Vernon, Ashland, Norwalk, Bucyrus, Van Wert, Bellefontaine and Piqua.

FILMS CAN EXPRESS IDEALS WITHOUT ONEROUS RESTRICTIONS: ROOSEVELT

New York State Censorship System Is "Just Plain Silly," Langdon Post Says at Board of Review Conference

Censorship of motion pictures by law, either in its existing form or in any form of extension, was attacked the other day in the most vigorous manner in years, and by recognized leaders outside the industry, among whom were President Roosevelt, Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, of New York; Honorable Langdon W. Post, New York tenement house commissioner; Arthur Garfield Hays, noted liberal lawyer, and by delegates from civic and social and educational organizations representing millions of Americans.

The occasion for the bombardment of "political censorship" was the 12th annual conference of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, where some 500 delegates discussed the motion picture in its relation to the public.

"While necessarily conforming to the normal requirements of entertainment, I believe our motion pictures should be sane and salutary—enlightening and mentally stimulating—expressive of the best ideals of our community consciousness," declared President Roosevelt in a message to the conference. Accomplishment of such a state, advised Mr. Roosevelt, can be done without subjecting "the industry to onerous restrictions."

"Intelligent friends of the motion picture should," he continued, "strive to direct its influence toward ends that are recognized as socially desirable."

The President said that the program "for the enhancement of the average quality of motion pictures, and particularly for their heightened usefulness in the educational and juvenile spheres is to be commended."

He further commended the National Board because of its work. "It represents a voluntary civic effort arising from the vision and public spirit of citizens who are intent upon making our life progressively finer," he added.

La Guardia Cites "Deep Interest"

Answering a reiteration by the conference that, far from contributing to censorship, the National Board's policy operated against censorship, Mayor LaGuardia expressed his "deep interest" in the Board's program.

Mr. LaGuardia said he is especially interested in the subjects of motion pictures as entertainment, as a cultural medium, as an agency of education, and also the relation of motion pictures to youth.

The Hon. Langdon Post told the conference that the system of state motion picture censorship in New York—more or less typical of other places—was "just plain silly."

"It operates under the State Board of Education and sits in blue-nosed glee judging pictures before the public even gets a chance to see them," he explained.

Edward G. Robinson, speaking for the Hollywood actor, suggested that "discipline should be exercised in the community itself, rather than be forced on it from the outside."

Robert H. Cochrane, operating vice president of Universal Pictures, said that the National Board has consistently proven "broadmindedness and a singular lack of intolerance," and that the Board's policies have had "a wholesome effect upon the minds and lives of literally millions who depend almost entirely upon motion pictures for their entertainment."

Recognition of the motion picture as an independent art equal to the theatre was the keynote set by newspaper crtics at the conference.

"The movies today are a little closer to motion picture art than they were a few years ago," declared Ward Marsh, critic of the Cleveland Plain Dealer. "But as long as we try to sell actors as box-office personalities we won't have motion-picture art.

"Motion-picture art is really the art of editing, not of acting, because almost any one of us can be taught to act."

Otis Ferguson, critic of The New Republic, urged his fellow-critics not to stand off on the sidelines and pronounce judgment but to study motion pictures from the standpoint of what they were trying to do. The movies as an art have "nothing to apologize for" in this country, he added.

"Equal of Anything"

Evelyn Gerstein, of the Board's committee on exceptional photoplays, declared that the films of today were "fully the equal of anything in the theatre." Stressing consideration of the "social point of view of films, she said that when films tend to "show in many subtle ways that we are getting ready for war" reviewers had to consider other things besides technical excellence.

Other speakers of the critics' were Cecelia Ager, of Variety; Robert Giroux, of The Nation, and J. K. Paulding, chairman of the committee on exceptional photoplays.

Censorship Questions

Questions of censorship and propaganda in motion pictures aroused the delegates at the outset.

The issue of censorship was raised by a delegate from the floor after Captain George W. Cowan, amusement inspector of the Providence, R. I., police department, and Herbert L. McNary, chief of the licensing division in Boston, had described the methods in use in those two New England cities.

Replying to a question, Wilton A. Barrett, executive secretary of the Board, declared that far from contributing to censorship the Board's policy operated as a protection against censorship, and cited the State of Florida as an example.

Mr. McNary expressed the opinion that patrons were "shopping around" more for good pictures now than formerly, and attacked the chance game "contests" put on by motion picture houses to bring patronage.

Michael Zala of the Eighth Street Playhouse brought up the matter of propaganda after Mrs. Willis Miner, chairman of motion pictures of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs, had asked him whether he had any trouble with newsreels. Mr. Zala said there had been a "great deal of propaganda in newsreels" and he had had many complaints from his audiences on labor pictures. He said that some theatres had completely eliminated shots of Hitler, Mussolini and Ethiopia.

Use of motion pictures in education was taken up by Professor Robert A. Kissack, Jr., director of visual education of the University of Minnesota, who described the application of motion pictures at his university and declared that "the time has finally come when educators are catching up with the tools of modern civilization."

Opposes Legal Censorship

The National Board took a stand against proposals for the extension of legal censorship to include the power to select pictures to be shown to children.

Dr. Frederick M. Thrasher, associate professor at the New York University School of Education, who has been studying crime trends, denied that crime and juvenile delinquency resulted from the influence of the movies.

In the discussions of moving pictures as an aid to education, Professor Joseph F. Montague, editor of Health Digest, predicted the use of motion pictures in medical studies to preserve records of cases. Dr. V. C. Arnspiger, director of research of Erpi Picture Consultants, Inc., said that moving pictures for use in social studies could reproduce in the classroom the actual situations studied. Professor Walter S. Barnes of New York University saw in the movies the possibility of developing a real "popular art."

Arthur Garfield Hays attacked censorship in general and in particular the banning by New York State censors of the Hungarian film "Marie" or "Spring Showers."

Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers Pictures, lashed out at amateur critics who blame the films for crime. He said:

"People who spend their time fighting pictures could spend it better fighting the slums. Criminals breed in poverty-stricken slum districts—not moving picture theatres."

Mr. Warner spoke at the 21st annual luncheon of the National Board on Saturday.

With him at the speakers' table were: Ernest Truex, Langdon Post, Edward G. Robinson, Tillie Losch, Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Harriet Hilliard, Frank Fay, Robert E. Sherwood, Blanche Yerka, Pauline Stark, Weldon Heyburn, John Beal, Harry Hershfeld, W. G. Van Schmus, among others. About 500 persons were present at the luncheon.

EXHIBITOR SHOCKS WITH EXTRA RENTAL

Jacob Schreiber, operator of some five theatres in Detroit, completely upset the Motor City exchange of Gaumont British.

It seems Mr. Schreiber had bought "Transatlantic Tunnel" for three days run at his Colonial, and he paid in advance. His grosses were so high that he promptly sent in a check for $50 additional rental. When the exchange recovered from the shock it notified the home office, whence emerged photostatic copies of Mr. Schreiber's letter and check.

Luncheon Held To Honor Edison

Honoring the 89th anniversary of the birth of Thomas Alva Edison, a few of the remaining survivors of that small band of men who pioneered with the inventor half a century ago gathered at the Hotel Astor in New York Tuesday to revive memories of the days when they were assisting him in his development and perfection of the incandescent electric lamp, the phonograph, the motion picture camera and other inventions.

Since his passing these former coworkers have been discussing a living memorial to Mr. Edison, the plans for which are about to be projected in a nationwide movement through The Thomas Alva Edison Foundation, of which William S. Barstow is president. A representative group of business and civic leaders from coast to coast, who have accepted invitations to join the Foundation under the chairmanship of Owen D. Young, were among the guests of the pioneers.

Hoffman Plans Own Exchange System

Severing connections with Republic, M. H. Hoffman plans to set up his own exchanges to handle a complete program which he intends to produce. He has completed the minimum of six pictures called for in his Republic contract.

In Hollywood it is understood that under the new setup Republic franchise holders will be required to obtain home office approval before adding the distribution of any outside product. This, it is said, gives Republic virtual control over independent distribution in a number of territories.

While completing his new plans Mr. Hoffman is making his headquarters at the RKO Pathe studio, Hollywood.

Nontheatrical Films Blue List

A special list of films, issued as the Blue List by the Garrison Film Distributors, Inc., New York, has been published. The list is composed of popular educational films, foreign language pictures in sound, religious features, musical and travel shorts. The list is intended primarily for use in schools, which are now using 16mm. equipment.

Woman Operator in Indiana

Mrs. Herbert Thompson, wife of the regular operator of the Austin theatre, Versailles, Ind., fills in when needed in case of sickness or other trouble. E. H. Austin started Mr. Thompson, husband of Mrs. Thompson, in as a youngster about 20 years ago and he has never seen fit to use any other.

Exchange Plans Office

The Gus Sun Booking Exchange, with headquarters in Springfield, Ohio, will open an office in Buffalo about January 15, and another in a location not yet decided upon, according to Bob Shaw, general manager. The Springfield office is now booking unit shows through Ohio, and sections of Pennsylvania and Kentucky.

Criterion to Release Through United Artists

Criterion Film Productions will produce four films a year for international distribution through United Artists, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., general manager of the English company, announced on arrival from London Wednesday.

Production will be centered in England and in Hollywood. Fairbanks will be starred in two pictures a year. The first release is "The Amateur Gentleman," and the second, "Knights of the Round Table," will also be made in England. Fairbanks said he preferred to produce abroad.

Fairbanks will confer with United Artists while in New York, and in three weeks planned to go to the coast to confer with Samuel Goldwyn and Douglas Fairbanks, Sr. Capt. Cunningham Reed, chairman of the Criterion board, is also here.

Dollar Conversion Is Solved in Spain

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER
Barcelona Correspondent

The knotty problem of pesetas-dollar conversion, which, it was feared by many of the American picture managers here, might assume serious proportions if the period between application and granting of the permits continued to lengthen, has been capitalized into a consolidation measure by the Warner-First National director-gerente, René J. Huet. The result is that the financial position of the branch here is the strongest it has been since its establishment.

Permits in the aggregate of $200,000 are now outstanding, Mr. Huet said, and since but a minor percentage of this total is likely to be granted by the Spanish Centro de Concatratación at any one time and it therefore is impossible to remit to the United States the major sum for many months hence, he has turned about to find the best conceivable solution of the difficulty. The last permit was granted in August.

By reducing the bank balances from a maximum of 350,000 pesetas carried a year or more ago, to a minimum of 60,000 pesetas and employing the difference, which otherwise would be earning no more than 1.5 per cent on deposit, to pay in cash all bills and purchases, discounts of as high as 10 per cent have been obtained and with all the attending advantages of cash buying. With the 1.5 per cent realized at the bank on the balances actually maintained, the net result has been a striking illustration of the old adage: "A penny saved is a penny earned."

The only element of risk entailed, according to Mr. Huet, is the possible devaluation of the peseta, but as the Spanish monetary unit is based upon the stability of the gold franc, any appreciable fall from its currently maintained level of 7.35 to the dollar is considered in banking circles here to be a most remote contingency.

Besides the unstinted praise of the Warner-First National staff and others accorded José Virós, publicity director, for the thoroughness of his workmanship in advancing the "Dream," Señora Virós presented him with his first son and heir on the night of the premiere.

Walters to Columbia

Gwenn Walters, fashion editor of Movie Mirror, has joined the Columbia studio publicity department.

Notables Attend "Rhodes" Opening

(By Special Correspondent)

"Rhodes, the Diamond Master," Gaumont British picture starring Walter Huston, opened at the Lincoln theatre in Miami this week to a large audience of industry figures. The Lincoln is the newest house of the Wometco circuit.

Among those present were John Hays Hammond, former chief engineer for Cecil Rhodes in South Africa; Joseph E. Widener, sportsman and president of Hialeah Jockey Club; Major Albert Warner, I. J. Hoffman and Frank Damis of Warner Brothers, Eddie Alperson of the Skouras circuit, Colonel Fred Levy of Louisville, Myer Schine, Claude Ezell and William Underwood of Dallas, N. L. Nathanson and Oscar Hanson of Toronto, A. C. Hayman of Buffalo, Nathan Yamins of Fall River, Charles Segal, Louis Blumenthal, William and Harry Brandt, Julius Joelson, Jack Steinman, A. H. Blank, Daniel Finkelstein, Leon Netter, E. J. Sparks, Frank Rodgers, Sidney Myer, Mitchell Wolfson, Aaron Saperstein, Jack Miller, Emil Stern, Colonel W. S. Butterfield, John J. Payette, Joseph Hartfield, Ed Sullivan, David Wilentz, Arthur A. Lee, George W. Weeks and A. P. Waxman.

The picture will have a $10 premiere at the Ritz Carlton Hotel in New York on February 19 for the benefit of the Adventure Society. It opens at the Roxy on Broadway 10 days later.

Code Seals Are Issued on 104 Films in Two Months

Renewed activity on the part of the Production Code Administration marked December and January. From November 26 to January 26 the Producers Association passed on and issued code numbers on 104 features and 74 shorts. These figures include both current and reissued pictures.

The two-month total was somewhat lower than the high marks chalked up during the first few months of the code administration's work. Since July 15, 1934, 1,102 features and 705 shorts have been approved for distribution.

Credit For Viewing Picture

Special school credit will be given to those students who read Charles Dickens' "A Tale of Two Cities" or see the screen play during the holidays, according to an announcement by Professor William Lewin, chairman of the advisory board, National Department of Secondary Education.

Bracker Leaves Mickey Mouse Mag

Murray Bracker, advertising director of Mickey Mouse Magazine since its inception, has resigned. Mr. Bracker will become the sales promotion manager, handling the Mickey Mouse Sweatshirt Division of the Norwich Knitting Company, Norwich, New York.

Salesmen Added to FD

Sidney Mesibov has been added to the First Division Philadelphia Exchange as a salesman in the city territory. At Washington Ben Oletsky has been added to the sales force.

BEST MAN WINS, THE: Jack Holt, Florence Rice, Edmund Lowe—A good Saturday bill.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CALLING OF DAN MATTHEWS, THE: Richard Arlen, Charlotte Wynters—Harold Bell Wright story. Good entertainment, above the average, and drew the crowd that means box office, and what I am interested in, and pleased the customers, and I expect to do more on their next one, "The Mine with the Iron Door."—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. General patronage.

GALLANT DEFENDER: Charles Starrett, Joan Perry—Peter B. Kyne story. Fine. Way above the average western.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. General patronage.

GRAND EXIT: Ann Sothern, Edmund Lowe—A delightful picture, ideal for the weekend. A story of the fire insurance racket which moves at a fast clip and sure to hold the interest of the audience until the final fadeout. Eddie Lowe is fast developing into a knockout box office draw, providing he is kept in these wisecracking mystery roles which he so capably performs. Miss Sothern does well by herself also. Direction good. Fire scenes and sets excellent. Running time, 67 minutes. Played January 31-February 1.—Ed. C. Curdts, Ritz Theatre, Greenville, S. C. General patronage.

GUARD THAT GIRL: Robert Allen, Florence Rice—A splendid mystery picture. Good story and fine acting. Good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

IF YOU COULD ONLY COOK: Jean Arthur, Herbert Marshall—Boy, oh boy, what entertainment. Good for any night in the week where anyone wants good entertainment. Tied this up with Parent-Teachers and the G. E. Electric Co. and good old Columbia gave me the advertising that they have to go with this and the result was Box Office for me.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. General patronage.

LET'S LIVE TONIGHT: Lilian Harvey, Tullio Carminati—A sleeper that should never have been awakened. I'll bet the sound crew even went to sleep making this one. The last customer to leave the theatre smacked the usher right between the eyes for waking him up. Shame on you, Columbia, for forcing this on an exhibitor. Absolutely nothing gained for showing it. Shelve this one, brother exhibitor. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 29-30.—Ed. C. Curdts, Ritz Theatre, Greenville, S. C. General patronage.

LONE WOLF RETURNS, THE: Melvyn Douglas, Gail Patrick—Good entertainment. Good for any day in week. Played on Saturday to more than average business.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. General patronage.

SHE COULDN'T TAKE IT: George Raft, Joan Bennett—I consider it fine entertainment, also box office, and the way my public ate it up was enough for me. The word of mouth advertising that I received from my first nighters built my second night up to within 35c of my first night and that is something that very, very seldom happens.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. General patronage.

SHE MARRIED HER BOSS: Claudette Colbert, Melvyn Douglas—They made me play everything before I got this one and I got sore, but it was soon forgotten when I checked up on my receipts. Broke all records for Colbert in my house and I did plenty on "It Happened One Night."—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. General patronage.

TOO TOUGH TO KILL: Victor Jory, Sally O'Neil—An interesting story given an ordinary run-of-the-mill production. Jory deserves better. Small draw for us. Played January 21.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

First National

BLACK FURY: Paul Muni, Karen Morley—This drew fairly well and pleased a Saturday crowd.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—A swell Joe E. Brown and without a doubt the best picture he ever made. They go for him in a big way here and business was fair even though played just before the Christmas holidays. Played December 20-22.—Martin Teker, Opera House, Leith, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

CEILING ZERO: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Again these boys have done it. As good or better than anything they have ever done. Educational as well as entertaining. Running time, 92 minutes. Played January 26-28.—R. L. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, S. D. General patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler—Swell entertainment; fair midweek business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Adolphe Menjou, Gloria Stuart, Alice Brady—A very entertaining musical; did fairly well on a tough spot just before Christmas.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GOOSE AND THE GANDER, THE: Kay Francis, George Brent—A smart, sophisticated and clever drama of a divorced wife and her former husband and his new wife. This pleased very much.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MARY JANE'S PA: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—Just a fair program picture. Is O. K. on a double bill, but is hardly strong enough to run by itself. Played January 15.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA: Josephine Hutchinson, Pat O'Brien—A wonderful picture. Story great and acting fine. Played it on a double feature bill as we were late booking it but it was a shame as this picture will stand alone, any time or any place. Played January 21-22.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Excellent. Should please anywhere. Very good business. Played January 11.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

GB Pictures

THIRTY-NINE STEPS: Robert Donat, Madeleine Carroll—I do not rate this picture as high as some critics have. I can only call this a fair program picture.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer . .

AH, WILDERNESS: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore—One of the finest to come from Metro. I believe without exception, that every person who saw this picture enjoyed it. Perfect cast, perfect story. Business average. Running time, 98 minutes. Played December 31-January 1-2.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

AH, WILDERNESS!: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore—Very good. Give it your best playing time. Running time, 98 minutes. Played December 29-30.—R. L. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, S. D. General patronage.

AH, WILDERNESS!: Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery—Very fine picture, with exception of scenes of drinking, which are too long altogether. Barrymore does very fine work.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—An entertaining musical, but it took an awful nose-dive on a mid-week date.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—A very good musical picture. Lots of entertainment. Good comedy. Gave good satisfaction. Stars fine and there was a lot of them in this one.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne—Very, very good. Enjoyed by all. Running time, 92 minutes. Played February 3-5.—Ed. C. Curdts, Ritz Theatre, Greenville, S. C. General patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne—A splendid picture. Very interesting story. Great acting by both stars. Gave fine satisfaction. Played January 26-27.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MURDER MAN, THE: Spencer Tracy, Virginia Bruce—An excellent character portrayal but much too sordid for genuine enjoyment from a paying audience. Audiences do not like to have worries when in a theatre; they come with a carefree spirit and like to leave the same way. I do not censure Metro for making this picture because they surely had to have good intentions to release a picture of this nature but I, as one little exhibitor, would like to plead with them to refrain from stories of this sort. I feel the industry as a whole would benefit. Running time, 74 minutes. Played January 24-25.—Ed. C. Curdts, Ritz Theatre, Greenville, S. C. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone—The strongest dramatic picture of the year. It is unfortunate its appeal seems to be only for the men. The word of mouth advertising following its first run frightened the ladies away. A successful picture for us must appeal equally strong to both sexes. Played January 19-20.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers, Allan Jones, Kitty Carlisle—If your folks go for the Marx Brothers this one should click nicely as it's one of their best. More of the harp and piano novelties they do so well would help lots. Played January 26-27.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Will please majority if you can get them. Cooper cries most of the time, as usual. Beery wonderful in his part. Played January 22-23.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—Real entertainment here. Great cast includes Mickey Rooney and Una Merkel, who were never better. Good for any day in the week. Business very good. Running time, 94 minutes. Played January 12-13.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—Just what the title implies; ran it two days, but it's a one day picture here and would skip it if could afford to pay for it and not run it. I can't conceive of any picture being entertainment when sweethearts quarrel and shout at each other and keep it up after they are married. People go to the theatre to be entertained, not bored and disgusted. Playd January 29-30.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS: Richard Arlen, Beryl Mercer, Claude Allister—A good program picture well acted by a very capable cast. Claude Allister and Beryl Mercer are excellent in this comedy that pleased everyone. Business average. Running time, 62 minutes. Played January 24-25.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHIPSAW: Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy—Here is another dandy picture. You can stand at the door with a smile as your patrons pass out. Good for best showing time. Running time, 85 minutes. Played January 19-20.—R. L. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandrau, S. D. General patronage.

WHIPSAW: Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy—I call this just fair. Myrna Loy did not act as she can. She was too stiff all through the picture. Tracy always good.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

Paramount

ANNAPOLIS FAREWELL: Sir Guy Standing, Rosalind Keith, Tom Brown—Fair picture. Have played a number of these Navy pictures in the past and they are getting stale. Played January 18-19.—Martin Teker, Opera House, Leith, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

ANYTHING GOES: Bing Crosby, Ethel Merman, Charles Ruggles—Charlie Ruggles as Public Enemy No. 13 steals the show, specially when he is pushed back to No. 1313. Lots of nice music and Ethel Merman is acomin'. Crosby has a fine voice (if you like it, and lots do) but his looks are a little against him when it comes to movies. Business very good first day but fell off the second because of storm. Can't complain.—C. McKusick, Assistant Manager, Community Theatre, Guilford, Maine. Town and country patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie—Played this in exchange of some of the stuff they are putting out this year. Drew very well. Well liked. Running time, 83 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE SCANDAL: Arline Judge, Kent Taylor—I traded this for "Peter Ibbetson" and it proved to be the best picture shown in this theatre for several weeks. It is cast by a host of good players along with the inimitable Arline Judge, with excellent mystery story framed around college life which makes grand entertainment. Business above average, two days the middle of the week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

COLLEGE SCANDAL: Arline Judge, Kent Taylor—Nice little picture especially appealing to younger set. Fair B. O. New England has had great theatre weather past three months. No snow but cold enough to send them in. Running time, 78 minutes. Played January 5-7.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

CORONADO: Johnny Downs, Betty Burgess, Leon Errol, Jack Haley—A swell musical comedy drama that pleased weekend patrons very much. It is better than a lot of these "specials" put out with marquee names only.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

CRUSADES, THE: Loretta Young, Henry Wilcoxon It is time for Paramount to call Mr. DeMille in and tell him to quit spending so much money on productions that picture theatres can't get by with. This picture, while it is quite pretentious, has nothing in it that was not done in "Robin Hood" 10 years ago. It does not offer anything worthwhile and becomes so tiresome that fans just fall dead in their seats and do not come to until some more battle to bang is brought into the thing and it goes on and on. If you can get them in with this you have one on me.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

EAGLE'S BROOD, THE: Wm. Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—These Hopalong Cassidy westerns are best westerns I have ever seen. Don't care for a western as a rule but these are the "nuts." They are also box-office.—C. McKusick, Assistant Manager, Community Theatre, Guilford, Maine. Town and country patronage.

EAGLE'S BROOD: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—This series is fine, although this is not as good as the first one. Running time, 59 minutes.—Edward L. Ornstein, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. Small town patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye—Very nice program picture that did not do so well at the box office. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West—This was the first Mae West picture that ever played in this county and while business was fair, she did not go over. There is no doubt but what the earlier Mae West films would go over much better. Played December 27-29.—Martin Teker, Opera House, Leith, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—Pleasing story, good cast, audience reaction very good. Typical Sunday attraction.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

HER MASTER'S VOICE: Edward Everett Horton—Just fair. No draw, just a picture. Running time, eight reels. Played January 31.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer, Okla. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES COOKIE: George Burns, Gracie Allen—Another Burns and Allen comedy. Good for those that like 'em but picture falls short of being anything to get them in. Vaudeville names in picture and advertising failed to do their stuff. It could have been a real picture if not so badly cut up and with so many jerky sequences.—Russell Arderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. General patronage.

HOLD 'EM YALE: Patricia Ellis, Caesar Romero, Larry Crabbe—Just a fair comedy; Saturday business to correspond.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

IT'S A GREAT LIFE: Joe Morrison, Rosalind Keith—Nothing big but pleasing. Morrison has beautiful voice and is well liked here. Played to fair business on weakest nights. Played January 15-16.—J. R. Deland, Park Theatre, Avon Park, Florida. Small town patronage.

MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE: Sylvia Sidney, Melvyn Douglas—An excellent melodrama seriously produced. Sylvia Sidney is at her best and Melvyn Douglas provides much fun. Everything here to satisfy any audience—yet we did only average business. If times are getting better, our folks don't know it. Played January 22-23.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE: Sylvia Sidney—Had to withdraw this one from December booking, owing to its popularity in key cities. Played this up in advertising; result very good weekend business. Picture tense and dramatic and bound to please. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 23-25.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott—A Zane Grey that did not come up to expectations. This one is a mystery type of picture. Business was not bad, however. Played January 4-5.—Martin Teker, Opera House, Leith, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

SHANGHAI: Charles Boyer, Loretta Young—This is a well made and artistic production, but it lacks box office punch and audience appeal.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHIP CAFE: Carl Brisson, Arline Judge, Mady Christians—Good little picture; good entertainment. Nothing big. Mr. Brisson has a splendid voice and sings a couple of songs. Played January 28.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie, Grace Bradley—Pleasing picture; good Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

TWO FISTED: Lee Tracy, Grace Bradley—The swift pace of this better-than-average program picture kept the patrons on the edges of their seats during almost the whole film. It can play any day of the week without difficulty and is deserving of more than a one day date which we gave it.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Republic

FORBIDDEN HEAVEN: Charles Farrell, Charlotte Henry—Sold for special but nothing more than ordinary programmer. Business poor but weather partly responsible. Played January 21.—J. R. DeLand, Park Theatre, Avon Park, Florida. Small town patronage.

NEW FRONTIER, THE: John Wayne, Muriel Evans—An extra good western picture. Story entertaining. None of them has a thing on this man Wayne. He never made a poor western picture and Evans is good in all the pictures we have played her in. Played January 24-25.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—While it's a little too long, it travels along at a rapid pace and holds interest fairly well. Should please majority. Played January 25.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—A grand story brought to life by a fine cast. Barbara Stanwyck is perfect in the part. Unfortunately, we can't say as much for the business we did. Somehow folks didn't seem to know how good a show it is. Consequently, it fell down at the box office for no good reason. Played January 29-30.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

ANOTHER FACE: Wallace Ford, Phyllis Brooks—Program grade; O. K. for one day. Played January 21.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix, Margot Grahame—A good, high-class western. It clicked on Saturday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

FANG AND CLAW: Frank Buck—Don't make the same mistake I did by not getting ready for this because it is one of the most unusual pictures since Frank Buck gave us "Bring 'Em Back Alive." Get behind it in a big way and it will do the business and give your patrons satisfaction. Big and unusual in every way.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Virginia Weidler—Nice little picture. A family picture. Better than the jazz pictures for small towns. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 5.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer, Okla. Small town patronage.

HI GAUCHO: John Carroll, Steffi Duna—Failed to draw and am glad it did. I hate to apologize. Many like this will wreck the business. Played December 27-28.—J. R. DeLand, Park Theatre, Avon Park, Florida. Small town patronage.

HOT TIP: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—A crackerjack of a picture. A good story about Jimmie beating the track with form sheets and he certainly does it in the end. Excellent entertainment. Holds interest through the whole picture with hardly a dead spot.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

I DREAM TOO MUCH: Lily Pons, Henry Fonda—Very good. Miss Pons real actress as well as a wonderful singer. But opera does not go in my town. They just will not come to see opera stars.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—This one pleased fine and is a real nice picture. George Brent never better and Ginger does a grand piece of solo acting minus the support of her dancing partner. Good draw. Played January 24-25.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—Very good. Enjoyed by all. Very good drawing picture. Running time, 10 reels. Played January 26.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer, Okla. Small town patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, Fred Keating, Betty Grable—Entertaining comedy that did fairly well on New Year's Eve and night. Ran a special midnight show of short subjects on New Year's Eve following the regular final evening performance, and did fair business. Didn't attempt any New Year's frolic, just a screen program with no trimmings.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Hoot Gibson, Boots Mallory—Good western. A little too much smoke, but didn't kill all of them. Can't see why so much shooting in westerns. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 16.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer, Okla. Small town patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—Swell entertainment.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STRANGERS ALL: May Robson, Preston Foster —This is no drawing card, but the audience called it fair entertainment.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SYLVIA SCARLETT: Katharine Hepburn—Of all the damndest mess this is IT. Combined with bad weather this established an all time box office record for a low Sunday gross. Walkouts and plenty of all around dissatisfaction. Shame on you, Katy, for making such a poor picture.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

TO BEAT THE BAND: Helen Broderick, Hugh Herbert—Somewhat silly throughout. However, it has some clever musical numbers that will please if played to music-minded audience. Business poor. Played December 29-30.—J. R. DeLand, Park Theatre, Avon Park, Florida. Small town patronage.

TOP HAT: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—A good feature. Played too late to get good run. Above average program. Running time, 11 reels. Played January 14-15.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer, Okla. Small town patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—This is one for which all the boys have been howling. And did they like it! Spellbound, that's the word. When Astaire sings, he has 'em spellbound. When he dances, he has 'em Spellbound. And when Ginger sings and dances, she has 'em spellbound. But when they sing and dance together—well, you guessed it, SPELLBOUND! Fred's cane dance and pantomime execution, especially the machine gunning, was the last word in tapping! Whatta picture! Running time, 99 minutes. Played February 1.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

TWO IN THE DARK: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—A murder mystery that holds the interest from the start to the finish. This is one your patrons will not solve until the end. Business good. Played this on a twin bill. Played January 25-26.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

VILLAGE TALE: Randolph Scott, Kay Johnson—A well made and entertaining picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CHARLIE CHAN IN EGYPT: Warner Oland—A pain in the neck every time I play one of these. Running time, 70 minutes.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer, Okla. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S SECRET: Warner Oland—This is one of the best Chan stories to date and well received by our patrons. Good business. Running time, 71 minutes. Played January 17-18.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers, Billie Burke —Played this on the toughest nights of the year, Christmas Eve and Christmas Night, to fair business. Weather was bad.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GINGER: Jane Withers, Jackie Searl—This was a very well done production, with a good deal of laughs that the children enjoyed. One should do a fine matinee business on a Saturday. We played it on Friday and Saturday and drew all of the children. Average business. One cannot go wrong on it. Good clean entertainment for the entire family. Running time, 74 minutes. Played January 31-February 1.—Albert Hefferan. The Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Children patronage.

GINGER: Jane Withers, Jackie Searl—Very pleasing comedy. This little girl had the crowd going every minute.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—Our newspaper advertising carried the following, "It is with the deepest regret that we announce that this will be your last opportunity to see the beloved Will Rogers on the Ritz screen. In order to make this program outstanding and one long to be remembered we have arranged an excellent program of short subjects, including 'Starlit Days at Lido' and 'Three Orphan Kittens,' both in color." Although weather conditions were against us, we just about set a three-day house record, bringing in people that were never in the theatre before. Would say that it is the best picture Will ever made, and I am sure that I never had a more favorable audience reaction. Sic itur ad astra. Running time, 84 minutes. Played January 26-28.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers, Dorothy Wilson—A beautiful and unforgettable finale to the inspiring career of a great man.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye—A musical that is above the average. Slow and draggy in many spots. Not enough of Fats Waller and Dixie Dunbar. Some good tunes. Business average. Played January 7-9.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE: Warner Baxter, Jack Oakie, Alice Faye—Very good musical. Oakie steals the honors. Dancing very good.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple—Shirley pleases everyone. "Littlest Rebel" is too sad to please the majority. Give Shirley a different kind of story. —Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

NAVY WIFE: Claire Trevor, Ralph Bellamy—A surprise picture; mighty good. Should have run this two days and "O'Shaughnessy's Boy" one. Played January 24.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

NAVY WIFE: Claire Trevor, Ralph Bellamy—A fair picture. Some of the situations brought titters from the audience. Good players deserve better material to work with. Played January 28.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NAVY WIFE: Claire Trevor, Ralph Bellamy—Neat little programmer. The ladies liked it. Swell settings and scenery.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

NAVY WIFE: Claire Trevor, Ralph Bellamy—Just another program picture, neither bad nor good; the kind that they will pass if they had known what it was. They tried some comedy and some pathos and it was a failure in both instances.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ORCHIDS TO YOU: John Boles, Jean Muir—Better than expected. Nothing big but entertaining. Running time, eight reels. Played January 12.—C. A Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer, Okla. Small town patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—A good picture for the Temple fans. Fair business on two very cold nights..—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PADDY O'DAY: Jane Withers—A good little picture but not as good as "This Is the Life." Good stories will make this child star as popular as Shirley Temple. Business above average. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 26-27.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

REDHEADS ON PARADE: John Boles, Dixie Lee —This looked like they had a million dollar idea but it did not jell so well. Just an hour and a quarter of mild entertainment. Zero weather was partly to blame for below average business on this.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

$10 RAISE: Edward Everett Horton—A light but pleasing comedy. Sunday business just so-so.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Fred Allen, Patsy Kelly, Yacht Club Boys—Mighty good entertainment, so our people thought. Played January 19-20.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak, Fred Allen, Patsy Kelly—This musical is a rarity; the hero doesn't become the star of a Broadway extravaganza or make his debut at the Metropolitan. Our patrons unanimously agreed that this was Dick Powell's happiest effort to date, what with an unusual and clever story, catchy music and a strong supporting cast. Patsy Kelly is gradually developing into a comedienne of strong box office strength, and although she plays a subordinate part in this picture, merits major billing. Business was good, due, in part, to excellent word-of-mouth advertising.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WHISPERING SMITH SPEAKS: George O'Brien, Irene Ware—A good picture that will please your action fans. Railroad stories are very rare and this one was very well received. Business good. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 18-19.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHISPERING SMITH SPEAKS: George O'Brien —Fair program picture.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

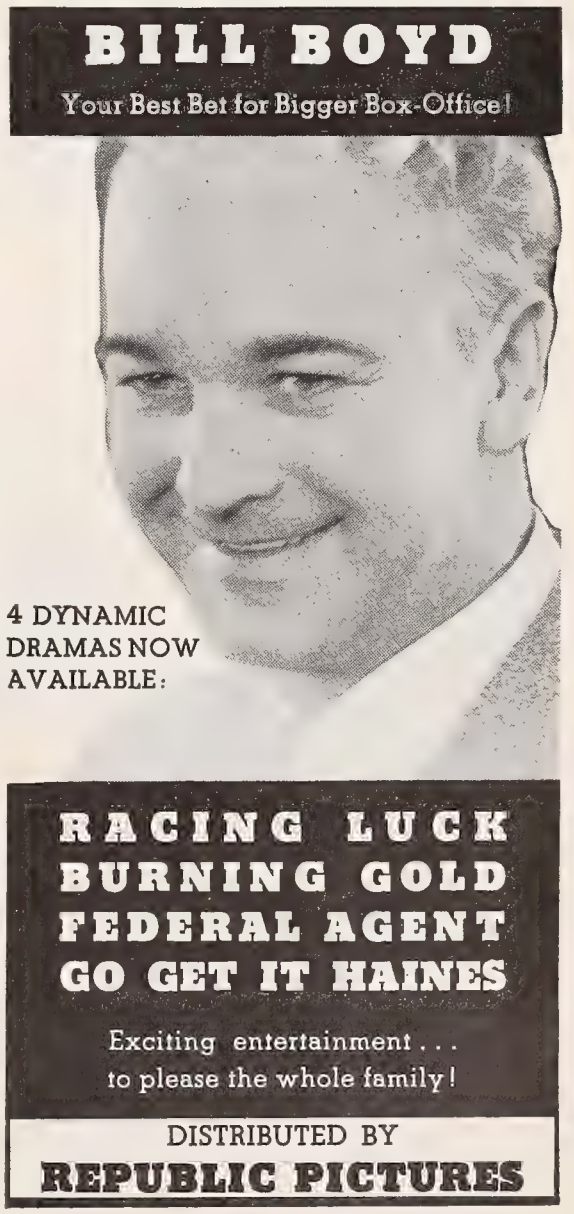
WAY DOWN EAST: Rochelle Hudson, Henry Fonda—Nothing slow about this one. Plenty for everybody. Drama, comedy and action. Pleases all. I can say that, so far this year, Twentieth Century has come through with a knockout average. I have no complaint with any of their product. What's coming looks even better than what we already had. My patrons are a mixed class, mostly poor paid factory workers and when they come out for a picture, I know it can please anyone, as they, above all, look for their money's worth.—Philip Schwartz, Parkway Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn. City patronage.

United Artists

RED SALUTE: Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Young —A red picture and a red box office. Good to see Cliff Edwards again, but he was in damn poor company in this picture. United Artists are slipping this year; they haven't shown much lately. The wise exhibitor will be tending the furnace when his audience exits. It will save some embarrassment in explaining why he ran it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SANDERS OF THE RIVER: Leslie Banks, Paul Robeson—If England will continue to make pictures as well directed as this is they will offer much competition for American made pictures. A picture like this with so many black African natives is hard to put over, but I avoided showing a trailer on this or displaying photos but advertised it as a very thrilling drama. I received an unusual amount of praise on this from patrons. Once you get them in this will please close to 100%. Business on this a fair average considering the cold weather.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal



BORDER BRIGANDS: Buck Jones—Good shoot-'em-up Saturday bill.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre. Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHINATOWN SQUAD: Lyle Talbot, Valerie Hobson—A lively action comedy that pleased the Saturday crowd.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes, Jean Arthur—An out of the ordinary and one of the bigger pictures. Edward Arnold was ideal for the part. For those who have read the story the picture appears choppy but only a small part of those who will see the picture have read the book. The part of Fox was treated too much in a burlesque way. The successful manufacturer of the first steel undertruck for railroad cars is not the comedy character pictured in this but this is a minor criticism. I put forth special efforts on this and did a better than average business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

GREAT IMPERSONATION, THE: Edmund Lowe, Valerie Hobson—Not as good a picture as it was a story. Or else someone blundered. At any rate, they hurried it through so fast everyone gets confused and wonders what is what and why. Proved the weak end of a double bill. Played January 24-25.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

STORM OVER THE ANDES: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—This is a real good action melodrama with considerable comedy. Jack Holt looks and acts as vigorously and active and pleasing as in any of his successful pictures. He looks good for many more pictures if given the right material. I would sum this up as one of his best. Business a fair average for zero weather.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

THREE KIDS AND A QUEEN: May Robson, Frankie Darro—We played this as a high school benefit and it gave great satisfaction. A wonderful entertaining picture. A great star and a great cast. Played January 23.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

THROWBACK, THE: Buck Jones—This is the first of the new series to be shown in this theatre, and I can truthfully say it is better than average western. Business not up to standard. Weather very bad.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell, Adolphe Menjou—Perfect entertainment for everyone, but basketball and cold weather hit it an awful wallop.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

FRISCO KID: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—This is a wow of a picture. Action and lots of it. 100% satisfaction. The stars both great, and all the cast. Played January 28-29.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

LITTLE BIG SHOT: Sybil Jason, Robert Armstrong—Little Sybil Jason is a cute little trick, but the picture as a whole is not so good. It sure did a nosedive here. Played January 18.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LITTLE BIG SHOT: Sybil Jason, Robert Armstrong—This proves it isn't always the late ones that do business. A good old picture is better than a poor hot one. Quite generally liked.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

The BEST OF THE OLD COMEDY FAVORITES ARE IN Educational Pictures
JOE COOK—One man circus—professional boondoggler—creator and chief dispenser of Cookiana, that goofy, hectic, hilarious type of fun you'll find so generously in his latest, "Giv'im Air."

SIX MORE SHOWMEN JOIN REPORTER RANKS

Five more exhibitors to welcome into the contributing army of "What the Picture Did for Me" are:

F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Arkansas.

C. McKusick, Assistant Manager, Community Theatre, Guilford, Maine.

Ed. C. Curdts, Ritz Theatre, Greenville, South Carolina.

J. R. DeLand, Park Theatre, Avon Park, Florida.

Miss Fay M. Wiklund, State Theatre, New England, North Dakota.

Returning to duty after a year and a half of absence is C. A. KELLEY of the Rex theatre at Custer, Oklahoma.

MISS PACIFIC FLEET: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—Good comedy. Glenda Farrell steals the show every time she appears in any picture.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran, Sheila Mannors—Excellent western that pleased all the cash customers. Best mid-week business in months on this one. Played January 22.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran, Sheila Mannors—This is a real western with wonderful scenery, fine singing and a good story. Very entertaining. A real western picture. There is a lot of difference between a western and horse operas. Some of the westerns ought to be barred for want of entertainment. (But the horses are not to blame.) Played January 30.—Bert Silver, The New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien—In my estimation this was just an average picture and not the special Warner Bros. would have you believe. Most of my patrons expected Dick to sing more than he did. Plenty of comedy furnished by Frank McHugh is what helped it along. Business was average. Played January 10-12.—Martin Teker, Opera House, Leith, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

SPECIAL AGENT: Bette Davis, George Brent, Ricardo Cortez—A very good picture showing the Treasury Department's men out to get the income tax evaders. Picture was well liked by those that came. All side roads are blocked in this territory and consequently business was extremely bad. Played January 25-26.—Martin Teker, Opera House, Leith, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

STRANDED: Kay Francis, George Brent—Had a happy surprise on this one. Played it old and found it to be a nice little program picture.—C. McKusick, Assistant Manager, Community Theatre, Guilford, Maine. Town and country patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

LET'S RING DOORBELLS: Scrappy Cartoons—A lesson for the kiddies against doorbell ringing. Would be a good Halloween topic but is fair for any time.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

STARS OF TOMORROW, NO. 2: A pretty good reel but it seems to us some of this amateur talent has been seen in recent Universal Mentone musicals. It may not be but we aren't sure. Anyway, they looked familiar.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Educational

FLICKER FEVER: Frolics of Youth—Why, oh why have they done away with the old cast that made up the "Frolics of Youth" series? They were good. This bunch are only fair and a poor substitute.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FOOTBALL: Paul Terry-Toons—We keep hoping for better cartoon work with some original ideas. Guess we won't find it in this series. Just fair on this one.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LION'S FRIEND, THE: Terry-Toons—Very good indeed. An ideal comedy to play on a children's matinee. We played it with "Ginger". The main idea is that if one can book a good children's picture and get the right type of shorts to go with the feature, it will boost up your business at least ten per cent, as we have tried it and it has worked. Just advertise "Also good shorts suitable for children". You find in so many programs for children that your feature, Shirley Temple in "Little Colonel", etc. is billed on a program with a short entitled "Popping the Cork", a two reel picture with a great deal of drinking. If this happens a few times at a theatre your mothers and fathers will take their children to another theatre with better shorts, regardless of the faeture. Shorts play a great deal of importance in booking films. Just as much time and planning is necessary in booking short subjects as in booking feature attractions. But some people just book any old thing. "What the Picture Did for Me" in shorts is just as important to us as the feature section of this department. It should grow and mean a lot to exhibitors who have their eyes open for finer product, as there is no other way that can help you as much as this department, as you have the comments and several opinions to profit by. So watch your shorts and build up a strong program. Start by looking in "What the Picture Did for Me". Running time, six minutes.—Albert Hefferan, The Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Children patronage.

ONE BIG HAPPY FAMILY: Tuxedo Comedies—O. K. Gets a few laughs. Running time, 2 reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PERFECT THIRTY-SIXES: Mirthquake Comedies—A poor attempt at a minature musical even if Educational does praise it skyhigh in their ads. Truthfulness on their part in their ads wouldn't hurt any. Why not admit failure and start over?—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TARS AND STRIPES: Buster Keaton—A very funny comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ALIBI RACKET: Crime Doesn't Pay—An excellent subject to use with an all-comedy feature. It balances the show and is real entertainment.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BASKETBALL TECHNIQUE: MGM Sports Parade—An interesting study of plays in slow motion on the basketball court.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

COUNT TAKES THE COUNT: Charley Chase—Another good Chase comedy which got the laughs.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. General patronage.

CREW RACING: MGM Sports Parade—Very good single, showing the technique of crew rowing with interesting and humorous comments by Pete Smith.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. General patronage.

GREAT AMERICAN PIE COMPANY: MGM Miniatures—Mildly amusing comedy skit.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HONEYLAND: Happy Harmonies Series—Mighty good filler for any program.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HOT MONEY: Todd-Kelly—About average for this series. Keep it away from current gangster films if you want to balance your show.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PERFECT TRIBUTE, THE: Chic Sale Special—A very fine interpretation of Abraham Lincoln.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PIRATE PARTY ON CATALINA ISLE: Musical Revues—This is the finest color short ever made by Metro. Patrons talked about this one as much as the feature, which was "A Tale of Two Cities". Running time, 20 minutes.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

PITCAIRN ISLAND TODAY: Oddities—A very interesting short, especially if you can use it near to your booking of "Mutiny on the Bounty", as it shows life on the island where the mutineers made their final home.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PRIMITIVE PITCAIRN: MGM Miniatures—A very interesting short. This can be played before you play "Mutiny" and will be a plug for the picture. Running time, 10 minutes.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

STARLIT DAYS AT LIDO: Oddities—Excellent, as Metro's color subjects always are. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

STARLIT DAYS AT LIDO: Oddities—An excellent color musical showing some film stars at play and intermixed with some snappy dances.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THRILL FOR THELMA, A: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—A very interesting number of the "Crime Doesn't Pay" series. This is made with the usual care and capable cast that Metro always uses in their shorts. Running time, 20 minutes.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

THRILL FOR THELMA, A: Crime Does Not Pay No. 4—The best "Crime Does Not Pay" two-reeler yet. Its subject matter strikes nearer to the average audience than the previous issues.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP: Cartoons—Very good cartoons on average. Running time, nine minutes.—C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer, Okla. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY HIGHLIGHTS NO. 5: Paramount Varieties—Good shots of "Jumbo" at New York Hippodrome make this single diverting and interesting.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. General patronage.

IS MY FACE BLACK: Headliners—A very good reel and better than any of their Sportlights or Pictorials. Paramount does not have much in the way of short subjects. My patrons prefer comedy and especially good two-reelers (not the musical type). Running time, one reel.—Martin Teker, Opera House, Leith, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR NOTES: Red Nichols and His World Famous Pennies—We knew this one was going to be "hot," and we were not a bit disappointed. If you need a good, peppy musical short to round out a program, you can't go wrong with this one. Running time, 11 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 3.—Always an interesting short and this is no exception. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

POPEYE: Cartoons—I think these are overrated. Just a cartoon to me. Running time, eight minutes. —C. A. Kelley, Rex Theatre, Custer, Okla. Small town patronage.

SIRENS OF SYNCOPATION: Phil Spitalny and His Musical Ladies—One of the smoothest musical shorts. Just fine, and will give satisfaction to all classes of patrons.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

SPORT ON THE RANGE: Grantland Rice Sportlights—Another good Sportlight. Have never had a poor one. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

RKO Radio

EVERYBODY LIKES MUSIC: Donald Novis, Irene Taylor—Just so-so.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GASOLOONS: Edgar Kennedy—Steer clear of these Kennedys. Funniest part is Kennedy trying to be funny.—J. R. DeLand, Park Theatre, Avon Park, Florida. Small town patronage.

GASOLOONS: Edgar Kennedy Comedy—Fair, a few laughs, and nothing objectionable. Running time, 2 reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

IN LOVE AT 40: Edgar Kennedy Comedies—If this is comedy, my name's Eddie Cantor. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

MAJOR BOWES' AMATEUR THEATRE OF THE AIR: No. 5—This was our first of this series. Very satisfactory; just about what one would expect. One young lady toe tap dancer was exceptionally good. Several said they were glad to see Major Bowes.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MAJOR BOWES' AMATEUR THEATRE OF THE AIR: No. 4—Very satisfactory. Patrons came to see how Major Bowes looked as much as anything. Believe the six that are made will be enough, as they prefer seeing professionals to amateurs.—D. E. Fitton Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

NO MORE WEST: Bert Lahr—This comedian does not click with my people.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ODOR IN THE COURT: Clark & McCullough—An excellent two-reeler, perhaps more appreciated here than elsewhere, owing to our patronage of "courtiers", but still a good bet for any type of audience. Rapid-fire wisecracks during the courtroom burlesque kept our audience in an uproar. If it hurts you to laugh, don't try this one! Running time, 20 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

PATHE NEWS: This used to be a good newsreel but now it is worse than ever because they insist upon sticking Roosevelt into practically every issue for no reason at all. There is too much politics in it and it is pro-Democratic. In the last issue I received there were only two news clips that were not about politics. Roosevelt and his New Deal is getting entirely too much publicity in this reel.—Martin Teker. Opera House, Leith, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

"I have always enjoyed your 'What the Picture Did for Me' department in the Motion Picture Herald. I have been following it ever since I came into the business three years ago after graduating from high school. I have found these brief reviews and criticisms of great value to me in advertising the picture after the boss has booked it.

"I can always tell whether a picture is good or not by simply referring to my back copies of the Herald and seeing what some friend exhibitor has to say about it."

—C. McKUSICK,
Assistant Manager,
Community Theatre,
Guilford, Maine.

Twentieth Century-Fox

FOX NEWS: No. 31—Well done and still seems to pull in the business. Fox has the right idea. Running time, 12 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, The Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Children patronage.

United Artists

COCK OF THE WALK: Silly Symphonies—Mediocre color cartoon which falls far below "Two Orphan Kittens" in entertainment value. Usual excellent technical quality.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. General patronage.

THREE ORPHAN KITTENS: Silly Symphonies—Very clever. Never had a short get as many laughs out of a crowd. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Universal

CAMERA THRILLS: Universal Special—The only comments I had on this were that it was a very gruesome thing to show the kids on Saturday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

ON THE WAGON: Big V Comedies—A fairly good comedy that would have been better with someone else in place of Shemp Howard. He is not liked here and I hear plenty of kicks when his comedies are shown. Running time, two reels.—Martin Teker, Opera House, Leith, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

ROOFTOPS OF MANHATTAN: Deane Janis, Gil Lamb—Mighty good entertainment. Good anywhere you can use two reels with singing and dancing.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE IN TOYLAND: Gus Edwards' Stars of the Future—Excellent two-reeler full of entertainment for all ages and uncovering some splendid specialty numbers by youngsters that my audience thoroughly enjoyed.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. General patronage.

Serials

Mascot

FIGHTING MARINES (Chapter 1): Grant Withers, George Lewis—This starts out mighty good. A little of everything that spells action; bushwhacking in the jungles to airplanes.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MIRACLE RIDER: Tom Mix—This is as good as the average serial, but it is killing my midweek show.—Roy W. Adams. Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY MOUNTAIN (Chapter 12): Ken Maynard, Verna Hillie—This serial has been very satisfactory all the way through. Believe it's the best we have run for a couple of years. Much better than "Phantom Empire."—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Butterfield Circuit Expands

W. S. Butterfield Theatres is combining operation of the Strand and the Roxy in Sturgis, Mich., with C. C. Newman of the Strand in charge. Improvements are planned at the Strand. Butterfield has added a second house at Hillsdale, Mich., the Alhambra. Gordon Havill of the Dawn will manage the Alhambra theatre.

More Housing Film Units

The motion picture distribution organization of the Federal Housing Administration has added units in Chicago and Los Angeles. The latest release includes these subjects: "Key West Goes Modern," "Attic Magic" and "The Home of Tomorrow."

E. M. Schnitzer Honored

Edward M. Schnitzer, who left Columbia over the weekend to join Republic Pictures as eastern district manager, was guest at a testimonial dinner Thursday night at the Astor hotel in New York.

Lewis With Zeidman

Harold Lewis, formerly production manager for Reliance Company, was signed Monday as production manager for B. F. Zeidman Company.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Omaha, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

Speaking of politics—but then this isn't a political journal, so we will skip that—still, the daily newspapers are filled up with all kinds of opinions, some pro and some con, but we notice it is mostly pro if it is a pro paper. We read in the Sunday paper two opinions, written by people who wrote according to their political views. One long article gave the popular straw vote to one party by at least 55 per cent and another report gave the vote to the other party by 60 per cent, so there you are. One man's guess is just about as good as another.

Doc Bixby used to write a column for the Daily State Journal of Lincoln, Neb., and in speaking of politics he had this to say:

No office lures, though I might fight
The battle and succeed.
Enough if I can only write
What people care to read.
Not my desire to tear my shirt
In noisy politics,
But do some good, and not much hurt,
This is my ticket—Bix.

We feel a whole lot like Doc did, for it don't make much difference which party wins, we get the worst of it anyhow; that is, if it can be any worse. What the American common folks ought to do is to go ahead and chop wood and let the politicians pick up the chips.

We are reminded of the two Irish section men who were eating their lunch and arguing politics one day and one of them got up and said: "Vell, phwat did Grover Clavland ever do that he should be elected prisident. You go jump in the creek," and the other said, "Vell, phwat did James G. Blagen ever do that he should be elected prisident. You go jump in the creek yourself, you, flannel-mouth." And that ended the argument in a draw.

Omaha is blanketed with the heaviest snow she has had in years, and, as a result of it, hundreds of men have been put to work with shovels, and the street cleaning force is working day and night to get the streets in condition for travel.

The theatres are feeling the effects of it, but the farmers are rejoicing. We saw a number of autos pushed up on the sidewalk to give the street cleaners a chance to get the snow away. April Shower stood out on the street back of the Orpheum theatre and we had to get a tow car to get her to a garage. That's what a fellow gets for staying in Omaha when it snows.

The film exchange boys are all rejoicing because this heavy snow is a guarantee of good crops and good business the coming year.

But this is the way we feel about it:

Oh, the snow, the snow, the beautiful snow,
How it digs into traffic and makes it go slow.
It blows up our pantlegs wherever we go
When we're bucking the drifts of this beautiful snow.

Outside of that, and Bert Creel and Bob Balentyne and a few more of the boys, everything seems to be all right here in Omaha.

Every time it snows and blocks the roads and streets we get the blues and think that everything is going haywire, but that's a mistake, for presently the sun comes out and things begin to look lovely. So there's no use to kick. We should remember what the poet said when he wrote:

Sure, this world is full of trouble
I ain't said it ain't.
Lord, I've had enough and double
Reasons for complaint.
Rains and snow have come to fret me,
Skies were often gray.
Thorns and brambles have beset me
On the road—but say,
Ain't it fine today?

Then the next day it starts snowing again and we can't keep from saying, "Oh, the snow, the snow, the beautiful snow."

We don't pretend to know anything about it, but we have the same right to guess that anyone else has, and our guess is that when Italy, France and England get through carving the Ethiopian turkey there will not be much left for Haile Selassie and the rest of the boys but the back and neck.

We have just received a list of theatres in Nebraska, part of Iowa, part of South Dakota and part of Illinois from Miss Regina Molseed, secretary for the Scott Ballentyne Company of Omaha. We regard this list as very valuable and we wish to express our thanks to Miss Molseed for sending it to us. Miss Molseed was formerly the secretary of the Film Board.

Last night we went to the Moon theatre and saw "The Dark Angel," with Fredric March and Merle Oberon doing the most of the entertaining. This picture was well played and well directed, but if you are looking for some comedy you will be disappointed, for this one doesn't take the comedy road, but it will lead your hand to your handkerchief pocket, and you know it does us all good to get a lump in our throats occasionally. Better play this one.

It seems to us that we said something about "The Beautiful Snow," and now the weather man says it is going to snow again today. Gee whiz, wouldn't that frost you? Last night it was 22 below zero and we forgot to cover up our tomato plants. Doggone the doggone luck, anyhow.

We see that Congress has its horns locked on that old age pension plan. We can't see why Congress don't give some money to us hobos who have tramped this country for years panhandling something to eat from people who work for a living, especially right now when a lazy public don't shovel a path in the snow to their back doors.

There's no doggone sense in Congress acting that way, and besides that, what will the blue pelicans and crooners do? Jevver think of that?

Once in a great while we run across an exhibitor who says he knows how to run his theatre without the aid of the Herald or any other journal, and when we do it makes us wonder why we ever took this country away from the Indians, and then again:

We often find a theatreman,
And to us 'tis quite enough,
When he says he wants the Herald
Because he wants to know "his stuff."

We know a man in this town who is over 75 years old and who never saw a moving picture, but then that is nothing. We knew a man in Indiana who would walk five miles to town and back to save wearing the tires on his wagon. But then all of the Indiana folks are not like that—not all of 'em.

And now, it's going to start snowing again.

Film Center Revamping Sought

A reorganization of Film Center, Inc., lessee of the building which houses most of the New York film exchanges, is being sought by bondholders under the New York state reorganization laws, following institution of foreclosure proceedings by Central Hanover Bank and Trust Company, trustee under a first mortgage on the property.

Whitney To Do "Jumbo"

John Hay Whitney of Pioneer will produce in color "Jumbo," which he financed at the New York Hippodrome, it is understood. The picture may be released by RKO Radio. The circus show will end its New York run next May, opening in Los Angeles shortly thereafter.

Loew To Share in Profit

Arthur M. Loew, now in South Africa, will share in a percentage of the profits from the sale of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer product abroad, in addition to his salary, under the reported terms of a new 10-year contract signed before he left for Cape Town a month ago. He is there in connection with a trial involving the Metro franchise for the South Africa territory.

Lefholtz in New Position

Harry Lefholtz has resigned from the Universal Exchange in Omaha and has joined the Scott Ballantyne Company, dealers in theatrical supplies. R. C. Fox, salesman with Universal in Minneapolis, has been transferred to replace Lefholtz.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

IT'S GUERRILLA WARFARE

Human nature being what it is, don't suppose there should be very much reason for difference in character and temperament between theatre personnel and that in other businesses. Of course the manner of presentation is different but in the main, able, mediocre, good and bad are general groupings that can be used as well to evaluate ability and character of theatremen.

On this page some months back, the above groupings as concern the theatre manager were interpreted as follows: "First, the boy who has plenty on the ball and shows it. Second, the bird who has the stuff but won't work at it. Third, the lad who isn't tops as a showman but breaks his arm trying. And fourth, the lad who doesn't know and doesn't try."

And from what these old ears are hearing lately, there may be reason to add a fifth class—the laddie who squawks to his newspapers, police chief or to anyone who will listen when his opposition manages to promote something the complainant cannot duplicate or top.

Down in a nearby southern city, for instance, a Round Tabler did quite a lot to put over a local civic party and in the course of arrangements sniped tack cards to plug the event. In return for his efforts the manager was allowed to include in the card copy the title of his coming attraction.

So far, so good. But it seems, according to our correspondent, there was an ordinance against sniping; and the manager of another house spilled the soup by objecting vigorously to the city fathers. It all wound up in a lot of unnecessary court action and unfavorable newspaper publicity. Writes the Round Tabler in summing up the deplorable incident:

"They not only killed it for me but made it impossible for any further tieups of this kind."

With a few changes here and there, the above incident may well serve as the low-down on most every similar and sad tale reported here. But whatever form it takes, the answer is always inevitable—everybody loses.

Commenting on another one of these things that happened lately, a California member sums up as follows: "They have to say something to save themselves when their superiors ask them why they are not doing the same as the opposition does."

Mebbe so. Whether managers resort to such tactics to cover up their own weaknesses or are driven to proceed thusly by myopic superiors is neither here nor there. It doesn't need any Einstein to deduce that every time a theatreman sap enough to take a sock of this kind at a brother-showman does so, he is simply kicking his own job and future prospects right smack in the pants.

Isn't it about time for managers engaging in this fantastic guerilla warfare to realize that fighting between men who should fight together is surely killing off the only chance they have for eventual salvation?

LET MANAGERS REFINE

That ole debbil "superlative" again came in for a bit of a spanking at last week's AMPA at the hands of guest speaker-exhibitors who declared themselves on advertising adjectives created by the home office publicists. Quoting from actual comments on newspaper ads made by patrons in various spots where the circuit operates, Frank Vincent, of Wilmer and Vincent, brought forth chuckles and raised eyebrows with some of the criticisms. Mr. Vincent suggested it would be smart business to play down in print an attraction not warranting overzealous praise—which is sound advice and always has been.

While it's a cinch that pressbook admen are going to continue giving their releases the benefit of every doubt, managers in the field are in most instances in better position to refine this ad "praiseology" locally so that it will be more acceptable to and better digested by the ultimate consumer.

THAT'S SHOWMANSHIP

The employment of a bear to season what might otherwise appear to be a conventional exploitation put on by Manager Tom Soriero, of the Downtown, in Los Angeles, is occasion for the dusting off again of the above head. Tom's report on "Tale of Two Cities" described in this issue concludes as follows:

"This bear stunt is nothing new; it is just showmanship. We could just as well have used a beautiful girl opening the book, but it would not have meant a thing and would not have caused the talk and publicity that we received from the bear doing the act."

Ginger Rogers Guest At Washington Parties

Official guests of the District of Columbia at the various birthday parties in honor of President Roosevelt, Ginger Rogers took part in a number of Washington parties recently, the publicity tying in with the coming Astaire-Rogers "Follow the Fleet."

Accompanied by her mother, S. Barret McCormick, RKO Radio ad and publicity chief, and Rutgers Neilson, RKO Radio publicity manager, Miss Rogers was met at the station by a top-name committee and crowds of fans.

Program took in broadcasts, interviews and visits to the six local parties held at various capital hotels. Shortly before the President made his birthday address over the air the star was taken to the White House, presented to the Chief Executive and remained while he delivered his radio greetings.

In December another angle that brought in a flock of extra publicity was commissioning the star an admiral in the Texas Navy by Governor Allred, who made the presentation in Los Angeles.

Local Paper Runs Levee's Roxy Tribute

Some score of years back, Round Tabler Bill Levee, was chief usher at the old Academy of Music, New York, where the late Roxy was then experimenting with stage attractions.

Of those day and events in the life of the famed showman, Levee recently wrote in a tribute that was printed in the Riverhead, L. I., papers where Bill now skippers the Riverhead Theatre.

Keenan Clicks Big With Baby Contest

Covering a period of seven weeks, given daily publicity breaks, frequent photos, large display ads and weekly double-trucks, Manager A. J. Keenan, Merrimack Square Theatre, Lowell, Mass., reports a recently concluded baby popularity voting contest for children up to four years sponsored by theatre and two local dailies, morning and evening, that pulled a total of 14 million votes.

Cash and other prizes were given, $50 to first, $25 to second and merchandise prizes to the 38 babies qualifying for the finals.

First break was half-page ad and lead story on a Saturday announcing opening of contest with registration of entries in theatre lobby to start on the following Monday and continue four days. Registration blank given to each contestant when taken to official photographer was good for free contest photo. Photos were placed in lobby for the preliminary voting.

The preliminary contest also ran four days, during which both papers ran coupons good for 10 votes when filled in and deposited in ballot box at theatre. For each theatre admission during that time blank worth 50 votes when filled in was also given.

Total registration was 103 children whose names, addresses and ages were printed in both papers day before preliminary voting started. At the end of the four-day voting period, the 38 with the greatest number of votes qualified for the finals.

This number was chosen to parallel the number of merchants participating. Each store then "adopted" one of the finalists by draw, and from then on the baby was known by the name of that store.

Main Contest Runs Month

The main contest then ran for a full month, with the 10-vote coupons run in both papers daily in addition to publicity and the theatre continuing to give out the 50-vote coupons with each admission. Besides these means of gathering votes, on one day of each week, both papers ran double-trucks in which each merchant's ad contained a photo of his entry. Each ad when clipped and deposited at theatre was good for 50 votes.

Decisions were made public three days after the closing of the contest. Cash prizes were awarded from the theatre stage to parents of winners, both papers carrying four-column cuts of the presentations. Keenan by mail also notified the other winning parents who were asked to bring the letters to the theatre to secure prizes

Various Activities For Chaplin Opening

For the world premiere of the new Chaplin picture, "Modern Times," at the New York Rivoli, Manager Jack Wright and Monroe Greenthal's United Artists' exploitation crew sponsored a campaign topped with one of those Hollywood openings that brought out the reserves.

Special Chaplin contest was put on with the New York Evening Journal giving prizes for most accurate combinations of the various characteristics and props for which the comic is known. For instance, one day the famed mustache was pictured among a group of other types of hirsute adornments and each day some other part of the Chaplin equipment was so publicized. From these, contestants were supposed to select ones used by the star and put them together.

The old standby of Chaplin impersonators was not ignored, a group of the imitators covering sport and political meetings, distributing sky-writers and other material that plugged the date. Many ace locations were landed for windows including the Fifth Avenue Southern Pacific headquarters.

Other standouts were the Macy display of the original Chaplin hat, shoes and cane (see photo) and electric signs at the theatre changed from Rivoli to read Chaplin. Front featured mechanical gadgets suggesting the factory sequences in the picture and radio publicity was promoted from WNEW and WOR, the latter running a letter contest with photos of the star given for the best comments on his work.

Seven Exploitation Pages For "Dancing Feet"

Nice job of work turned out by Ed Finney, Republic ad chief and exploitation head Bill Peirce on "Dancing Feet" with seven pages of dance and other tieups for use in various sized situations. Press book editor Will Murphey also cooperated.

Free dance courses are offered for winners of local contests in different cities by New York studios of Arthur Murray. Dance in the picture called the "Riviera" is to be exploited by the Dancing Teachers Business Assn., reported to have 2500 members, nationally. Routine will be broadcast over WOR and copies of the dance sent to those writing in. National advertisers are also tied in to the campaign.

LEBRETON AND FIELD TOP JANUARY AWARDS

First Quigley Plaque in France Voted to Paris Theatreman; Maine Manager Gets Bronze

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Vive, la France!

Paris, famed for beauty and romance, now gathers further honors with the bestowal by the Quigley Awards Committee of the January Silver Plaque to Manager Rene Lebreton, Paramount Theatre, for a worthy campaign on Paramount's "The Crusades." Winner of previous Mentions, the French theatreman now for the first time steps up to the very top. He is also the first in France to be voted such recognition.

Second January honors, the Bronze Plaque, finds its way to an American showman, this Award going to Manager Seth H. Field, of the Dirigo Theatre, Ellsworth, Maine, a community of 3,000. Field did handsomely with 20th Century-Fox's "Littlest Rebel."

The initial 1936 Competitions are also distinguished by the voting of a Silver Citation Certificate to Andre Agramon, publicist, Paramount, Paris, for his excellent cooperation with Manager Lebreton on the winning entry. The Silver Citation has been granted, incidentally, for the second time since the inception of the Competitions.

January First Mentions go to three entries and to four participating theatremen. Hal Grady, Palace, Lubbock, Texas; Ed Melnicker and E. Pentecoast, Loew's Grand, Atlanta, Ga., and to Matt Saunders, Loew's Poli, Bridgeport, Ct., win these designations.

It may be interesting to point out that the January Plaque winners and the "Firsts" for the first time take down these honors.

"Honorables" Scattered

From the great number of other entries, a total of 15 Honorable Mentions were voted to 18 theatremen, in three cases, the house publicists sharing honors with managers for this recognition. These Awards are shared both by newcomers to the Competitions and to showmen who have repeated. Nine theatremen represented in seven campaigns break in for the first time, and nine men equally represented in the remaining eight "Honorable" entries have been with us before.

Names, titles, locations and pictures of all First and Honorables are set down in column to right. To these entrants shortly go their well-earned Sheepskin Certificates.

And now for the second month of the 1936 Awards for which the race is on and speedily. The pace has not slackened and the Competitions continue to be keenly fought. Each month finds new entrants battling the old and need we say, more power to you all.

Martin Offers Temple Doll On Newspaper Tiein

A Shirley Temple Doll contest was staged by Guy Martin, Colfax Theatre, South Bend, Ind., for "Littlest Rebel" with local daily tying in. Theatre offered Temple dolls to 20 contestants turning in best letters on "How I would be a good Mother to my Shirley Temple doll." Contest ran for ten days ahead with paper devoting much space to stories and cuts. Dolls were presented at Saturday matinee (see photo).

Government postcards carrying cuts of Shirley were mailed to participants advising if they presented the card at the box-office they were entitled to autographed photos of the starlet. These were also distributed in copies of Chicago Daily News and various stores throughout South Bend.

Showmen Go Pink On "Strike Me Pink"

Among the first campaigns reported on "Strike Me Pink" the color motif in one form or another was used. These angles and other highlights by Round Tablers playing the date in various spots are here set down.

Caldwell Colors Ford

Out in Toledo, Ohio, at Loew's Valentine, Wally Caldwell prevailed upon his local Ford dealer to repaint one of the new jobs a pretty pink for street bally. Car bannered and carrying sound plugging the song hits drew attention.

For lobby treatment, Caldwell placed shadow boxes of different sizes and planted the title in illuminated 24-sheet cutout across the entrance.

Fitzpatrick Goes Pink

Colored ice cream, a special pink, was Ed Fitzpatrick's promotion for women patrons for date at the Poli, Waterbury, Ct., dairy running ads to tie in and planting window cards plugging the confection. Bakery came in with pink cakes to go with the cream.

Fitz ran the press book limerick contest and spotlighted the Parkyakarkus role by putting on an impersonation contest for those who endeavored to take off the dialectician.

Melniker Plants Feature

The full page illustrated feature story in the press book on the Goldwyn girls was publicity standout of Ed Melniker's campaign at Loew's Grand, Atlanta, Ga. Special lobby setpiece with six art panels and illuminated cutout title letters also was effective.

Hunt Sells "Week"

Naming the week of the playdate after the star topped Manager George Hunt's attack at Loew's, Louisville, Ky. Special merchandise drive with extra advertising was put on by Cantor's radio sponsor.

George also worked out a color slant with department store featuring woman's pink apparel for resort wear. Number of windows were arranged built around stills and posters from the picture.

Printers Distribute "Thanks" Cards for Davis

A reported excellent distribution was secured by Walter Davis, Capitol Theatre, Regina, Canada, for "Thanks a Million" when he contacted local printers who secured permission from their customers to imprint title on all hand-bills, dodgers, posters, etc., leaving their shops. Clerks in stores and offices were promoted to answer phone calls with the slogan and also use it on statements of accounts rendered.

Discs were placed on telephone mouthpieces, cafes and restaurants carried streamers on doors and menus and all birthday greeting cards mailed from theatre carried the line.

Novel Newspaper Hookup Used by Bowser for "Life"

Les Bowser, Harris-Warren, Warren, Ohio, to sell "I Live My Life" staged a newspaper contest for which passes were awarded young lovers with imagination. Ducats were sent to those sending in best letters on "Where is the most unusual place to propose to your sweetheart." Needless to say the replies were good for plenty of laughs and Les got some extra breaks by planting them in the papers.

Temple Contest Staged By Morris for "Rebel"

An eight-day contest tieup on "Littlest Rebel" between leading department store newspaper and the Colonia Theatre was arranged by Seymour L. Morris, Norwich, N. Y. Three dolls were awarded, one a day, for best letters received on "How I would be a good Mother to my Shirley Temple Doll," store paying for dolls. Each child entering contest was given autographed tinted photo of Shirley, reverse side carrying theatre ad and winners were presented with dolls opening night of picture.

Store devoted window to display of dolls 10 days ahead, toy department carried series of dress stills with cards mentioning contest and theatre. Bank tied in offering $5 to first baby born in 1936, which was to be dubbed "Norwich's Shirley Temple baby." Stories were carried in leading papers.

"CEILING ZERO"

"Ceiling Zero" means "no visibility" to aviators... Alexander Smith Carpet means "high visibility" to your patrons. When the lights go up they like to see modern designs and rich, smart colors underfoot. Which is why you will find Alexander Smith Carpet in so many of the country's most successful theatres.

ALEXANDER SMITH CARPET

PRESS BOOK SLANTS

"Anything Goes"—Paramount

Based on hit tune of the show, "You're the Top," make up large compoboard with several pages of heavy white paper and ask patrons to write in their descriptions of Bing Crosby in rhymed couplets like the song itself. As inducement offer every person contributing rhyme a Bing Crosby fanfoto.

Stunt should be conducted under supervision of usher who can explain details. Include in display copy of the song itself to give patrons an idea of how rhyme works out. Prizes can be offered for best couplets and book sent to Crosby after the date.

"Another Face"—RKO Radio

Get two stills of Donlevy on each of his characters. Blow them up and mount back to back on a long pin attached to motor geared to revolve slowly. Place the rig in prominent window with appropriate tiein copy.

"Sunset of Power"—Universal

Cut Buck Jones on Silver (his horse), out of poster, make cutout of compo and set up in lobby. Build rail around this at distance of eight to 10 feet. Attach long pieces of rope to railing and tie rope quoit to end of each piece to obtain lasso effect. Let each kid who buys ticket try to rope Jones' upraised arm. Offer return of admission price to those doing it in one try.

"Captain Blood"—Warner Bros.

If local school or athletic club boasts a fencing team, maybe you can promote an exhibition on stage. Possibly they'll be willing to do their stuff in pirate costume to add drama to the idea.

Dress up skater in pirate dress and let him skate in public rinks. Ice fans would probably be surprised to find a "pirate" in their midst and might even stop to read the heralds he hands out.

"Ceiling Zero"—Warner Bros.

Under the heading, "Tried and True Stunts," the following are set down from those suggested: Borrow wind-sock from airport and set it up at theatre lettered with playdates. "Orientator" borrowed from aviation school is placed in lobby, with patrons given a try at working it. Tieup for theatre party for Junior Birdmen or similar organization sponsored by local paper.

"Hitch-Hike Lady"—Columbia

People go hitch-hiking, especially in the summer and many of them have unusual experiences. Well ahead of date invite patrons who have had experiences on the road to send them in. Tie in with paper to publish them and offer as many seats as you wish for best letters.

"It Had to Happen"—Fox

In big cities with large Italian populations attention can be called in ads and stories in Italian language newspapers to the fact that the picture tells the story of two pals from Italy who come to the big city and fight their way to the top.

"Last of the Pagans"—MGM

Illustrated in this press book are lobbies and displays on previous MGM tropical pictures to represent South Sea scenes. Used were yuba leaves hung under edges of marquee with palm trees rising from corners. Cocoanuts and grass mats decorated lobby floors. Lobbies were decked with artificial palms, native musical instruments.

"Magnificent Obsession"—Universal

Take large album or scrapbook, mount it on stand with copy "May we have your comments for publication? How did 'Magnificent Obsession' impress you?" Place attendant near to solicit 10-word reviews. Offer prizes for best and arrange tieup with paper to publish these.

"Rose Marie"—MGM

Use of a Rose Marie flower matinee is suggested with roses presented at opening performance with compliments of Jeanette MacDonald. Girl distributing flowers may be in Indian costume, but this is optional. Florist window displays and lobby tiein are also offered.

"Milky Way"—Paramount

Theatres in smaller cities and those drawing from farming areas are offered a Milkmaids' Contest held on stage, for women and girls only, with prizes awarded for best milkers. Stunt was put on by Paramount Theatre, Provo, Utah, several times and reported successful. Contestants were dressed in picturesque costumes. Three cows were on stage and each contestant was judged on how long it took her to milk one quart.

"Professional Soldier"

Some theatremen will want to play up dramatic action and in the picture Victor McLaglen carries about in his arms an 88-pound machine gun firing 600 bullets a minute. Arrange a display in lobby of arms and other weapons used by Army and Navy, along with cutout of McLaglen, from one of the posters holding the machine gun.

EXPLOITATION IDEAS ARE REPRESENTATIVE

It is difficult for every manager to get pressbooks from all the companies and with the belief there are ideas published in the different books that may be useful to other theatremen, the exploitations suggested here are set down.

They are taken as near as possible from the various pressbooks of late releases that come to our desk. The ideas printed are selected with no thought of "best" in mind but are representative of what the home office ad men are turning out and are so offered to the membership.

Pollock Sells "Splendor" With Newspaper Contests

With local daily cooperating, Les Pollock, Loew's Rochester, Rochester, N. Y., for "Splendor" put over a couple of neat contests, one of which was a cash award for best 10-word wire to be sent to Miriam Hopkins, star of picture. To the winner would also go a reciprocal wire from her. Second contest was planted in classified section, tickets going to those correctly answering list of six questions pertaining to advertisers.

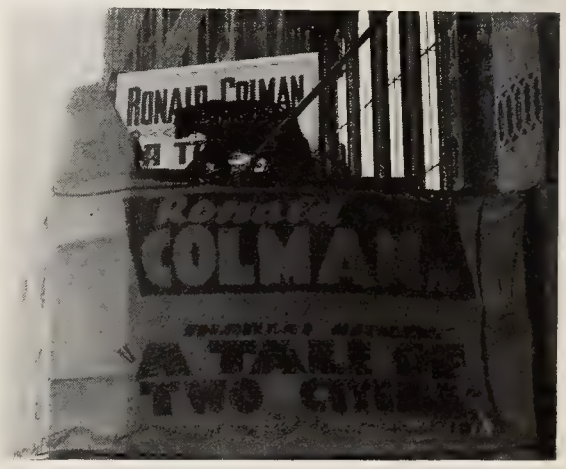
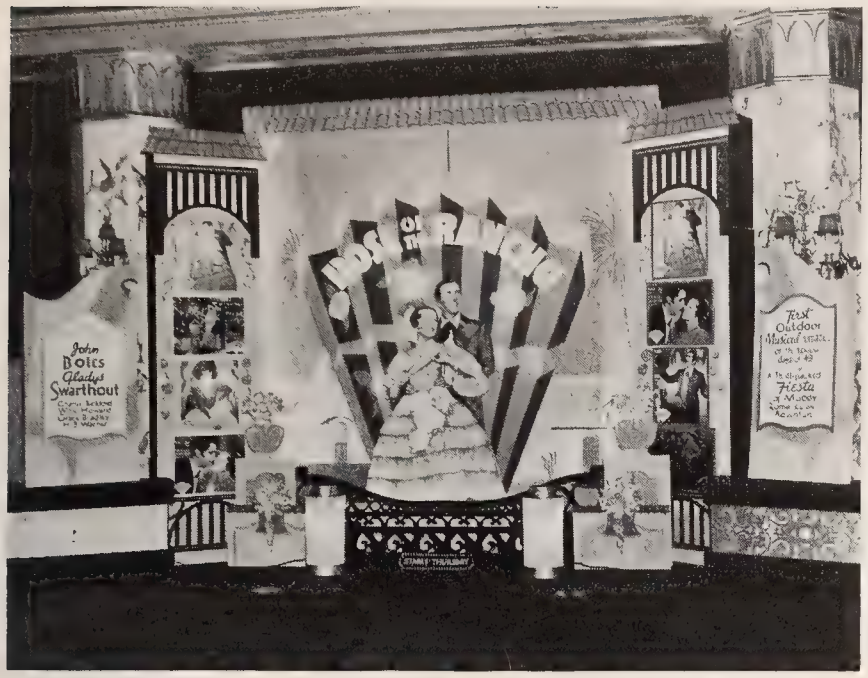
Soriero's Bear Stunt Plugs "Two Cities" Date



Just to do it a little differently, Tom Soriero, at the United Artists-Downtown Theatre, Los Angeles, promoted himself a bear and a chimpanzee to put over a stunt on "Tale of Two Cities." Soriero conceived the idea of using a compoboard book atop the marquee, each page of which measured 40 by 60 and when opened, 80 by 60. Pages were lettered with star and title on one sheet and "now playing" on another. Bear (see photo) was trained to turn the pages.

At night display was flooded with studio arcs operated by the chimpanzee from the sidewalk, the monk alternating on the stunt with Mr. Bruin. Tom says it took two hours to get the bear down from the marquee and the job kept the traffic-stopping crowds very interested and amused. For further excitement, the animals were also utilized on the stage to handle the drawing in Soriero's giveaway night stunt. It must have been the riot he reports.



Says Giveaways Help

This Round Tabler is also getting a lot of attention with his weekly giveaway of a combination radio and bar combination which includes the necesary ingredients in case winners cannot afford to stock their own cellar. Liquors are promoted from one concern which has planted midget cards on the stunt atop the cash registers of all dealers. Soriero says these run up as high as one thousand.

Circulation of giveaway numbered tickets run as high as 100,000 every two weeks. Tickets are available only at the theatre but admissions do not have to be purchased to get them. On the gift night studio and radio stars are promoted to supervise the stunt from the stage with such names as radioite Jimmy Wallington and Dorothy Page, Universal star, representative of those handling the job.

Soriero Uses Bear for Marquee Stunt

Two interesting foyer displays worked out by Rodney Collier and George Browning, at the Stanley, Baltimore, above, on "Rancho," bordered by colored transparent enlargements. Filigree work at bottom was lighted by soft blue lamps, same used in light cylinders at front of central figures. In the "Dangerous" setpiece, flashes coming from the radio tower were arranged by flashers in the rear. Circles quoting critics are overlays. Lettering at top is transparent white cloth to make star and title stand out. Same effect was used to plug Tone below Davis enlargement in natural colors.

"Rose Marie" Baby Contest Suggested for Local Use

MGM exploited nationally a neat idea ahead of "Rose Marie" release wherein $2000 was offered to the first set of female twins born after January first and christened "Rose" and "Marie". Prize was won by a Mrs. Owens, of Fort Smith, Ark., with check presented by Mayor of that spot on behalf of MacDonald and Eddy.

It went over so well that adaptation of the same locally is suggested in the press-book. Merchants are to be tied in along the same line with prizes for the first female baby born during first hour or first day of individual picture date, named "Rose Marie". Stunt may also be worked with female twins, dividing the gifts.

Parents of Swarthout Attend "Rancho" Opening

Theatremen do not often have the opportunity of presenting 'in person' the parents of a popular star and this rare occurrence fell to the lot of Manager John D. Johnson, Fox Gillioz, Springfield, Mo., on "Rose of the Rancho".

Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Swarthout, father and step-mother of Gladys Swarthout were on hand for the opening, Mr. Swarthout making two appearances on the stage giving a few highlights of his famous daughter's career. Accompanying photo shows the guests of honor with Manager Johnson.

FRONTS, STUNTS AND WINDOWS

Snappy Book Window in Hamilton

Telling New Orleans About Harlow

(Right) Illuminated float made up of cutouts from the 24-sheet was toured about town on Manager WALLY ALLEN'S "Tale of Two Cities" drive at Warner's Keeney, Elmira, N. Y. Boy carrying lettered display made up to simulate book covered the downtown sections.

Georgia Lobby For "So Red the Rose"

(Right) Boys' band playing regular one-hour Saturday morning concert in front of the Fox Tower, Pasadena, Cal. Musical aggregation is sponsored by theatre and in addition to programs at the house, Manager DICK PRITCHARD has the youngsters perform at local civic gatherings.

MARKS REORGANIZING PLAN AIRED IN CHICAGO

B & K Operation Discussed; 20th Century-Fox Films in 157 Theatres on Same Day

by BILL CROUCH
Chicago Correspondent

Discussions are under way between proponents and opponents of a plan for reorganization of Marks Brothers Theatres, Inc. Former Judge Charles A. McDonald, acting as a special master in chancery for the federal district court, is conducting the hearings. The Marks corporation owns the Marbro theatre, the Granada and the Broadway Strand. The Marbro and Granada are at present operated by Balaban & Katz and the latter by Essaness.

As explained by Attorney J. B. Westcott, representing the bondholders' committee, the reorganization plan calls for the leasing of all the theatres to B & K. Attorney Joseph C. Webb, representing other bondholders, is the principal objector. He told the court that both B & K and the Marks Brothers organization are controlled by Paramount.

Attorney Westcott said the offers made by B & K were the best obtainable and that the rentals offered were fair. The rental offer is 15 cents on each admission at certain prices, and 17½ and 20 cents on higher charges.

Attorney Webb said he did not think the rental offered was fair even though B & K offered a minimum guarantee. He said the only reason it was the highest offer was that other companies dared not bid against the Balaban organization. The deal, he said, was one affiliate entering into an agreement with another affiliate.

Further discussions are scheduled soon.

One of the biggest advertising tieups staged by a film company here is the arrangement which the Paramount exchange has made with the Chicago Milk Foundation, in exploiting "The Milky Way," Harold Lloyd's latest starring picture. Under the supervision of "Barney" Barnard of the local exchange, more than 800,000 specially printed milk bottle caps will be placed on as many bottles of milk, all to be delivered a day or so previous to the picture opening. The caps will tell the starting date of the engagement at the Chicago theatre.

Latest additions to the membership roster of CAPA (Chicago Amusement Publicists Association) are: Jack McPherson, National Screen Service; Irving Mack, Filmack Trailer Co.; Sidney Stern, General Film Co.; Harvey Olsen, Chicago Daily News; Jimmy Luntzel, Oriental Theatre; Mitchel Liner, Harding Theatre, and Frank Ward, Chicago Herald & Examiner. The new members will be initiated at the next meeting of the organization.

Sam Wolf, pioneer Chicago exhibitor, was buried here last week. He had been ill for some time. Wolf at one time operated a theatre at Halsted and Monroe streets.

Despite all the heavy snow the Santa Fe Chief has been able to arrive in Chicago daily, on time. This week those coming and going via the Chief were: Ginger Rogers, Irving Berlin, Mike Riley and Ed Farley, Burns and Allen and Harry Rathner.

Harry Rathner, Burroughs-Tarzan sales manager, stopped off in Chicago for a day en route to New York.

Aaron Saperstein writes from Miami that he will stay there as long as the cold spell lasts here.

F. J. Barry, Columbia auditor, is out from New York, and Abe Montague, Columbia sales chief, conferred with sales executives on his way east from Hollywood. Max Roth, midwest sales manager, came up from St. Louis.

The Hindsale theatre is not for lease, contrary to rumors, said George Kruger, manager, the current lease being until 1951.

The Chicago theatre, which in January played to more than 800,000 persons, is trying to get Wallace Beery for a personal appearance with the showing of "Ah, Wilderness," which is slated to be shown there soon.

Jack Thoma is in Indianapolis working on a campaign for Columbia's "The Music Goes 'Round."

Reports persist that a new deluxe theatre will be built on the Filed Estate property between 70th and 71st street on South Shore Drive, this summer. If built, the theatre probably will be leased by Jones, Linick and Schaefer.

Harry Lubliner became a proud grandfather when the baby girl of his daughter in Milwaukee made her debut.

Essaness Theatres and Warner Bros., are tussling with a booking situation brought about by a clearance problem concerning the Michigan and Metropolitan theatres. Essaness claims that Warner is giving the Warner circuit's theatre, the Metropolitan, one week's clearance over the Essaness Michigan, which is in the same week of release. According to Eddie Silverman of Essaness, that circuit will not play any Warner pictures until the matter is settled favorably.

Ted Lewis and his orchestra come to the Chicago theatre early in March for a week's engagement. Following this the band will be booked into the Terrace Room at the Morrison Hotel.

The Swedish comedy, "Saturday Night," starring Edward Persson, is playing its fourth week at the Julian theatre. Special exploitation in the Swedish language newspapers by Herb Elisburg has helped keep up interest.

Jean Goldfarb is back from a six weeks' vacation in Florida and other southern states and is sporting a swell tan.

Many are the rumors along film row concerning plans of the Anderson circuit in Morris. Latest reports are that the circuit will build new houses in West Chicago and Canton. A report that the newest Anderson theatre, the Barb in DeKalb, will be closed shortly, is also current.

Maurice "Red" Kann, editor of Motion Picture Daily, stopped over for several hours Sunday en route to the Coast. The storms had delayed the Twentieth Century three hours and fifty minutes.

One of the oldtimers reminds us that it was fourteen years ago this month that Clyde Eckhardt, then and now, manager of the Fox Exchange, achieved an outstanding booking. During the week of February 4, 1922, Eckhardt booked "Over the Hill" for one solid week in 50 Chicago theatres, day and date. The picture was sold on a 50 per cent rental basis. All rentals were paid daily in cash and the admission price was a flat 44 cents at all houses. Business for the week was record-breaking. To top it all, Eckhardt sold a majority of the 1922 season's product on the same basis of 50 per cent rental. The pictures, however, did not play day and date.

Emma Rifkin, United Artists PBX-pert, is planning to take a long train trip when vacation time comes this summer. The reason—Emma never has ridden on a train.

A record of some sort was set last Sunday when Twentieth Century-Fox pictures played in 157 Chicago theatres. Out of a total of 124 theatres advertising their programs in the Sunday papers more than 75 were advertising a Fox picture. "The Littlest Rebel," "In Old Kentucky" and "Thanks a Million" garnered most of the playdates. The very bad weather cut in on the grosses.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

ESOTERICA

MUCH the funniest thing about Mr. Charles Chaplin's "Modern Times" is the distressing and embarrassing situation in which the more top-lofty critics of the lay press find themselves. Since the opening of the picture on Broadway there has been more space devoted to discussion, defense and apology for prior expressions than has been given to the picture itself. They are blaming each other and themselves for not having adequately appreciated the picture and its nuances of philosophy, social significance, kinetic artistry.

All this becomes more important than the subject in hand because it denotes the vast yearnings of the intelligentsia division for some movie pabulum of their very own.

The dramatic critics of the ancient and once honorable "legitimate" stage have been unable to stay their pens with Mr. Chaplin's shadow on Broadway. Mr. Brooks Atkinson of the New York Times, with apologies to Mr. Frank S. Nugent for invasion of movie precincts, had to have a say about "Modern Times." Mr. Burns Mantle was moved to set down his notions, and Mr. John Anderson of the New York Evening Journal, after recording his enthusiasms, directly upbraided the movie critics for their lack of intoxication.

The plain and simple fact is that "Modern Times" is just exactly another Chaplin comedy, not more, not less. In this picture Mr. Chaplin is as funny as he ever was, not funnier. Also "Modern Times" carries about the same intellectual content as "Dough and Dynamite" and about the same social import as "The Immigrant".

The agonies of the intelligentsia, trying to read esoteric significance into the picture, are tremendous, continuous.

The result is much satisfactory publicity for the release, which is reported doing rather well. The manifestations are meanwhile of peculiar interest to the writer of this page who was in 1915-16 occupied with the launching of a wave of attention for Chaplin from the cognoscenti, the literati and the illuminati, for the special purpose of justifying a new high price to the exhibitor of $50 a day first-run for his new series of two-part comedies. The highbrow appreciation movement, running on its own for years, is out of control.

New Theatre, periodical of the very left, calls "Modern Times" "Charlie's most serious comment on our times. . . . "

One can agree—without considering it very serious. In fact, Mr. Chaplin himself thought maybe it would be funny.

Mr. Richard Watts, Jr., of The Herald Tribune, is very sure that Mr. Chaplin " . . . has intended his film as an earnest comment in slapstick form on the state of capitalistic industrialism. Its suggestion of ideas is intermittent and rather vague, but they are definitely Left Wing in sympathy."

"Vague" is violent understatement.

Mr. Watts, and probably others less articulate, read meaning for instance in the episode where the screen Chaplin becomes involved in a riot by the misunderstanding of the police discovering him in the act of retreiving a red warning flag dropped by a truck.

This is called "a bitterly satirical cartoon on red scares."

To some others it may more poignantly suggest that Mr. Chaplin or some of his gag men at some time read or clipped a story by Mr. Irvin Cobb about 1917 on the significance of a red flag, beginning with "If an Italian gentleman is carrying if it means there is shortly to be a blast in the subway excavation . . . ", etc., leading also to the subject of confusion between the red flag of warning and the red flag of revolution.

Further, the assembly line sequences depicting Chaplin as the flighty factory hand driven mad by the speed-up pressure, the most vital element of his slight plot, represent a recrudescence of his fascination in the repetitive type of phenomena, the Keystone chase translated into squirrel cage continuities to be played upon with variations. The assembly line belt of "Modern Times" is the escalator of "The Floorwalker", the revolving table top of that strange "One A.M." translated.

Only those who have had interior opportunity to observe the Chaplin technique—and it is too slightly organized to be called that—can be aware of his hunger and thirst after "business", his well near miserly treasuring of "gags", collected over the years, his infinite labour of experiment in the refurbishing of each potential bit of material. He has literally gestated for years over the merest moments of action.

What our young critics are regarding as evidence of "comment" on the state of society by Mr. Chaplin may perhaps be that, too, but only in the sense that for his twenty-three years of the screen he has played underdog—the very same underdog. Primarily his basic theme of persecution was born to the screen through Mr. Mack Sennett's hatred of "cops" before Mr. Chaplin ever faced a camera. In truth, Mr. Sennett bedevilled Mr. D. W. Griffith for a year or so trying to get a chance to make a picture making fun of the police back yonder in the golden age of Biograph.

If "Modern Times" has a message it is that with luck even the damnedest fool in the world can get by—and get the girl. And that, sirs, is quite a "comment on our times".

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Recording Savings

Substantial savings are accruing to producers in royalty revisions for sound recording made by RCA and in contract modifications being effected by Erpi (Western Electric). The combined economies are estimated at $1,000,000 a year.

Indirect benefits in the due course of business events may result to exhibitors, possibly in the form of score charge adjustments.

RCA's new rate schedule, the company hopes, will open a field from which it has been virtually excluded by Erpi dominance. Small producers will be particular beneficiaries. See page 13 for explanatory story and for complete text of RCA's new rate policy announcement.

Theatres Available

There is one motion picture theatre operating for every 20,716 persons in the world.

Despite Europe's greater population density, motion pictures in the United States provide far greater theatre facilities, running a theatre for every 8,234 inhabitants, as against Europe's one theatre per 9,270.

The motion picture in the first 40 years of its existence has dotted the world with 87,299 theatres, to serve 1,808,705,017, an average of one theatre for each 20,718 persons.

Story and tables of comparisons are found on pages 39, 40 and 41.

Atlas Holdings

The investments of the Atlas Corporation in Paramount and Warner Brothers' securities were appreciably reduced during 1935, the annual report of the investment company to its stockholders discloses.

The largest reduction in the Atlas Paramount holdings resulted from the sale by Atlas of its controlling interest in the Blue Ridge Corporation to Harrison Williams, investment operator. Blue Ridge Corporation held 300,000 shares of Paramount stock. Certificates of deposit for $454,000 of additional Paramount securities which were listed by Atlas at the end of 1934 were exchanged for securities of the reorganized Paramount during 1935. The new Paramount securities are still held by the company. Atlas disposed of $800,000 of Warner Brothers Pictures debentures during 1935. It is reported that this practically eliminates Atlas as a Warner investor.

The most appreciable Atlas gain in film securities during the year was its purchase of 50 per cent of the RCA holdings in RKO. This comprises $2,128,597 of RKO debentures and 263,493 shares of common stock. At the time of the purchase Atlas also acquired a three-year option to purchase the remaining 50 per cent of RCA's holdings in RKO. This investment, the report states, is regarded by the Atlas management as being in the nature of a "special, temporary investment." The description is purely technical, conforming with SEC requirements for distinguishing between "investments" and "speculation."

The Atlas report showed consolidated assets of $103,928,679 at the end of the year as compared with $110,517,809 the year before. The company reported net income of $1,148,052 for 1935, as compared with $1,250,245 for 1934.

Appeal for Duals

The United States circuit court of appeals, Philadelphia, was asked this week by large distributors to rehear the Perelman double featuring case, which the majors lost when the Philadelphia court ruled that clauses in contracts prohibiting the double bill practice were illegal. Complete text of the distributors' petition appears on page 53.

Test of "Freedom"

Sentinels of the Rupublic, campaigning against the New Deal, are fighting the Ohio state film censors in a legal test of their powers in suppressing an animated cartoon ridiculing the President and the administration.

A total of 34,000 persons attended the Sentinels' showings in Chicago last week, and competition is feared as the exhibition tours the smaller communities. See page 33.

Bernerd's Plans

Jeffrey Bernerd is now in charge of all G-B sales, he said Wednesday on his arrival from London. Heretofore his distribution activities were limited to England, but the new duties include the United States as well. This does not change the American organization, he explained.

On his four to five weeks' visit he will look over production and talent possibilities on the coast and will discuss new product with Arthur Lee, head of the American company. Although G-B announced 35 this season, 26 will be released, but an increase is expected next season, he said.

Five of the features Max Schach will produce for Capitol will be distributed in the United States by G-B, Mr. Bernerd said.

Military Actors

Miffed by the work lost by actors and studio personnel by the participation of United States army and navy forces in military pictures, the American Federation of Labor, prompted by the Los Angeles Central Labor Council, is asking the Roosevelt Administration to legislate the practice out of existence, thus ending the figurative timely rescue of the heroine by the marines. See page 22.

French Market

While the total of features released in France has shown a steady increase in the last three years, the number of domestically produced subjects has fallen off. There were 463 feature releases altogether last year, compared with 436 in 1934 and 419 the year previous. French producers turned out 109 features in 1935, as against 114 a year before and 157 in 1933.

Box-offices indicate that dubbed pictures are not as well accepted by the general French public as original product, writes Pierre Autré, HERALD correspondent at Paris. He analyzes the French market as particularly favorable to socalled action product, with a minimum of dialogue.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Chinese Peace

At last a settlement—an armistice settlement—of the local censor fee issue in Canton, China, has been reached, the terms being practically the same as the eight large American distributors offered last August.

Theatres are permitted to pay the fee, which is in addition to the national charge paid at Nanking, and the distributors are to receive full payment for all such fees deducted prior to the settlement date. The distributors have agreed to allow the exhibitors 50 per cent of all Canton censor fees paid as temporary relief until a definite ruling has been made by Nanking. Whether distributors will receive an allowance on fees paid at Nanking equal to the amount paid at Canton is still to be determined.

While American film offices have reason for some cheer over the arrangements just made, both exhibitors and distributors have suffered severe losses in the three months' "holiday," and a hundred pictures are behind schedule. The story is on page 47.

After 20 Years

Having twice previously filmed "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," in 1916 and in 1923, Paramount Pictures was surprised this week to have its right to produce the story questioned after these 20 years.

The Trail Company, admittedly a defunct corporation, has asked Justice Aaron Levy in New York to order Paramount to show cause why a stay should not be issued to halt exhibition of Paramount's latest and third version of the production. Plaintiff claims ownership of certain motion picture and dramatic rights which it alleges have not been obtained by Paramount.

The Trail Company sought the stay on Monday, two days before Paramount's elaborately prepared "Lonesome Pine" Broadway premiere at the Paramount theatre in Times Square. Then, on Tuesday afternoon, on the eve of the opening, one Gustave Simon, a New York lawyer, of 60 East 42nd Street, made vigorous personal efforts to get trade press attention for the action.

Efforts to learn the who and why of the Trail Company found Paramount without any knowledge other than the admission made in the complaint of its defunctness and that a "Miss Lolley" had owned 50 per cent of the stock, the remaining 50 per cent having been owned at one time by "Mrs. Norris," who had transferred her half share to a religious sect. Mr. Simon explained that the Trail Company was organized in 1910 by William Norris, when he bought certain dramatic rights to the story, and John Fox, Jr., the author. Mr. Norris in 1911 turned over the stock to his wife, Mabel, and to Geraldine Lolley. The Trail Company was formed by Mr. Norris to further dramatic presentation of the story. Mr. Simon also explained that the story was involved in similar litigation in 1915 and that the various rights have been considerably involved.

Meanwhile Paramount considered the situation lightly, declaring that it held undisputed motion picture rights to the story.

New Minor Bill

Another bill regulating the attendance of minors at theatres in New York state was introduced in the legislature at Albany Wednesday by Senator Lazarus Joseph. The measure would permit cities to license motion picture theatres where children between 10 and 15 years may be admitted to segregated sections under certain conditions imposed by law.

Authors Demand

The music authors and composers this week demanded, among other things, that Warner return to affiliation in the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, that they be given equal voice with Warner in direction of its licensing agency, and assailed the company as a film producer which maintains music publishing as an "adjunct." They also blasted Warner's failure to impose music taxes on exhibitors. See page 18.

MGM Policy

Motion Picture Daily said on Thursday, in a dispatch from Hollywood:

A new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sales policy under which the company's obligations in deliveries to exhibitors will be what it actually releases will swing into effect for the new season.

The change, credited to Al Lichtman, is designed to eliminate hangover product and keep MGM output complete within each season. In paving the way for the change, the company is revamping its releasing program for the remainder of this season and is asking exhibitors to conform. Mr. Lichtman said the changes are slight and exhibitors generally are agreeing to them.

For years MGM has fallen behind on releases, although it occasionally has regained ground. Mr. Lichtman pointed out that 57, or the company's greatest number in any one year, are on the schedule for the period from last July to next August. Changes in star values and material, thereby necessitating changes in plans, plus the intention of clearing the decks from now on, are background reasons for the new setup.

Of the 50 sold this season, MGM sales forces are asking theatre owners to cancel the following 10: one Clark Gable, two Joan Crawfords, two Jean Harlows, one Grace Moore, one musical ("The Great Ziegfeld"), "The Forty Days of Musa Dagh" and one Jeanette MacDonald.

In place of this group, the company is offering: "Captain Courageous," with Freddie Bartholomew; "The Unguarded Hour" and "His Brother's Wife," with Franchot Tone; "The Lady Comes to Town," with Joan Crawford and Clark Gable; "Piccadilly Jim," with Robert Taylor and Rosalind Russell; Madge Evans, Roland Young, Chester Morris and Ted Healy in "Speed"; Myrna Loy and Robert Montgomery in "Love on the Run," and "Night in Glengyle."

Tax Suits Settled

With the simultaneous filing of stipulations by the board of tax appeals, it was announced in Washington Wednesday that the Government had settled its tax suits against Harry M., Jack L. and Albert Warner. The Government had claimed fractions of the alleged deficiencies on their 1930 incomes.

The three had each inherited 13,333 shares of capital stock in Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., from the estate of Sam Warner, a brother. The Government sought to assess them for profits allegedly received in sales of these securities.

A deficiency of $229,517 was levied against Jack L. Warner and settled by agreement for $35,000. He paid a federal income tax of $155,014 in 1930.

Harry M. Warner was assessed $229,997, but the Government settled for $30,000 in stipulation. He already had paid a tax of $161,103 for that year.

A similar settlement of $30,000 was agreed to by Albert Warner, against whom a claim for $222,325 had been levied. He previously had paid a federal tax of $177,690 on his 1930 income.

Damage Clause

The Illinois appellate court on Wednesday handed down a sweeping decision in favor of Paramount, upholding the damage clause in the standard exhibition contract, in an action by Paramount against George and Jean T. Gehring, operators of the Rosewood theatre, Chicago.

The tribunal reversed the municipal court's ruling of Feb. 8, 1934, in favor of the Gehrings and gave Paramount judgment for $3,073.

This Week in Pictures

STUDIO FIRE. View of the Elstree plant of British & Dominions after fire had wrecked stage buildings occupied jointly by B. & D. and British International. The main BIP studio, to the left of this area, was not affected. Insurance covered all losses, officials said.

MARRIED. Nat Ross, manager for Jack Holt and an associate producer at Universal, and his bride, Audrene Brier, until recently a Paramount contract player. They met while both were working on a Columbia picture four years ago.

GLORIFIED. Three American beauties who add to the Ziegfeldian mood of MGM's "The Great Ziegfeld." Immediately above, exhibiting a tendency toward piracy, is Maxine Cantway. The adjoining portraits are of (top) Vanita Vardon, a Georgian, and Jane Halsey, Milwaukee.

PRODUCTION UNIT ADDED. As a ten-year contract was signed between Walter Wanger and United Artists, calling for the distribution of Wanger productions through UA. In front: Charles Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Wanger and Roy Disney. Rear: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Samuel Goldwyn, John Hay Whitney, David O. Selznick, Jesse L. Lasky and Douglas Fairbanks, Sr. The contract goes into effect about July 1.

WON BY SCREEN. Jean Sennett, late of "Valley Forge," New York stage play, pictured on her arrival in Hollywood. She is a new Warner player.

TO MAKE PICTURE IN ENGLAND. Boris Karloff, exponent of the stark and eerie in screen entertainment, looking quite different indeed from the way the public knows him as he sailed from New York, bound for the Gaumont British studio to star in "The Man Who Lived Again."

WEATHER ZERO. Or thereabouts, when Wallace Beery landed in Chicago en route East. The MGM star, who is a licensed transport pilot himself, is shown congratulating Capt. Wayne C. Williams, TWA pilot, on a happy landing. Beery is scheduled to make personal appearances in a number of cities for three weeks.

DOUBLE CHOICE. Maurice Chevalier as Paragot in the Toeplitz production, "The Beloved Vagabond." At his right is Margaret Lockwood, who portrays Blanquette in the English version, to be released in America by Gaumont-British. At his left is Helene Robert, who is Blanquette in the French version.

TO STUDY HOLLYWOOD METHODS. Harcourt Templeman and Sinclair Hill of Grosvenor Sound Films, British producing company, who are planning to come to America the last of March to study production and conditions on this side. Their latest picture is "The Cardinal," starring Matheson Lang.

MILLION SAVING TO STUDIO IN SOUND MAY AID THEATRE

RCA's New Schedule Provides for Generally Lower Rates; Erpi Soon Making New Cost Agreement with MGM

Revision of recording royalties by RCA Photophone and progressive contract modifications by Electrical Research Products, Inc., will mean a saving of a minimum of $1,000,000 a year to motion picture producers. The new RCA charges, which became effective February 15, are outright to all licensees, while those by Erpi have been granted to two large companies and are being negotiated with others.

To exhibitors, the significance of the modifications is that they may at least be made the basis for elimination or sharp revision of the score charge which theatres have been paying and protesting since the beginning of talking pictures.

RCA's revisions, given in full in the acompanying text of the notice issued to licensees, mark the company's first major move since 1928 to become a principal factor in sound recording in Hollywood, where its activity had been limited by the fact that Erpi, a subsidiary of Western Electric and sub-subsidiary of American Telephone and Telegraph Company, at the very outset of audible films obtained the recording business of all large companies except RCA's affiliate, RKO.

Revision also in the foreign field is presaged by the forthcoming visit to America of Dr. H. Henkel of Tobis Klangfilm, Berlin. An agreement made some years ago allocating the recording and reproducing and patent rights in some European countries has not been altogether satisfactory to the German factors, American sound companies have heard.

RCA's new rates, generally lower than those heretofore in effect, come at a time when Erpi has been making changes in contracts which will amount to substantial reductions in recording costs for each major company licensee.

While Erpi officials emphasized that those modifications are not the result of RCA's threats to sue Erpi over its alleged monopoly, Erpi's rates are now more nearly competitive but higher in some categories than those of its competitor, it was said. The legal department of a large film company, an Erpi licensee, estimated RCA's new royalties equal a saving of 25 per cent, after Erpi's annual minimum of $100,000 per company is deducted.

Investigated Erpi Contracts

RCA's line of attack against Erpi's virtual control of motion picture sound recording early last autumn took the form of a "private" investigation by its representatives of the Erpi contracts with the studios. They sought to determine if any restrictive clauses existed in Erpi licenses which barred or restrained competition in the licensing of recording equipment. Instead of resorting to any such course, however, RCA's rate revisions apparently are the means by which the company hopes to obtain its share of the recording business.

The possible effect of RCA's new schedule and further refinements in quality of sound, according to a member of the producers' committee dealing with the situation, will be that some corporations may limit the use of Erpi recording equipment to contractual requirements and use RCA recording in addition. A reduction in Erpi's royalty rates is also possible, he said.

However, Erpi this week said that its "basic royalty rates and patent protection have not been changed" and added that "no changes are contemplated."

For the last 12 months Erpi has been revamping its license contracts effected in 1928, and while it is resulting in substantial economies to the producers, the company described these savings as "theoretical" and the changes as merely clarifying, in the light of experience, legal points and ambiguities which have been accumulating through the years, with the basic agreement remaining the same.

Erpi progressively is granting all producers modifications in harmony with the concessions extended to Warner Brothers in settlement of its long disputed $50,000,000 claim against Erpi over royalties and given to Paramount a year

RCA's New Recording Rates Based on Film Running Time

Text of a notice issued by RCA relating to the new schedule of rates for RCA recording and received by customers and prospective customers follows:

All sound pictures recorded on RCA equipment and released on and after February 15th, 1936, will be subject to the following revised distribution charges:

The per reel royalty charge will be replaced by a distribution charge based upon the number of minutes running time, at normal speed, represented in the negative as cut for release printing.

The distribution charge will vary in accordance with the classification of the particular picture. This charge will be as follows:

ORIGINAL ENGLISH LANGUAGE VERSION MADE IN THE UNITED STATES

(All quotations on a per minute basis)

1. Feature pictures having a negative cost of more than $50,000	$54.00
2. Feature pictures having a negative cost of less than $50,000	27.00
Or 10 per cent of the negative cost with a minimum charge of $1,000
3. Short subjects	27.00
Or 10 per cent of the negative cost with a minimum charge of $20.00 per minute
4. Serials	13.50
5. Newsreels	10.80
6. Intermediate purpose picture (i.e., industrial, educational, etc., where not used for motion picture audience purposes)	9.00

NOTE: Under the above method of figuring distribution charges, Producer is not limited to former maximum of 1,000 feet per reel. Any footage over this amount may be used by paying the additional normal running time rate represented by such additional footage. Conversely, if a reel does not contain the usual 1,000 feet, distribution charges will be figured only on the running time per minute represented by the actual footage, at normal running speed, contained thereon.

Distribution charges shall be calculated by the following formula:

Running time per minute or major fraction thereof multiplied by the applicable rate per minute.

Example: Eight minutes and thirty seconds shall be considered to be eight minutes running time.

Eight minutes and thirty-one seconds shall be considered nine minutes running time.

All distribution charges are due and payable to RCA upon release of picture.

Upon payment of this one distribution charge, the producer will be entitled to the following:

1. To use, distribute, lease and sell sound pictures recorded on RCA equipment in all countries of the world except Germany, Danzig, Saar Basin, Memel, Austria, Hungary, Switzerland, Czecho-Slovakia, Holland, Dutch East Indies, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Jugoslavia, Roumania and Bulgaria (herein called the German Territory), the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland. In so far as it is in a position to assent, RCA assents to the use, distribution, lease and sale by the Producer in German Territory and in Canada and Newfoundland of sound pictures produced with RCA equipment, provided that Producer obtains from those having the right to grant the same a license or an authorization to use, distribute, lease and sell such sound pictures in German Territory and in Canada and Newfoundland.

2. The privilege of making dubbed versions of sound pictures without additional distribution charges provided the total of the distribution charges for the original version thereof is paid to RCA.

3. The privilege of making trailers when such trailers are used solely for the purpose of advertising a sound picture on which the total of the distribution charge is paid to RCA.

GENERAL

The distribution charge for original versions of sound pictures in which any language other than the English language shall predominate shall be 50 per cent of the above rates.

The distribution charge shall be paid on the running time represented in the negative of each complete sound picture released in any case where the whole or any part of the sound track accompanying or used in connection with any such sound picture as cut for release printing is a record of sound recorded by RCA equipment.

Suitable screen credit in accordance with the methods generally used in the industry shall be given in the form approved by RCA for sound pictures in connection with which RCA equipment is used.

The producer shall pay in addition to any distribution charge which shall become due and payable upon release of any sound picture, the current facility rates for the hire and use of RCA's mobile or studio recording facilities and personnel.

SOUND RECORDING ROYALTIES PARED

ago in compromise of Erpi's $1,875,000 claim in the Paramount bankruptcy proceedings. It is contemplated that all contracts will be uniform, it was said.

A new recording license agreement soon will be entered into with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, incorporating the uniform changes which include reduced rates for the domestic recording of dubbed and foreign versions and trailers. The new contract, which will amend or supersede MGM's 15-year agreement expiring in 1945, has been in negotiation for the past year. The changes also will be made available to other Erpi licensees as soon as negotiations are concluded. These include Columbia, Universal, United Artists, Twentieth Century-Fox and Educational.

Retroactive to 1934

All new agreements will be retroactive to the time of the settlement with Warner late in 1934 and will be consummated upon adjustment of the royalties paid to Erpi in the interim.

The amended licenses are regarded by the producers as generally broader in their terms, and are understood to incorporate these provisions:

1. Modification permitting the royalty minimum of $100,000 annually for domestic recording to include also foreign distribution royalties (which would permit domestic recording to some extent with non-Erpi equipment).

2. Waiving of double royalties which have been demanded in the event of recording with other equipment based on the Erpi patents.

3. Erpi licensees may now use non-Erpi equipment in test rooms.

4. Elimination of the requirement of a separate Erpi recording unit for each sound stage.

RCA's new rate policy replaces the reel royalty charge with a distribution charge based on the running time of the negative. The new charges vary according to classification of the feature and the negative cost, with a division at $50,000. Companies making features costing less than that amount will benefit largely. The royalty ranges from $54 a minute for films costing more than $50,000 to $9 a minute for serials, newsreels and educational and industrial films.

Designed to take advantage of the Erpi modifications and to widen RCA's market among the producers, the new schedule immediately will apply to the company's licensees, including RKO, Republic, Pathe, Walt Disney, Darmour Productions and several smaller independents. The new rates particularly effect economies for the small producers.

RCA Rates Contrasted

RCA's new rate is equal to $599 a reel for world distribution, as against the former royalty of $500 a reel for domestic distribution plus 20 per cent for world distribution, or a total of $600.

While RCA's new basic rate is slightly higher for domestic distribution only, the producers do not have to pay extra for dubbing versions or trailers. There is, however, a charge of 50 per cent of the standard rate for original versions of foreign language films.

The large producers now are awaiting a move by Erpi to meet some of RCA's economies on a competitive basis.

Under the contract adjustments, Erpi's recording charge for features remains $500 a reel, and there have been no changes in the basic rate for short subjects and newsreels. The foreign distribution royalty, however, was revised from $500 for world rights to a proportionate fraction thereof on the basis of a breakdown of world distribution into 48 foreign territories.

Agreements Liberalized

RCA also has liberalized its license agreements for exhibitors in recent years, both as to installation and service, with the result that Erpi's theatre accounts have been demanding similar adjustments.

With a view to revision of the Paris agreement covering distribution of recording and reproducing royalties as between American and German companies in Germany and Austria chiefly, Doctor Henkel of Tobis Klangfilm is due in New York in about two weeks to conduct negotiations with the American sound companies. The agreement, which involves underlying American and German sound patents, has not been fully carried out, the companies say, with a complicated situation as a result.

Whitford Drake, vice-president of Erpi in charge of such matters, is due to return next week from London where he has been conferring at the company's European headquarters.

NO NEW SETTLEMENT MOVE, SAYS ERPI

Reports that a settlement is likely in Vocafilm's $65,000,000 damage action against AT&T, Western Electric and Erpi brought comment of the Erpi legal department that Vocafilm had suggested a settlement from time to time but has made no overtures recently. The case was scheduled for trial this winter.

In this action David R. Hochreich contends the defendants prevented consummation of an equipment contract with Educational Pictures involving $21,000,000.

Other small equipment firms are suing Erpi and its corporate affiliates for damages aggregating $67,000,000, involving control of sound patents.

Hodgson Sues Over Rights To "Music Going Round"

William Harold (Red) Hodgson, composer and musician, of Chicago, filed suit in the United States district court this week against Eddie Farley and Mike Riley, alleging that "The Music Goes 'Round and Around," which has been attributed to them, is identical in every respect, except in title, with his original composition, "Orange Number."

Defendants in the suit, in addition to Mr. Farley and Mr. Riley, are the Columbia Pictures Corporation, Rockwell O'Keefe, Inc., distributor of the song, and Select Music Publications, Inc., publisher of the song.

Date Copyright, Booking Hearings

Dates for hearings on copyright and block booking measures were announced in Washington this week. Apparently spurred to action by the petition to discharge his committee from further consideration of copyright legislation, Representative Sirovich of New York, chairman of the House patents committee, announced that hearings on copyright would open February 25th.

While Representative Zioncheck of Washington, who introduced the petition, is not expected to secure sufficient support to make his move good, his action served to center attention upon the tactics pursued by Sirovich and appear to have brought about an entire change of plan, whereby the full committee will hold the hearing instead of a subcommittee as originally contemplated.

The hearings will be open to discussion of all copyright legislation, including the Duffy bill which was passed by the Senate last session and which it seemed the House committee was prepared to ignore in favor of the bill introduced last month by Representative Daly of Pennsylvania, a member of the committee.

Advocates and opponents of block booking will be given an opportunity to present their arguments on the practice before a Senate group headed by Senator Neely of West Virginia on February 27th.

Announcement that hearings would be held on that date on the Neely bill prohibiting block booking and blind booking was made Tuesday.

Efforts of Administration leaders to bring the Congressional session to a close about April 15th are seen as threatening either copyright or block booking legislation enactment at this session, as it is unlikely hearings scheduled could be completed and agreement reached before that time.

Net of A T & T Up $1,352,530

The net operating income of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company for the year ended December 31 showed an increase of $1,352,530 over 1934, according to the report to the Federal Communications Commission. The gross income for the year showed an increase of $4,801,535.

The report to the Federal Communications Commission follows:

	1935	1934
December gross.....	$8,475,473	$7,577,284
Net operating income.	1,515,374	1,696,065
12 months' gross.....	94,249,443	89,447,908
Net operating income.	15,862,436	14,509,906

While December grosses showed an increase of $898,189 over a year ago, the net operating income was $180,691 lower.

SHELVING SINCLAIR LEWIS FILM EXPLODES CHARGES AND DENIALS

Author Says Hays Barred Picture; MPPDA Head Says MGM Made Decision Alone; Mayer Says Cost Was Reason

Sinclair Lewis, author of best-selling "Main Street," bulky "Babbit" and the current "It Can't Happen Here," made Page One of last Sunday's newspapers when he issued to the press in Washington, D. C., a flint-studded statement to the effect that production by MGM of a motion picture version of his novel by Playwright Sidney Howard had been banned by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America on the eve of actual shooting following expenditure of $200,000 in preliminary preparation.

Will H. Hays, en route from Hollywood to New York, promptly issued outspoken denial, described the Lewis statement as "full of inaccuracies."

Cabled dispatches quickly quoted unnamed spokesmen for the German and Italian governments as "pleased" with the reported abandonment of production.

Doubleday, Doran, publishers of the book, were into the newspapers overnight with advertising matter exploiting sale of the novel at $2.50 the copy.

Ann Watkins, Inc., New York, literary agent for Mr. Lewis, said that rights for stage production of the work have not been sold, and declined to amplify the statement.

As early as January 30th, according to Victor Knox, writing in the Buffalo (N. Y.) News, "Will Hays 'politely but firmly' requested that Metro table indefinitely its plans for filming Sinclair Lewis' recent and important contribution to political thought, 'It Can't Happen Here' . . . the situation described in the novel 'might tend to incite mob uprisings'."

Citing as information sources reports purported to have geen received from Playwright Howard, Agent Watkins and his publishers, Arthur Lewis' statement proceeded at characteristic, wordy length to assert:

"Any film version of 'It Can't Happen Here' has been categorically forbidden by Will Hays. The final action follows several weeks of negotiation. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer bought the film rights to the book outright in early autumn, actually on the strength of the manuscript and before the book appeared. I am therefore financially uninterested in this decision.

"Today I have heard from my agent in New York, Miss Ann Watkins, Mr. Howard, and from my publishers, Doubleday, Doran, that the final decision has been made to shelve the whole business. The reason officially given to Miss Watkins, as contained in her telegram to me, is ' "Can't Happen Here" definitely shelved in fear of international politics and threat of boycott abroad.' Mr. Howard confirms this,

Whose Business Is The Motion Picture?

by TERRY RAMSAYE

This week's furore about the sacred cause of freedom and the screen, beginning with a statement from Mr. Sinclair Lewis to the effect that his novel, "It Can't Happen Here," is being suppressed as motion picture material, will be reverberating around the editorial pages and in the international press for months to come. Because of the fame of the novel and the eminence of its author there is considerable probability that the matter will be permanently preserved as a specimen of citation in the tradition of screen criticism—along with all of the erroneous concepts of comments involved.

In essence Mr. Lewis' statement says that Mr. Will Hays has forbidden the making of the proposed picture, after Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer had it ready for the camera, for "fear of international politics and boycotts abroad," also incidentally as possibly offensive to the Republican party here. The New York Herald Tribune presented a statement from an unnamed M-G-M official saying that the picture had been indefinitely postponed. The New York Times quoted an assistant to Mr. Hays, three thousand miles from Mr. Hays and Hollywood, who said the report of suppression by Mr. Hays was "untrue." The same paper also presented a quotation from Mr. Lucien Hubbard, M-G-M associate producer, saying he had heard of no ban and that unless it was otherwise ordered the picture would go into work this week. Someone is considerably mistaken.

Meanwhile the denials are substantially irrelevant, and the story has gone around the world. Anyway, obviously somebody in Hollywood said something.

"It Can't Happen Here" is a best seller—which means that it has been sold to about enough people to make a good week's attendance at the Music Hall. Mr. Lewis describes his book as propaganda for American Democracy. He sees the decision to shelve the project to put it on the screen as "a fantastic exhibition of folly and cowardice." Mr. Lewis is a notably sincere person. Like many, and perhaps most, vigorous writers he often sees issues and persons in the violent contrast of silhouette depiction, solid blacks, pure whites, no halftones. In the more real world of fact it is often the halftones that make the picture.

Mr. Lewis sees Art, Expression, Thought, grabbed by the neck and throttled by a czar, a William-the-Terrific, no less. Human rights are crushed under heel. A great medium is hamstrung. Democratic America cringes before the influence of Herr Hitler and the Duce.

There are, however, a number of seemingly relevant facts, some of which do not precisely support that view.

The motion picture as made in America depends for its prosperity on being international merchandise. There are several foreign markets where Mr. Lewis' novel is not likely to enjoy a very wide circulation. Mr. Lewis can afford, and profitably afford, to write for minorities. The screen has not gone into that business, yet.

Mr. Hays is the head of a trade association of which M-G-M is a member. That association concerns itself with the problems of the manufacturing business with which it is occupied. There is frequent occasion for attention to policies and product which may prove to have adverse influence on the business. This is typical of trade associations.

The producing corporation concerned has nothing in its charter pertaining to social, political or propaganda service. Its stockholders have entrusted its officers with a job of making profitable return on investment by the making and purveying of motion pictures for amusement. It chances, incidentally, that they had been doing rather well at that for a number of years. They have paid Mr. Lewis for the screen rights to his novel, and, it is reported, have invested a total of something like $200,000 in the project thus far, including scripts, casting and sets. The figure sounds conservative. The sum is not devastatingly important. Hollywood junks items of that size attributing the ban to these and also to domestic political grounds.

BAN "PLEASES" GERMANY AND ITALY

"I think this decision raises an extremely important and critical question concerning free speech and free opinion in the United States.

"Mr. Howard further reports that Mr. Hays told the producers that he didn't know which way the next election might go and that the industry didn't intend to offend the Republicans. Now all of this seems to me a fantastic exhibition of folly and cowardice.

Fascism Target of Story

"'It Can't Happen Here' has been read precisely because it deals with something that is very much in the public mind.

"It is strongly non-political in the sense of being non-partisan. It is a propaganda book, I admit, but it is propaganda for only one thing, American democracy. In describing the forces which eventually rallied against Fascism in my imaginative picture, I made the anti-Fascist leader a Republican supported by many Democrats.

"Democracy is certainly on the defensive when two European dictators, without opening their mouths or knowing anything about the issue, can shut down an American film, causing a loss of $200,000 to the producer."

Says Company Made Decision

In a formal statement issued in Chicago on Monday Mr. Hays said:

"The association took no action to prevent this picture. The decision in respect to the production of the picture was made by the company—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"The statement reported to have been made by Mr. Lewis is full of inaccuracies. If he was quoted correctly, he must have been misinformed.

"There never was any question of this story affecting the Republican party in any way, and no one, including myself, ever made any statement to that effect."

Also on Monday, Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production, said: "Will Hays has not banned production of the Lewis picture. We are not planning to make the picture at the present time because it would cost too much. The Hays office has not said a thing about it, one way or the other. If all this talk continues perhaps we will find it profitable to make the picture at once."

Precedents Cited

Screen precedent in conflict with the Lewis theories on large producers' attitude toward use of the screen for what he calls controversial politics is present in the case of "Gabriel Over the White House," released by MGM on March 31, 1933, and "The President Vanishes," a Paramount production released Jan. 11, 1935. There is, likewise, the record of frankly stated cause and effect in the withdrawal of "The Devil Is a Woman," at request of the Spanish government, and in the decision to abandon production of "The Forty Days of Musa Dagh" on receipt of official protest from Turkey.

Whose Business Is The Motion Picture?

regularly. They are part of normal cost in creative operation. If now, whether or not by official or unofficial advice of Mr. Hays or any other person, it has been decided to abandon the project it has all of the vast significance that would attach to a decision by Mr. Henry Ford not to make an eighteen cylinder car, or of Armour and Company to discontinue a brand of ham.

Mr. Lewis and his ideas are not being suppressed. His book is widely circulated—and will gain not a little additional attention by reason of his current expression. The world is still his.

It is probable that Mr. Lewis, and many, many others, do not understand the status of the motion picture, in the eyes, or even minds, of his and our beloved and so infernally democratic public. If a reader of his works, for instance, takes violent exception to the content, that reader is merely annoyed with Mr. Lewis. He is not outraged at Doubleday, Doran & Company, or at the whole art of the printed word. But the motion picture spectator, when he is annoyed, is annoyed with "the damned movies" and likely as not the theatre where he saw the annoying picture.

Some recent experiences of the newsreels, leading to a demand from Pennsylvania's exhibitors that the producers eliminate all political and controversial material, are relevant.

Also Mr. Lewis might try to take the position of an executive trying to operate a business in the face of continuous menace of politicians and those who make instruments of politicians. If his publishers were continuously on a battlefront defending the book business from attempts at punitive taxation, from measures of censorship, from measures addressed at nationalization of their industry, they would perhaps at times weigh the possible effect of product of political implication and influence. The motion picture business, it chances, is vulnerable to, and on occasion menaced by, all the governments there are, abroad and at home, including national, state and city legislators.

When the screen shall have achieved the status and rights of the printed word it may be assumed to have then acquired the same responsibilities that are assumed to go with what is loosely called "the freedom of the press." That "freedom of the press," however, seems to consist considerably in enabling a publisher to say a lot of things that some people do not like in order to interest the customers who want it said.

Mr. Lewis also makes quite a point of observing that there is much propaganda film abroad, pro-Fascist and pro-Communist. That, it must be admitted, has nothing whatever to do with the amusement industry. The films concerned are available in the American market but the picture public, as proven at the box office, is not amused thereby.

Since Mr. Lewis is himself a manufacturer of amusement merchandise it would be proper enough for him to hold and promulgate opinion about the business judgment involved in the decision to put aside a screen version of his wares. If he thinks that Mr. Hays and M-G-M are mistaken on the ground that "It Can't Happen Here" would be so profitable a screen success that the risks and consequences they are said to foresee are negligible, he is entitled to say so, with as much authority as a novelist may expect to have in industry. It is just possible that a headline "Lewis Says Movies Do Not Know How to Make Money" might get attention, but not on page one. Mr. Lewis' theme of "crushed by czar" is, as demonstrated, the old hookum sure fire material. It is, however, rather more in the pattern of Upton Sinclair than of Sinclair Lewis.

Meanwhile the screen is not closed to anybody who has anything to say. A motion picture does not require the seal and certification of the Production Code Administration to go into circulation, as there is ample evidence to be had in any community. Any person who is so moved can make and present to the public a motion picture. If the public likes it the picture will do very well.

Years ago there used to be a much worn phrase of derision: "Go hire a hall." It may now be paraphrased: "Go buy a camera."

Koplar-Warner Testimony Ends

Sam Morris, Warner Brothers director, and Thomas Garrett, New York attorney, were the last witnesses to testify as the Harry Koplar action against the Warner brothers and their organization's directorate came to a close in the United States district court in Wilmington Monday afternoon. Mr. Koplar is seeking to have the directors of the company, including the three Warner brothers, Harry M., Albert and Jack L., return some of the $14,000,000, said by Mr. Koplar to have been given the value of the stock given in 1928 by the company, part to Renraw, Inc., a family holding corporation of the Brothers Warner, and part to Goldman-Sachs and Company, investment brokers.

Mr. Morris, who testified just before the trial closed, told of a promise made to pay Waddill Catchings, another Warner director, a sum of money in addition to the commission due him for his services to the organization.

Mr. Garrett testified as to the fairness of the compromise that was ratified at the annual stockholders' meeting of the company last December. His testimony centered upon the employment contract between Renraw and the company. The stockholders at their last annual meeting approved a settlement of the controversy between the company and Renraw, Inc., over remuneration for services of the three Warner brothers. Under the terms of the settlement approved, the Warner company was to receive from Renraw 100,000 shares of Warner Pictures stock and agree to pay the legal fees and expenses of Max Goldberg who brought the suit against the company as stockholders.

Late last week, Harry M. Warner, president of the company, took the stand and his testimony was practically the history of the business lives of his brothers and himself from the time when they were "peddling" America's earliest films until the present. He also characterized the $30,000 fee to Mr. Catchings as "fair compensation for what was furnished."

Stanleigh P. Freedman, another director of the company, also testified and substantiated the Warners' claim that there had been no tampering with the directorate.

Following the testimony of Mr. Morris and Mr. Garrett, Judge John P. Nields set May 5 as the date for argument. The motion for dismissal, which was made by Joseph L. Proskauer Monday, will also be heard on that date.

Supply Theme Music for Early Motion Pictures

Theme music written and adapted by the music department of the Museum of Modern Art Film Library, New York, is being supplied for early motion pictures such as "Gertie the Dinosaur," 1909; "A Fool There Was," which brought Theda Bara into prominence, and Mary Pickford's "The New York Hat," 1908. Miss Alden Beach, composer, who recently returned from a study of music in relation to emotion in Hollywood, is assisted by Theodore Huff in arranging the scores.

RKO Claim Hearing Delayed to Feb. 25

Negotiations for the settlement of the $9,000,000 Rockefeller Center claim against RKO are being continued, necessitating another postponement of the federal court hearing on the exceptions of the RKO trustees to the allowance of the claim at that amount. The hearing, which was scheduled for this week before Federal Judge William Bondy, has been set back until February 25.

Indications are that the hearing of the trustee's exceptions will not proceed while the settlement negotiations remain active enough to promise an early agreement between Rockefeller Center and RKO. The huge claim is based on the default of RKO's leases on the Music Hall, Center and office space in the RKO Building.

FWC Hearing Ends; Decision Reserved

Federal Judge James Alger Fee in Los Angeles late last week reserved decision on the petition of T. L. Tally and Corbar Corporation to have the Fox West Coast Bankruptcy adjudication set aside. Judge Fee, who has been hearing argument of counsel for the past two weeks, stated while his mind is clear on a great many points he will need time to investigate the voluminous records of the original proceedings.

In the concluding arguments, William H. Neblett, counsel for the petitioners, claimed that the bankruptcy has never closed because of the fact that the government has a tax lien of $1,000,000 against the bankrupt.

Announcement Follows Naming of Gabe Yorke as Studio Publicity Head; Unit Pro'd'n Trend

Winfield Sheehan has reached an agreement with John E. Otterson, president of Paramount, to produce 10 pictures annually for Paramount over a period of years. Word of the arrangements came out of Hollywood this week following weeks of reports and rumors, contradictory at times, that Mr. Sheehan would join Paramount as a producer or as head of all production at that studio, following his resignation from Fox when the Joseph M. Schenck-Darryl F. Zanuck combination moved in to form Twentieth Century-Fox.

Mr. Sheehan has been inactive for several months now, having been away in Europe on a honeymoon and vacationing on his California ranch.

Gabe Yorke, formerly associated with Mr. Sheehan at the Fox Studio, this week was appointed advertising and publicity director of the Paramount studios to succeed William Pine, who had resigned to become an executive aide to Cecil B. DeMille. Mr. De Mille is scheduled to produce six or nine pictures annually under the studio units system. It also had been variously reported for months that Mr. Yorke would join Paramount as an aide to Mr. Sheehan, if and when he joined that company.

Under the terms of his new contract with Paramount, Mr. Sheehan will have an independent unit and will produce at the General Service Studios in Hollywood under the title of Winfield Sheehan Productions. By the terms of the agreement, four pictures will be handled personally by the producer, while the remaining six will have his supervision.

The appointment of Mr. Sheehan follows closely on the naming of William LeBaron as temporary head of production at the Paramount plant to succeed Ernst Lubitsch, who returns to active production himself in charge of a unit.

All of these moves point to the carrying out of Mr. Otterson's plans in the direction of unit production instead of mass production under a single head.

Mr. Sheehan, long a prominent figure in the industry, was born in Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 24, 1883. He was educated at St. Canisius College there and joined the Buffalo Courier as a reporter. He was later employed in the same capacity in New York on the World and the Evening World, until he left the field of journalism to become secretary to the Fire Commissioner of New York in 1910. He later held the same position with the Police Commissioner of New York until 1914, when he organized the studios of Fox Film Corporation in Hollywood. He then organized the American, European and other foreign distribution branches of the company along with the organization's newsreel.

In 1921 Mr. Sheehan was made vice-president and general manager of the company and remained in that capacity until his resignation last year.

SONG WRITERS LAUNCH ATTACKS UPON WARNER MUSIC LICENSING

Irving Caesar Demands Company Return to ASCAP, Protests Failure to Tax Exhibitors and Warner Prod'n Interests

Warner Brothers' failure so far to impose music taxes on exhibitors and the company's interest in music as motion picture producers were among the main targets of a blast against Warner discharged this week by the authors and composers, through Irving Caesar, a recognized spokesman, who demanded that Warner immediately return to membership in the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Mr. Caesar said he spoke for 99 per cent of the song writers.

ASCAP expressed itself in sympathy with this attack and also with a protest of the Song Writers' Protective Association censuring Warner and demanding for its members a partnership interest not only in the royalties but also in the policies of the music licensing agency.

Apparently nearing the exploding point, the many-sided dispute resulting from Warner's secession from ASCAP eight weeks ago also produced these developments:

1. The attacks of the forces fighting Warner were accepted as a prelude to court actions to block the company's independent music licensing agency. This would open the entire music copyright situation, which involves exhibitors and motion picture producers.

2. Warner's campaign of litigation against the radio networks and individual broadcasters has halted temporarily, no infringement suits having been filed in more than a week. Those already filed are not expected to come to trial for many months.

3. Warner plans to put into effect the rate policies which the broadcasters have long been demanding from ASCAP.

Mr. Caesar protested the suits "for absurdly large damages" Warner has brought against broadcasters and charged that Warner seeks amounts it does "not hope or expect to recover, and in order to make headlines you subject the whole principle of copyright to the hazard of drastic regulation by Congress."

Sees Law Change

"You know and your legal department knows," he informed Warner, "that it is unheard of and never happened that a court awarded damages of $5,000 for a single act of infringement by illegal public performance of the small rights in a copyright. . . .

He charged Warner has brought these suits not as music publishers but as film producers, which, he said, and particularly Warner, have been the beneficiaries of "millions of dollars worth of free advertising given their motion picture productions as a result of the music written for those productions by your composers and authors." He said Warner disregarded that value "and the service of the men who made it possible for you to get it."

Mr. Caesar's tirade and the protest of the song writers' organizations were in the form of letters to Herman Starr, Warner vice-president, in reply to one he sent to song writers which recounted the company's "efforts and progress" in connection with the licensing of the performing rights.

Among other things, Mr. Starr informed them that as of February 5 a total of 216 stations had signed Warner contracts, exclusive of those controlled by Columbia and National Broadcasting networks but including 24 stations on the National network and 20 in the Columbia chain.

Per Use System

Mr. Starr also said that the present three-month arrangement with radio, expiring April 1, will be followed, if possible, by a per-use (or per piece) basis of charging which is being worked out. The result of such a system would be that the composer, author and publisher would receive the proper share for each use of a composition, Mr. Starr explained.

Pursuant to a resolution of the Council of the Song Writers' Protective Association and over the signature of Sigmund Romberg, president, the organization criticized Warner's efforts to dispose of performing rights to radio without consulting the authors or composers.

"While your letter recognizes the interest of the song writers in 50 per cent of the proceeds derived from the use of their songs in radio," the association's letter declared, "yet we resent the implication, both from your letter and your recent activities, that the rights in question belong to you or your subsidiaries to handle in any way you see fit.

Mr. Caesar's letter went fully into the various composer-Warner issues which have been raised, and brought up some new ones. Besides being a noted composer, Mr. Caesar has his own music publishing company, but many of his hit songs such as "I Want to Be Happy" and "Lady, Play Your Mandolin" are controlled by Warner. He is a member of the ASCAP board and of the song writers' association council.

Warner "decided on a course of action and pursued it regardless of our (composers') interests or wishes and the result" is "very substantial damages upon many of us," he charged.

Legal Action Hinted

Mr. Caesar served notice that none of the contracts with radio have been "assented to by me, or, as far as I know, by any other of your 'writers,'" and that if any are in violation of his legal rights, "all rights of action are hereby reserved."

After saying he had been informed that Warner does not intend to tax motion picture theatres, Mr. Caesar demanded: "By what right do you waive my rights to compensation from this source when you very well know that motion picture producers are the present owners of your company and this announcement plainly and obviously is a use of these properties for the purpose of producing goodwill for your motion picture producing companies. In other words, you very apparently purpose to utilize a channel which has heretofore been the source of substantial income to composers and authors for your entirely selfish purpose without regard to their interests or their rights, and in a manner which will deprive the composers and authors of this income."

In complete disregard of their rights, he charged, Warner has disrupted a trade custom of more than 20 years' standing in the licensing of the small performing rights and has subjected them to loss of revenue from ASCAP. He demanded that the authors and composers be given a voice, as they have in ASCAP, in determining to whom, for how much and the conditions upon which Warner music will be licensed.

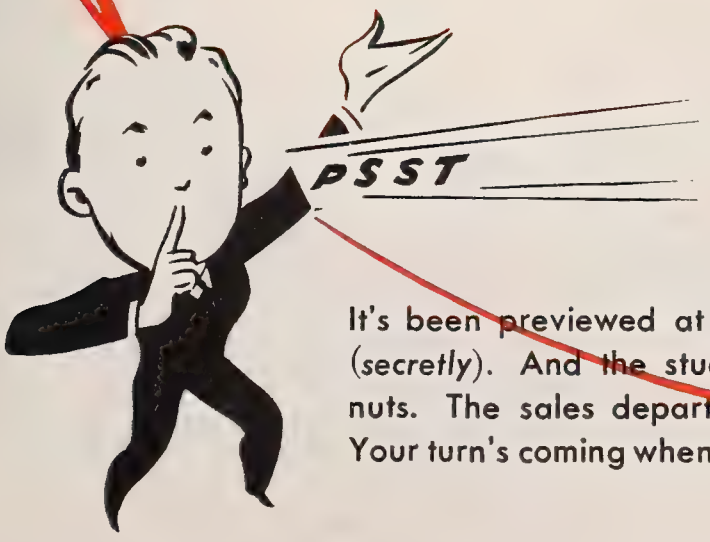
Denies Ownership

Declaring that Warner's music properties are "not wholly yours—either morally or legally," he went on: "As a matter of fact, the nature of your business, utilizing music publishing firms as a mere adjunct to your film producing enterprise changes almost entirely the character of the firms with whom your composers and authors in good faith placed their compositions for publication according to the long prevailing practice of the business. From the legal point of view I need hardly point out to you that authors own a 50 per cent interest in the rights."

He charged Warner had "intimidated" hotels, dance halls and other establishments and had subjected the leading broadcasting stations to a "campaign of terrorization," and that even the 216 stations which signed for Warner music are not broadcasting it. He attacked Warner's plan to charge radio on a "per-use" basis as "wasteful."

"You have created the impression by inference and suggestion that you are the owners of small performing rights in a much greater repertoire than is actually yours," he continued. "One purpose of this letter . . . is to urge that you immediately abandon the position you have taken and even at this late date re-establish, if you can, your affiliation with ASCAP."

LOWER MUSIC TAXES UNDER DISCUSSION



Discussions that may lead to negotiations for lower music taxes for exhibitors were begun over the week end between E. C. Mills, general manager of ASCAP, and a committee consisting of Walter Vincent, circuit head; Y. Frank Freeman, Paramount vice-president in charge of theatre operations, and Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce in New York.

Mr. Vincent reported that the discussion was left "in a fluid state." He said there was no assurance from ASCAP that a reduction might be made as a result of the loss to its repertoire of the Warner music, but the delegation "left with the assurance that there would be no hardship on the exhibitor."

LABOR PROTESTS RESCUE OF HEROINE BY MARINES

But Executives of Military Departments See Publicity and Morale Values in Troops' Act

The motion picture stands to lose the authenticity of official army and navy participation in production as extended cooperatively by the United States Government without charge.

Charges that the use of army and navy units of equipment and personnel in the making of pictures is depriving a large number of actors and technicians of work, and a plea for legislation which would confine the services of soldiers, sailors and marines to military duty, thus restraining them from motion picture appearances, have been laid upon the desk of the Administration at Washington by the American Federation of Labor. Sponsoring the complaint is the Central Labor Council of Los Angeles, to which belong Hollywood studio crafts and actors' organizations.

Apparently all other factions involved have benefited through the cooperation except the workers who complain of losing employment thereby. The producers received from the army and navy forces valuable authentic atmosphere, equipment and personnel; exhibitors presumably benefited accordingly in the higher exploitation standards accruing thereby; the government's forces received considerable favorable propaganda publicity extolling their efficiencies and such.

The outcome of the new move to prevent the figurative timely march of the United States Marines to the rescue of the screen hero and heroine will be made known in the near future when the Senate takes up the Army appropriation bill, passed by the House of Representatives February 14th, and it is seen whether the desired provision prohibiting the War Department from using any of its money to pay personnel or finance loans of equipment for participation in the making of pictures.

Laid Before Department Heads

Complaints regarding the situation were last week laid before the acting heads of the War and Navy Departments at Washington and submitted to Senator Trammel, of Florida, chairman of the naval affairs committee of the Senate. These complaints alleged that the producers were saved vast sums of money through Army and Navy cooperation in the making of films through the loan of equipment and costumes and the use of enlisted and officer personnel. Through the use of military and navy personnel, it was charged, the companies have saved more than $1,000,000 in wages and thousands of actors and extras were deprived of work.

Possibilities of a small "scandal" which may lead some time to a Congressional investigation were seen by Washington observers in the labor men's charges that in the making of at least one picture, Army men were dressed in German uniforms and Army planes repainted in German colors, and that in another the Army wrecked several planes.

The use of military units is not necessary, it was contended, the briefs declaring that nearly 100 pictures were made in the last five years in which naval and military matters were treated, with the use of civilians, while at the same time nearly a score of more or less similar films were produced with government cooperation. If films can be made without government participation, it was argued, there is no need for that participation in the production of any in which anything less than a fleet is required.

Cite Publicity Benefits

Army and Naval officials always have considered participation in the picture making good publicity for their services, and contend that public sentiment regarding military service has been entirely changed by the pictures which have been made from time to time. Before the use of films, it was pointed out, it was difficult to get enlistments from young men of education or culture; in recent years, the educational and cultural level of both Army and Navy have been raised materially, largely because the public generally has been given a new slant on what the service is, does and represents.

In view of the Administration's plans to build up the Army and Navy to new peacetime peaks, it is not likely that anything will be done which would tend to change this attitude, although it is possible somewhat stricter regulations will be imposed, barring the use of military or naval units where they are not absolutely necessary to the stories.

A major argument of the service officials for cooperation with the producers is that it insures the accuracy of representations of military life and prevents misrepresentations which occurred in early movie days and which originally was the primary reason for participation.

Menches Again Heads Akron Exhibitor Unit

Robert C. Menches of the Liberty Theatre has been re-elected president of the Akron Independent Theatre Owners and W. P. Hart was named first vice-president, Charles Stalder second vice-president, J. G. Deetjen, secretary; Robert Paulus, assistant secretary, and Al Ploenes, treasurer. Members of the board of directors picked are Mr. Menches, chairman; Mr. Deetjen, Mr. Ploenes and Mr. Stalder.

The cooperative booking plan presented by Mr. Menches was temporarily tabled as being impractical because of the limited number of independent theatres located in the Akron district.

Warner Offices Moved

The Warner theatre offices in Boston have been moved from the company's exchange to the Statler Hotel.

SIROVICH ATTACKS FOREIGN RESTRICTIONS

Congressman William I. Sirovich of New York, chairman of the House patents committee, is preparing an attack on foreign governments for their restrictions on American films, which he said he would launch on the floor of the House within two weeks.

Hiss address will be in connection with legislation sponsored by the State Department providing for entry of the United States into the international copyright convention. This provision is in the Duffy bill.

While he did not believe that affiliation with the Berne convention would "do us a lot of good," he said he favored entry provided the legislation took into consideration the discrimination by dictatorial countries such as Germany against American authors, composers, publishers and producers.

Insisting that the State Department has been "ineffectual" to protect American producers and artists, Congressman Sirovich said his plan would be to amend the copyright law to give the President the right to promulgate reciprocal restrictions against governments who harass American interests.

"Modern Times" Animates Theatres and Courts

While Charles Chaplin's "Modern Times" was reported hanging up new records at the Rivoli in New York and at Loew's State in Miami, and while the Motion Picture Division of the League of Nations was awarding its star-producer-author-director a gold medal in recognition of his activities as an international screen figure, Judge Alfred C. Baldwin in Superior Court at New Haven, Conn., denied a mandatory injunction sought by Vuono Operating Company, Stamford, against United Artists asking that a print be provided for immediate playdate. The plaintiff said that notice of the film's availability had been received January 31st and the picture had been advertised for exhibition February 14th. United Artists set up that the notice had been sent out in error and corrected by a second notice on February 4th.

The picture is scheduled to open in thirteen Loew houses on February 27th.

Meanwhile, Mr. Chaplin set sail February 17th on the President Coolidge for a rest. He was accompanied by Paulette Goddard and her mother, Mrs. Alta Goddard. "We'll stop at Honolulu. Maybe we'll take a boat there to the South Seas, perhaps Tahiti," said Chaplin. "I want to do some fishing."

Arrival of the Screen Operetta Found Confirmed in "Rose Marie"

Play Made Fluent and Entertaining in Film, After "Naughty Marietta" Manner

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

The screen operetta has definitely arrived. "Naughty Marietta" showed the way, and now Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy have again united their distinguished talents to make "Rose Marie" memorable in the annals of screen musical productions. The music of Rudolf Friml and Herbert Stothart again enchants as it did when "Rose Marie" was produced on the stage more than a decade ago, enhanced by the inspired screen treatment accorded it by the producers.

If there were any doubt that real stage operetta could be enriched through the media of the screen, the Hunt Stromberg production directed by W. S. Van Dyke has confounded the skeptics. "Rose Marie," following the standard set by "Naughty Marietta," is further evidence that film operetta can be made fluent, un-self-conscious, spontaneous and splendidly entertaining. And that is something to be acclaimed by those who purvey pictures as well as by those who survey them.

Like "Naughty Marietta," so too "Rose Marie" was a "natural" for the sound screen. Musically, both operettas had proved sure fire, with melodies that age did not wither nor repetition stale. Visually, they offered a wide range for the camera.

"Rose Marie" carries on where "Naughty Marietta" left off; but to "Naughty Marietta" goes the prerogative of the first born. If it had proved nothing more than the power of pictures to dramatize music, it would have pointed the way to an essential liaison of the visual and the audible. It is because that function is further emphasized and amplified in "Rose Marie" that these comparisons are made.

In what might be called the Prologue to the romantic story, Marie De Flor (Jeanette MacDonald) is presented as a glamorous and pampered prima donna scoring a triumph in Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet" in Montreal. The Waltz Song scene and rapid transitions leading to the finale of the last act reveal Miss MacDonald as an operatic artist of unusual charm and artistry. These scenes are expertly done and authentically staged by William Von Wymetal.

The musical sequence in the hotel immediately following, when Marie sings Herbert Stothart's piquant chanson, "Pardon Me, Madame," gives opportunity for one of those delightful ubiquitous camera musical ensembles which the sound screen has developed as its own unique medium.

Into this sparkling ensemble creeps a tragic note when Boniface, a half-breed. arrives to tell Marie that her brother, Jack Flower, who was in prison in the north woods country, has escaped and killed a Mountie, and is in hilding at the home of the half-breed's mother. Marie decides to go at once with Boniface to aid her brother.

INDIAN LOVE CALL

Recurrent theme in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picturization of the stage play "Rose Marie". The two songs reproduced in part on this page are copyright Harms, Inc. The music of "Indian Love Call" is by Rudolf Friml, with words by Otto Harbach and Oscar Hammerstein II.

The transition from civilization to the wilderness is something more than geographic. It is an escape from the artificialities of civilization to the very raw realities of the primitive; from the perfumed arias of opera to the aboriginal motif of the Indian Love Call, the savage rhythmic beat of the grotesque Totem Pole Dance, the ruthless marching song of the Mounties.

The stirring song of the men who never fail to "get their man," is sung on horseback, with Sergeant Bruce riding at the head of his column in a mountain canyon. It serves both as a dramatic introduction of the heroic Mountie (Nelson Eddy), and as a musical identification of character and locale.

THE MOUNTIES

Male ensemble, led by Nelson Eddy. Music by Rudolf Friml and Herbert Stothart, words by Otto Harbach and Oscar Hammerstein II.

As the scene shifts from the metropolis to the wilderness, in the heart of the lady of caprice is wrought a corresponding change, and the subtle lyricism of convention is deepened into elemental tone-cries. The first shock to the sensibilities of the orchid lady of opera is also a jolt to her artistic pride. In a honky-tonk where she has applied for a job as a singer after being robbed by the half-breed, Marie tries to sing a "hot" number; but a hip-swinging blonde with a gin-and-cigaret voice cuts in on her song and steals the show with an anatomical rendition of a "Colored Man's Itch." Marie tries vainly to out-shout the wiggler, but her voice isn't hoarse enough, and she slips out of the dance-hall, crestfallen. This ironical musical sequence, with its undercurrent of pathos to the hilarious comedy, is a significant and effective incident.

It is in the long trek up the mountains to the great north woods, with Marie and the half-breed trailed by the Mountie, that the music becomes a genuine integer of the romantic drama—a symphonette that affords full play to the scope of the audible screen. The opera star and the Mountie become involuntary companions in an extraordinary dramatic adventure.

"The Indian Love Call" is heard across the hills and Marie learns the meaning of the old legend, that when a lover calls with this refrain the loved one will answer in kind. The significance of this motif, with its ever-present reminder of the love-drama being enacted by these two so strangely thrown together, is developed in idyllic situations and reaches a poignant dramatic climax when the Mountie captures her brother and rides down the mountain, while Marie vainly calls to him in the old refrain.

In the final scene, when Marie returns to the opera in Montreal and is shown in the last act of "Tosca," the parallel in the drama of La Tosca's beloved, Cavaradossi, who has been condemned to be shot, and Marie's own real life tragedy, is utilized in a finely wrought musical and dramatic conception. In the opera when La Tosca discovers that her plans to save her sweetheart have miscarried, she sings a dramatic lamentoso and then plunges over the parapet.

But the motif of "The Indian Love Call" haunts Marie in this scene, and she cannot shut it out. Insistently the refrain keeps recurring as a tragic realistic counterpoint to the music of "Tosca," and finally overwhelms the music of the opera. Unable to overcome the hallucination, Marie breaks down, collapsing on the stage.

Herbert Stothart has done a very fine and very effective piece of music adaptation.

In the denouement, when Bruce returns to Montreal, the legend of "The Indian Love Call" is fulfilled and the lovers are reunited.

CHANCE GAME DISPUTES WAGED IN SEVEN STATES

Colorado Court Rules Practice Is Not Lottery; Iowa Labor Commission Hints Action

The chance game form of enticing theatre patronage appears unable to extricate itself from legal controversy, figuring this week in disputes in Colorado, where a court ruled it was not a lottery; in Iowa, where the state labor commission threatened action against the crowding of theatre aisles with Bank Night participants; and in Maine, where one county banned all kinds of giveaways. Too, Detroit courts upheld a legal ban against the practice, Missouri leveled a second legal barrage, but reconsidered. New York circuit owners were preparing for further court defense, and a jury in Ohio declared Bank Night to be legal.

A victory for Bank Night was won in Denver when District Judge Samuel W. Johnson denied the district attorney an injunction against the Rex theatre, Brighton, Col., to prohibit the use of Bank Night by the theatre. The district attorney claimed that Bank Night and Div-vy, which the theatre also was using, were in violation of the state's lottery laws.

Frank E. Wenig, Iowa labor commissioner, warned theatres conducting chance games to keep their aisles and lobbies open, and issued a ruling which declared:

"No seats shall be placed in the aisles, nor shall persons be allowed to stand in the aisles or foyers. Persons waiting to enter the theatre shall not occupy more than half the lobby, thus leaving the other half open for exit."

The commissioner's bulletin further called attention to a state law making it the duty of mayors, building inspectors and fire chiefs to inspect buildings and enforce safety regulations against overcrowding.

All cash giveaways have been barred in Cumberland county, Maine, by order of County Attorney Walter M. Tapley, the action coming as an aftermath of the convention of three former employees of the Keith's Theatre in Portland of conspiring to deliver a cash award in the theatre's Greyhound Derby.

Detroit Injunction Sustained

In Detroit, Judge Merriam of the circuit court last week sustained a permanent injunction forbidding cash nights and giveaways in the cases against Jacob Schreiber and his Majestic and Colonial theatres. It is understood Mr. Schreiber will appeal to the supreme court.

In Kansas City, Attorney General Roy McKittrick termed premature his department's ruling that Bank Night is contrary to Missouri statutes. The opinion will be reconsidered.

Mr. McKittrick has written Franklin Miller, circuit attorney of St. Louis, who asked for the opinion and had threatened to bring charges against St. Louis theatres if they continued to use Bank Night, that in view of information that theatres would take the question of legality of the promotion to the Missouri supreme court, he will withhold an opinion until such time as that body has ruled. He also pointed out that the New Hampshire supreme court, as well as that of Iowa, had held the plan legal.

In the premature opinion issued in Missouri by Franklin E. Reagan, assistant attorney general, the Iowa statute governing lottery was explained as more technical and narrow than Missouri's. Mr. Reagan expressed the belief that Missouri courts, under the broader statute, would hold "consideration" to be any definite form of consideration recognized in the law of contract.

Mr. McKittrick's department held Bank Night a lottery last March.

In New York, attorneys for Loew's will ask for a month's postponement of the hearing scheduled for Friday against the Elsmere and Grand theatres in Bronx special sessions court in connection with giveaways. If the delay is granted, a similar request will be made on February 28 when a like complaint is set for hearing in the same court, but involving the Paradise.

One of the reasons for the continuance will be that an appeal from a decision in the appellate division of the Brooklyn supreme court on the Winthrop, Brooklyn, will come up for hearing about the middle of March in the court of appeals, Albany. In view of this, Loew's legal representatives will try to have their cases put over until the decision of the three judges in Albany.

Bank Night Wins in Ohio

In Ohio, Bank Night won a signal victory when it was declared to be legal and not in violation of the Ohio state statute laws by a jury of eight women and four men in the court of Municipal Judge Charles P. Baker in Painesville.

Dan C. Stearns of the Willoby Theatre at Willoby, Ohio, arrested for operating a scheme of chance, was acquitted in the first court decision in the state on the legal status of Bank Night. A similar charge against Jules Schwartz, Utopia theatre, Painesville, probably will be dropped, according to Prosecutor Harold U. Daniels.

In Indianapolis, Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., of Denver has filed suit in federal court to enjoin N. C. Weinberg and the management of 13 theatres from operating Cash Nights. In the suit damages of $10,000 are asked.

Mr. Weinberg has arranged Cash Night for several neighborhood houses and in a number of smaller Indiana cities. It is contended in the suit that despite the change in name, Cash Night is an infringement.

Pathe Overassessed

Determination of an over-assessment of $22,036 in the 1926 income tax of Pathe Exchange, Inc., New York, as a result of allowance of an additional deduction for debts ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the taxable year, has been approved by the Bureau of Internal Revenue in Washington. The company is to be credited with $10,886, refunded $8,054 and $3,095 will be withheld in connection with deficiencies for the Producers' International Corporation for 1927 and Pathe International Corporation for the period of January 1 to August 19, 1928.

Leigh Jason Promoted

Leigh Jason, short subject director for RKO Radio in Hollywood, has been made a full-fledged director and assigned to "With Love on a Bet," starring Gene Raymond.

RCA Claims New Improvement in Sound Recording

"The lisping and hissing effects which have marred screen voices of many stars have been completely eliminated, and the quality of musical reproduction immensely improved, by means of a new sound recording and printing method which utilizes ultra-violet light, in a narrow range above visibility, instead of ordinary white light." Such was the announcement this week by RCA Photophone.

The new development, which was described as "an important step toward bringing greater realism to sound motion pictures," was presented in a paper read Wednesday night before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, by Glenn L. Dimmick, RCA Photophone engineer, New York.

"Recording with the new ultra-violet system is a good deal like improving the details of a photograph," said RCA, adding. "In this case the photograph is the picture of the sound on the film. Acknowledging some earlier research along similar lines by Carl Louis Oswald, the RCA Photophone engineers, working in the research laboratories of the Radio Corporation of America at Camden, discovered that by restricting the light focused on the film negative, during recording, to a narrow band in the ultra-violet range, sharper focusing of the lenses in the optical system and controlled penetration of the light on the negative emulsion made it possible to photograph the sound patterns with a sharpness and delineation which corresponds more closely to the characteristics of the original sound than ever before.

"The tendency for the high-pitched voices of some screen celebrities to sound sharp-edged, especially in the sibilants, has long presented a difficult problem to motion picture sound engineers. The technical reason for these harsh sounding effects, which ruined the chances of many former screen luminaries when the talkies came into being, is that by ordinary recording and printing methods the finely graded variations in amplitude of which the upper frequency tones are composed become blurred or distorted on the sound track, so that instead of an exact pattern of the speech characteristics there is merely an approximation. The upper frequencies are the tones which make possible realistic reproduction.

"Ordinary white light," RCA explained, "is composed of a great many different wavelengths. Since it is impracticable to focus all of these wavelengths exactly at one time, those of them that are even slightly out of focus blur the edges of the sound pattern on the negative and introduce distortion in the reproduction.

"The new ultra-violet method involves only a few simple adjustments in existing RCA sound recording systems, consisting in the main of an adjustment of the lenses in the optical system for sharper focusing, and in the use of a light filter over an ordinary incandescent lamp, which limits the radiant light energy focused on the film to a narrow band, invisible to the unaided eye. The same method permits a much wider latitude in the process of making accurate positive prints for the theatres.

"Heretofore, when a high-pitched voice reached the neighborhood of 9,000 cycles, it was necessary to cut off the top range of frequencies or depend on extremely critical and laborious printing of the final track to remove the objectionable rasping effects. The new ultra-violet method gives such a sharp and clear definition of the peaks and valleys of the high frequency waves, the engineers said, that there are no practicable limitations in recording and reproducing all the frequencies necessary for faithful reproduction from film."

A very generous sense of humor indeed has the Hollywood lady who inserted the following advertisement in Rob Wagner's Script:

Archie Mayo, Warner director of "Petrified Forest," got so close to following the career of shirt salesman that every time he thinks of it he gets petrified. When Archie first went to Hollywood he was unable to keep his enormous bulk supplied in food and such on his earnings as an extra and so became a salesman for custom-made shirts. He drummed up such a business that he was offered an interest in the firm. The secret of his success lay in the fact that he was quite adept at concocting gags and traded them with directors and writers for shirt orders—one gag for three shirts. That eventually got him a job as gag writer at one of the large studios, so he dropped his shirts.

DEAR CORA:
I have listened to your fine band many times and I like it very much! Would you please send me an autographed photo of yourself and the band, please. I remain a very ardent admirer and listener!

For want of something better to do, the Warner studio management at Burbank, Cal., is racking its collective brain trying to determine in what order the "animals two-by-two" marched aboard Noah's Ark when that famed craft shoved off on its 40-day voyage. There will be two bedbugs and two angleworms.

Marc Connelly's really difficult job is trying to stop the burly Negro angels in "Green Pastures" from chewing gum the while they strut around Stage Eight—which is "Heaven"—sporting wide white wings.

CRIPPLES IN WHEEL CHAIRS SANCTIONED

Crippled persons have the right to attend theatres in the state of Oklahoma in their wheel chairs, if they wish, insofar as the state is concerned, the attorney general there has ruled in an opinion to W. C. Theimer, Oklahoma fire marshal.

Mr. Theimer wrote the attorney general that a Bristow theatre operator wanted him to take action to prevent a crippled person from attending his theatre in a wheel chair, on the grounds that the chair might constitute a hazard by blocking the exit in case of fire. The attorney general further ruled that it was up to the theatre manager to refuse to sell the crippled person a ticket if he wished to keep him out.

H. O. Stechan, writing for Rob Wagner's Script, relates a most interesting tale as to the real origin of Sam Clemen's pen-name, Mark Twain—which, as far as he is aware, never before found its way into print. He received it first hand from Judge Robert Lindsay, who passed on in Seattle a few years ago.

In his youth, Mr. Lindsay had been a lawyer in Virginia City, during the glamorous Comstock days. The judge knew Mr. Clemens well and had a wealth of reminiscences of their unique friendship and the newspaper risibilities which they perpetrated.

The judge and Sam Clemens were frequent patrons of Virginia City bars, as they made their daily rounds in quest of news items. Paydays were irregular in those days, and cash money equally scarce; but that never interfered with the consumption of liquid refreshments. To simplify the matter of keeping credit accounts, accommodating saloon hosts maintained large blackboards behind their bars, on which the names of regular customers were listed. Prominent among them were those of the reportorial Damon and Pythias—Wright and Clemens.

"Whenever Dan Wright and Sam Clemens would drop in for a drink," Judge Lindsay reported, "and Sam was standing treat, he'd say to the bartender: 'Mark twain!'—meaning chalk up two drinks on the board, in the picturesque lingo of the river days. That charge account was settled when the ghost on the newspaper Enterprise walked. But, so often was the 'mark twain' order heard in the primitive barrooms of Virginia City that, before long, people began to refer to Sam Clemens as the 'mark twain' feller, and eventually it became his nickname."

Speaking on the new Cinematograph Bill in the Indian Legislative Assembly at Bombay—a bill to empower censors to supervise posters and advertising of motion pictures as well as the films themselves—Mr. Sri Prakasa waxed eloquent. He wanted to abolish cinemas altogether, charging that kissing, particularly in public, was beginning to appeal to the Hindus, and blamed the influence of the film. Seems that 90 per cent of Hindu husbands among the masses never kiss their wives.

Odd McIntyre is the discoverer of Broadway's newest racket on the street of rackets and racketeers: Coatroom attendants at theatres and night clubs, working in cahoots with second-hand clothing dealers, are paid a price for labels snipped from coats and cloaks fashioned by reputable tailors. In most cases the labels are cut out with scissors, a piece of the lining included. The price, depending on the fame of the tailor, ranges from 50 cents to one dollar. The second-hand dealers sew them into cheap garments and pass them off as slightly worn fashionables.

Kansans are cool. A motion picture show was progressing in the township hall of Whiting, Kan., the other evening, when the building caught fire. The blaze was a bad one, but there was nary a whimper. Members of the audience calmly picked up a chair apiece and other furniture they could get their hands on readily, and moved out of the flaming building in good order. From the fields they then watched the building burn to the ground, for in Whiting there are no water facilities.

Rare event of the times that will not be photographed by any one of the enterprising newsreels: For the seventh time since America and Great Britain adopted the Gregorian calendar in 1752, February this year will have five Saturdays, including the first and last days of the month. Leap year is responsible for the abundance of Saturdays.

This unique situation occurred in 1772, then 40 years later in 1812, again in 1840, 1868, 1896, each 28 years apart, and 12 years later, in 1908. It will not arise again for another 28 years, until 1964—which is something for someone to worry about.

Porter Hall, the New York stage actor who is fast coming to the top on the screen in Hollywood, was first under contract to Warner Brothers, but was always loaned out to other studios, not having appeared in a single production while with that company. Then Paramount signed him, and they farmed him out to Warners, where he made five straight pictures without appearing even in one for Mr. Zukor's studio. Ernst Lubitsch, until last week chief of the Paramount lot, finally saw him in rushes of a new picture and inquired about him, telling his assistants to try and get him. Mr. Lubitsch collapsed when informed Hall had been under contract at his own studio for the past six months and had not been used by Paramount in a single production.

The next morning he awakened, looked out of the window and found he still was at the railroad siding in Des Moines.

Alex. Pantages, Vaudeville's Best Friend, Is Dead

To Alexander Pantages, fellow countryman and proscenium prototype of elusive, bizarre Gregory Zaharoff, death came in the slow, small hours of February 17th at his home in Hollywood, closing forever the thumbed and dimming pages of the vest-pocket notebook that held, safe against friend or foe, all secret and statistical record of a variety empire that rose, thrived and vanished in a quarter-century colored by his personality. With him died the last lean major defender of vaudeville, the entertainment medium that gave him a fortune and to which he gave a form. Recently under treatment for a heart ailment, cardiac failure was given as cause of death. Mrs. Lois Pantages, the widow; Mrs. John C. Considine, a daughter, and two sons, Lloyd and Rodney, survive.

Burial services were held Wednesday at the Wee Kirk of the Heather in Forest Lawn, with interment at the Forest Lawn Mausoleum.

Began in Klondike

The story of Alexander Pantages begins in obscurity, emerges brilliantly into the realm of recorded fact, retreats now and again into the shadows of hearsay and report, often beclouded by his own conflicting statements. He believed he was born on an island off the coast of Greece, on a date he could reckon only by conjecture. He was 72 by these calculations. When about nine years old he was taken on a voyage by his father, whom he deserted in Cairo to make his way in and about the world by his own devices, which brought him some nine years later to Dawson City, when the gold rush was at its height, and to the beginning of his theatre career.

Like all stories brought back from the Klondike, the doings of the youthful Pantages are of nebulous record. His name is associated with those of Wilson Mizner, Jack London, Tex Rickard, but more definitely with that of "Klondike Kate" Rockwell, loosely described as a queen of the Dawson dance halls, whose manager he became on a percentage basis and whose stage performances under his auspices were profitable in a degree sufficient to determine his course of activity on returning to the States.

Amassed Fortune

With a capital estimated at $4,000 he opened a variety theatre in Seattle. Business was good. Expansion followed. Overlords of the all-powerful Orpheum Circuit felt his presence in the West. Conflict was inevitable. The battle raged for years. Despite the persistent and uncontradicted rumor that he never learned to read or write, Mr. Pantages' fortune ran up to a peak estimated at $50,000,000. As to the kind of competitor he was, Martin Beck, Orpheum head during the struggle, said this week: "We were merely competitors; I barely knew the man, never spoke ten words to him in my life."

But vaudeville knew him. Oldsters remember a day when hoofers, dumb acts and duos, assured of "thirty weeks on the Pan time," bought new wardrobe, married or divorced, shaped personal affairs years in advance on the basis of this security. Lesser circuit bookings would follow automatically. They're talking about it all, in bedraggled swagger coat and spats, as they loiter this week and always along the curb in front of the Palace on Broadway.

Neither did lack of book l'arnin' handicap his knowledge of values, whether of real estate or entertainment. He may or may not have known how smart it was to sell his theatres in July, 1929, but he did, at a price quoted from $15,000,000 to $24,000,000. Withdrawing, then, from major participation in the theatre field, he became identified as a figurante in a series of widely headlined incidents said to have represented a substantial financial expenditure for defense purposes and to have impaired his health materially. When these were cleared up he announced plans for re-entering the business on a large scale. Little came of this. His only theatre property at the time of his death was the Pantages in Los Angeles, operated by his son, Rodney.

Friends Comment

Louie Charninsky, Dallas showman whose association with Mr. Pantages dates back to Klondike days, said on hearing of his passing: "I feel that I have lost one of my dearest and most beloved friends. Mr. Pantages loved the theatre and all the people associated with it, whether stage hands or stars. He was not a publicity seeker but preferred to remain in the background. Having been his personal representative, I can recall numerous instances when he had me contribute to the welfare of those in financial difficulties. He took great pride in seeing young men and women develop into box office attractions. He has never been happy since disposing of his major holdings in the industry. Only a few months ago he wrote me that he had dedicated his life to the profession and would never be happy until he became active again in the theatre. He requested me to try and locate for him a number of large theatres in Texas. The theatrical world has lost one of its greatest men."

Said John Royal, now of NBC, then of the Keith office, with which the Pantages Circuit did not conflict, "He carried his circuit in his vest pocket. He had a little book that everything went into. I don't know whether he could read or write, but he must have put something in that book, because his whole business hinged on it. He had a marvelous sense of entertainment values, could size up an act, even in its rough, uncompleted form, and tell whether it would do the business."

Wanger Signs UA Contract For Ten Years

The board of directors of United Artists, following a meeting late last week in Hollywood, announced that Walter Wanger "has been granted a franchise to release the future products of Walter Wanger Productions through the United Artists distributing organization." The announcement also said that "associated financially with Mr. Wanger in his future production activities will be Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Nathan Burkan and Samuel Goldwyn."

The contract signed by Mr. Wanger calls for the handling of his pictures by United Artists for the next ten years. He will start on his new affiliation about July 1, for his present Paramount contract calls for four more pictures. "Palm Springs," "The Moon's Our Home" and "Brazen" are already in work. Following these will be "Big Brown Eyes," starring Joan Bennett; "The Case Against Mrs. Ames," featuring Madeleine Carroll; "Spendthrift," a musical to be directed by Alfred Santell, and "Sahara."

The United Artist deal calls for four pictures yearly from Mr. Wanger.

Among those under personal contract to Mr. Wanger, and who will go with him to United Artists, are Sylvia Sidney, Charles Boyer, Joan Bennett, Henry Fonda, Madeleine Carroll and Francis Langford. The writers under contract to him include Dorothy Parker, Alan Campbell, Gene Towne, Graham Baker, Edward Chodorov and Lynn Starling.

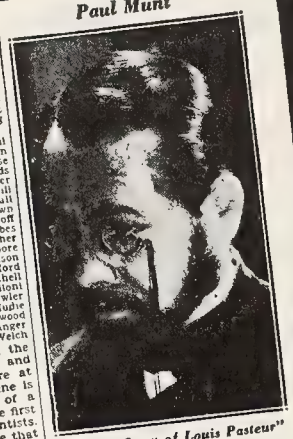
The cinema is concerned with the pursuits of the germs of anthrax and hydrophobia in the new picture at the Strand Theater. Its big scene is not the customary encounter of a juvenile and an ingenue, but the first meeting between two great scientists. It is when the discovery is made that the sheep treated with a new serum have lived that the photoplay's first climax is reached. The battles are fought out in laboratories and in sessions of grave scientific associations. Its villains are not sinister bandits or treacherous seducers, but merely the reactionary habits of eminent and well meaning pillars of medical community. I could go on for some length suggesting to you the lack of presumable box-office delights in the new film, but if I continued to do any such thing I would deceive you miserably. For "The Story of Louis Pasteur," written and directed with honesty and tenderness, and stirringly played by Paul Muni, is not only an exciting and beautiful screen drama, but possesses a quality of heroism and nobility that actually makes you proud of the petty, hapless and bewildered human race.



If by any unfortunate chance the idea should get about that "The Story of Louis Pasteur," because it deals with adventure in science, was a more than in romantic homicide, was a pedantic and laborious work that deserved merely a polite admiration and was to be applauded because it was a fine educational thing for the children to see, then a great error will be made by criticism and publicity. For the truth of the matter is that the picture is far more exciting and heart-warming than the run of films celebrating presumably less cerebral topics. The romance between the juvenile and the great Pasteur's daughter is conventional enough, but it is soon forgotten when the great French chemist begins the creation of modern medicine. His battle against obscurantism in the Academy of Medicine and his fight against disease and death becomes one of the epic struggles of humanity.

In "Yellow Jack," Sidney Howard proved the possibility of getting a quality of heroism and great drama into the somewhat similar story of a great American microbe hunter, Dr Walter Reed. For some ridiculous reason, the play was not vastly successful at the box office. It is pleasant to think that perhaps the much abused cinema audiences will change the verdict against the scientific play by a hearty approval of "The Story of Louis Pasteur." The producers of the film certainly have not cheapened it, but they have given it a certain dynamic quality that should help to make it popular at the box office.

Perhaps it should be reported that the work is a straightforward account of the struggle of Pasteur against the superstition and backwardness of the Second Empire and the early days of the Third Republic. It begins with the great scientist held in scorn by his colleagues as a mountebank and ends with his acceptance by his grudging fellow scientists as one of the true heroes of mankind.

All of the slightly episodic story is not only well planned, but is extremely well played. Mr. Muni, one of the screen's most intelligent and resourceful actors, is splendid in his difficult role and I know that you will not see a more stirring moment of playing in the drama all year than the instant when Pasteur realizes that he has saved the life of the sheep and that his cure for anthrax is a success.

Miss Josephine Hutchinson as the wife and the pretty Miss Anita Louise as the daughter have little to do, but there are exceptionally fine performances by Fritz Leiber as the most relentless of Pasteur's enemies (a really first-rate portrayal), by Henry O'Neill as a loyal follower of the great man, and by Porter Hall as a dubious, but eventually convinced, doctor. There is a good impersonation of Napoleon III by Walter Kingsford.

The intensely thrilling story of the enormously important discoveries of Louis Pasteur, the great French scientist who had either direct or indirect effect on the lives of all of us, has been made into a vital motion picture by Warner Brothers. With Paul Muni in the role of Pasteur, the film is now being shown at the Strand Theatre.

Muni's characterization of the scientific Titan is impressive and sometimes deeply moving, as the story of his hunt for the microbe and his battle with the reactionary members of the French Academy of Medicine to have his discoveries acknowledged and his anti-toxin cure for rabies approved, is unreeled on the screen. There is the same throbbing under-current of excitement in the Pasteur drama, as written originally for the screen by Sheridan Gibney and Pierre Collings, that one felt in Sidney Howard's play "Yellow Jack," while watching the historic drama of Dr. Walter Reed and his co-workers of the army in Cuba tracking down the elusive mosquito, which was killing off thousands of people every year by infecting them with the deadly virus which resulted in yellow fever.

The Muni picture has been more dramatically written and has been given a more fluid and actionable treatment than the French language film which Sacha Guitry wrote, produced, directed, and starred in, and which is now being shown at the World Theatre on 49th Street. The latter film is devoted to lengthy arguments before the Academy, while the Cosmopolitan production gives us a more intimate man race, the Cosm oduction at the Stra takes its place as stinguished screen dra ason.

Emotionally as well a lly exciting, the pictur hing new in screen writ a biography entirely the artificialities of a nagination. Simply, a ttempt to color facts novies' conventional lo or manufactured mel he film tells the story cience and his battle a teria, and succeeds in m arresting document with suspense and buil mendous climax.

Paul Muni portrays H his characterization is piece of realism and st ways a conscientious ac submerges himself so in the role that the sp gets Muni and sees o scure country chemist himself tirelessly to the betterment of man and personal view on the great chemist.

We see Pasteur surrounded by his devoted family, with his wife always at hand to share vicariously in his triumphs and to hearten and encourage him in his defeats. His assistants, too, are loyal and faithful men, who dedicate their knowledge and their patient lives to his service in the furthering of medical science.

Pasteur's banishment from Paris by the Emperor of France, for predicting the death of the Empress' sister in childbirth, when he knew the young Marquise was to be attended by a midwife who carried germs in her equipment, is followed by his successful application of anthrax anti-toxin to the afflicted sheep in his district. This triumph leads to his experiments with rabies anti-toxin and his application of it, in the face of possible prison sentence or death to a child who had been bitten by a mad dog.

Another dramatic climax is Pasteur's saving of about twenty Russians, who'd been bitten by wolves, and who were doomed to die of hydrophobia. Having suffered a stroke, he arrives at the hospital to administer the anti-toxin to the suffering Russians himself.

An excellent cast supports Mr Muni in the presentation of this interesting historical drama. Josephine Hutchinson is a sympathetic, understanding wife, and Anita Louise is lovely as the daughter who marries one of her father's assistants.

Fritz Leiber, one of the Shakespearean stage actor, gives an impressive performance as one of the reactionary members of the Academy, and the performances of Donald Woods, Henry O'Neill, Dickie Moore, Halliwell Hobbes and Walter Kingsford stand out from a large and helpful cast.

William Dieterle, who directed the picture, has extracted as much of dramatic action from the story as this historic document contained.

Paul Muni in an Exciting and Noble Film, 'The Story of Louis Pasteur.'

By EILEEN CREELMAN.

Those amazing Warners, having successfully revived the gangster melodrama this season, have now jumped a long way in the other direction. Their current presentation at the Strand, as exciting in its own way as any tale of G-Men, is a drama of scientific research, "The Story of Louis Pasteur." The wily Warners have used their knowledge of showmanship to make the discovery of a new germ a breathless and stirring business even to audiences more used to machine-gun antics on the Strand screen.

Science, one may here learn, proceeds by devious means, by trial and error as much as by persistent experimentation. It was the scoffing of his principal adversary, the eminent Dr. Charbonnet, who injected the supposedly deadly rabies serum into his arm to disprove Pasteur's theory, who thus accidentally brought about a discovery of the cure for hydrophobia. He became, Pasteur later exclaimed de-

Laughed Out of Paris

It is Pasteur's preoccupation with germs and microbes that provide the chief basis for the story of the film. In the beginning he seeks to prove that 'childbed fever" is caused by uncleanliness in obstetrics and is laughed out of Paris for his pains. Taking up residence in Arbois, the chemist saves the sheep of the countryside from the plague of anthrax that is sweeping the rest of France, but still he is doubted. Only when a test is devised, by members of the French Academy of Medicine does he come through with his victory.

Naturally, his experiments with rabies, or hydrophobia constitute the climax of the film. First he experiments on dogs and then his experiments almost come to failure when the great Dr Charbonnet, one of the head skeptics, injects the virus into his own arm and dares Pasteur to do the same. It develops that the great Dr Charbonnet had so well

Muni Startlingly Real

Mr. Muni, in a startlingly real makeup, plays the role of the chemist with his customary ability, giving evidence once more of being a sincere and honest performer. Josephine Hutchinson is a shy and somewhat indolent wife, overwhelmed by the greatness of her husband, and the necessary romance is supplied by Donald Woods, as an assistant to Pasteur, and Anita Louise, as his daughter. In the minor roles, some bouquets may be tossed at Fritz Leiber for his characterization of Dr Charbonnet, the skeptic, to Henry O'Neill, as another assistant in the Pasteur laboratories, to Akim Tamiroff as the Russian doctor who brought the rabies-ridden peasants to Paris, and to Halliwell Hobbes, as the great Lister of England.

It is fine and occasionally really great photoplay, this "The Story of Louis Pasteur." It merits lie in both the material it has to present and the way in which it is presented. It is a matter of credit to the Warner studios and to the whole motion picture industry that it has been made at all and that it has come out

SCREEN PRESENTS

'Story of Louis Pasteur,' With Muni, Is Credit to Warners and Industry

by Leo Mishkin

At one fell swoop the screen goes in for the contemplation of science and some really distinguished biography in "The Story of Louis Pasteur," which opened at the Strand Theater on Saturday. With Paul Muni playing the title role, and with the adaptation and direction handled in a reverential and reasonably faithful manner, the film stands forth as honestly moving epic, treated in the grand manner, and to be viewed with profound respect and deference.

How close this photoplay actually comes to depicting the life of the father of modern antisepsis this department is unprepared to say. Undoubtedly there are touches of theatrical values, undoubtedly there are highlights dramatized solely for their merits as highlights. To quibble at such things would be to find fault with the whole subject of motion picture biography. It is enough that "The Story of Louis Pasteur" does its touching up and dramatizing in a highly capable manner. It makes for good, sound cinema, and this department has always been found on the side of good, sound cinema.

By FRANK S. NUGENT.

There are times when even a film reviewer feels the need of a preamble and today is one of them. With your permission, then, before speaking of "The Story of Louis Pasteur," which moved into the Strand over the week-end, the department will confess that it is guilty of heresy. It believes that accuracy is not the most important part of biography. It will accept errors of time and place cheerfully, and it will condone the addition of known fiction to known fact provided these untruths are committed in the interests of a greater truth, which would be the preservation of spirit—not the chronological letter—of a man's life.

"The Story of Louis Pasteur" telescopes the French scientist's years and highlights his achievements. It embroils him in a prolonged feud with the French Academy of Sciences and its president. It has him incur Napoleon III's displeasure and virtual banishment from Paris. It delays his recognition until the evening of his life. It portrays him as a model of scientific detachment, the laboratory method personified, a modest, academic, self-effacing man.

Most, if not all, of this is against the weight of such biographical evidence as one might encounter in staid Britannica or in the more lively pages of Paul De Kruif. And yet, possibly because we have heretical notions, we believe that Warners' "The Story of Louis Pasteur" is an excellent biography, just as it is a notable photoplay, dignified in subject, dramatic in treatment and brilliantly played by Paul Muni, Fritz Leiber, Josephine Hutchinson and many other members of the cast.

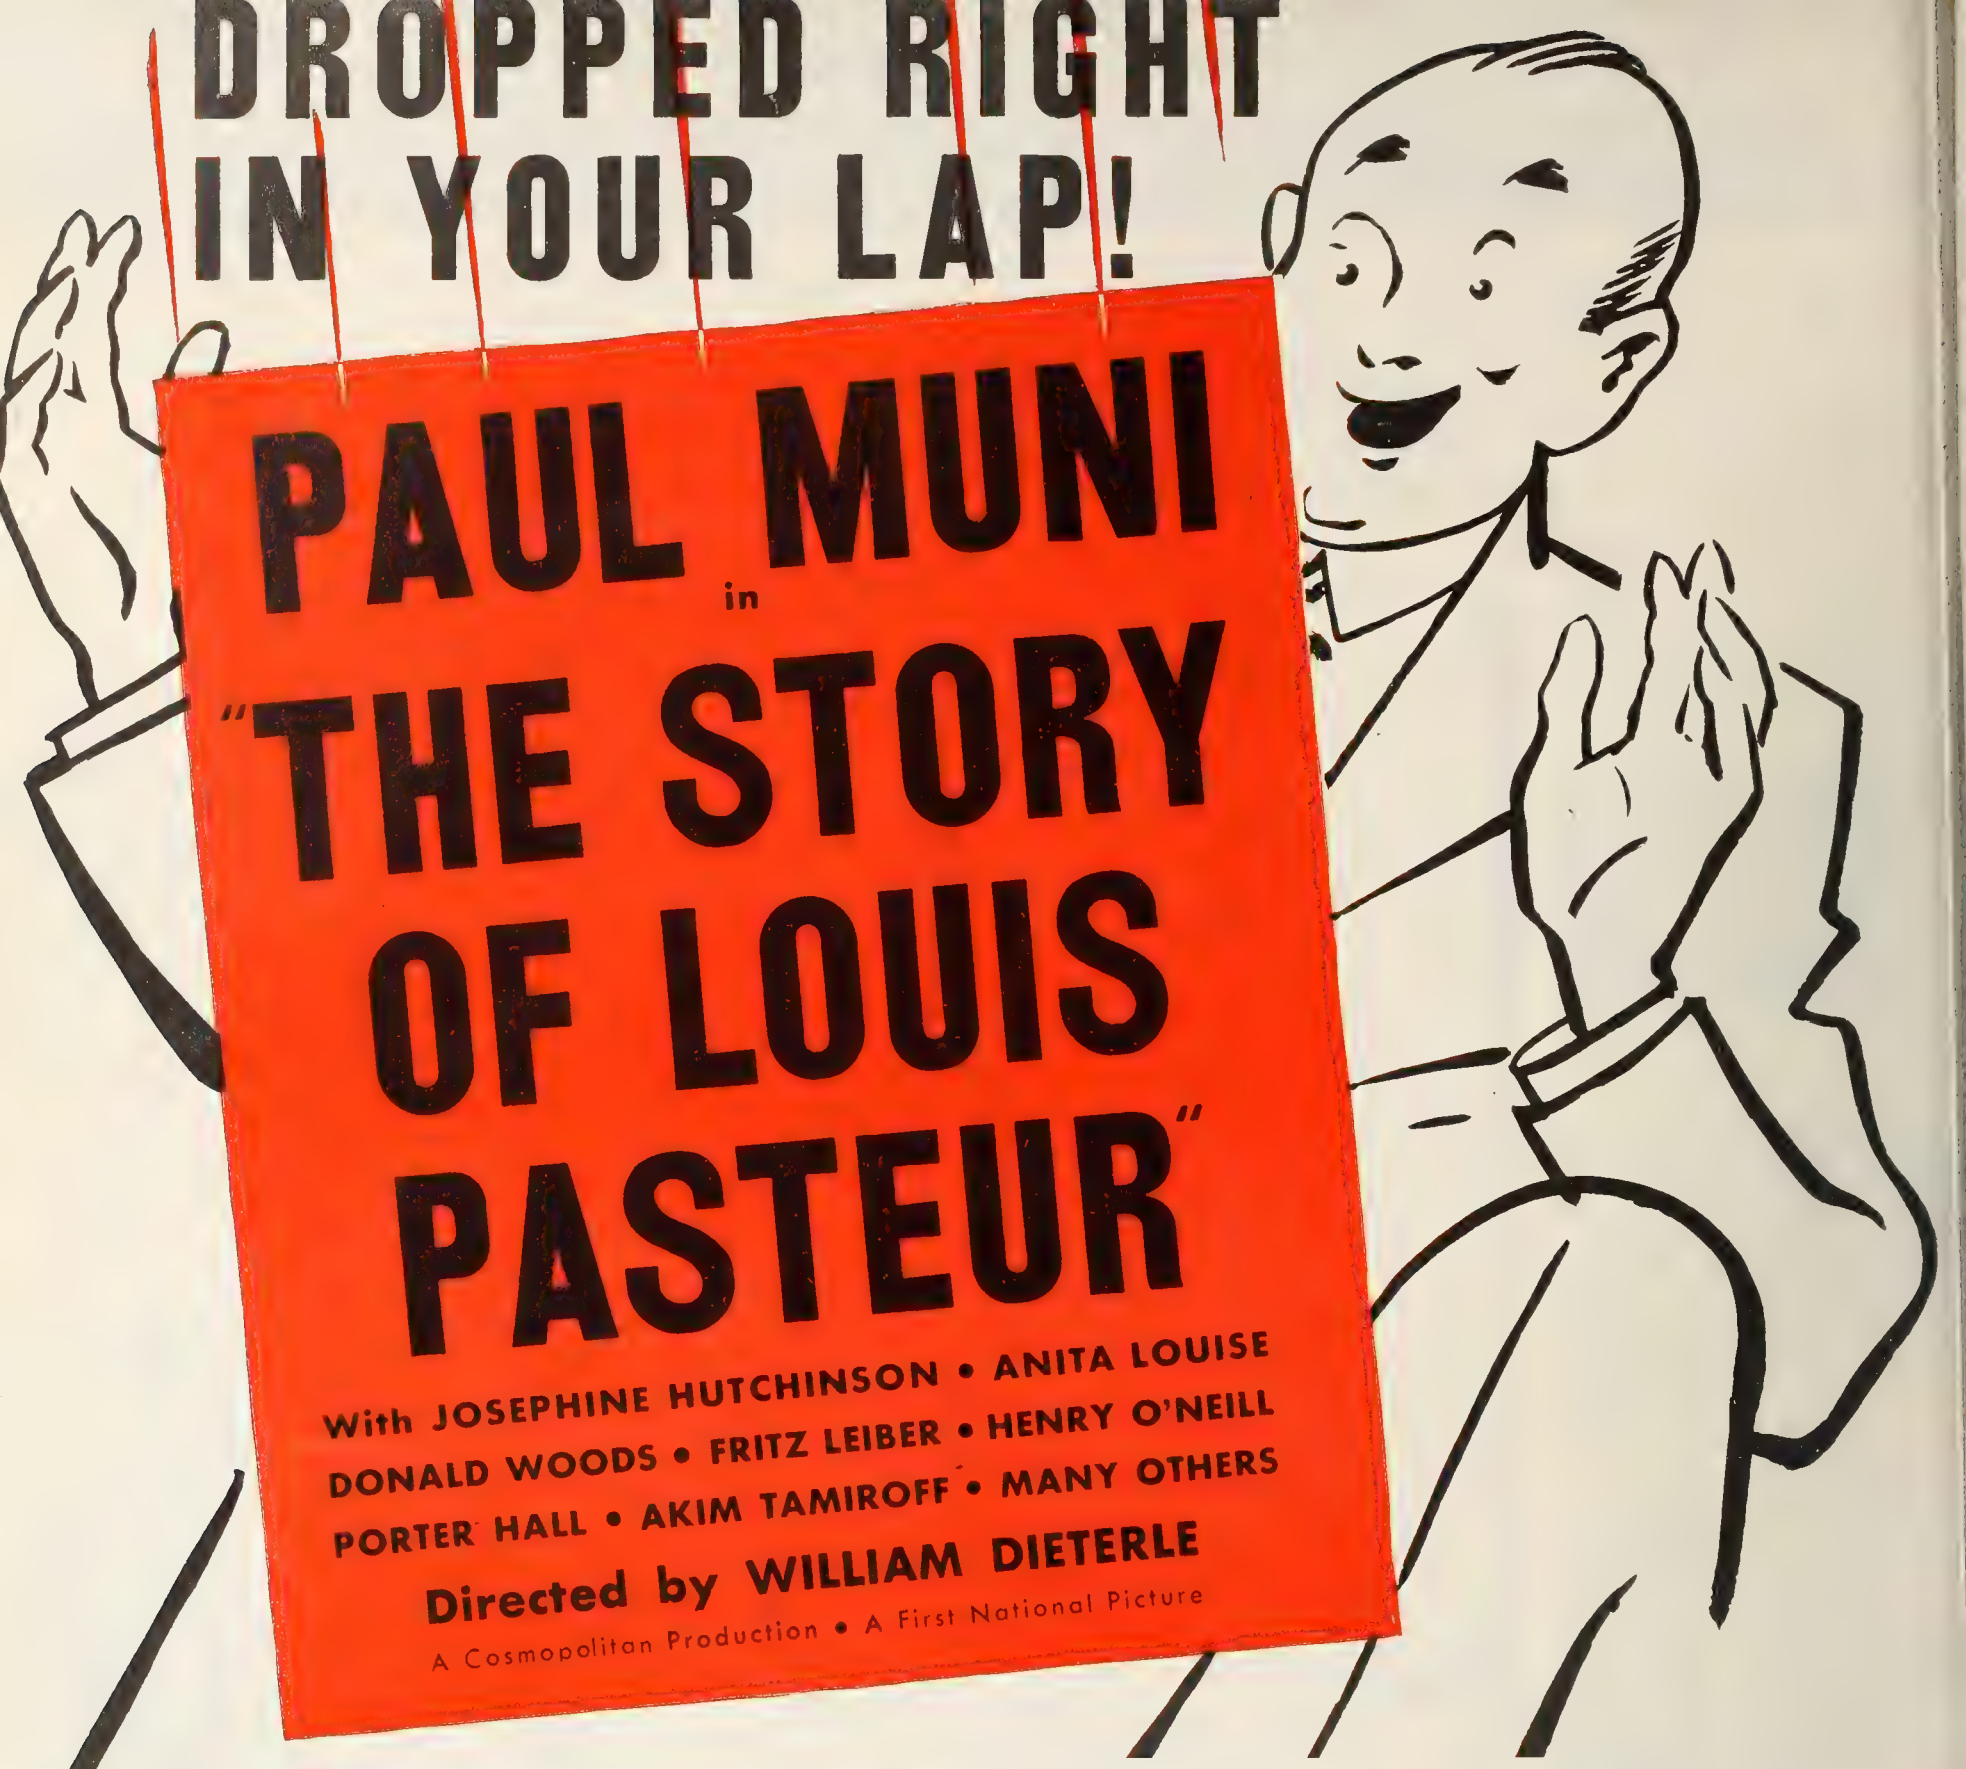
To what purpose would you quarrel with the screen biographer's premise that in 1860, when the film picks up the life of Pasteur, his was the only voice crying out in a wilderness of medical ignorance for physicians to wash their hands, boil their instruments and so avoid infecting their patients with puerperal fever? Because it ignores the work of Lister, Koch and Leeuwenhoek? To what end would you deny that the French Academy and the Emperor Napoleon III were so deaf to his pleas that the one ridiculed him and the other expelled him? Because these were exaggerated reactions, or because nothing of the sort happened?

Off hand, the answers would have merit, yet ignorance was the menace of the time and it had to be personified—even at the expense of the Academy. Once you accept the essential accuracy of the conflict between crusading science on the one hand and entrenched medical stupidity on the other, you should be willing to condone every factual sin the film commits.

Thus Pasteur's discovery of the anthrax vaccine, which saved the cattle of France from the black plague, may not have been the instrument which restored him from exile and to a certain measure of honor; but its importance as a scientific discovery is no less because the film pretends so. In fact, it is vastly more dramatic to tell it that way.

The same argument would apply to the film's next dramatic episode, his finding of the toxin anti-toxin to cure rabies. The picture involves this, somehow, with Pasteur's bitter feud with Dr. Charbonnet of the French Academy, and with the need of his daughter for medical care when only Charbonnet is available. Charbonnet—says the script writers—offers to tend the girl if Pasteur will admit in writing that his cure for hydrophobia is worthless. He signs the paper, his daughter is attended but even the French Academy has a conscience and Pasteur, no longer regarded as a dangerous charlatan, receives at last the recognition and homage he so richly deserved.

The biographical film can be a cold thing, and it generally is. Its most usual manifestations are the costume and period photoplays—the revived dramas of Disraeli, Napoleon, Barnum or Diamond Jim Brady—which have little relation to modern life and depend for their appeal upon one's interest in antiquities. In the life of Pasteur, a scientist who died forty-one years ago but left a vibrant footprint to mark his passing, the Warners have chosen a subject that should speak personally to every audience and should receive, in return, something more than the transient attention accorded the ordinary photoplay.



Pasteur's life is warm and vital, of itself. It has lost none of that warmth through Mr. Muni's sensitive characterization, through the gifted direction of William Dieterle and the talents of a perfect cast. It may not be the province—and probably it was not the primary motive—of a Hollywood studio to create a film which is, at the same time, a monument to the life of a man. But "The Story of Louis Pasteur" is truly that.

SENTINELS TO PUSH "FREE SCREEN" ISSUE IN BAN ON NEW DEAL SATIRE

Small Town Exhibitors Face Competition in Plan to Cover Country with Trailer and Speaker Shows

The issue of a "free screen" will be fought by the Sentinels of the Republic, Inc., which announced this week it had retained legal counsel to test the action of the Ohio division of film censorship in barring "The Amateur Fire Brigade: A Parable of the New Deal," animated cartoon depicting President Roosevelt in caricature.

At the same time, the threat of competition to small town theatres arose in plans revealed for nationwide showings of the Sentinels' film program, in connection with a "Save the Constitution" exhibition, of which the New Deal satire is a unit. The Sentinels are seeking $400,000 to finance the production and distribution of the films, to rent theatres and pay transportation and publicity costs. The shows, publicized as "entertaining and educational," are free to the public.

Raymond Pitcairn of Philadelphia, national chairman of the Sentinels, announced at one of the showings at the Grand Opera House in Chicago late last week that the organization will resist the Ohio censors.

"We have secured Ohio counsel to handle this situation," he declared, "and we have confidence that we will win approval because public opinion will not stand for suppression of the story this film has to tell the American people.

Denies One-Party Interest

"One feature of the Ohio situation has aroused our indignation," Mr. Pitcairn told the audience. "There is an attempt to represent us as the agency of one particular political party, and to allege that we were formed to campaign against the New Deal. That is absolutely untrue. We were founded in 1922 and have fought consistently to sustain the Constitution."

From Ohio came word that the Sentinels have appealed the Ohio censors' ban, and the case is said to be headed for a court test.

The only comment came from Roy Reichelderfer, censor chief, who said he felt the board acted wisely, because the film "encourages disrespect for the President of the United States." The board reviewed the film four times before finally rejecting it, but passed "America's Bulwark of Liberty," a companion picture which was reviewed simultaneously.

Substitute Version in Making

To obviate further censor disapproval, the Ted Eshbaugh studio in New York, which produced the cartoon, is making a substitute version of the portion ridiculing the President, who is depicted as a "fire chief." In the alternate film this figure will be a composite representative of "the head brain truster," Mr. Eshbaugh said.

With the exception of the Sentinels' showings, no political effort has been made to direct public opinion through the screen, it was said at the capital.

At the Sentinels' headquarters in Washington there was apparent a feeling that censor action against "The Amateur Fire Brigade" was probably as valuable to the organization as its showing. However, it was indicated, censorship is a state matter and the general sentiment appeared to be that almost anything may be expected from the censors.

Pointing out that they had not yet financed the campaign, officials of both parties explained no motion pictures can be planned until they know what they are going to have to work with. If any pictures are made, they will come after the conventions.

The Democrats in all probability will not have to worry about screen publicity for their candidate, since every action of the President is a subject for the newsreels. Further, they can use newsreels to show the progress made on some of the more sensational public works which have been undertaken as part of the recovery program.

The Republicans, also, will be able to depend upon the generosity of the newsreel companies for much publicity, because the issues of the coming campaign will be of such national interest as to make necessary complete coverage of the minority candidate's activities, according to the Washington view.

At the close of the week's run of the Sentinels' show in Chicago last Saturday, Mr. Pitcairn said 34,000 persons had attended. The next playdates for what he termed "the big show" are Akron, New York, Boston and Detroit. Other selected cities are scheduled to see the complete presentation of the exhibits and films in theatres or auditoriums. Here funds will be raised to meet expenses and to carry out other phases of what Mr. Pitcairn called "the coordinated national program."

Philadelphia's citizens, independently of officials of the Sentinels, have contributed approximately $40,000 as their share of carrying on the exhibition program, the chief Sentinel said. New York is asked to contribute $125,000 as its share. Mr. Pitcairn emphasized that all funds so collected will be used for promoting the shows.

A phase of the program which appears to hold potentialities of competition to motion picture exhibitors is the plan to invade the towns, villages and crossroads by truck and trailer, manned by a crew of two projectionists and a paid speaker. Four such motor units are now touring the South, and there will be more.

In the rural sections the plan is for "exhibitions in parking lots, indoors or on the street by caravan shows." The motor units use 16mm. rear projection.

Friendly Newspapers Generous

What gives the show a strong aspect of competition to film houses is the manner in which it is being publicized by the newspapers friendly to the anti-New Deal cause. In Chicago the crowds were swelled by the stories in the dailies, four or five of which are emphatically Republican. Headlines in the Daily News, whose publisher, Colonel Frank Knox, is a candidate for the Republican nomination as standard bearer, told of the "packed houses" and emphasized the "free shows, day and night." Prominent speakers such as former Senator Hiram Bingham were part of the week's program.

The Sentinels' own advertising is intended to make the public aware of the "free showing of the famous motion picture cartoon and added attractions."

While some industry quarters are apprehensive over the competitive phase, as far as can be learned there was no exhibitor protest against the shows in Chicago. An observer who attended one of the showings reported he heard more "booing" of the films than cheering of the scenes they attempted to depict. A newsreel shot of the President taking the oath of office received a great ovation, it was reported, although the intention was to show him swearing allegiance to the Constitution as a prelude to later films showing the New Deal "subverting" it. People leaving the theatre were heard to comment on how "dull" the pictures were.

Mr. Pitcairn financed the entire project personally, he said, but refused to give the cost. Don Rose, columnist of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, wrote the continuity for "The Amateur Fire Brigade," which broadly caricatures the Roosevelt administration. Among the other reels are the "Sentinels' Scrap Book," consisting of still cartoons and reprinted editorial comment, and talks by Mr. Pitcairn and Colonel Henry Breckinridge, Assistant Secretary of War under Woodrow Wilson and personal attorney for Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh.

Rented from Pathe News

The film, "America's Bulwark of Liberty," was rented from Pathe News for several showings. It is understood Pathe hesitated to supply the picture because it appeared to have been intended for a political purpose, but Jack Connolly, general manager of Pathe News, said on Tuesday that it was leased as a patriotic subject for a kindred purpose. The film, made in 1935, originally was titled "Constitution Day" and depicts Washington, Jefferson and others.

Mr. Connolly added he had heard that "Washington was strongly protesting the cartoon."

Ted Eshbaugh, who has a certificate from the Los Angeles Museum to show that he produced the first complete cartoon in color, said this is the first time an animated cartoon has been used in a political campaign. He conceived the idea of "the little brain truster" figures in the subject, said Mr. Eshbaugh, and newspaper cartoons have been featuring the symbol. He said that important Republican leaders have been contacting him with a view to producing a similar film.

Sound for the cartoon and two of the other reels was recorded at the Fox Movietone studio, Mr. Eshbaugh said.

MASEFIELD SEES BETTER STAGE DUE TO FILMS

The legitimate theatre has greatly improved under the competitive influence of the motion picture, John Masefield, poet laureate of England, declared on his recent arrival in New York following a visit to Hollywood. The noted British writer found the industry had made rapid strides since his last visit twenty years ago and was now "enormous."

"The theatre has set about reforming itself because of its competitor, the motion picture, and has made strenuous efforts to recover. Plays today are much better done than when I was a boy," Mr. Masefield explained.

Goldwyn Invades FWC's Preserves

With the frank objective of breaking down Fox West Coast's sales resistance to Goldwyn pictures, released through United Artists, the company on Wednesday contracted with Earl Collins, giving him the exhibition rights of "Strike Me Pink," "Splendor" and "These Three" in all Fox West Coast, Fox Rocky Mountain and Wisconsin division towns where these pictures have not been bought, and where theatres are available.

Mr. Collins, who was said to represent Samuel Goldwyn, "apparently has full control over making exhibitors' contracts with the exhibitors in these situations," United Artists said.

Mr. Goldwyn seeks a showdown in the refusal of Fox West Coast to purchase his pictures on the ground his terms are excessive, which has been causing a fight for years.

United Artists is spending $100,000 to equip a ballyhoo train to make a tour of the towns where the Goldwyn-sponsored showings will be staged. The train will be equipped with a projection unit, public address system and other features.

Mr. Goldwyn announced in New York on Wednesday that United Artists in 1936-37 will "definitely" release 32 features and perhaps more. This is the largest release scheduled in the company's history.

He listed next season's productions as follows: Goldwyn, 8. Pickford-Lasky, 4; Selznick International, 5; Walter Wanger, 4; Pioneer, 4, while Douglas Fairbanks will supply "Marco Polo," and Alexander Korda will send six from England.

Mr. Goldwyn said that John Hay Whitney's Pioneer Pictures had signed a contract with United Artists, that the unit will start production upon Merian C. Cooper's return from Europe and that all productions will be in Technicolor. It was learned later that Pioneer probably will make 8 or 12 for United Artists next season.

There is a possibility that eight of those enumerated will be in Technicolor, said Mr. Goldwyn, among these his own "Goldwyn Follies" and Korda's "Revolt in the Desert." Another color possibility is Goldwyn's "Hurricane," which will be made in the South Seas.

Criterion Pictures, in which Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., is a factor, will produce four in England, but United Artists is not bound to distribute then in America, Mr. Goldwyn added, saying "United Artists' doors are wide open to any picture of merit."

Mr. Goldwyn said he himself will make besides those mentioned, Edna Ferber's "Come and Get It"; "The Princess and the Pauper," with Miriam Hopkins; "Dodsworth," with Ruth Chatterton and Walter Huston; one additional Hopkins vehicle, another featuring Cantor and one Merle Oberon.

He said there is a possibility of another from Chaplin, for which Chaplin has a story in which he wants to feature Paulette Goddard.

"In independent production activity under a set-up such as United Artists lies the future of the industry," he observed. "The big mass production factory is on the verge. Let the big companies be distributors. That's all they are anyway."

Mr. Goldwyn leaves March 5 for Europe, returning in April. He will study stories and plays and may bring back a new screen personality.

First Division's New Plans Ready March 21

Harry H. Thomas, president of First Division, home from a tour with Robert M. McKinney, a director of the company, said "final arrangements on several deals pending will be consummated by March 21st, at which time our future production program will also be announced."

Business improvement in all sections, he reported, is reflected by personnel additions at Atlanta, Charlotte, New Orleans and Boston, as well as the New Haven office to be opened February 25th.

First Division releases product of Alliance, Chesterfield, Invincible, Associated Talking Pictures, Normandy and Diversion.

SEC Cites Pay of Harry, Jack Cohn

Contracts made by the Columbia Pictures Corporation for remuneration of some of its executives were among the data filed as confidential that were made public this week in Washington by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Harry Cohn, president, and Jack Cohn, vice-president, hold three-year contracts, the commission revealed, with Harry Cohn drawing a weekly salary of $3,500 and his brother $2,000.

Abraham Schneider, treasurer, held a two-year contract from April 17, 1933, for $650 a week with options for the next three years at $800 for the first, $1,000 for the second and $1,250 for the third. J. Freidman, director, Columbia Pictures Export, S.A., received $33,884 in the last fiscal year, and E. Zana, director, Columbia Films, S.A., $13,699. Approximately $120,000 was paid to 16 other officers and directors. A total of $1,173,093 was reported paid to 29 other employes, of which $1,045,977 went for the salaries of production managers, writers, players, etc.

Details of an underwriting contract with Hemphill, Noyes and Company for the floating of 75,000 shares of $2.75 preference convertible no par stock were also made public, showing the company was to receive $46.50 a share and the stock was to be sold to the public at $50, the underwriters retaining the difference.

Bill to Bar Alien Actors Opposed

Appearing before the House Immigration Committee on Wednesday, Martin Beck and Brock Pemberton voiced emphatic opposition to the Dickinson bill to bar alien actors, citing the practical and artistic necessity of importing certain players, not necessarily stars, to perform stage or screen roles essential to the success of plays requiring simulation of foreign atmosphere.

Fox District Managers Meeting in Chicago

The season's sales activities and the Kent sales drive will be reviewed Saturday and Sunday at a Twentieth Century-Fox district managers' meeting in the Congress hotel, Chicago. The home office group will be headed by John D. Clark, general sales manager.

New Playwright Pact Advanced

The contract committee of the Dramatists' Guild has completed discussions with the League of New York Theatres, the producing managers, on terms of the new playwright-manager basic agreement which is to go into effect March 1.

The revised agreement will incorporate provisions for the control of sale of screen rights to stage plays, and indications are that the playwrights' royalty will be increased and the film companies' proportionately decreased.

On its completion the draft will be submitted to the managers next week. The dramatists may hold another meeting with the managers.

The authors have complained that competitive bidding for film rights has been greatly restricted by heavy Hollywood financing on Broadway in the last two seasons, and they have demanded a larger share in the screen rights. There is considerable sentiment for 100 per cent collections of the royalties, but it was said this probably will be compromised.

Reports that film companies will set up their own stage producing organizations to obviate paying larger royalties were not credited in New York film and stage circles.

Customs Revises Newsreel Rules

Clarification of regulations governing the duty-free admission of newsreels made abroad was sought this month by the Bureau of Customs through the issuance of a ruling holding that travel and scenic films are not to be considered as news unless definitely tied in to news events.

The ruling was issued, it was explained at the Bureau, to dissolve confusion which has arisen as to the classification of news pictures because of loose interpretation of previous regulations under which at some ports all pictures classified as newsreel film were admitted without question.

The effect of the ruling will be to take out of the category of newsreels, scenic and travel films where the former deals merely with scenery as such and the latter depicts merely the customs or scenery of a foreign land.

It was held at the Bureau that the new ruling will not affect the newsreel producers in the importation of pictures of news.

Bureau of Mines Adds 702 Reels

Motion pictures produced by the Bureau of Mines, United States Department of the Interior, were shown on 67,183 occasions to an attendance of 5,842,112 persons for the calendar year ending December 31, 1935.

During this period 702 additional reels were added to the Bureau's library. Owing to the demand for these industrial educational motion pictures it was necessary to turn down 1,377 requests for the films.

ONE THEATRE FOR EVERY 20,716 PERSONS IN WORLD

There's Film Theatre per 8,234 Inhabitants in U. S., 9,270 in Europe; but It's One to Every 1,202 in South Africa

Despite Europe's greater density of population and relatively older cultural position, the motion picture industry in the United States provides far greater and more modern facilities for entertaining and educating its people through the medium of the screen, operating a motion picture theatre for every 8,234 inhabitants, whereas Europe has only one theatre for each 9,270.

Likewise the theatre facilities in this country far exceed those of all other large geographical divisions of the world, comparing with one theatre in Canada for every 11,466 persons, one in Latin and Central America for each 23,051, one in Africa and the Near East for every 67,188 and only one in the Far East for every 184,118.

The ratio of populations of all of the world's countries to the number of theatres operating, both silent-and-sound and all-sound, is shown on the following pages.

The motion picture in the first 40 years of its commercial existence has dotted the world with some 87,299 theatres, to serve 1,808,705,017 in the countries where they are located, or an average of one theatre for every 20,716 persons.

There still, however, is much ground to be covered in extending theatre facilities abroad.

The conclusions already set forth are based on both silent and sound theatres, the silent motion picture abroad being far from a dead issue, judging from the 35,602 silent theatres still in operation.

Virtually all of the United States' theatres are wired; thus the average in this country remains at one sound theatre for every 8,234 persons. But elsewhere sound theatre facilities are less abundant, Europe having only one wired house for every 19,945, Canada one for each 12,457.

Although the United States stands far in the lead of all other large geographical divisions, it does not lead as an individual country, South Africa having one sound theatre for every 1,202 inhabitants; New Zealand, one for every 3,560; Sweden, one per 3,915; Australia, one for every 5,005, and England, with one for every 7,927 persons.

All of Europe's 60,150 theatres serve 557,608,190 inhabitants, while the United States has 15,378 for its 127,000,000. Far East countries, having a combined population of 954,654,019, boast of only 5,185 theatres.

Some extent of the inadequate motion picture exhibition facilities in other parts of the world may be gleaned from a study of China with its 300 theatres serving 474,787,386 persons, averaging one theatre per 1,582,624 inhabitants.

Extension of Exhibitor Savings On Power Seen in TVA Vote

When the United States supreme court on Monday upheld TVA and the Government's activity as an operator of electric distribution systems to consumers, continuance of rates 40 to 50 per cent below those charged by private power companies was assured hundreds of exhibitors in Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi and Tennessee.

Those states are supplied by the Tennessee Valley Authority, which was validated by the court's decision ruling the project constitutional. Wholesale extension of these facilities to other sections of the South are now expected.

Washington dispatches said plans are going forward for setting up additional power authorities similar to the TVA in three sections of the country, with resultant economies to theatres and other users of power. Plans call for a Mississippi Valley Authority to serve parts of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, and extending South; a Red River Authority to "electrify" parts of Texas and Louisiana, while another project would centre in the Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dams to supply power at lower costs to Washington, Oregon and Northern California.

Upturn Is Sighted In South America

Predicting an upturn for the motion picture industry in the South American territory, Walter Gould, general manager for United Artists in Latin America, in a letter to N. Bruski, Buenos Aires correspondent of MOTION PICTURE HERALD: "I am firmly convinced that the industry will be amply rewarded during the coming season, to a far greater extent, perhaps, than during the last few years, for its unceasing 'never-say-die' spirit and attitude.

"Conditions throughout Latin America have not been any too encouraging, as we all know; still, the apparent absence of the wellknown silver lining in the clouds which have obscured the business horizon for quite a while, did not cause us to stand still, or put a stop to our activities.

"There has been a general improvement in the economic conditions throughout Latin America. This has helped us considerably, and I feel that all of us ought to be thankful to such of the powers that be who relieved the tension that existed, and made business, in these parts, anyway, feel that it had not yet lost its rightful place in the scheme of things.

"I know of no American motion picture company which should not show an improvement in its 1936 business over that of the current year, if not all throughout Latin America then at least in almost all of the various countries comprising the territory. The most outstanding advances, however, will be made by those companies who will give the people down this way what they want, and what they desire to the same extent our people do at home, quality product."

Doubt Moving of Offices to Madrid

Further reports from Spain that the American film companies were considering removal of their Spanish headquarters from Barcelona to Madrid met with expressions of doubt at the foreign offices in New York this week.

The reports said that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is "seriously contemplating" moving its main office and costly dubbing plant to the Spanish capital, and that other companies planned to follow suit.

MGM's foreign department said this sounded incredible since the company has a large investment in a sound studio at Madrid, the building and land of which it owns outright and which was built by MGM's own architects. Arthur Loew, the company's foreign manager, is now in Europe.

Other American companies have their dubbing done in studios operated by Spanish companies.

Foreign departments of other companies and of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America reported that they had not heard of any removal plan, and were inclined to discredit it, although no definite information was available.

On the other hand, it was pointed out that while Barcelona is the country's chief commercial city and the port of entry for direct shipments from abroad, Madrid is more centrally located and might be a more economical distribution center. The Spanish film company branches now get their supplies through Paris, an arrangement of several years standing.

WORLD'S THEATRE FACILITIES

The United States Government reported on February 1st the existence of 87,299 motion picture theatres throughout the world, an increase of approximately 27,000 over 1934. Using the government's figures, a study was undertaken to determine the relation of theatre facilities to population in all countries of the world; the findings appear herewith, first ratioing populations to combined totals of silent and sound theatres, as follows:

1 THEATRE PER 8,234 IN U. S.

United States leads all large geographical divisions in the world in sound theatre facilities, making available one wired house for every 8,234 inhabitants, compared with one sound theatre in Canada per 12,457 inhabitants, one in Europe per 19,945, one per 34,779 in Latin and Central America, one per 89,164 inhabitants in Africa and the Near East, and only one for each 257,180 persons in the Far East. FURTHER IMPROVEMENT IN RECEIPTS OBSERVED

New Theatre Construction Cited; Larger Earnings Expected by Warner and Twentieth Century-Fox

Wall Street last week took its periodical inventory of the motion picture business, through the medium of the Wall Street Journal of Dow, Jones, and reported the following findings:

Theatre receipts are running ahead of last year, despite the bad weather.

New theatre construction is the most encouraging sign.

There is no indication of a general advance in admissions.

Double bills are troubling producers.

Larger proportionate gains in earnings are expected by Warner and Twentieth Century-Fox.

A significant increase in the number and quality of British films shown in the United States was reported, with a stronger bid for American business expected to come from Britain.

Conducting the investigation into present and future conditions in the motion picture business for Wall Street Journal was Financial Reporter Sydney B. Self, who said that with producers starting the year with the largest number of promising features in five years, prospects for improved profits in 1936 continue to look bright.

The theatre construction revival was the first to be noticed of any consequence since 1929, Mr. Self learned, with the tendency to supplant old structures with new and modern buildings appearing around the country.

Theatre owners have hopes that there soon will be effected a general advance in admissions, though there is no indication in that direction at present, the investigation disclosed.

Outlook of Large Companies

"There is considerable difference in the immediate outlook for the various large film companies," explained the Wall Street Journal, "due to the slightly different situations in which they find themselves after the last four years of reorganizations of one kind or another. Larger proportionate gains in profits in the first half of this year, for example, will probably be shown by Warner Brothers and Twentieth Century-Fox than by the other large companies in the field, although all are on the up grade.

"This is because both Warner and Twentieth Century-Fox have their financial troubles well behind them, but are only now beginning to show the benefits in operations.

"Warner has a better list of films on its program this season than in years, and as a result earnings in the first quarter were slightly over $1,000,000. Business in the current period, ending February 29, is running ahead of the first quarter.

"Twentieth Century-Fox is now getting into its stride with the new releases from the Zanuck-Schenck combination. While no earnings for the final quarter of 1935 are available, the showing is expected to be far ahead of any other period last year.

"Paramount and RKO are still in the throes of the revamping process," continued the Wall Street Journal. "Paramount has completed its financial reorganization, but still has a management job to get straightened out. Quality of film productions fell off pretty sharply in the last half last year, and this will be reflected in earnings, notably in the final quarter of 1935 which will be materially lower than the third quarter. Some improvement will probably be shown by Paramount in the first quarter of 1936, but normal earning power may be deferred for some months here. Radio-Keith-Orpheum is still working on its financial reorganization, and until this is completed and approved, the unsettlement may handicap operations.

Other Companies

"Loew's had no financial difficulties, and therefore maintained earnings better through the depression than any of the other first line companies. However, for this very reason its proportionate gains may not be as large as the gains shown by companies that have further to go on the up grade, before reaching something like normal operations.

"Loew's always has concentrated on high cost features. Its current progress includes a larger number of expensive films than ever before. Since roughly 50 per cent of the cost of a film is written off in the first three months after its release, it is obvious that the release of say three more films costing an average of $700,000, than were released a year ago, would jump amortization sharply, and temporarily hold back earnings.

"Columbia Pictures earnings for the six months ended Dec. 31, 1935, are expected to be nearly as large as they were a year ago.

"There has been a significant increase in the number and quality of British films shown in this country this year," Wall Street Journal reported. "Gaumont-British has released four features. Alexander Korda, who is affiliated with United Artists in this country, has released 'The Ghost Goes West,' made in England, and has a number of other films coming. Great Britain is having a great revival of interest in film companies and film financing, and a stronger bid for a share of American markets is expected in the near future," the report concluded.

L. A. Brown to Baltimore

Louis A. Brown, for nearly four years chief publicist for Loew theatres in Washington, has been named to a similar position in Baltimore, succeeding Herbert Morgan, promoted to shorts subject manager in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer home office. Mr. Brown will handle publicity for Loew's Century, Valencia and Parkway. He is succeeded by J. Raymond Bell, formerly Mr. Brown's assistant.

E. C. Grainger Leaves Fox for Post in Circuit

E. C. Grainger, eastern division sales manager for Twentieth Century-Fox, has resigned to become general manager of the Feiber and Shea circuit in New York. The resignation is effective April 15th.

Mr. Grainger, who has been in high sales executive posts with the Fox organization for the last 10 years, forwarded his resignation to John C. Clark, Twentieth Century-Fox sales manager, who is now on the West Coast for product conferences at the studio. Mr. Clark is expected in New York this week, but probably will not announce a succesor to Mr. Grainger until a later date.

Mr. Grainger's new post with the Shea circuit will be a specially created one in which he will act as a general aid to Mr. Shea, the circuit's operator. While the bulk of the Shea theatres are located in Ohio, it has a number of important houses in upstate New York, at Pittsburgh, Erie and Bradford, Pa.; Manchester and Nashua, N. H., and Westfield, Amherst and Attleboro, Mass. The circuit numbers approximately 50 houses in all. The circuit maintains headquarters in the Loew's State Building in New York.

Merman to Direct for Carewe

Bruce Merman, veteran producer and director of short subjects, has been signed by Edwin Carewe to produce and direct two series of short subjects for the Carewe program of instructional entertainment for schools, churches and civic auditoriums. One of the series is called "Timely Topics," which will reenact current events. The other will be "See America First."

Study Technical Advances

The Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood has scheduled a series of meetings to familiarize studio department executives and technicians with developments in allied fields. The first meeting was held in the National Broadcasting Company's new Hollywood plant.

Halperins Form New Company

Edward and Victor Halperin of Academy Pictures in Los Angeles have announced formation in New England of a producing and distributing organization to be known as Academy Halperin Pictures.

Gardner Succeeds Culbert

Bernard Gardner has been appointed managing director of RCA Photophone, Ltd., at London, succeeding Frederic Paul Culbert.

Film Society Formed

The Modern Film Society of New Orleans, newly formed, will start its showings with the Soviet made "Chapayev" March 3d at the Happy Hour theatre.

FOREIGN RELEASES GROW IN FRANCE WHILE HOMEMADE PRODUCT DROPS

463 Pictures Shown in Year Compares with 436 in 1934 and 419 in Previous Twelvemonth; Quality Has Improved

by PIERRE AUTRE
Paris Correspondent

Steady increase in the number of feature productions released on the French market, while the French-made fell off, is reflected in a comparison of the last three years. There were 463 released last year in France, as against 436 in 1934 and 419 the year previous.

The 463 pictures released in 1935 included:

I. 383 Pictures Called "Of General Exhibition" (pictures dialogued or dubbed in the French language):
   (a) Films with French dialogue and made in French: 132
      1. 112 made in the French studios.
      2. 20 made in foreign studios as French versions of foreign pictures: Germany, 13; Italy, 5; U.S.A., 2.
   (b) Foreign talkers dubbed in French: 251

U.S.A.	193
Germany	25
England	19
Italy	6
U.R.S.S.	3
Miscellaneous	5

II. 237 Foreign Talkers Shown in Their Original Version, Called "Of Limited Exhibition," as each of them cannot be shown in more than 15 French theatres:

U.S.A.	177
Germany	34
England	14
U.S.S.R.	5

Of the 237 foreign talkers, 157 had been shown also in a version "dubbed" in French. As they cannot be counted twice in the general totals, 157 have been subtracted in the general totals.

100 More Dubbings

The statistics show a decline in the number of French pictures. There were 143 French pictures released in 1933 compared with 126 in 1934 and only 112 in 1935. This drop comes mainly from the disappearance of big concerns such as GFFA and Pathé-Natan, whose producing and distributing activities have practically ceased. In 1935 GFFA released one picture, the French dubbed version of British and Dominion's "Nell Gwynn." The distributing company of Pathé-Natan, Pathé Consortium Cinema, which has been left out of the Natan concern, has released 10 French pictures among them five of Natan production.

But if the number of the French productions has fallen down, the quality of the pictures has improved. They have included such box-office successes as "La Bandera," "Les Yeux Noirs," "L'Equipage," "Koenigsmark," "Baccara," "Deuxieme Bureau," "Pasteur," "Crime et Chatiment," "Le Bonheur" and lately "La Kermesse Heroique" and "Veille D'Armes."

Figures of French pictures made in foreign countries are about the same as in previous years: 20 instead of the 24 in 1934.

A big change has been the enormous increase of dubbed pictures: 251 in 1935 compared with 150 in 1934 and 143 in 1933.

This increase comes mainly from the American pictures: there were 105 American dubbed films in 1933, as against 115 in 1934 and 193 in 1935. Leaders in the industry were surprised to see such a large number of dubbed pictures in 1935, as French regulations allow only 188 pictures to be dubbed a year. But the total of 188 is for the dubbed pictures reviewed yearly by the French censorship and, of course, does not correspond with the number of released pictures of the period. Of the 251 dubbed pictures released in France in 1935, at least 100 of them had been reviewed and admitted by the censor in 1934 and even 1933.

The number of dubbed pictures released in 1933 and 1934, which were 143 and 150, was under the 188 yearly allowed. In 1935, dubbed old American pictures included "Melody Cruise," "Black Beauty," "War Correspondent," "Double Harness," "Jungle Killer," "The Last of the Mohicans" (a serial reduced to an eight-reel picture), "Out of Singapore," and so on. It is clear that not all these pictures are included in the pictures submitted to censorship in 1935.

From the business standpoint, it is not so good for the American companies to have released so many dubbed pictures, as dubbed pictures generally do not make much money. All ordinary French cinemas in Paris, as in the provinces, are now showing two feature pictures in their programs. Generally these programs include a foreign dubbed picture as the supporting picture, and the main picture a French one.

American or British films which have been shown in Paris' socalled specializing first-run cinemas are used as supporting pictures when dubbed and generally released.

A few dubbed pictures have been used to headline the program and have made big money, among them "Baby Take a Bow," "Bright Eyes," "Little Colonel" (Shirley Temple pictures), "Dancing Lady," "Sequoia," "Call of the Wild," "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," "Gay Divorcee," "G-Men," "Abdul the Damned," "39 Steps," "Maskarade" (German).

In some Paris cinemas, pictures like "One Night of Love" or "Naughty Marietta" have been shown in the first part of the program with a French film as the chief attraction.

Booking prices of dubbed pictures have come down considerably, especially in the provinces. In some big towns, such as Rouen and Marseilles, an exhibitor of a first-run cinema will not pay more than $50 for a double feature program including two dubbed American pictures of good quality.

Many American pictures which had been great successes in America and England, and also in Paris shown in their original versions, have been terrible flops when shown as dubbings in the Paris and provincial ordinary cinemas.

French audiences now want primarily movement, any film loses about half of its value by dubbing.

Dubbing Less Popular

In a picture like "One Night of Love," which in its original version did marvelous business in Paris in its first-run and stayed five months at the Edouard VII theatre, the dubbing definitely killed all the fun and the spontaneous effects of the dialogue, the provincial box-office indicated. Of course, the songs had not been dubbed and Grace Moore was singing the same as in the American version. But French patrons of the ordinary cinemas did not care so much to come to hear Grace Moore, whom they had never heard before. All the people who were really interested in this picture had seen it in Paris in the original version. And in the provinces, patrons do not want to hear songs in any language but French. A few months ago in Dijon, patrons of the town legitimate theatre refused to hear an Italian tenor singing Tosca in Italian, and there was a big riot.

In any case, say the critics, in a dubbed picture the voices seem "mechanical," however good the synchronization and dialogue may be. In a great picture with much action, as in "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," the film, when dubbed, does not lose so much of its value. But where the value lies in the dialogue, dubbing is unsatisfactory. There are, of course, some exceptions; the dubbed version of "The Private Life of Henry the Eighth" was excellent. But there was interest in the story, and in the actors.

Foreign original talkers are not to be shown in more than 15 French cinemas,

"SUTTER'S GOLD" IS LATEST COLOR SHADE

The creation of a new shade called "Sutter's Gold" has been announced by Margaret Hayden Rorke, managing director of the Textile Color Card Association of the United States. The color, of gleaming gold tone, will be widely promoted throughout the fashion industry, as it interprets one of the outstanding color movements here and in Paris, Mrs. Rorke said.

FRENCH MAKE 109 FILMS

five in Paris and 10 in the provinces. Of the 237 foreign talkers, 177 are American. Cinemas showing foreign talkers are nearly all in Paris, where there are now about 30. In the provinces, there are three in Nice, two in Marseilles, one in Bordeaux, one in Lyons.

Best successes among foreign talkers in 1935 have been "Curly Top," "Sequoia," "Treasure Island," "David Copperfield," "One Night of Love," "The Whole Town's Talking," "She Married Her Boss," "It's a Gift," "The Gilded Lily," "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" (released at the same time as the dubbed version), "Ruggles of Red Gap," "Big Broadcast of 1936," "Gay Divorcee," "The Lost Patrol," "The Informer," "G-Men," "Oil for the Lamps of China," "Sanders of the River" (London Film), "39 Steps" (Gaumont British), "Episode" (Tobias Sascha, in German).

109 French Films Produced

Last year there were 109 French features produced in the French studios, 114 in 1934, and 157 in 1933. These 109 have been made by 83 producing companies, none, however, with more than five films in the year. Flores Film (Bacos) made five which have been distributed by Paramount. More than ever, with the disappearance of Natan and GFFA as producers, it has been a matter of independent producers. Besides the 109 pictures, the French studios have produced six in foreign languages: three English-speaking versions of French pictures: "La Vie Parisienne," "Tarass Boulba" and "Koenigsmark," and two German speaking versions: "La Kermesse Heroique," "Varieties," and an Egyptian talker, "Love Tears."

The French pictures have been made in 13 studios, as follows:

Studios Pathé Natan: 23 pictures, plus 3 foreign speaking versions—26 pictures.
Paris Studios Cinema: 20 pictures, plus 1 foreign speaking version—21 pictures.
G.F.F.A. (Paris): 13 pictures.
Eclair (Epinay): 12 pictures, plus 1 foreign speaking version—13 pictures.
Paramount Studios: 11 pictures.
Neuilly Studios: 9 pictures.
Photosonor Studios: 5 pictures.
Place Clichy Studios: 4 pictures.
Studio François 1er: 3 pictures.
G.F.F.A. (Nice): 2 pictures.
Tobis (Epinay): 1 picture, plus 1 foreign speaking version—2 pictures.
Pagnol (Marseilles): 2 pictures.

Usually the independent companies rent sound stages for one or two weeks.

From a quality viewpoint, 1935 was a good year for French pictures. The best and biggest film was "La Kermesse Heroique," directed by Jacques Feyder. This is a Tobis production produced at the Tobis studios at Epinay, in the Paris suburb, and made in both French and German-speaking versions. It is called the most ambitious and artistic picture ever produced in France. A Flemish town was built for it, channels and all. This picture received the "Great Award of the French Cinema for 1935." Performance, cast and story are nearly perfect, but it is a family picture.

Other good French pictures produced in 1935 are "La Bandera," by Julien Duvivier; "L'Equipage," Anatol Litvak; "Crime and Punishment," Pierre Chenal; "Les Beaux Jours," Marc Allégret; "Veille D'Armes," Marcel Lherbier; "Pasteur," Sacha Guitry; "Dark Eyes," Tourjansky; "Baccara," Yves Mirande; "Koenigsmark," Maurice Tourneur; "Deuxieme Bureau," Pierre Billon.

50 Pictures Planned

No less than 50 pictures are planned for this year.

The director of "Crime and Punishment" is just finishing at the Eclair studios his new picture, "Mutiny on the Elsenaure," from Jack London's novel. All outside scenes have been shot on a four-masted schooner on the Atlantic. In Marseilles Marcel Pagnol is making a new version of his "Topaze," which Paramount had produced in its Paris studios about four years ago. January is normally a quiet period, but fifteen French productions are in work.

A new departure of French production has been in two and three-reeler scenic pictures, and the like, among them "Le Mont St. Michel" and "Terre D'Armour" by Maurice Cloche; "Fontainbleau," by Marcel Idzskowsky; "Visages de France," by Kirsanoff; "La Voie Triomphale," by L. Cuni; "Images du Rouergue," by J. C. Bernard.

CENSOR SETTLEMENT IS REACHED AS NANKING AND CANTON CONFER

U. S. Distributors Agree to Allow Exhibitors 50 Per Cent of All Canton Fees Pending Final Ruling at Canton

by J. P. KOEHLER
Shanghai Correspondent

After a three-months "holiday," occasioned by dispute over the payment of local censor fees in Canton, a period during which no pictures from the eight large American distributors were shown in the city of Canton, a settlement has been reached, practically on the same terms as originally offered by the same distributors last August.

This settlement allows the theatre to pay the censor fees, instead of the distributors, and the distributors receive full payment for all such fees deducted prior to the settlement date.

While the matter still is receiving consideration by the Nanking and Canton authorities, the distributors have agreed to allow the exhibitors 50 per cent of all Canton censor fees paid as a temporary relief until a definite ruling has been made by Nanking.

The situation leaves approximately 100 American films behind schedule and has caused severe losses to both exhibitors and distributors, and, with conditions in China as they are at present, scarcely bodes well for the coming season.

The distributors were quite right in regarding the Canton rule as illegal in respect to the National law which provides for only one censor fee to be paid at Nanking, but at times local conditions arise that must be considered and met. Unfortunately, undue publicity at the beginning of the difficulties led to resentments that left no alternative for either side but to fight it out to an agreement.

Whether the distributors will receive an allowance on fees paid at Nanking equal to the amount paid in Canton remains to be seen. However, it is quite certain that Canton censorship will continue, as the censors there have installed a regular equipped screening room and it is not likely that such an investment will be discarded.

The unrest in North China, in the cities of Tientsin and Peiping, has seriously affected theatre receipts. A recent survey showed that the evening performances are suffering badly due to the disinclination of the people to go out after dark. Especially does it affect the subsequent-runs, where the audiences are practically all native middle and lower classes easily disturbed by any military displays.

With the long tieup in Canton, and the Northern unrest, theatre receipts will suffer a severe blow this season, and with drop in the value of the Chinese dollar the distributors' expenses are rising steadily and returns to home offices will show a decided drop for the 1935-1936 season, unless exceptional product, suitable for China, is forthcoming.

That Chinese-made productions can and will find a place in the premiere theatres has been proved by a recent showing of the United Photoplay Studio's production "Tien Luan," which had a two-day premiere at Shanghai's largest cinema—the Grand. While by no means up to foreign standard, and a synchronized film with music, it drew well and received favorable criticisms in the native newspapers. The film was transferred to another semi-foreign cinema, and it is now in its third week with prospects for an extended run.

Student activities centered on the railway line between Shanghai and Nanking resulted in a serious disruption of film service. Distributors were forced to use steamer and bus lines and private motor cars to maintain schedules for Christmas and New Year's releases in Shanghai and other cities affected by the tieup of trains. Martial law having been declared in the cities of Shanghai (Chinese controlled area), Nanking and Hankow, further reduction in box-office receipts may be expected in these cities, though in Shanghai the revenue is practically 98 per cent from theatres located in non-Chinese areas, and, therefore, not affected by the military ruling.

Changes are to be effected in the constitution of the Chinese Film Censor Committee in Nanking. Whether these changes will have any effect upon the present regulations remains to be seen. Certainly there are enough questions pending settlement, and the foreign distributors are hoping for relief.

There were 435 foreign features passed in 1935 by the Central Film Censorship Committee at Nanking. Of these some 375 were or will be released by the eight major American distributors in China. The others are British, German, French, USSR, Japanese and Indian films in quantity in the order given. Hollywood product holds preeminence in drawing power, but a few outstanding British films have done well—especially in the larger port cities. German and also French films usually have English subtitles superimposed, while Soviet films superimpose both English and Chinese subtitles, with the Russian dialogue on the film track. Soviet films show only in theatres usually classed as subsequent-run houses, but draw heavily on the Shanghai Russian public due to the desire to hear their native language from the screen.

Few American films were banned in the year by the Nanking censors. Among those rejected were "The Invisible Man" (Universal); "Werewolf of London" (Universal); "The Raven" (Universal) was banned in Canton only. "Camera Thrills," a Universal short, was banned by the International Settlement Authorities in Shanghai. "She" (RKO Radio) was banned by Nanking, as were also "The Battle" (United Artists) and "The Bat Whispers" (UA 1934). "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" (Paramount) has not been passed by Nanking; and "The Girl Friend" (Columbia) was barred by the International Settlement Authorities of Shanghai for its alleged satire on the French Police. "Oil for the Lamps of China" (Warner-First National) has not been approved as yet by Nanking, and "Ben Hur" was shut out after running for a long period under a license issued by a former board at Nanking.

Cutting has been done on many occasions, but on the whole such cutting has been confined to phrases or scenes objectionable to the Chinese people, or in the Settlement or French Concession to such items as might offend the sensibilities of any nationality. Shanghai especially is "touchy" in this respect due to the peculiar political position of the International Settlement. No great complaint has been aroused by any action of the censors, either Chinese or foreign, as regards cuts or bans in China, though restrictions might be more effectively handled were the distributor to do his own cutting after complying with the demands of the censors.

Declaring that righthand pages are no better read than those on the left, Harold A. Anderson of the Gallup Research Service, speaking at the Newspaper Representatives Association of Chicago, contended that in many cases the righthand pages are less thoroughly perused.

The amount of attention devoted to any page, he said, depends on the degree of interest focused in the news on that page.

VAUDEVILLE RISING AS DUAL BILL RIVAL

Gaumont-British Planning Combination Show Expansion; ABP Offers $5,000,000 Stock Issue

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

Possible displacement of the second feature by variety acts or "presentation" spectacles in an increased number of British super-theatres again is being discussed, following an announcement that Gaumont-British definitely is planning an extension of film-variety. Recently, Union Cinema Company was credited with the more drastic intention of going all-variety with some of its houses.

Gaumont-British successfully has combined stage acts with two features at the Dominion, Tottenham Court Road, which runs second pre-releases, and in some of its bigger London neighborhood and provincial houses. Mixed bills also are favored, in London, by Paramount and the Hyams brothers, now associated with Gaumont through a subsidiary.

For a considerable time past the policy has been out of favor with a majority of exhibitors, belief in the all-picture program as a theory having been reinforced by the practical consideration that, the orchestra having disappeared, considerable overheads would have to be incurred to bring the stage again into use.

Factors in Revived Interest

Various factors may be responsible for the revived interest now being shown in the mixed bill. The intensive character of competition in many areas is the most obvious; the heavily capitalized theatre wants to play at something like capacity. Product difficulty is a second powerful reason; it has operated with particular force in some London neighborhoods. Allied to these is the desire to exploit the personalities of screen celebrities.

The Gaumont policy is definitely to feature on the stage "someone of film interest or connected with film production." In catering for the public desire to see screen personalities in the flesh this group is undoubtedly increasing its goodwill as a producing unit. The ninety minutes of "variety" which it proposes, in some theatres, may be a good investment in two senses. In the great bulk of theatres, it is still true to say, the double feature program still holds its own.

"Out of Date" Theatre Wiring

If Bernhard Gardner, new European chief of RCA, is to be taken literally, British exhibitors are in for a new capital expenditure for sound apparatus which may well make them think twice before incurring other expenses in connection with their stages.

Mr. Gardner, guest at a luncheon to signalize his succession to F. P. Culbert, sent the blunt message to the British industry that a big proportion of the sound equipment with which it purveyed entertainment to the public was out of date to such a degree that it would have to be scrapped.

"Your reproducing equipments," said Mr. Gardner, "are probably producing only fifty per cent of what you could get," and, he added, "there is nothing to be done with the existing equipment." He declared that "there must be a hundred per cent change."

A statement that reproducing equipments were being replaced wholesale in the States and that England was lagging behind in quality of sound reproduction did not appreciably soften the blow to exhibitors. Reginald Crow, an ex-president of the CEA, asked what could be done by exhibitors without capital reserves, but all the reply he obtained was that they must do what they did when chairs and other equipment wore out.

It seems, therefore, that the British exhibitor faces the prospect of a hundred per cent expenditure on re-wiring, plus a not too distant possibility of demands for television equipment, plus entertainment tax, plus rental demands of 40 per cent upwards, plus sound "maintenance" charges, plus the difficulty of getting product.

ABP's $5,000,000 Offer

Associated British Picture Corporation, Ltd., which controls the ABC circuit, British International Pictures, Wardour Films and Pathe, issued £1,000,000 ($5,000,000) of 5 per cent first mortgage debenture stock, at 101 per cent, this week. Its total issued capital is now £7,050,000 of an authorized total of £7,500,000. The whole of the £3,500,000 debenture stock is now issued. The company, which controls 260 theatres, issued a forecast of profits for the present year exceeding by £200,000 the total, £481,-972, of last year. The new money is to finance the purchase of 30 theatres, of which 21 are freehold. ABP's total assets are valued at £8,486,850 and the debenture issue is secured on premises valued at £5,717,383. The debenture stock is redeemable at 102½ and a cumulative sinking fund of 1½ per cent per annum is in operation.

Television's Own Films

It is now definite that the British Broadcasting Corporation will establish its own film unit under the general control of Gerald Cock, director of television.

The announcement is not unexpected. It has been known that, at least during the period of experimental transmission, the BBC intended to rely largely upon films. It has also been made clear that it can expect to use films from Wardour Street only under strictly limiting conditions. Features will be available only after the conclusion of theatre runs and news reels, subject to a similar restriction, will reach the BBC at a time when they have ceased to be news reels.

General anticipation is that BBC plans to make its own newsreel. Definite plans to this effect are not made, at this time, the immediate intention of the BBC being to build up a reserve, in film form, of musical and dramatic material suitable for television transmission and also to prepare "illustrations" for its varied series of "Talks".

Some form of coverage of important news events nevertheless seems inevitable when the film unit is in being. One suggestion is that BBC activity in this field will be supplemented by material drawn from the news reel companies but not included in their releases to theatres.

In turning to films for the purpose of "canning" items for television later, the BBC is following its own precedent in the field of broadcasting. It regularly uses the Blattnerphone for recording program items. The broadcast of King George V's funeral was repeated, by this means, in an Empire transmission.

Significant is the fact that the new film unit will have a semi-official character, the BBC being a body operating a public monopoly permit.

The London and Home Counties Branch of the CEA, passed a resolution authorizing its officers to put forward an amendment to rules at the annual general meeting. The intent is to provide powers whereby the Council of the Association shall be enabled to secure that rentals "shall not exceed the maximum sums fixed from time to time by the Council."

If this amendment is accepted by the general body of members it will be declared that one of the specific objects of the CEA is the establishment of a price maximum and, one presumes, that one of the duties of the Council will be to enforce, on its own members, observance of such a maximum.

It seems probable that, in opposing the resolution as unnecessary, T. H. Fligelstone, the president-elect for 1936, had in mind a difficulty which is not always faced in these discussions; the very big difficulty of enforcing policies which entail an out-and-out fight with the Kinematigraph Renters' Society.

The policy of the distributor-exhibitor combine is to buy, as an exhibitor, at 25 per cent and to sell, as a distributor, at 40 per cent, or more if it can get it.

To ask groups of this type to support a policy of price dictation by an exhibitors' association seems to show a stronger sense of idealism than of realism, if it is idealism to ask a distributor-exhibitor to cut his own throat.

Gainsborough Pays 9 Per Cent

Gainsborough Pictures, Ltd., G.-B. subsidiary, made a gross profit last year of £27,790 and will pay a dividend of 9 per cent. The brought forward total was £367 against £2,151 and £1,500, against £4,000, is placed to reserve. Depreciation allowance was £4,600 against £8,226. Outstanding bookings are valued at £200,663 against £160,233.

Denham Street Trust, another G.-B. company, made £26,673, an increase of £6,822 and pays 4 per cent against 3 last year. It was stated by Mr. Isidore Ostrer, presiding at the annual meeting that, although the auditors had pointed out that investments were valued at more than their market value, the issued capital was represented by assets to the extent of 96½ per cent.

Sound City (Films) Ltd., has issued the prospectus for its issue of capital, to close on Feb. 4th. Out of an authorized capital of £350,000 there are offered £135,000 in £1 six per cent cumulative participating preference shares, at par and 135,000 ordinary 5/-shares at 6/-.

Sound City is a service studio at Shepperton, near London, with over 50 acres of ground. Its exterior facilities have been used for "The Iron Duke," and "Sanders of the River." ("Congo Raid") among other pictures and space has been booked by Universal and the Wainwright interests at rentals asserted to total £30,000 per annum. Five new floors are planned, two of them offering shots of 265 feet.

GB to Film "Gordon"

Sir Cedric Hardwicke is a probable selection for the title role in "Chinese Gordon," announced by G.B. as a 1936 big production. It will cover the whole career of General Gordon.

G. B. have cast Constance Cummings for the role in "The Wrecker," originally scheduled for Sally Eilers, ill.

Denham Studio Opening

Stage number one at the London Film plant at Denham will go into active service at the end of February, when the London tenancy of Worton Hall expires.

MAJORS TAKE LAST STEP IN DUALS FIGHT BEFORE GOING TO CAPITAL

Distributors Carry Fight to U. S. Court of Appeals for Rehearing of Perelman Ruling Against Ban in Contract

Large distributors this week took their last step to force abolishment of dual bills by prohibiting them contractually, before placing their fight with independents in the hands of the United States supreme court at the Capital, highest tribunal in the land. The form of the final move was a petition to the United States circuit court of appeals, in Philadelphia, for a rehearing of the so-called Perelman case. The district court had ruled that the distributors were acting in conspiracy in restraint of trade by prohibiting double featuring through clauses in rental contracts.

The distributors, as expected, denied that a conspiracy exists, and insisted on establishing their right to restrict the dual practice through exhibition contracts. The clauses in question were in the contracts of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, RKO, Twentieth Century-Fox, United Artists and Warner-Vitagraph. Their effect was to prohibit the showing of a second feature of any company on the same program with any picture covered by the contract.

In the event that the distributors lose their petition for a rehearing, it is certain that the issue will be fought through to the United States supreme court, on the grounds that the anti-double bill clauses in the contracts are inserted legally to protect the distributors' property.

The new petition also points out to the Philadelphia court alleged discrepancies between testimony given in the trial and the findings of lower courts previously.

Text of Petition

Text of the petition, filed by Paramount, follows:

Now comes Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, one of the defendants herein, by Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett appearing by Graham Sumner and Edwin L. Weisl, its attorneys, and respectfully represents to this Honorable Court that on the 16th day of January, 1936, there was entered herein a decree affirming the decree of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Pennsylvania, which decreed that the defendants herein, including the defendant, Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, had entered into a combination or conspiracy in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law and in violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

The petitioner, Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, respectfully prays that a rehearing of the appeal be granted for the following reasons:

The decision of this Honorable Court is of serious and far-reaching importance to the entire motion picture industry. This industry is dependent for its successful existence upon the patronage and good-will of the general public. The uncontradicted evidence in this case is that protests have been lodged by public-spirited men and women, by religious and social agencies against the use of programs of double feature films in motion picture theatres. The evidence shows the following disinterested witnesses and agencies have protested against the use of double features:

Mrs. Mary Gwynn Owens, Vice-Chairman of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and Chairman of the Philadelphia Motion Picture Forum. The General Federation of Women's Clubs has about 2,000,000 members.

George J. Zehrung, Director of the Motion Picture Bureau and Motion Picture activities for the Y. M. C. A. National Council in the United States and thirty-two countries in the world. This association has a membership of about 1,000,000 people.

Mrs. James F. Looram, Chairman of the International Federation of Catholic Alumni reaching about 200,000 to 300,000 people (pp. 164-166).

National Society, Daughters of American Revolution.
National Society of New England Women.
General Federation of Women's Clubs.
All State Federations of Women's Clubs.
All state and local congresses of Parent-Teacher Associations
National Council of Jewish Women.
International Federation of Catholic Alumnae.
Principals of all high schools.
Deans of all colleges.
Heads of all private schools.
State and county public school supervisors.
City School System superintendents.
Ministers.
City Librarians.
Boy Scouts of America.
Girl Scouts of America.
All local "Better Films" and "Motion Picture Council" committees.
Local women's clubs.
Teachers' organizations.
Recreation associations.
Heads of Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. branches.
Heads of Y. M. H. A. and Y. W. H. A.
Juvenile Court judges.
Editors and publishers of educational periodicals and school periodicals.
Ministerial organizations (pp. 121-122).

The reason for their protest is quite obvious. To show double features on one program means that the exhibitor cannot at the same time show educational films, travelogues, cartoons, comedies, pictorials and other short pictures that are so desirable and worthy. When double features are shown, one feature may be suitable for children and the other unsuitable. Under such circumstances, parents will not permit children to visit theatres. The high quality of motion pictures will be seriously jeopardized. To say to these representatives of the great body of citizens that the motion picture industry will not heed this protest, will tend to destroy the good-will of its customers. Yet this Court is in effect saying that if the industry does heed this protest, it will violate the Anti-Trust laws. Under such circumstances we respectfully appeal to this Honorable Court to reconsider its decision, and permit us to point out to the Court what we believe to be fundamental errors therein.

"Want to take this opportunity of writing to you a few words of appreciation of your kindly remarks relative to the passing of our late King, George the Fifth.

"All Canadian exhibitors should express to you their appreciation, and hope they do so."

Issue Will Be Taken to U. S. Supreme Court If Companies Lose Plea for Rehearing of Philadelphia Decision

1. There is no competent evidence in the record to sustain the conclusion reached by the Court that a combination or conspiracy existed among the defendants. Neither is there any competent evidence in the record from which a reasonable inference can be drawn that any such combination or conspiracy existed. On the contrary, the overwhelming weight of the competent evidence in the record shows conclusively that there was no conspiracy or combination among the defendants but that whatever was done was done by each defendant independently of the other defendants.

The Court in its Opinion relies on the testimony of two witnesses, Chadwick and Kuykendahl in support of its conclusion that a conspriracy or combination did exist. Chadwick was a witness for the plaintiff and Kuykendahl was a witness for the defendants.

As to Chadwick, your Honorable Court recited his testimony, which consisted of the statement of Mayer, an executive of one of the defendants who, according to Chadwick, "purported to speak on behalf of the defendants," and stated that a method had been devised to stop the exhibition of double features. Your Honorable Court also recited that Chadwick had testified that Mayer "further stated to the meeting that the practice (of double features) had been stopped in Chicago, and if the theatres wanted features, they must use 'our features and not use double features'".

In fact, the testimony of Chadwick was not as above quoted. What he said that Mayer said was, "If you want the major pictures, you must play them and not have double features, and if you think the independents can support you, go ahead to the independents, but if you want ours, you must play our pictures and not use them in double features" (Record, p. 77). This is quite different. Mayer did not say that if the theatres wanted features they must use "our features and not use double features." He said, if the theatres wanted "our features," they must not use them in double features.

This testimony of Chadwick, however, was inadmissible and entirely incompetent, regardless of the hearsay statement that the presiding officer at the meeting introduced Mayer as speaking on behalf of the defendants. Likewise inadmissible and incompetent was Chadwick's testimony that "the manager and district manager of every one of the defendants were present," which testimony this Honorable Court in its Opinion stated made Mayer's statements binding upon the defendants, since they were made in the presence of the "co-conspirators."

In the first place, the introduction by the presiding officer of Mayer "as a spokesman for the major producers and distributors" was itself a self-serving statement and incompetent, since no legal foundation had been laid to show or make it competent. Secondly, there was no proof or foundation for any proof that what Mayer said was authorized by anyone, or that he was engaged in transacting any business for any of the defendants, within the scope of his employment or authority. Thirdly, the testimony by Chadwick that Mayer spoke in the presence of "the manager and district manager of every one of the defendants" is a conclusion of Chadwick that the listeners of Mayer's speech included those whom he called "managers or district managers." There was no proof whatever as to who these "managers and district managers" were, or whom they represented, except Chadwick's self-serving statement that they were "managers or district managers" of the defendants. What authority did these "managers or district managers" have to make what Mayer said binding on the companies whom they represented?

TEXT OF DOUBLE BILL REHEARING PLEA

The record is barren of any evidence of their authority. These "managers and district managers," whatever their authority, did not speak or make any statement in respect of Mayer's remarks. Nor is it shown that it was their duty to speak or to refute anything that Mayer might have said.

As to Kuykendahl, your Honorable Court stated in its Opinion that he testified that the defendants agreed to cooperate with his association to this end. There is no identification by him of those supposed to represent the defendants in any supposed agreement, nor any testimony at all of their authority to bind anybody in the matter. Moreover, the testimony given by Kuykendahl we respectfully submit does not indicate that there was an agreement by the defendants to cooperate with his association. His testimony is to the contrary (Record, pp. 141-143).

Kuykendahl's testimony shows clearly that those with whom he discussed the matter were all free agents and acted as they saw fit when confronted by their customers with complaints as to the evil. No combination or conspiracy can fairly be inferred therefrom. On the contrary, it shows independent action. Men in industry have the right to discuss their problems and the evils of an industry, and after such discussion, may independently take such action as they see fit to remedy that evil. The mere fact that there was a discussion of the evil and action was thereafter taken which each had a right to take independently, does not make such conduct illegal. The cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States clearly give business men such right. Maple Flooring v. United States, 268 U. S. 588; Cement Manufacturers Association v. United States, 268 U. S. 588.

With further reference to all of the testimony of Chadwick and Kuykendahl, we desire to point out to the Court that what transpired at this meeting which was addressed by Mr. Mayer, and the activity of Mr. Kuykendahl following this meeting, occurred in May 1934 and would, therefore, not prove any combination or conspiracy to adopt any clauses for the prevention of double features, for the uncontradicted testimony is that long before May 1934, the various defendants, independently of each other and at different times between 1930 and 1934 used the various clauses prohibiting the use of double features. Despite this uncontradicted testimony, however, your Honorable Court apparently adopted the view that following these meetings, concerning which Chadwick and Kuykendahl testified, these clauses prohibiting double features were adopted, and inferred that there was a conspiracy among the defendants. The inference of conspiracy is therefore predicated upon a false premise.

DETROIT VOTE SHOWS DUALS ARE FAVORED

The final tally in the voting held in six Ben and Lou Cohen theatres in Detroit to determine whether patrons preferred double or single bills resulted in an overwhelming decision in favor of two features. The vote from January 18 to January 31 was: For double bills, 26,866; for single bills, 6,455.

"We were surprised that so many patrons voted and even more surprised at the heavy voting in favor of double features, as we had thought that single bills would win. Naturally, in face of the result, we will adhere to our policy of showing double features," said Ben Cohen.

2. Your Honorable Court sustained the admission of the Consent Decree entered in California in 1930 but said that the Decree was admissible "as a fact in showing the activity of the defendants to prevent double featuring." We respectfully submit that it was inadmissible for any purpose, for it constitued no admission in law that the defendants had been active to prevent double featuring. The Decree was a Consent Decree and therefore could not be used as evidence against the defendants in view of Section 5 of the Clayton Act.

3. This Court has apparntly, in its Opinion overlooked the doctrine that where conduct is as consistent with innocence as with guilt, the Court must assume innocence. Union Pacific Coal Co. v. U. S., 173 Fed. 737; Tingle v. U. S. 38 Fed. (2nd) 573; Leslie v. U. S., 43 Fed. (2nd) 288. The record clearly shows that the defendants have a genuine individual interest to protect their copyrighted films and the revenues which they derive therefrom. The restrictions which they imposed to protect this property and the revenue to be derived therefrom was reasonable and proper and their conduct in imposing the restrictions is more consistent with rightful conduct than with wrongful conduct.

4. The overwhelming weight of the evidence in the case, it is respectfully submitted, shows that the prohibition of the use of double features under the circumstances in this case, did not constitute an undue restraint of trade and did not unreasonably stifle competition. On the contrary, the preponderance of the evidence showed that to permit the use of double features would result in the stifling of normal competition. This Honorable Court on page 7 of its Opinion states, "The independent theatres require their productions in order to continue in business. But to improve their business and to permit them in some fashion, other than by offering lower prices of admission, to cary on in the face of the de luxe theatres, they must exhibit double features." This statement is contrary to the evidence. The record shows that a vast majority of the independent theatres, not only in Philadelphia, but throughout the United States, are opposed to double featuring on the ground that double featuring is injurious to their business (Record, p. 133; Record, p. 95; Record, p. 105; Record, p. 108, and Record, p. 109). It was clearly pointed out in the evidence that temporarily a theatre that shows a double feature may have some advantage over a competitor but the competitor to meet the competition, must also show a double feature and when all the exhibitors show double features, they are again on an equal footing and no benefit results.

5. Your Honorable Court held that regardless of intent, the defendants' contracts tended to reduce production or stifle competition.

The evidence discloses that production was not reduced or competition stifled, for, even if it were conceded that the number of feature motion pictures produced and marketed by the so-called "independent producers" was diminished, the uncontradicted evidence is that there would be an increase in the production and distribution of the short pictures resulting from the elimination of the double feature restriction. The Court, however, entirely overlooked this situation and makes no reference thereto in its Opinion.

6. This Honorable Court has apparently viewed the clauses prohibitiong double features as designed to eliminate the independent producers from the market. The fact of the matter is that these independent producers who produce inferior pictures as the record plainly shows, desire to be subsidized and encouraged to continue the manufacture of inferior product which they seek to foist upon the public at the expense of the distributors who produce at great cost the worth-while pictures that are in such great demand.

The purpose of the prohibited double feature clauses was not to injure any independent producer, distributor or exhibitor, but to protect the defendant's own business and to protect the license fees necessary to make costly and worth-while pictures. It is the protection of its property that compels a defendant to insist that its property be not economically and artistically sacrificed by its showing with another feature picture.

These provisions are not directed against the showing of a feature motion picture of a competitor or the showing of two feature motion pictures of a competitor on the same program. The only prohibition is against the showing of two feature motion pictures on the same program, one of which is the feature motion picture of a defendant distributor.

7. While it is obvious that a single defendant could, prior to the decree in this cause, adopt a clause against double featuring without being charged with violation of the anti-trust laws, the adoption of this clause by a second defendant subjects both to an inference that they conspired to adopt the clause, when as a matter of fact, each acted independently.

8. While this decree is in force, a single defendant might be subjected to possible punishment for contempt for violation thereof, even though all other defendants abandoned the prohibited clause. This is so because it might be seriously argued that the continued use by a single defendant of the prohibited clause was a use in continuation of the conspiracy which the Court inferred among the defendants in this cause.

9. Your Honorable Court held in its Opinion that it did not determine the question of whether Section 3 of the Clayton Act had been violated, but nevertheless it affirmed the decree of the District Court which found such a violation.

WHEREFORE, petitioner prays that a rehearing may be granted herein.

SPEED ON SPANISH TREATY ASKED AS CONTINGENT BILL IS DETAILED

Decree Project Has Been Modified But Solution Still Rests On Release of Moneys Frozen by Conversion Restrictions

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER
Barcelona Correspondent

When executives of the American branches this week received copies of the full text of the projected contingent law "for the protection of the national cinematographic industry," volume was added to their expressed hopes that the Hispano-American trade treaty soon will become a fact and that it will grant to American business the same terms accorded Great Britain and France in releasing the money frozen by conversion restrictions.

The treaties recently concluded between Spain and the French Republic and the Kingdom of Great Britain (alone and exclusive of the British Dominions and Colonies) are now in full operation. As a result, importers of all merchandise into Spain, including films, are enabled to obtain permission for immediate remittance to their sources of supply or home establishments in France and Britain, whereas Fox here in Spain has applications pending for $400,000, Paramount close upon $225,000 dollars, and Warner Brothers-First National $200,000, with the other houses in proportion.

The fact that the regulation was entitled "decree project" obviously did not tend to assuage the fears of some, at least, of the film officials that certain, if not all, of the objectionable features might become official by executive decree. The Spanish Cortes has been suspended pending the national elections this month and no legislation is possible until after the vote of the nation has been polled and the Parliament reassembled, which probably will not be until March.

Here is how the industry representatives summed up the situation with respect to the contingent law:

"This project has been under active discussion and already several modifications have been obtained. For example, the question of the contract has been definitely eliminated, as it has been recognized by the Spanish Government forces as an imposition upon and restriction of, free trading between the sources of supply and demand. Also, the 12 per cent and eight per cent requirements for the purchase and production of films likewise are to be modified."

The fact that the contingent law has been officially proposed by the Consejo Nacional de Cinematografía, the year-old council upon which native Spanish producing units and the Ufa are represented by Spanish citizens, has brought actively to the fore again the need for representation of the American producing and distributing houses as a group. It now appears that, as only a Spanish citizen may be seated upon the Council at Madrid, either M. J. Messeri, of Paramount, of Cesar Alba, of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and a son of the former president of the Cortes, Santiago Alba, will be chosen as the Americans' spokesman.

"Incertidumbre" (doubt) is the second picture of Spanish national production, filmed in Spain and in the Spanish language, to be turned over to United Artists for distribution not only throughout the homeland, but over the entire Spanish-speaking areas of the globe, as well as in the United States and Canada. This follows "El Poderoso Caballero," which marked a new departure in industrial relations between the Spanish and the North American producers and distributors. The new picture features Hilda Moreno and the latest Catalan newcomer to stardom, Ramon de Sentmenat, and Pasquita Torres, Rosita de Cabo, Ferdinand Cortés, Castro Blanco and Samuel Crespo. It is understood that the producers, Hispania Orbis Films, consider that the facilities and resources of the American unit, with its branches throughout South and Central America, Mexico and Cuba, are infinitely superior to those of any existing native organization for adequate distribution of their features. So, as with "Poderoso Caballero," "Incentidumbre" will go into theatres of all the Spanish Americas and those of the Spanish communities of the United States, such as El Paso, San Antonio, Miami, Los Angeles, Brooklyn, New York and Philadelphia, under the aegis of Artistas Asociados, S. A., the Spanish corporate representation of United Artists. The contract even specifies "all islands between Longitude 50 and 110 and between Latitude 40 and the Equator," in order to embrace certain of the Pacific archipelagoes.

To celebrate the signing of the second contract, a "cocktail thé" was offered to William B. Morgan, executive director of Artistas Asociados, S. A., and his staff associates at the Hotel Ritz, by the Hispania Orbis Films officials, Manuel Comerma, manager, the director of "Incertidumbre," Isidro Socias, and assistant director Juan Parellada, and the principals.

TOWN'S SUNDAY LAW BROKEN FOR CORTEZ

Ricardo Cortez was the recent recipient of a unique honor while making a personal appearance tour about Washington. Following a week's engagement at the Earle Theatre there, he took a two-day booking into the Maryland, an independent house in Cumberland, Md. This booking was for Friday and Saturday. In order to hold the star over for another day the city council met and, for the first time in the history of the town, decreed that the theatre could run special Sabbath shows.

Teachers Attack Crime Pictures

Double-barreled lambasting of producers of films which are "responsible for juvenile crime," and of mothers who park their children in movie houses while they attend bridge parties was engaged in last week by members of the Parent-Teachers film committee at Oklahoma City.

A group of 20 men and women attending the teachers' convention in session at that time in the city met for lunch at the YMCA to hear Paul Harrup, chairman, parade the faults of the picture industry and suggest remedies.

The PTA members dwelt at length on the refusal of film companies to provide feature pictures for showing in Oklahoma City schools.

"An exhibitor told me not long ago that we have no place in the field of entertainment," said Mr. Harrup. "I told him that with five children I do have a place in the field of entertainment, and that I wouldn't let his box office be the guiding factor in selecting their entertainment."

Mr. Harrup pointed out that thousands of dollars have been spent putting picture equipment in Oklahoma City public schools and "now the distributors will not furnish us with pictures."

The PTA representatives agreed to begin a state-wide letter-and-telegram campaign directed at Oklahoma congressmen to push passage of the Neely-Pettengill bill, lying dormant in committee, which would abolish block booking. The measure would also require all films and advertising concerning them to be labeled "adult or youth" entertainment.

As one solution for entertainment in schools of Oklahoma City, if films cannot be obtained, Harrup suggested, that the students put on weekly shows, "this was done in my youth, before there ever were pictures," said Harrup.

Blaming moving pictures as an outstanding cause of juvenile crime, Harrup said that a recent survey of 115 pictures disclosed 449 crimes in the plots, including 83 murders, 36 gambling operations, 59 assaults, 11 suicides, and holdups, fights, threats and other offenses.

Mrs. Harold Lancaster, Guymon, Okla., panhandle district, president of the PTA, came to the defense of her home town exhibitor. "He owns the two theatres there," she said. "and he's always trying to do the right thing."

Hollywood producers came in for most of the censure. "One problem is that the exhibitor sometimes is a good citizen, paying his taxes and being honest. If you prevent him from showing bad pictures, you hurt him instead of the producers, because the producer has his contract and will get his money."

Fox Metropolitan Fee Claims Cut In Half by Court

Fees for services in the reorganization of the Fox Metropolitan Playhouses aggregating $333,100 were allowed last Saturday by Federal Judge Julian W. Mack in New York. The allowances represent a reduction of considerably more than one-half the amounts sought by the reorganization participants who, last September 30, filed petitions asking for a total of $867,011 in fees. The court has had the applications under consideration since that date.

The allowances in most instances cover the entire four-year period during which Fox Met was in receivership or reorganization. The court allowed $100,000 to the firm of Beekman, Bogue, Leake, Stephens and Black, which, as counsel to the noteholders' protective committee, had asked a fee of $125,000, plus expenses. The Irving Trust Company, as receiver and trustee of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, was allowed $80,000, and had applied for $100,000. The firm of Dawes, Abbott and Littlefield, counsel to Irving Trust, which had asked a fee of $110,000, was allowed $100,000, less $30,000 already paid it.

Additional Reductions

Milton C. Weisman, receiver of Fox Theatres and proponent of the Fox Metropolitan reorganization plan, was granted $60,000. He had applied for $75,000. Central Hanover Bank and Trust Company, trustee under the Fox Metropolitan mortgage indenture, asked a total of $20,575 and was awarded $12,500, less $5,000 paid on account. Central Hanover's counsel, Larkin, Rathbone and Perry, for whom a fee of $55,000 was sought, was allowed $30,000, less $15,000 paid on account. Archibald Palmer, counsel for independent bondholders, who asked a fee of $40,000, was allowed $5,000. Lybrand, Ross Brothers and Montgomery, auditors, was allowed a $600 fee it has asked.

Applications Disallowed

Among the applications for fees which were disallowed entirely were those of members of the noteholders' protective committee which sought an aggregate of $117,500 in fees and $79,927 expenses. The members of the committee were Ernest W. Niver, chairman; William Greve, Max Horwitz, Alvin J. Schlosser, Herbert P. Howell and the late Casimir I. Stralem. The court ruled that testimony on the expenses of the committee should be submitted to Referee John E. Joyce and when proper expenses were established recovery might be had from a fund set up in the reorganization plan for this purpose. The same procedure also applies wherever large expense amounts were sought by applicants.

C. Frank Reavis, who was attorney for Si Fabian in the proposal of an unsuccessful, alternate reorganization plan for Fox Met, was denied an application for $15,000. Likewise, no remuneration was made to Percival E. Jackson, attorney for independent bondholders, nor to Isidor J. Kresel, who was of counsel to Mr. Weisman.

HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Finessing

The final session of the seven-day hearing on the petition of T. L. Tally and the Corbar Corporation to have the Fox-West Coast bankruptcy adjudication set aside, brought forth a move by Colonel William H. Neblett, counsel for the petitioners, in which the opposing counsel came off second best.

Mr. Neblett's petition makes many charges, but all of them are stated to be "on information and belief," and are not direct accusations.

In speaking of this fact after argument had closed, Judge James Alger Fee mentioned that he would be compelled to view the charges in a different light as they were not direct. Mr. Neblett was on his feet immediately and said that with the court's permission he would be delighted to amend his petition and make all charges without reservation.

Such a change could be made in a few sentences without affecting the accusations in any way, but Mr. Neblett did not mention this, as he knew direct charges would leave the burden of proof entirely on the petitioners, and would also leave them to face serious counter charges if their statements could not be proved.

Opposing counsel at first was stunned, but finally two of the battery of lawyers objected that at this late date they could not allow any amendments.

With a smile Mr. Neblett resumed his seat, giving the impression that the objection was not exactly a surprise to him. He had, however, made an eloquent gesture.

"U" Decision Ready Soon, Says Cowdin

A decision on the exercising of the option held by Standard Capital Company to acquire control of Universal Pictures can be made in the near future, J. Cheever Cowdin, head of Standard, said Monday on his arrival in New York from London on the Europa. The option continues in effect up to March 15.

While declining to confirm or comment on reports that the requisite financing for the exercise of the option had been set during his stay in London, Mr. Cowdin did make an emphatic denial of a report that Electrical Research Products, Inc., would be a financial participant. The Standard head said that his London trip had served to "clarify" many things involved in his company's current study of Universal's operations here and abroad and brought the study nearer its own conclusion. His London visit, Mr. Cowdin continued, provided him with an opportunity of looking over Universal's foreign organization and properties and of meeting the people with whom he is dealing.

While Mr. Cowdin was on the high seas enroute home, reports from Hollywood had it that he had completed the financing arrangements to conclude the Universal deal while in London. Jack Ross, assistant to Carl Laemmle, Sr., said, "We believe that Mr. Cowdin has completed arrangements for financing Standard Capital and Charles R. Rogers to purchase Universal. We do not know the details, or how they will affect the option to buy until after Mr. Cowdin lands."

Mr. Rogers refused to discuss the matter, saying, "We're not making any halfway statements. We will release statements when we're ready."

The Prisoner of Shark Island

(20th Century-Fox - Zanuck)

Drama

In this picture, Twentieth Century-Fox brings a vividly different form of screen entertainment subject matter to the attention of exhibitors and theatre goers. It has the makeup of record product in scope, story content, class of acting and direction, and attention given to production details and potential power to leave a lasting impression.

Fundamentally, "The Prisoner of Shark Island" is dramatic biography. It is presented and narrated in a forceful manner. The evident intent is to play upon the most tender sentiments as it tells the story of inhuman cruelty which a nation vents upon a man. Secondly, and for entertainment, educational and exploitation purposes, it is a historical work in which is revealed the fact story of a shameful and dark chapter in the book of American national life. This embellishing phase is as important as the substantiating story, if not more so.

Life drama motivates. About that quality rotates the drama of a nation gone mad when its president was murdered, the drama of a nation seething in a turmoil of hatred, fear and bigotry. It is the basis for a woman's heartbreak; her loyalty, heroism and desperation. It is the basis for the torturing of a man almost beyond the power to withstand. Withal it is the human story of a man's triumph over the forces of prejudice, his heroism and sacrifice when his fellow men, all but one of whom were enemies, called to him and him only, that they might live. Sticking closely to fact while only diligent research was able to poke details out of closely guarded U. S. government archives, it deviates only slightly from the record in the finale.

With Lincoln's murder, following the close of the Civil War, the North cries for vengeance. Unaware of his patient's identity, Dr. Samuel Mudd treats John Wilkes Booth's broken leg. Along with seven others, Mudd is arrested, charged with murder, conspiracy and treason. Before a courtmartial, previously instructed by Assistant Secretary of War Erickson to ignore all judicial formula, Mudd and the others are convicted. As they are about to be hanged, Mudd's impassioned plea to the court, abetted by influential Northern proponents of justice, brings sentence of life imprisonment.

For the human act of aiding a man he did not know and never saw before, Mudd is torn from his wife and child and shipped to Arcadia prison on a sunbaked Florida key. Chained like an animal, beaten, mocked, starved, made the victim of fiendish torture, his existence is hellish. His attempt to escape foiled, he and his wife left to believe that there is nothing left to live for, Mudd is cast into an underground dungeon along with old family slave Buck.

Yellow fever breaks out. Prisoners and soldiers mutiny; men die like flies, among them Doctor MacIntyre. In panic the commandant, unable to guarantee any reward except the record of his report, begs Mudd to come to the aid of stricken humanity. Unwilling at first, the sullen, desperate man recalls his doctor's oath. Obtaining supreme command of the fortress, making the black soldiers understand that a Southerner is giving orders, he segregates the sick. As a hurricane threatens, a ship flying the American flag, fearing contagion, refuses to land medicines. Compelled to fire on the flag, Mudd obtains the supplies that halt the epidemic.

His reward is exoneration of complicity in the crime, which returns him to his wife and child.

The picture is one that took courage to make. But the only courage necessary to sell it is that which convinces that "The Prisoner of Shark Island" is unusual and valuable screen merchandise. Practically everything that one could desire for exploitation is provided, as all that has been described is graphically pictured. There's a swell title; a host of names, a dynamic story, sensational productional effects and a note of realism that should inspire anyone to the best effort of his career to tell his patrons what his screen is offering them.

Previewed in Grauman's Chinese Theatre, Hollywood first-run deluxer. The only interruptions to the hushed, suspensed packed atmosphere that held the customers came in the several times they applauded the picture's action. McCARTHY, Hollywood..

Domestic Comedy

There is material in this production for patrons who like their entertainment amusing and for exhibitors who like to have that kind of screen merchandise to sell. It's not a big picture; rather the kind of attraction fits in nicely on any program, particularly the kind in which the other elements are of a more serious dramatic tone, and where special consideration is given to attractions appealing to family trade.

Essentially the picture is domestic comedy. As it is presented, it has the appearance of a carefully handled and smartly acted stage show. Mrs. Martin doesn't think much of the marriage of her daughter, Queena, to Ned, who is jobless and doesn't seem to have the slightest idea of what he wants to do or how he wants to do it. Mrs. Martin's sister, who has a penchant for butting into everybody's affairs, comes to take Queena away from the husband she never has seen. Hiring Ned as a butler, a job he gladly takes as it will bring him close to Queena, Min adds to Ned's troubles by coyly becoming infatuated with him while Mrs. Martin becomes enamored of Twilling.

Trying to see his wife, Ned makes the mistake of climbing into Aunt Min's boudoir. Trapped, accused as a philanderer, he makes a quick break to flee the horrible situation only to be pursued by the whole household and a horde of officers. Breaking all traffic laws, Ned lands in court. There, to the tune of gay hilarity, it is revealed that Twilling is a radio broadcast nabob, and the mother-in-law and aunt-in-law hen-pecked husband becomes the crooning "Fireside Troubadour," more than able to support Queena in the style to which her relatives have accustomed her.

Full of comedy in dialogue, action and situations from start to finish, the pictures moves speedily. Naturally wholesome throughout, it is also endowed with batches of potential showmanship that readily can be adapted to identify the picture as worthy of anyone's time and money.

Three Godfathers

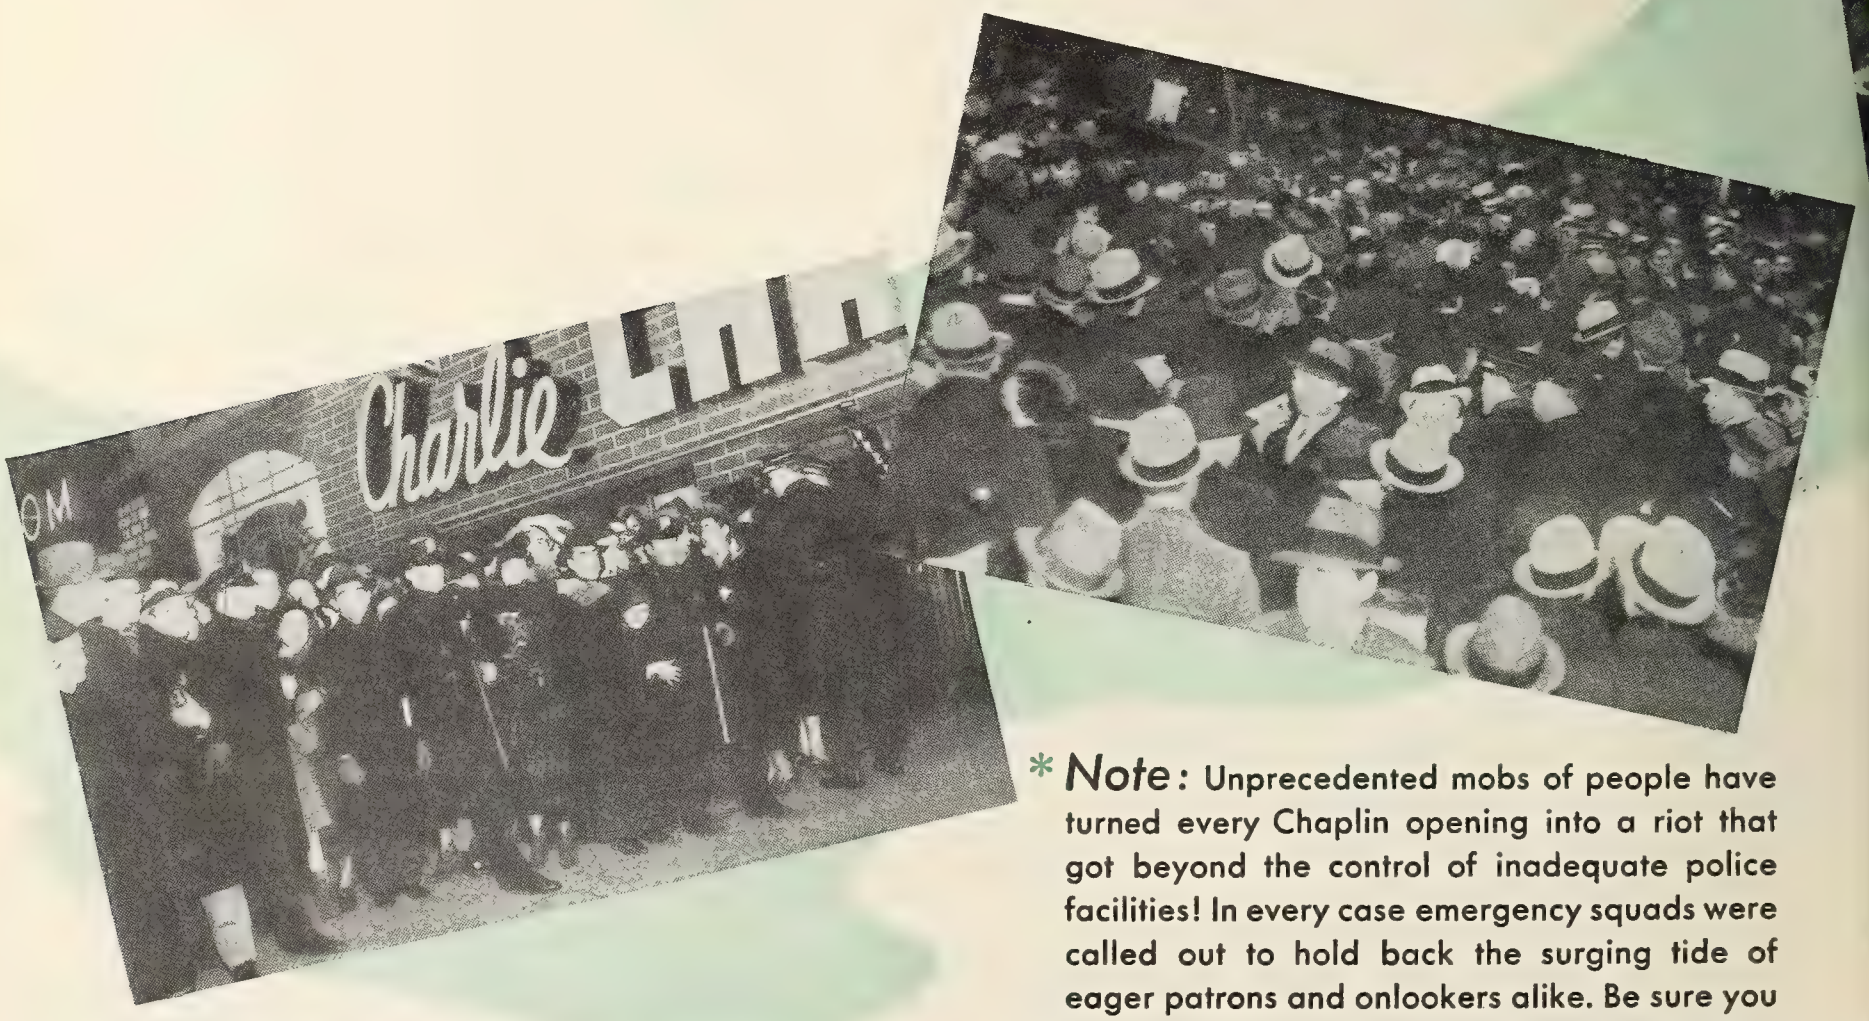
Outdoor Drama



Although set in a western locals and the three principal players are western bad men, this is no prosaic western picture. While preserving much of the color of that character entertainment, particularly as it picturizes a bank holdup and chase, it stops being formula with that and takes on the tone of bewildered dramatic regeneration. Substantially, it is the story of three desperadoes, and a baby, in the hands of fate. Further, it's a story of men who are bad, know that they are bad, but in the souls of the trio is a dormant spark of humanity that leads them to die that a child might live. As such it possesses an unusual human interest appeal to be emphasized under the guidance of intelligent showmanship, as well as an occasional opportunity to laugh and smile a bit.

Following a risky but pleasant interlude in Bob's home town—which permits the introduction of romantic contrast concerning him and Molly—Bob, Doc and Gus rob the bank. In the getaway, Doc is shot. Heading for a desert water hole, they find a dead body and near it

Mrs. Marshall and her baby. Her dying request is that they take the child to safety. Knowing the peril to themselves, the trio start back towards town. Doc succumbs to his wound. Gus drinks from a poisoned hole, goes mad and wanders out into the desert. Alone with the child, his strength ebbing fast, tough guy Bob's first impulse is to abandon the child. Realizing he cannot do this, Bob stumbles on, giving the child the last drop of canned milk as he endures the tortures of thirst. Within sight of New Jerusalem, Bob drinks from a poisoned well to get temporary strength to carry on. Reaching town, he places the baby in Molly's arms, the rescue atoning for a lifetime of crime as he dies to join his partners.

The picture has an impressive quality not ordinarily associated with outdoor western entertainment. While it provides thrill and action, desperation, fear and heroism, it does so more in a manner to play upon the sentimental rather than excitable emotions. Brought to the attention of patrons as something entirely new and different, it is legitimate to anticipate that it will prove a popular attraction with just as much, if not more, interest for women than men.

Previewed in Uptown Theatre, Los Angeles. The manner in which the story is told, with action and dialogue effectively balanced and Chester Morris, Lewis Stone and Walter Brennan giving convincing performances, quickly swept the audience into the proper mood to understand and appreciate the picture's out of the ordinary entertainment character.

Song And Dance Man

(20th Century - Fox)

Dramatic Romance

Many new twists serve to make this picture refreshingly different from the George M. Cohan stage play from which it was adapted. Essentially, with a back stage atmosphere, it is dramatic romance. Dialogue and action are well blended and as the yarn moves through its several situations, the various substantiating elements combine to provoke an attention-holding brand of human interest. While the motivating quality dominates, comedy is well worked in to counterbalance the dramatic tension; a bit of melodrama heightens the dramatic effect, and the introduction of a few song and dance numbers provides pleasing interludes.

The story is that of a pair of vaudeville hoofers, the male member ready to sacrifice his own career that his partner might climb the ladder of theatrical success. Coincidentally with the realization of Julie and Hap that they have gone as far together as they can, Julie falls in love with a millionaire. Though attached to Hap, she cannot resist the promise of a career which Davis offers her as star in a show which Nelson is producing under his backing. She is practically forced to do this when Hap pulls a brawl scene that temporarily takes him out of her life.

In rehearsals, Julie encounters difficulties, as dance director Crosby, who wants his own girl in the role given Julie, makes things tough for her. When he becomes particularly obnoxious, Hap returns, first to expose his plot and then administer Crosby a complete beating up. Taking over direction of the show, he whips it into shape for a smash opening and then realizing that, in association with Davis, there is a smooth path for Julie to fame, position and love, he leaves them happy to pick up his old hazardous profession as a small-time hoofer.

Well acted and directed, the picture, making no pretensions other than being straight-away entertainment, moves speedily as it sticks continually to its basic plot. It is family type entertainment that provides many showmanship angles that can be easily adapted to arouse patron interest.

Follow the Fleet

(RKO Radio)

Musical Comedy

Although the nationwide popularity of Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers indicates the general direction of showmanship concentration on this latest vehicle of the two dancing stars, there are many other aspects for attention. Since it is a Pandro S. Berman production directed by Mark Sandrich, the two responsible for previous Astaire-Rogers pictures, the same production scope may be anticipated, but this picture differs in the character of the story, an additional factor in the exhibitors' favor.

As the title implies, it is a nautical story, one of gobs and girls. While the love interest element is well taken care of with a proper balance of light drama and suspense and the vein of conflict common to such a story, the comedy contrast is given a broader swing in dialogue, action and situations and the substantiating chorus singing-dancing effects.

Of further showmanship worth are the facts that the musical numbers are the product of Irving Berlin, whose songs were featured in "Top Hat," and that the screen play is by Dwight Taylor and Allan Scott, who functioned similarly on that picture.

The supporting cast, with the exception of one new personality, is composed of known screen names, but that one newcomer, Harriet Hilliard, known chiefly because of her radio work, gives the Astaire-Rogers team a run for stellar honors despite a lesser role.

Highlights of the picture include the opening sequence, a song and dance by Astaire titled "We Saw the Sea." His other solo effort, to the tune of "I'd Rather Lead a Band," is reminiscent of his "machine-gun" number of "Top Hat," but it is doubly effective. The Astaire-Rogers dances are "Let Yourself Go," a comedy number titled "I'm Putting All My Eggs in One Basket," and the finale, "Let's Face the Music." Miss Hilliard's two vocal efforts, "Get Thee Behind Me, Satan" and "Here Am I, But Where Are You," are well in keeping with the general qualities of the picture.

As the Pacific Fleet arrives in San Francisco, Astaire and his pal, Randy Scott, discover the former's old vaudeville partner, Miss Rogers, and her sister, Miss Hilliard. The old dance team reunite once more to win a contest, and as the manager presents the prize to Miss Rogers, her partner manages to get her fired by his remarks. He promises to get a better job for her, however, and all appears well.

Miss Hilliard, meanwhile, is in the full bloom of romance, but she doesn't know Scott has fallen for a rich widow, Astrid Allwyn. And, what Miss Rogers doesn't know is that the fleet is sailing and Astaire with it.

When the fleet returns, a surprise awaits the boys. Miss Hilliard has spent all her savings on reconditioning a ship so Scott can realize his ambition to be a captain of his own boat. Instead, however, Scott rushes to Miss Allwyn.

Astaire then proceeds unknowingly to queer Miss Rogers' chance for a return to the theatre. Later all four meet at Miss Allwyn's party and Miss Hilliard is quite crushed when she sees the man she loves in another's arms. The meeting of Miss Rogers and Astaire is a bit more stormy because she realizes it was he who squelched her audition with the producer.

Astaire then learns about the boat and, further, that she will lose it unless the salvage company is paid. He then suggests that they give a show on the boat to raise the money, and at the same time conceives a plan of getting rid of Miss Allwyn.

The next day Astaire finds his leave canceled and an angry pal on guard. So he dives off the ship, Scott in pursuit. Arriving at Miss Hilliard's boat, Scott learns the truth, the show goes on, and all ends well for the quartet.

All in all, it's grand entertainment.—Baehler, New York.

Anything Goes

(Paramount)

Musical Comedy

This is a tuneful, fast-moving musical comedy, with production credit values, for the showman using a campaign that definitely establishes its character. Exhibitors here can pay more than the usual amount of attention to production as a whole, for the film is adapted from one of New York's most recent and successful stage musicals, originally written by Guy Bolton and P. G. Wodehouse, along with Howard Lindsay and Russell Crouse. The music is by Cole Porter, Frederick Hollander and Richard Whiting, and several members, included in the picture, such as "You're the Top" and "I Get a Kick Out of You," need no introduction anywhere.

Bing Crosby and Ethel Merman are featured, but the comedy character of the story is established by the presence of Charles Ruggles and Arthur Treacher. The worth of their name values is supplemented by those of Ida Lupino, Grace Bradley, Robert McWade and Jerry Tucker. All these are under the direction of Lewis Milestone, who has adhered to the story itself in a screen musical and not hindered the plot motivation by insertion of lavish numbers.

Crosby surpasses himself, as compared to several of his recent pictures, not only in the handling of his dramatic role but also of his singing assignments. Miss Merman, currently appearing in "Strike Me Pink," presents her songs with her customary gusto.

Most of the comedy is in the hands of those two masters, Ruggles and Treacher, Ruggles portraying "Public Enemy No. 13" with aspirations of moving higher up on the list, and Treacher his typical, bland English self.

Highlights of the picture are Crosby and Miss Merman singing "You're the Top," Ruggles winning a trap-shooting contest with a machine-gun, and the only musical production number, which appears at the picture's end.

Showmen might do well to see the picture first, so as to take full advantage of production values, names and timeliness of the stage musical from which the picture was taken.

The story itself concerns Crosby's following Miss Lupino aboard an ocean liner in the belief she is in danger, after refusing to make the trip with Miss Merman, who loves him. Once the ship gets under way Crosby falls in with Ruggles, escaping gangster, and takes the passport of the man who is sought as Public Enemy No. 1 in America.

Against this background Crosby dashes about using many disguises, making love to Miss Lupino when he can, dodging his boss, and generally having quite a time of it all. Interspersed are several songs by Crosby and Miss Merman, singly and in duet.

It is revealed that Miss Lupino is really not in danger at all, but by this time Crosby is in the ship's brig with Ruggles and about to be returned to America. The two escape, and amid a musical setting and surrounded by dancing girls clear everything up and the fadeout has all the lovers united.—BAEHLER, New York.

Wife Versus Secretary

(MGM)

Comedy Romance Drama

Box office values abound in this picture. Take the angles that, in any picture, usually first come to attention. The title is provocative. One into which theatre goers can read much, it suggests something intriguing and alluring. Also it is one that showmen quickly can adapt as the basis for refreshing new exploitation. Clark Gable, Jean Harlow and Myrna Loy, the principals, provide the magnet of triple star name value that assumes an unusual significance in that a surprisingly different Harlow is presented. Story content does not let the title down. Rather as it is comedy romance drama, built upon a unique triangle premise, it further embellishes the import. The story, expertly prepared, directed and acted, makes vivid use of imagination-stimulating illusion to complete the full atmosphere the title indicates. Produced with good taste, it puts a cleverly wholesome slant on the one one-man, two-women entertainment idea.

Treated in a manner that continually accentuates its gayety, it's a story of what can happen to a woman when she lets her imagination and suspicions run away with her reason. Publisher Van is very much in love with his wife Linda. He never does anything that should lead her to think otherwise. His job makes it necessary that he have his secretary, Whitey, at his beck and call any hour of the day or night. The intimate association, always strictly business, causes Linda, without rhyme or reason, to fall victim to the demon jealousy. Her imagined fears are made concrete by the warnings of mother-in-law Mimi.

Van and Whitey are engaged in a business deal, details of which must be guarded carefully from rival competitors. Completely disillusioned when Van explains that he cannot take her with him on a business trip to Havana, Linda fears the worst when Whitey is missing from the office. Phoning Havana in the early hours of morning, she is shocked when Whitey answers. Convinced she has been given a dirty deal, she separates from Van, and unresponsive to Mimi's explanation, that when there's a whole box full of candy at hand a little boy can't be blamed for stealing one piece, she is confronted by Whitey in the state room of her Europe-bound boat. When it's woman to woman; one in love with her job and willing to take the man if the other doesn't want him—the other just a poor frightened little lady who doesn't know what to think or believe until Whitey convinces her that it's only the wife who goes looking for trouble who finds it.

Motivated by cleverly contrived situations and moving to the pace of peppy dialogue, the nature of the show is one that customarily appeals to women, old or young, who while watching a picture like to have the imaginations run the full range of emotions. By the same token, it's one for the interest of men who might like to use it as an object lesson for suspicious wives or sweethearts.

Previewed in Fox Ritz Theatre, Los Angeles, first-run class neighborhood house. There was enthusiastic audience reaction, particularly to the new character given Harlow, plus the smart performances by Gable and Loy, a reaction that goes with pictures that tend toward word-of-mouth advertising.

The Amateur Gentleman

(Criterion - United Artists)

Costume Romance

Another new British producing company makes a more than promising beginning with this adaptation of a Jeffrey Farnol novel. In Criterion Film Productions, Ltd., the active figures are Marcel Hellman, producer, and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., star. With them on this occasion are Thornton Freeland, as director, and Gunther Kramps, cameraman, while dialogue has been written by Clemence Dane.

This expert personnel is reflected in the production, in which story values of a markedly popular character are handled with definite efficiency. On the long side in its British version the film has entertainment values which editing will put into a form acceptable to a big range of American audiences. Opportunities for colorful presentation are plentiful, due to the backgrounds of London in the Regency period, which range from the Court in gala dress to Newgate in the days of manacled prisoners and the treadmill. A bare-fist fight, plenty of stirring coaching scenes, good comedy relief and plenty of action are assets.

John Barty, innkeeper in a town a few miles from London, is accused of stealing a watch from Chichester, an adventurer who is engaged to Lady Cleone, granddaughter of the Marquess of Camberhurst. Chichester has stolen valuable jewels from Camberhurst's bedroom and accuses Barty in order to cover his own crime. Barnabus, son of Barty, to discover proof of his father's innocence, goes to London in the guise of a wealthy gentleman, with money provided by the faithful inn servant, Natty Bell. He manages to obtain entrance to the Prince Regent's Court, makes money at the gaming table and by winning, under the name of "the amateur gentleman," a knuckle fight with a professional pugilist, and succeeds in planning his father's escape, on the eve of execution, from Newgate. He also falls in love with Lady Cleone.

Pauline D'Arville, an adventuress with whom Chichester is involved, comes to Barnabus' chambers to recover a paper which incriminates her lover and herself in the inn crime. She is mysteriously stabbed and Barnabus is suspected of the crime. He evades the officers sent to arrest him at court by walking out of a stage tableau into the presence of the Regent, and succeeds in escaping to the inn in a furiously driven coach. Pursued, he turns the tables on Chichester by tricking him into recognition of the handkerchief, containing the stolen jewels, found on the dead Pauline.

There is a rich air of romance in this production which should appeal to a very wide range of patrons. The court scenes are admirably done and there is real originality in the episode of the hero forcing his captors to pose in a "tableau vivant" before the Prince. Action throughout plays a more important part than dialogue, and there is conviction as well as strong visual appeal in the picture of a London in which a public execution was a public entertainment. It is one of those British pictures which American showmen can consider very seriously.—ALLAN, London.

Darkest Africa

(Republic)

Serial Thriller

The first episode of the 15-chapter "Darkest Africa" concerns itself chiefly with its star, Clyde Beatty, and the ease with which he cows the lions and tigers of his menagerie. Then Beatty meets Baru, a jungle boy, who has come to the outland for assistance in rescuing his sister, Valerie, the Goddess of the Joba, a city in an unexplored part of Africa. Beatty and Baru start for Joba through the jungle. Nearing Joba, the natives are frightened by the bat men, guarding the entrance to the city, and flee. Beatty and Baru, as the first episode ends, are being engulfed by a volcanic eruption. While the first episode seemed stilted, it gave promise of thrills in future episodes to appease the children. The serial was directed by B. R. Eason and Joseph Kane. The cast includes besides Beatty and Baru (Manuel King), Elaine Shepard, Lucien Prival, Naba, Ray Benard and Wheeler Oakman.—30 minute episodes.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

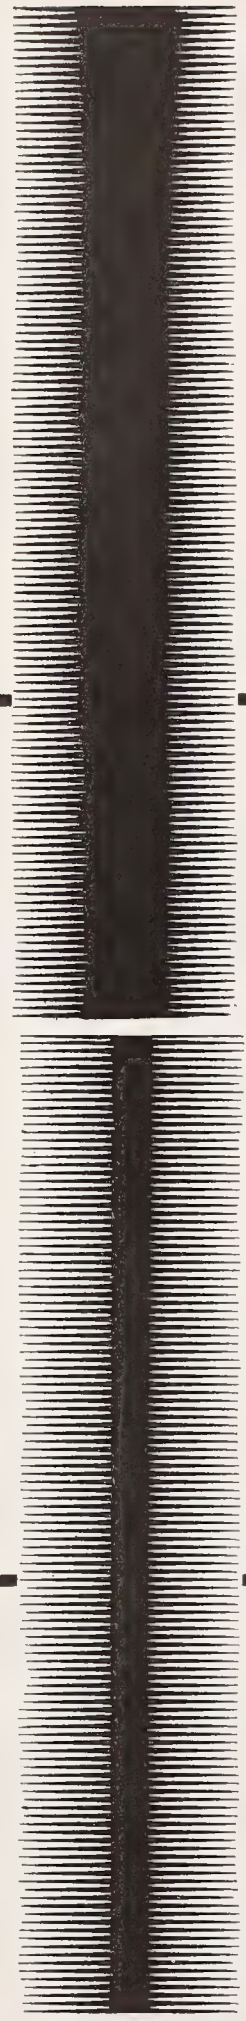
ANOTHER RCA FIRST!

Ultra-Violet Recording

ANOTHER GREAT RCA TRIUMPH —BUILDS BOX OFFICE TO EVEN GREATER HEIGHTS!



ULTRA-VIOLET Recording is RCA Photophone's newest and latest improvement, taking its place beside those other great RCA Firsts: the Rotary Stabilizer, A-C Operation, High Fidelity and Noiseless Recording.

When you hear the new Ultra-Violet sound track you are utterly astounded. Never before has the screen been so vivid, presented such a living presence of the artist.

But your audiences will hear this astonishing advance only if sound head, amplifiers, and speakers are capable of handling the higher frequencies. RCA Photophone apparatus can do so, for the Rotary Stabilizer assures constant film speed and correct focus, and the amplifiers and speakers can take everything that is on the track. For audience thrills that mean bigger box office, use RCA Photophone apparatus.

HOW IT'S DONE

White light really consists of all the colors of the rainbow. Only part of the spectrum at a time can be focused accurately. So sound tracks made with white light are always somewhat blurred by out-of-focus colors. Ultra-Violet is a single color and hence can be focused absolutely accurately, producing the clearest, sharpest sound tracks ever made!

Above, sound track made by ordinary light. Note blur. Below, new track recorded by Ultra-Violet. See how sharp and clean the 9,000-cycle note is.

SOS

Quigley Pub. Co
New York City

Gentlemen:

Find enclosed 3/ao for which please enter me for a years subscription to the Motion Picture Herald beginning with the Better Theatres issue for February.

I have been out of the show business for two years and recently purchased this theatre. Formerly the Herald was my "bible" and guide, but when I got this home, I also "inherited" two trade publications, which I thought at first would suffice. However, I am entirely lost with them. They are practically of no value to me, so I'm sending this S.O.S. for the good old Herald! I can digest every word printed in it, I am sure.

Yours Sincerely

James B. Russell Jr.

There's GOLD in "DARKEST AFRICA"

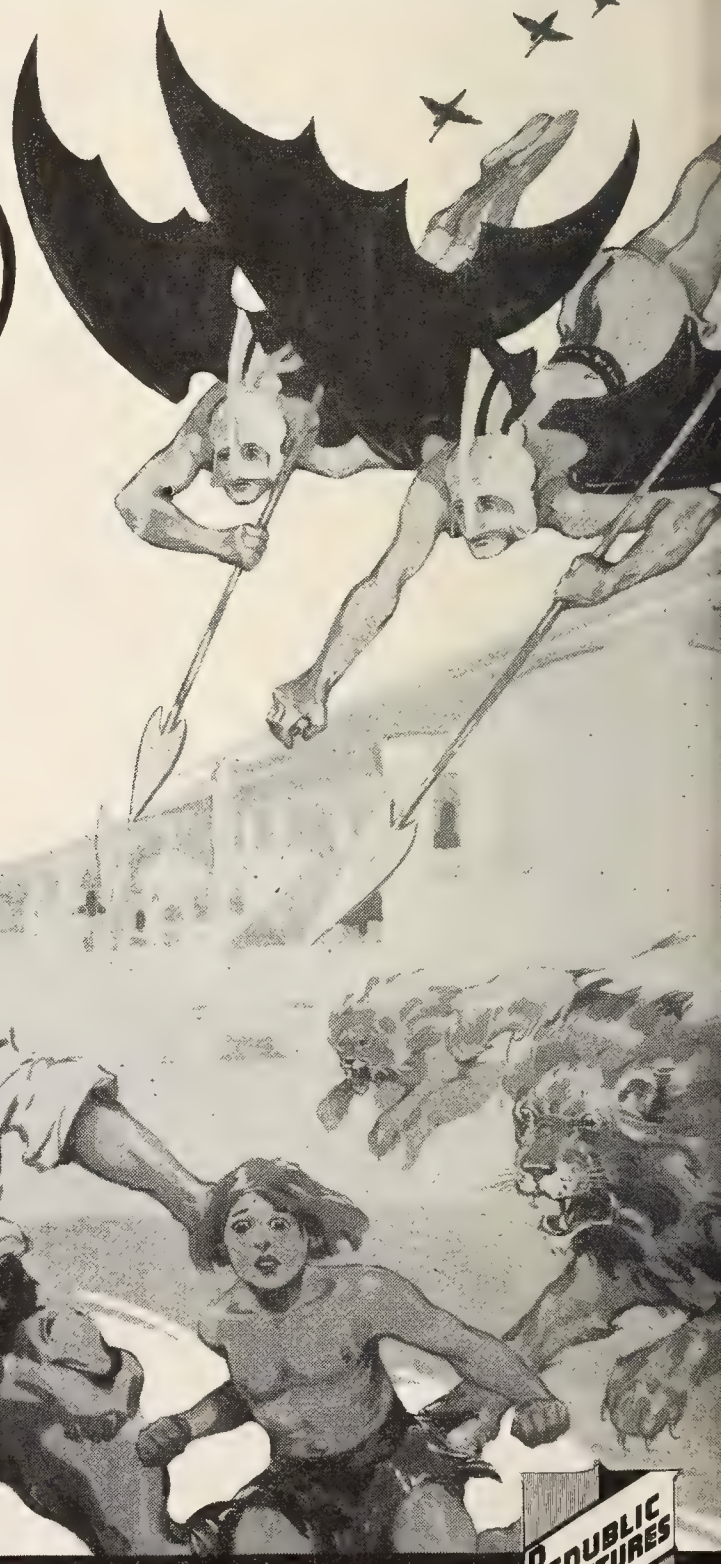
NAT LEVINE'S NEW REPUBLIC-MASCOT SERIAL

WITH CLYDE BEATTY WORLD'S GREATEST WILD ANIMAL TRAINER

AND MANUEL KING WORLD'S YOUNGEST WILD ANIMAL TRAINER

THE Film DAILY

SERIAL



"Darkest Africa"

Republic 15-Episode Serial

Thrill Serial

The first episode of this serial crowds in a lot of hectic thrills that should wow the kids at the Saturday matinees. It is all [illegible]ched and unbelievable—but it has the wi[illegible] imaginative quality of the early Tarzan stories that the youngster [illegible]o for. Clyde Beatty, the famous animal trainer, is the hero. In Africa engaged in capturing wild animals, he meets Baru, a half-wild jungle boy, and goes with him into the interior to the mysterious country of Joba, which is taboo to the natives who hold it in dread. The jungle boy's sister was captured when a baby, and has been raised to become the Goddess of Joba whom they worship. Beatty sets out to rescue her. All sorts of wild animal episodes are introduced, with Beatty showing his lion-taming skill. Later when near the forbidden city, they encounter the batmen, who fly through the air and guard the cliffs surrounding the city. The Goddess is seen in the temple, and the ruler who is keeping her there to maintain his own power over the superstitious and warlike people. Bonga, a large ape, is the boy's protector, and accompanies Beatty and the lad on their perilous mission. This serial starts off with a sensational bang. Featured are Manuel King, Elaine Shepard and Lucien Prival. Directed by B. R. Eason and Joseph Kane.

"SHOULD WOW THE KIDS...STARTS OFF WITH A SENSATIONAL BANG!"

"... promises enough adventurous thrills and excitement to intrigue the interest of the juvenile trade and keep them coming back each week until its conclusion." —BOX-OFFICE

WILDERNESS MAIL: Kermit Maynard—Best thing about this picture are the dogs and the scenery. However, it pleased the Saturday nighters.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Columbia

ATLANTIC ADVENTURE: Nancy Carroll, Lloyd Nolan—Only fair. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FEATHER IN HER HAT, A: Pauline Lord, Louis Hayward—Was no good for me. Many, many complaints and no business second night.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

I'LL LOVE YOU ALWAYS: Nancy Carroll, George Murphy—A good picture. We did no business. Nancy has had her day.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert—This was a repeat booking, and is entitled to same. Best Wednesday and Thursday business in a year. Advertised it as an answer to many special requests. Results most gratifying. Running time, 90 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

LAW BEYOND THE RANGE: Tim McCoy—A real bang-up, shoot-down Tim McCoy western. They liked it. We did above average weekend business. So what else can you ask—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SHE MARRIED HER BOSS: Claudette Colbert—Good picture.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

SHE MARRIED HER BOSS: Claudette Colbert—Very good comedy with Miss Colbert turning in her usual fine performance.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

WESTERN COURAGE: Ken Maynard—Our western fans turned out for this offering, which proved satisfactory. Played January 11.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

WESTERN COURAGE: Ken Maynard—The only thing that wasn't dumb about this was Ken's horse. He is a better actor than Ken. Maynard is getting through. I have run a lot of poor ones, but I can't remember when I ran one worse than this one.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Commodore

KID COURAGEOUS: Bob Steele—Fine western. Bob Steele one of the best western stars in the business. Running time, six reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

First National

CASE OF THE LUCKY LEGS, THE: Warren William, Genevieve Tobin—A disappointment. More of a comedy than a mystery picture. There are quite a few laughs and wisecracks which make it entertaining. Will get by. Running time, 77 minutes. Played January 30.—W. Horace Reese, Spruce Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—One of the best in many weeks. Pleased as much as any picture showed in last year.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—This team is tops with us. They came out twice to see it under adverse weather conditions. It's a long time since we have had a picture build up the second night.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—A very fine musical that will hold your interest from the beginning to the end. It has several song hits worth plugging through music store tieups. It's about time First National gets Dick Powell a leading lady that is suited for him and one that at least can act. It's one of Dick Powell's best. Running time, 109 minutes. Played January 7-8.—W. Horace Reese, Spruce Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

Mascot

HARMONY LANE: Douglas Montgomery, Evelyn Venable—This picture based on the life of Stephen Foster is one of the best yet released by an independent. You can't go wrong with this one. Running time, 85 minutes. Played January 21-22.—W. Horace Reese, Spruce Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

MGM

AH, WILDERNESS!: Lionel Barrymore, Eric Linden—Although business wasn't much, it was no fault of the picture. I'm sure the people liked it very well. —Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—A good feature length comedy, though it was never shown which of the two lovers got the girl, and people don't like to use their imagination. Zero weather kept people from coming, so can't gauge its drawing power.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—The others can have the four star dramatic hits, but we pick this precious pair for our dish. Fans still laughing over this one. Good business for three days of zero weather. This one is a builder-upper. Running time, 75 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General audience.

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—About as enjoyable a comedy as ever made by this pair. Was well received by more than average business. Play it by all means. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 24-25.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Sid Silvers, Eleanor Powell, Buddy and Vilma Ebsen—I have run them all and this one is the tops. This Powell girl is all they said about her. She can act and she can dance. Not forgetting the team of Ebsen that are plenty good, too. Benny got a better break in this than he did in "It's in the Air." Cold weather evidently cut down business, for it was far behind what I expected the picture to gross. Ice cold weather has raised general hob with business.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Eleanor Powell, Jack Benny—Picture cost more than the general run, but was well worth it. Received more favorable comments on this picture than any I've had to date. The best musical of 1935. Give us exhibitors more like these and we can keep on top. Running time, 109 minutes. Played January 31-February 1.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Tehatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell—Three days to extra good business and pleased everybody.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell—One of the best musicals that we have played for some time. Eleanor Powell very good. Running time, 103 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

EXCLUSIVE STORY: Franchot Tone, Madge Evans—Good entertainment. Holds interest. Should have run this two days and "Stars Over Broadway" one. Played February 7.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne—This isn't any "Dancing Daughters" by any means. It is just a Crawford picture with a new leading man, and the usual business that goes with a rich girl and a poor lad trying to get along. Business below average. However, weather was very bad. Lot of snow and ice. Might have done better with favorable weather. I'll never know.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne—One of Crawford's best. Running time, 97 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny—This is not a three-day picture. It is merely a good program picture. However, as it was in our higher allocation, we put it on a Sunday-Monday-Tuesday date, and it did not even draw average Sunday business, with practically no one the other two days. Running time, 80 minutes. Played February 2-4.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone, Eddie Quillan—I think every exhibitor who plays "Mutiny on the Bounty" should write MGM and thank them for this great production, thank Charles Laughton, Clark Gable and Franchot Tone for their great performance and Director Lloyd for giving Eddie Quillan the chance to display his wonderful talent alongside these great performers so that he was given a second honorable mention for the best performance of the month (December). This is the first time a player not starred in a production has won the award. Let's see Eddie more often—Doc Crews, El Portal Theatre, North Hollywood, Cal. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone—Well produced, expertly enacted by the entire cast. It is a picture that will not hold up in small town runs. It seems to lack comedy and entertainment qualities. For me it drew well the first night and nothing the second. Running time, 133 minutes. Played January 26-27.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone—Without a doubt this is really a super production and actually lives up to what the press sheet says about it. Business very good on this and comments were all favorable. Running time, 133 minutes. Played January 24.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—Comments were mostly favorable on this. Business poor. The Marx brand of comedy is either very well liked or they think it's terrible. There doesn't seem to be any half way about it. Personally, I think they are great. Played February 1.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers, Kitty Carlisle—It is the screwiest show that has ever crossed a screen. Marx Bros. at their nuttiest and that is plenty. At that there are plenty of laughs in it, but it takes Marx Bros. fans to appreciate it. At that it is better than the last one that I ran, when I swore that I had the cure, but this was a high allocation picture and had to come in. But how the kids will go for it and also the lowbrows, for it is slapstick with the exception of the Trovatore scene at the last. Better it would have been for more of Chico's piano work to relieve the slapstick. He is good and there could have been more of him and helped.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—One grand picture of father and son type. The circus background is very thrilling and Beery and Jackie both find the tender spot in our hearts. Business average on Sunday. No one much on Monday. For some reason Wallace Beery is not liked here.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PUBLIC HERO NO. 1: Chester Morris, Jean Arthur—Although this picture failed to outgross "G Men," we still enjoyed a very favorable weekend business, with a sleet storm against us. Many of our patrons thought it the best gangster picture yet.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

PURSUIT: Chester Morris, Sallie Eilers—Made to order for Friday and Saturday. Not a special but a fine picture with a melodramatic flavor that will make friends for the theatre. Fair B. O. Running time, 60 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—This picture is too rough for Sunday. I would say this was just average. The men liked it, but some women did not.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

Monogram

MAN FROM UTAH, THE: John Wayne—Picture in very poor condition. Sound was fair, but picture chopped up from start to finish. Running time, 51 minutes. Played February 7-8.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR BABY: Arline Judge, Ray Walker, Jimmy Fay—Very good program picture. Played as part of double bill.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Paramount

ACCENT ON YOUTH: Sylvia Sidney, Herbert Marshall—Very pleasing picture of collegiate type. Miss Sidney very well liked here. Running time, 80 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Jack Oakie, Burns and Allen—A real good musical with a lot of comedy in it. Running time, 95 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—When it gets 30 below and stays there for several days you might as well feed the fire at home instead of at the theatre, as you will get lonesome at the show. However, this was a dandy show with plenty of good comedy. Colbert and MacMurray were splendid.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—A swell picture that has everything. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 30-February 1.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

HOPALONG CASSIDY: Wm. Boyd—Poorest business in months, severe cold and blocked roads keeping them away. Patrons well pleased with the performance of Boyd. Played February 1.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LAST OUTPOST, THE: Gary Grant, Claude Rains, Gertrude Michael—Very good picture of its kind. Running time, 77 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

NEVADA: Buster Crabbe, Kathleen Burke—I was running a western serial with this at a matinee and if I hadn't seen the end flash on the screen I would have thought it just a long serial. However, anything with Zane Grey's name on it always attracts certain people.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

SMART GIRL: Kent Taylor, Ida Lupino—Very good program picture, but hard to put across without star names. Needs double billing. Running time, 74 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Walter Connolly—Those folks responsible for this should be mighty proud of their achievement. It is great in every way. We could not make the patrons pass in the shekels for it, but still say it is good.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

THIS WOMAN IS MINE: Gregory Ratoff, John Loder—OK, Mr. Ratoff, she is yours. We returned her to Paramount and hope for better luck next time. Circus atmosphere helps some, but it is just another picture. Running time, 74 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

FOUR SHOWMEN ADD REPORTS

From Canada and California come new contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" this week. They are:

F. W. Falkner, Star Theatre, Tisdale, Sask., Canada.

Doc Crews, El Portal Theatre, North Hollywood, Cal.

Returning to the fold after an absence of more than a year are the following showmen:

Horace Reese, Spruce Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

Boom & DuRand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D.

Read the reports of these four exhibitors in the department in this issue.

Puritan

MAN FROM GUNTOWN: Tim McCoy, Billie Seward—Good western for Saturday night. Played on double bill.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Republic

$1,000 A MINUTE: Roger Pryor, Leila Hyams—This is one of the best so-called program pictures that we have played for many a moon. Has plenty of action and comedy. It is well cast, well directed and well produced. It pleased 100 per cent and sent a Bank Night crowd home happy, even though no one won the award. You can't go wrong on this one. Played January 29-30.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

RKO

HOORAY FOR LOVE: Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern—Why don't they let Warners make the musicals? This man Raymond was never meant for musicals. I would consider this a very average program picture, which played to a below average business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HOT TIP: Zasu Pitts, James Gleason—Very good. Race horse story. Pleased all who saw it. Exciting enough to make two patrons forget where they were during the horse race. Just got by to satisfy film rental; not the fault of the picture, though. Running time, 69 minutes. Played January 10-11.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small town and local patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—Very nice picture. Pleased 100 per cent.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, THE: Preston Foster—If this is a special, so am I. Who would like to have me around? Eight and one-half reels of dialogue before anything happens. Not at all the action suspense as was in "Ben Hur," "King of Kings" or even the old silent "Last Days of Pompeii." A story of the prowess and mighty fighter the smithy was, before the volcano destroys a city. I played guarantee and percentage, and woe be unto me. Running time, 96 minutes. Played January 31-February 1.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small town patronage.

PEOPLE'S ENEMY: Preston Foster, Melvyn Douglas—A very good program picture which played to a below average business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson, Boots Mallory—Good Saturday picture, where westerns are used. Plenty action and shooting. Played February 8.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Hoot Gibson, Boots Mallory—When it comes to a typical western this is there a hundred per cent. I wish RKO would make more westerns. Running time, 76 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Hoot Gibson, Boots Mallory—This is one of the best westerns I've ever played. RKO sure had the right idea when they made this. Played in midweek to more than ordinary business. Wish RKO would make more with the same stars, but next time give Buzz Barton a larger part. Wish we could get more like this. Running time, eight reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE: Gene Raymond, Margaret Callahan—Better than the silent version, which was very good.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

SYLVIA SCARLETT: Katharine Hepburn—We have been in business here since 1909 and never in all these years have we had all adverse comments. Was unfortunate enough to use this on a Sunday, but it isn't good for any day. Not even one pleased patron which seems almost impossible. Even those who have liked Hepburn panned this. When people drive miles in sub-zero weather and have to sit through such a picture it is no wonder you hear such comments as "bunk" as they leave. Played February 2-3.—Boom & Du Rand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

TWO IN THE DARK: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—Very satisfactory one-day picture. Played February 4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BAD BOY: James Dunn, Dorothy Wilson—Fair program picture to less than average business. Caused partly at least by bad weather. Must be strongly supported by good shorts to make a satisfactory program. Played January 31-February 1.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S SECRET: Warner Oland, Rosina Lawrence—Very good detective story with enough comedy relief to keep it from getting too shivery. Warner Oland has played Charlie Chan so much the public is beginning to think of him by that name. Business was average and the cash customers were well pleased. Played February 4.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HERE'S TO ROMANCE: Nino Martini, Genevieve Tobin, Anita Louise, Mme. Schumann-Heink—Three in a row, "Music Is Magic," "Metropolitan" and now "Here's to Romance," and not one of them worth a tinker's dam for a small town audience or any other kind of an audience with the exception of in the larger centers where you may not ever see them again. Take this type romance right out of my life and I or the audience that I cater to will never miss them. Something wrong. They make "Thanks a Million" and it clicks, then they get arty and they flop. They don't seem to have what it takes to make a musical that will consistently do business and build for their future success.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MAN WHO BROKE THE BANK AT MONTE CARLO, THE: Ronald Colman, Joan Bennett—If you played this a few years ago, you know what it is. Very satisfactory two-day picture for us. Ronald Colman is good. Played February 2-3.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PADDY O'DAY: Jane Withers—This started out a little slow, but picked up and was a very fine program picture. Wish all were as good. Running time, 76 minutes. Played February 2-3.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SOLDIER: Victor McLaglen, Freddie Bartholomew, Gloria Stuart—This picture is a natural. Pleased young and old alike. Did good business with the thermometer at 30 below zero. If you have not played it, why—do so. It should go in any locality any time.—F. W. Falkner, Star Theatre, Tisdale, Sask., Can. Small town and rural patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers—The same old story. Packed them in, as Rogers always does. Puts new life into one to see many new faces come in.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers—Was lucky (?) enough to play this in extremely cold weather, but Will proved his drawing power by filling the house comfortably. Am sure we would have doubled the gross if we had a break in the weather. This is one of Rogers' best and will please everyone. Certainly can't hand Mr. Cobb any bouquets, though. Played February 2-4.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers—Impossible to heap any more praise on this one. Others have commented to everyone's satisfaction. Did nice business. The only star that ever drew here. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 12-14.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small town and local patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers—Jane Withers is a comer. Although many roads were blocked, we played to almost normal business. Everyone satisfied. Played January 25.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers—This girl should go places. She's very versatile and winning much popularity with our patrons. A dandy picture that they will like—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers—Wonderful Saturday picture. Will please adults as much as the kids.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers, John McGuire—Nice little program picture. However, the title doesn't mean a thing and Jane Withers is not well enough known yet to be a drawing card. Consequently, business was poor. Played January 29.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

WHISPERING SMITH SPEAKS: George O'Brien—A good railroad story for weekend. Would welcome some more railroad stories as good as this one. George O'Brien always good. Played February 1.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BARBARY COAST: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea, Edward G. Robinson—Played this one late and suffered as a result. Not so good as expected and failed to draw. Played January 30-31.—H. A. Griswold, Sewanee-Union Theatre, Sewanee, Tenn. University patronage.

BARBARY COAST: Edward G. Robinson, Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—A very fine picture, but I paid too much for it. A little more Vigilante law as it really started in California and shown in the picture would have improved it considerable. Running time, 90 minutes. Played February 2-3.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small town and local patronage.

CALL OF THE WILD: Clark Gable, Jack Oakie, Loretta Young—Very fine picture. Oakie very good, as was rest of cast including Reginald Owen. Bad weather kept business away.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

DARK ANGEL, THE: Merle Oberon, Fredric March, Herbert Marshall—A very fine picture that is sure to please all. Very much like "Smilin' Through." Running time, 105 minutes. Played January 25-26.—W. Horace Reese, Spruce Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

DARK ANGEL, THE: Fredric March, Merle Oberon, Herbert Marshall—Not the type of picture for small towns; just skinned by on film rental as far as film rental is concerned, but lost on the deal when express and overhead was added to the expense and advertising. It was a very fine picture, but too much sob stuff. The patrons are tired of war pictures and pictures of sorrow that concern a love triangle and blind people. Running time, 108 minutes. Played January 24-25.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small town and local patronage.

LES MISERABLES: Charles Laughton, Fredric March—A very good historical picture if you like that kind. Laughton and March were very good. Can't say so much for Rochelle Hudson. Receipts were just enough to pay for the picture, under the same conditions as "Dark Angel." Running time, 109 minutes. Played January 26-27.—J. W. Lehrkind. Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small town and local patronage.

SANDERS OF THE RIVER: Paul Robson—This was a wonderful production, that played us a loss due to the blizzard.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

STRIKE ME PINK: Eddie Cantor—A swell show suitable for all types of houses from the deluxe to the barns. Cantor not the draw he once was and picture did no more than the average Saturday-Monday draw. Bad weather for the South also hurt. Played February 1-3.—H. A. Griswold, Sewanee-Union Theatre, Sewanee, Tenn. University patronage.

Universal

EAST OF JAVA: Charles Bickford, Elizabeth Young—It's too bad the lion didn't bite Bickford in the first reel. I wouldn't hesitate to say that it leaves a lot to be desired. Its biggest fault lies in poor direction, for it doesn't ring true. Even most of the cast getting eaten by lions fails to stir you. Wasn't it Shakespeare who said "Much Ado About Nothing"? Played January 31-February 1.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—Even the snow, sleet and cold couldn't keep them away from this one. Went over the usual Tuesday-Wednesday gross by 50 per cent. If Universal can make one this good, why can't they make others. Not even the pseudo-intelligentsia among the students criticized this one. Played February 4-5.—H. A. Griswold, Sewanee-Union Theatre, Sewanee, Tenn. University patronage.

SECRET OF THE CHAUTEAU: Claire Dodd, Clark Williams and "Werewolf of London": Warner Oland—Too many of these horror features for us. Since the days of Lon Chaney, Universal has always specialized on this type. This makes four with "The Invisible Ray" and "Dracula's Daughter" still to come. Too much is plenty. Running time, 68 and 75 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

THREE KIDS AND A QUEEN: May Robson, Billy Burrud—Business only normal, but picture gave 100 per cent satisfaction. May Robson is popular here, and the appearance of Billy Burrud, charming youngster, a native of this county, added to the pleasure of our fans. Played January 18.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

THREE KIDS AND A QUEEN: May Robson—This one makes very good and is just what the doctor ordered. It pleases most all types of patronage, and good box-office.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

THREE KIDS AND A QUEEN: May Robson—A pure, wholesome family picture with enough red blooded action, comedy and heart throbs to satisfy even the most heterogeneous audience. We played it to a very small crowd due to the subzero weather, and consider it good enough to bring it back again in more seasonable weather. One of the best Universal releases we have played. Played February 1-2.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

Warner Bros.

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown—The ever popular Joe packed them in. A real baseball picture, with lots of good clean laughs.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

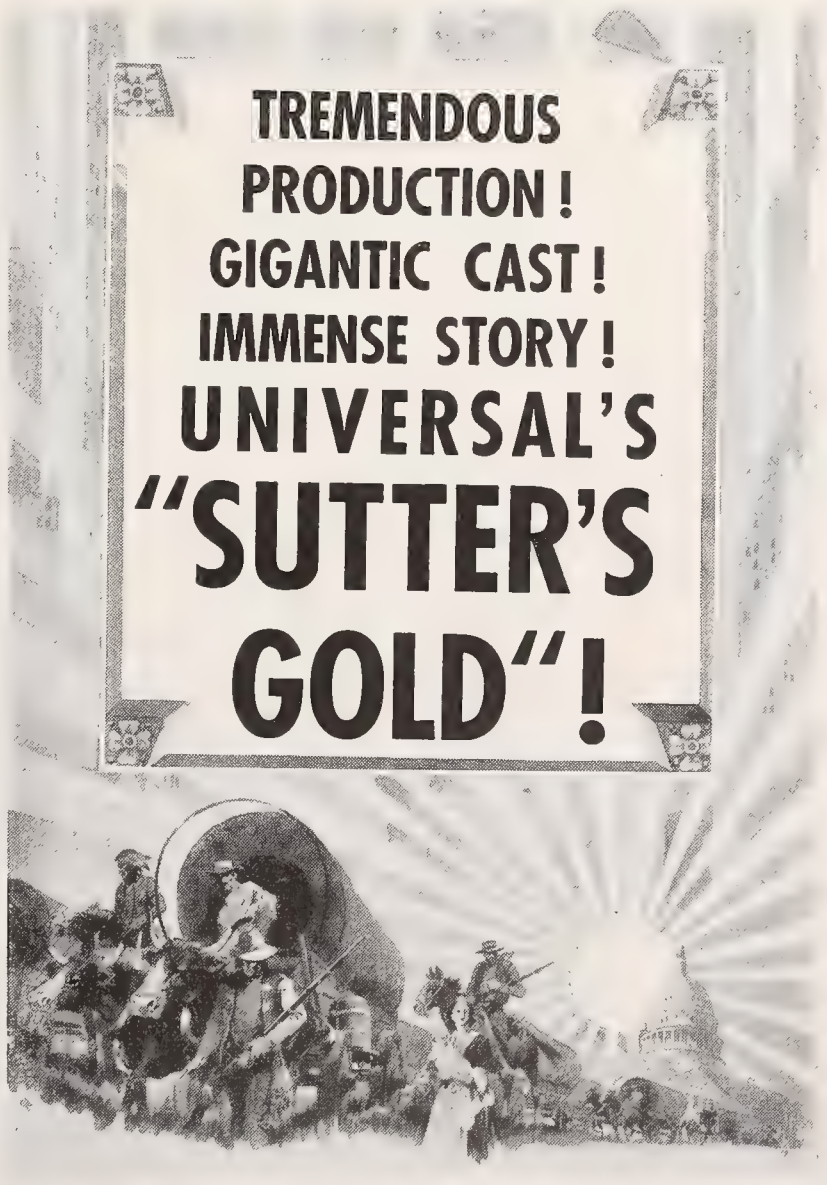
BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—One of the best Dick Powell pictures. Our customers liked it even better than "Shipmates Forever," which we played the week before. If you havn't played it, you've missed a good bet. Powell, Menjou and Blondell play their best roles. We held this over and played it in Columbus, where it also received excellent comment. Played January 28.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—This was the poorest cast picture and story that we ever played him in. Did very average business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MISS PACIFIC FLEET: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—Very good. The drawing power certainly pulled us out of a hole last night. Thermometer went down to 32 below, yet a nice crowd braved the cold to see this picture. Running time, 75 minutes. Played February 5.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MISS PACIFIC FLEET: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—An excellent comedy with plenty of entertainment for all. The kind of show that gives the exhibitor much pleasure to run and builds up his patronage. Let's have more like it. Better than average patronage and many good remarks by patrons. Running time, 66 minutes. Played February 2-3.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran—I still say this is one of the best "westerns" we have played this year, and I would like to see more reviews on it so I can ascertain if I am right or wrong—or am I?—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.



PERSONAL MAID'S SECRET: Margaret Lindsay, Anita Louise, Warren Hull—The picture did not draw for some reason, whether the lack of names in the cast or the title, I don't know. This Miss Donnelly is good actress and handled the role of maid nicely, but no drag at the box office. Of its type, it is okay. But a hard picture to put over.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

PERSONAL MAID'S SECRET: Margaret Lindsay, Warren Hull—Drew well and surely pleased all that saw it. The title was terrible and we were afraid it would hurt. Maybe it did, but not too much. Running time, 58 minutes. Played January 29.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SPECIAL AGENT: Bette Davis, George Brent—This was liked so well that I am going back and picking up "Front Page Woman" with these two stars from last year's program. We played "Special Agent" at the weekend and it made a splendid Saturday show. However, unusually cold weather cut attendance about half of what we expected. Played January 24-2.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, James Melton—Warner trailers are usually very good, but the trailer killed this one and people told me so. I did not like the picture and, judging by the gross, I don't believe anyone liked it. If Melton is ever made a star then some of us exhibitors have a good chance out there.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, Jane Froman, James Melton—Some liked it, some said it was poorest show they had ever seen. McHugh saved it from a flop, in my opinion. Melton has a fine voice. Played February 5-6.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WE'RE IN THE MONEY: Glenda Farrell, Joan Blondell—Good comedy drama that pleased a house full of people who came to get the cash prize. Don't know what it would have drawn on its own merits.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

STAR GAZING: Radio Rogues—A Svengali theme of hypnotism of stars to do their stuff and not so kosher.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

VOICE OF EXPERIENCE: Any exhibitor that fell for this reel has my sincere sympathy. He needs it. They have no value as entertainment. A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Educational

DAME SHY: Tuxedo Comedies—Another good comedy from this producer. While nothing outstanding, will make a good filler for your program. Running time, two reels.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town patronage.

KNOCKOUT DROPS: Frolics of Youth—Fine comedy of the slapstick variety such as we need more of. Date it. Running time, two reels.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND MELODY: Musical Comedies—Very good musical comedy, but nothing outstanding. You need not be afraid to play it. Running time, two reels.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town patronage.

NOSE FOR NEWS, A: Joe Cook—Not much to brag about. Very few laughs. It seems Educational has fallen by the wayside, when it comes to making good comedies. They just ain't. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small town and local patronage.

PENNY WISE: Star Personality Comedies—Very poor. Not worth running. Running time, two reels.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town patronage.

SPRING NIGHT: Paramount Varieties—Paramount shorts are usually excellent, but I can't remember ever having seen any single reeler as bad as this. Maybe it was supposed to be art, but it wasn't even pretty. I shouldn't have run it after seeing it the first show, but I needed it for time.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

TIME FOR LOVE: Color Classics—A color classic and it is a natural for Valentine Day program. Very beautiful color extraordinary.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

RKO

EASY ACES: RKO Van Beuren series—Sometimes OK and sometimes not. Wisecracks and dumbness of the lady always talking during the picture is a good shutup hint to those patrons who do talk during a performance, as her husband reminds her of the embarrassment several times. The nuttiness of her replies make the subject entertaining, to say the least. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small town and local patronage.

IF THIS ISN'T LOVE: Musicals—Some guy thinks he can warble. Just so much film wasted. When you get this one it makes one think of buying a box of applies at the grocery and the top layer is fine, but, oh, me, oh, my, every one of the other applies in the box! I boxed it up after the first show and sent it back. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small town and local patronage.

INSIDE THE ROPES: Sports with Bill Corum—Quite interesting. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MAJOR BOWES' AMATEUR THEATRE OF THE AIR: No. 3—This was as good as any of this series that we have shown. Is proving quite popular. Running one each week.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MARCH OF TIME: Subjects in any of the issues have been very interesting, but they got too much money from a lot of us for it. To date, I can't see where they have increased the box-office receipts any. They really are nothing but a more detailed newsreel, but fewer subjects. Running time, 22 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small town and local patronage.

MARCH OF TIME: People ask for this and then they come to see it, too. Very timely subjects and always something about it to advertise.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AT THE BILTMORE BOWL, A: Musicale—Excellent musical reel. Running time, 19 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SCOTTY FINDS A HOME: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Very good, clear and amusing. Rather far fetched, though, as far as the antics of the dog Bum are concerned. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small town and local patronage.

SCOTTY FINDS A HOME: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Pretty good. Running time, seven minutes.—P. B. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

United Artists

BROKEN TOYS: Silly Symphonies—Another very good colored cartoon, suitable for all ages.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

FLYING MOUSE, THE: Silly Symphonies—Very good. Good wholesome fun. The antics of a real mouse could not be portrayed any better. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small twn patronage.

PECULIAR PENGUINS: Silly Symphonies—Very good. In fact, I, myself, me, just about busted laughing at what happened to Miss Penguin. When her boy friend gave her a fish to eat, oh, my! Running time, 10 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small town and local patronage.

Universal

JOLLY LITTLE ELVES: Cartoon Classics—Very good, especially for children. Grownups liked it, too. Some even came back the second night to see it. Running time, nine minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small town and local patronage.

STRANGE AS IT SEEMS: These singles are very interesting and hold interest throughout. Patrons ask when more were booked. Running time, nine minutes.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

OKAY JOSE: Broadway Brevities—A color that has real comedy and a nice bit of singing and dancing. We had several favorable comments on it. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

P'S AND CUES: Pepper Pot—Very interesting. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SONG PLUGGER: Song Hit Stories—Wot a single reel. To sell a person something that you jerk after the first showing, that isn't any good in no way, shape or form. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Small town and local patronage.

WAY UP THAR: Young Romance—Fine comedy of the slapstick variety, the kind that really helps out most any program. Running time, two reels.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town patronage.

MGM

ALL-AMERICAN TOOTHACHE: Todd-Kelly which pleased, despite a far-fetched and improbable "college" story, but then, it's a comedy.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BEAUTIFUL BANFF AND LAKE LOUISE: Fitz-Patrick Travel Talks—Absolutely beautiful in photography and coloring with enchanting music and splendid narrative. Running time, eight minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BEAUTIFUL BANFF AND LAKE LOUISE: Fitz-Patrick Travel Talks—Showing one of the most beautiful resorts in the Rocky Mountains, Lake Louise. Good on any day with any feature.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GYMNASTICS: MGM Sports Parade (Pete Smith)—Very interesting single reel of champions on horizontal bar, rings, etc.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HOW TO SLEEP: Robert Benchly—I am very fond of the miniatures. This one certainly got a lot of laughs.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN MONKEY BUSINESS: Charley Chase—Have seen better Chase comedies, but this is very good and will get by with your patrons. Running time, two reels.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Small town patronage.

OLD PLANTATION, THE: Happy Harmonies—One of the very best of the color cartoons. Running time, eight minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminencee Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PIRATE PARTY ON CATALINA ISLE: Musical Revues—Excellent. The third of this year's series and they get better and better.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

PIRATE PARTY ON CATALINA ISLE: Musical Revues—Very good two-reel musical in color with Chester Morris as M. C. and Buddy Rogers' band furnishing lively music.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

PRIMITIVE PITCAIRN: MGM Miniatures—Very good single of the struggle to exist on Pitcairn Island. A worthwhile subject.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

PUBLIC GHOST NO. 1: Charley Chase—Good slapstick comedy. Plenty of laughs.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TWIN TRIPLETS: Todd-Kelly—Kept a Saturday night crowd in stitches. A real comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP AND GRAMPY: Betty Boop Cartoons—One of Betty Boop's best efforts. Running time, seven minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

CALVACADE OF MUSIC, THE: Headliners—Very good, showing American music from an Indian melody on down to present jazz. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

COUNTRYSIDE MELODIES: Paramount Varieties—Scenes of Irish countryside in color set to Irish music and a fox hunt in the Bluegrass of Kentucky, also in color. Had several compliments on this. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOOKED LIGHTNING: Grantland Rice Sportlights—This is one of the best fishing reels we have ever played. Very interesting all the way through. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

KING OF THE MARDI GRAS: Popeye the Sailor—As usual with the Popeyes, this one is extra good. Running time, seven minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MUSICAL MEMORIES: Color Classics—The old-time songs are good, so is the cartoon work, but the coloring is dark. Running time, eight minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

POPULAR SCIENCE: Very interesting and good color.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

SOME CLASS: Pepper Pot (Chas. Ahearn and his Millionaires)—A top notch short that brought several good comments. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

THEY'RE OFF: Big V Comedies—Very mild. You skip it and not miss a thing. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TWO BOOBS IN A BALLOON: Pepper Pot—Edgar Bergen and his dummy "Charlie McCarthy" never fail to get the laughs here. We wish they would make more comedies. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Serials

Mascot

FIGHTING MARINES, THE: Grant Withers, George Lewis—Started off good. Second chapter holding up. We used their trailer to start it off, but it was too long. Only showed it three times.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Snowbound, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

We realize now what the bears have to go through with when they hibernate for several months. We have been "hibernated" now for about six weeks, and the mercury has been flirting with zero, from 10 above to 32 below, and the ground has been covered with about two feet of snow, Old Man Winter slapping us on the nose every time we would stick our head out of doors. The wreckers have been busy hauling cars and trucks out of snowbanks, and in some cases the ambulances have had something to do, too. To have to sit in the house and count the figures on the wallpaper isn't the most pleasant occupation in the world. However, we don't have to do that because there is no wallpaper on the walls.

This cold spell, in connection with bad roads, has slowed up business at the theatres to a very large extent, there is no doubt about that, but you boys shouldn't get discouraged, but should remember that better days are just around the corner, for—

When the trees begin to sprout
And the lawns are getting green;
When we hear the chirp of robin and the wren,
Then we'll all begin to shout,
For we'll know that it will mean
That the springtime days have come to us again.

But speaking of springtime days reminds us to say that it would be a good time for you to grab your paintbrush and get some paint and doll up your theatre fronts a bit. Paint, you know, covers a lot of finger prints and fly-specks and makes the place look more cheerful, and cheerfulness around your place is the biggest asset you can have.

We went down to the Moon theatre the other night and saw Shirley Temple, John Boles and Jack Holt in "The Littlest Rebel."

This picture ought to have drawn two capacity houses each of its three-day runs, but it hardly drew the ordinary picture crowd, which was due largely to the conditions of the roads and 20 below zero weather. We wouldn't hardly say that this was Shirley's best picture, but we will say that it is well worth wading snowdrifts to see.

Brownville, Neb., is a town that the general public don't know very much about. It is located in the southeastern part of the state on the bank of the Missouri river, and, unless our knowledge of the early history of the state is a little out of plumb, it was the capital at one time (or tried to be) and when Frank E. Thomas isn't down to the river fishing for catfish he is operating the Thomas theatre, and the Thomas theatre is the rallying place for the Brownville folks.

Frank sent us a check with a request that we have his subscription to the Herald entered for him, as he realizes that the Herald is necessary for the correct operation of a theatre. He realizes also what we have continually contended, that "The Herald covers the field like an April shower."

Last night we braved a sub-zero storm and went to see Barbara Stanwick, Preston Foster and Malcom Douglas in "Annie Oakley."

Those of you who never saw Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show should get this one and play it, for it's a combination of the rodeo, wild Indians, broncho riding and expert rifle shooting. Sitting Bull also appears in it, although Bull doesn't do very much acting. As an imitation of the original it is a pretty good one, and Barbara makes a pretty good Annie Oakley. It is full of action and should please.

We read an article in the paper recently by a society woman writing about her dog. She said she had to get up in the night and close the window so her dog wouldn't catch cold. That was too bad. That woman should get a strong, ablebodied butler (strong from the neck down) to look after her dog. He should be instructed to have the windows all closed so he wouldn't catch his death of cold, and—

When the wind begins to blow
And it starts to drifting snow
Around the house and on the lawn and overhead,
She should have the butler go
And close the house against the snow
And tuck her little darling doggie snug in bed.

We have just received a letter from Elmer Gaily from San Diego, California. Elmer, you know, used to operate a theatre at Wayne, Nebraska.

Elmer writes that he is catching baracuda and red fish in the Pacific, in his shirt sleeves, while we are snowed in and cussing snowdrifts and sub-zero weather. Doggone the doggone luck anyhow.

As Uncle 'Leazer Biggs said to Aunt Polly, after she had lambasted him for an hour for being out with the boys the night before, "Well, that'll be aplenty for now, Polly."

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 9.—(A) What are wows and what is flutter? (B) Describe the oil well of a sleeve-type bearing? How is it lubricated? (C) Of what does the projector automatic fire shutter consist? (D) Explain why it is impossible for any lens to focus light to a point.

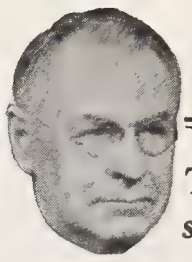
Answer to Question No. 5 (New Series)

Bluebook School Question No. 5 was: (A) What is vitally necessary in making a film splice of maximum strength? (B) Should transformer temperature be checked occasionally? (C) What light beam focus is necessary to reproduce 9,000*-cycle sound and why? (D)Describe the common carbon type microphone and its action.*

In some manner the original answer to Question No. 5 got itself all nicely lost, so I'll have to answer it again myself just to keep things straight.

(A) This is question No. 34, page 168 of the Bluebook. The answer appears on page 181. In order to make a splice of maximum strength the cement must be laid on the stub end with just one stroke of the brush. To do this well requires both skill and practice. Just why it is, I am not sure, but rubbing the cement brush back and forth weakens the splice. Cement does not act like a glue or paste, you know. It actually softens the celluloid so that when pressure is applied it actually welds together—that is, if the cement be good cement and is rightly applied to celluloid from which emulsion, dirt and oil have been removed.

(B) Yes. Overload, a heavy ground and other things may cause temperature to rise above the safety limit, which is 90 degrees Centigrade, or 194 degrees Fahrenheit. However, transformers are rather rugged instruments and if once each day after an extended period of use, a transformer causes no especial discomfort when the hand is laid upon it, we may consider it as operating within safe temperature limits. Once each month, however, the careful man will bed a thermometer bulb in stiff putty and bed the putty ball on each transformer he is using, leaving it there long enough to secure maximum operating temperature. Some trouble, yes, but it is far better to be safe than sorry, and transformers cost money.



(C) What light beam focus is necessary to reproduce 9,000-cycle sound, and why? Turning to page 509 of the Blue Book we see this is question No. 6 on that page. Turning to answer No. 6, page 514, we read, "Consider a high-pitched sound say of 9,000 cycles (which is 18,000 alternations), photographed on a sound track. The photocell must see 9,000 transparent, and 9,000 dark areas in one second if it is to create a 9,000-cycle pulsation in its direct current.

The film moves downward at the rate of 18 inches per second. Hence, if 18,000 different areas (9,000 light, and an equal number of dark) are to pass the sound gate aperture in one second, each of these areas must occupy a space exactly 0.001 of an inch along the length of the sound track. Now if the dark areas are to cut off the light completely, and the transparent are to transmit it completely, then the light beam must obviously be only 0.001 of an inch in height, and that, I believe, answers any question, at least fairly well. Of course, if a lower cycle only were used, then a higher beam would serve, say 1/500 of an inch for 4,500 cycles, but the beam must be sufficiently narrow to reproduce the highest cycle required.

(D) See question No. 32, page 510, and its answer on page 527. The carbon type microphone consists of a carefully weighed quantity of carbon granules confined between two metal plates, one of which is fixed; the other, the diaphragm, very thin and free to vibrate when sound waves impinge thereon. The effect of such vibration is to alter the compression of the carbon granules and thus alter the resistance they offer to the flow of current.

A steady flow of direct current passes through this carbon dust. Because of the change of resistance offered when the diaphragm vibrates, the flow increases and decreases exactly in rhythm with the frequency of the sound waves and their strength.

This answer has been rather hastily prepared, and I might have done better were more time at my disposal. But what has been said should suffice. I could only have added something about amplification.

SMPE Sets Spring Meeting For Chicago April 27-30

The Spring Meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will be held at the Edgewater Beach Hotel, Chicago, April 27-30, according to an announcement this week by W. C. Kunzmann, convention vice-president. Mr. Kunzmann has just completed advance arrangements for the convention and has appointed all local committees. C. H. Stone is Chairman of the Local Arrangements and Reception Committee. Herbert Griffin of New York will handle Projection and O. F. Neu of New York is in charge of the Apparatus Exhibit. Mrs. C. H. Stone has been appointed Hostess in charge of all entertainment for women.

Seven technical sessions are scheduled for the four day convention. A get-together luncheon will be held the first day and the semi-annual banquet will be held on April 29. One afternoon has been set aside for visits to prominent motion picture plants in the Chicago area.

Carolina Ruling Upheld

The South Carolina supreme court last week affirmed the action of the lower court in awarding the Pastime Amusement Company, Charleston, a verdict of $1,500 against the Southeastern Express Company for failure to deliver a film on time. All exceptions to rulings of the trial judges were overruled by the high tribunal.

SUGGESTS SERIALS FROM FEATURES

SEES WAY TO FIGHT DOUBLE FEATURING

To the Editor of Motion Picture Herald:

I have always been of the opinion that the Law and the Outlaw have been enemies of each other. But after reading the latest reports of the "Dual Duel" as described in the February 1st issue of the Herald it seems as though the law is on the verge of taking sides with the Outlaw, the Outlaw of course being none other than the double feature menace, our Public Enemy No. 1 or rather our Picture Enemy No. 1, in the eyes of the Law of Showmanship. Our particular type of outlaw seems too big for the law to handle, so it seems best to take the law into our own hands and use our methods (our ideas) to kill our outlaw that forever seems to menace us.

Most of us have ideas how to go about it but few have seemed to come forward with them. I have one that has been a puzzle to me for several months. To me it seems as though it is a good one, but after suggesting it to a producer I received this reply: "I read your letter of August 2d (1935) with much interest, but after thinking over it for some time, I have come to the conclusion that it would be a terrific gamble to use your idea. I am quite sure the best theatres in America would not accept your idea and we would thereby lose our first-runs. I am frank to say I personally would not consider such a gamble."

In the letter I just quoted I left out what my idea was about this is the reason. Two months after receiving the above letter from the producer I read on the editorial page of the Herald that . . . "the manager of a big eastern district of a large circuit brought about discussion of twenty-five managers" (the idea they discussed was just like the one I suggested to the producer) and it goes forward to say in the editorial that . . . "It is keyed to today's market for a considerable number of houses," (Probably non-first runs).

The other producer did not answer my letter.

I feel that as a subscriber of the Herald I have a right to voice my opinion and publicly through the pages of the Herald make known my idea.

It is a Feature-Serial Idea. Why can't the motion picture producers release a feature picture in serial form? Instead of showing a double feature to bring in the patrons, why can't we exhibitors run a good entertaining feature, and with it show two or three reels of an outstanding picture that has been released in serial form? I admit that it does seem out of the ordinary or even fantastic to think of putting Shirley Temple, Clark Gable, Cagney and O'Brien or Joe E. Brown in a serial.

The average serial of today is released for the purpose of those who crave continued action from week to week. Thus it does not appeal to a great many women. Now if a picture on the order of "Magnificent Obsession" were released in a serial form it would guarantee to bring in the women patronage. Continue it where Irene Dunne and Robert Taylor were talking and he asked her, "Could you even forgive Bobby Merrick on a night like this?" and it would be sure to bring back anybody to hear her answer in the next chapter. It has been said that the serials of today with the lesser stars in them help add to the box-office receipts. Since it is the truth, then a new modern type of serial (whether it be my idea or someone else's) with the big stars in it appealing to the women patronage and less action patrons, should multiply the box office receipts. As far as magazines are concerned this is the serial age. Over half of the big movie stories are serialized in magazines and newspapers throughout the nation. "Small Town Girl" was done in this city in the newspapers in serial form. Now why can't it be done the same on the screen? It might be hard to do at first but it can be done.

I feel that the fireworks are about to start, so "S" Men, it's lend me your ears or give me your jeers.—Earle Flesch, Assistant Manager, Baxter Theatre, Louisville, Ky.

PROTESTS STUDIO AID IN RAIDS BY RADIO

To the Editor of the Herald:

Permit me to compliment you on your editorial in the February 8th issue on "What Is Competition?"

You are perfectly right in your assertion that the exhibitors are making a fuss over nothing at all, while there are really vital subjects that should demand their attention. In my opinion commercial films are something that is entirely apart from the entertainment field. In fact, it would be to an exhibitor's gain to sometime cooperate in commercial ventures. By that I mean when a show like General Motors puts on comes along, usually for a one night stand, the exhibitor could arrange to make a tieup whereby he could secure advertising for his theatre by having them display posters or maybe run a trailer advertising his coming attractions. By cooperating with the merchants in his town he could create a lot of goodwill as the merchants are permanent, whereas the commercial film showings are a one-day proposition. Personally I have always found it good policy to cooperate with other business interests rather than fight them. I am on the board of directors of our local business men's association and always take an active part in all their promotions.

The radio is one of our greatest competitors, and it appears that the motion picture studios are aiding in this raid on the box office. Some of our biggest box office names are on the air week in and week out inviting our patrons to sit by the fireside and just turn the dial for an evening of entertainment. It wouldn't be so bad if these stars appeared on the radio during "off hours" but they are on during the "peak hours" during the week and Saturday-Sundays. There's no getting away from the fact that radio is here to stay and will continue to plague us, but it is a problem that should be faced squarely with straight thinking from all angles. If the brains of the industry will only think about this problem and cooperate with each other 100 per cent for a satisfactory solution I feel sure that at least a little headway could be made for the benefit of all concerned.—J. Rosenfield, Manager, Modjeska-Granada Theatres, Saxe Amusement Management, Inc., Milwaukee, Wis.

ILLINOIS WOMEN NAME WILL, GINGER ROGERS

2,348 in Senior and Junior Clubs Vote "David Copperfield" Best Picture of 1935

by BILL CROUCH
Chicago Correspondent

Illinois clubwomen, 2,348 of them, have voted for what they considered the ten best photoplays of 1935 and the stars who in their estimation gave the best performances in that period.

There are 24 women's club districts in Illinois and the majority of them were represented in this poll, according to Mrs. Charles R. Holton, chairman of the Department of Motion Pictures, Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs.

The members voting were from both senior and junior clubs. A few votes came from Parent-Teachers groups and in a few cases church women's groups voted.

Topping the list of pictures, by a wide margin, was "David Copperfield." Bunched together for second, third and fourth places were "Top Hat," "Mutiny on the Bounty" and "Midsummer Night's Dream."

The complete list of films named follows:

	Votes
1. "David Copperfield," MGM	2079
2. "Top Hat," Radio	1623
3. "Mutiny on the Bounty," MGM	1506
4. "Midsummer Night's Dream," Warner	1504
5. "Broadway Melody of 1936," MGM	1223
6. "Naughty Marietta," MGM	949
7. "Ruggles of Red Gap," Paramount	932
8. "Roberta," Radio	897
9. "Les Miserables," 20th Century-Fox	886
10. "In Old Kentucky," 20th Century-Fox	744

Honorable Mention went to the following: "The Littlest Rebel," "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," "Alice Adams," "Steamboat Round the Bend," "Little Minister," "Crusades," "Oil for the Lamps of China," "I Dream Too Much," "Shipmates Forever," "Anna Karenina," "Curly Top," "Little Colonel," "Last Days of Pompeii," "I Live My Life," "Return of Peter Grimm," "She Married Her Boss," "The Informer," "The Dark Angel," "Life Begins at 40."

"Tale of Two Cities" and "Magnificent Obsession" received many votes but because they are 1936 releases such votes were not counted.

One hundred and sixty-eight pictures were named by the clubwomen.

The choice of stars, according to the poll, was the late Will Rogers. The favorite feminine star was Ginger Rogers.

The favorite men stars were, in order of their popularity:

1. Will Rogers	1506
2. Fredric March	1337
3. Charles Laughton	1321
4. Clark Gable	1219
5. Fred Astaire	1216
6. George Arliss	1004
7. Nelson Eddy	922
8. Dick Powell	831
9. John Boles	758
10. Wallace Beery	740

Honorable Mention went to Robert Taylor, Franchot Tone, William Powell, Freddie Bartholomew, Lionel Barrymore, Fred MacMurray, Frank Morgan, Gary Cooper, Robert Donat and Edward Everett Horton.

Women players were voted in the following order:

1. Ginger Rogers	1582
2. Katharine Hepburn	1531
3. Claudette Colbert	1422
4. Shirley Temple	1106
5. Norma Shearer	1079
6. Irene Dunne	1039
7. Jeanette MacDonald	979
8. Greta Garbo	781
9. Grace Moore	777
10. Joan Crawford	756

Honorable Mention was accorded to Loretta Young, Ann Harding, May Robson, Myrna Loy, Edna May Oliver, Jane Withers, Maureen O'Sullivan, Elizabeth Bergner, Helen Hayes, Ruby Keeler.

In the total voting, 104 men were mentioned and 102 women.

Inventor of Halftone Still Active at 80

Still active at eighty years of age and at work daily on development of a simple process for making color photography, Frederick Eugene Ives, inventor of the halftone process now in common use, was host to thirty-five friends and relatives at a birthday dinner in his Philadelphia home on February 16th, the night preceding his birthday. In modest but secure circumstances because the firm for which he was working when he discovered the process of halftone reproduction feared to patent it lest imitators appropriate its use, Mr. Ives directs the daily experiments of Harrison Conroy, who joined him two years ago to learn color photography and stayed on, in the search for a simple means by which, he believes, amateur photographers will be able to use color as easily and effectively as they now use black and white.

Invincible Cast Complete

Maury Cohen, head of Invincible Pictures, has completed the cast of his next picture, "Brilliant Marriage," and the players will include Joan Marsh, Ray Walker, Inez Courtney and Doris Lloyd. Phil Rosen will direct.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

BOX-OFFICE BOLL WEEVIL

Theatremen will no doubt attest that returns from these exploitations are considerably worthwhile but this is as good a time as any to call attention to what is becoming too much of a general practice. We refer to the widespread holding of the on-the-cuff previews for supposedly selective audiences, the object being that the locals so honored will dash out and shout loud praises that will bring paying customers to the box-office.

On the face of it the idea sounds practical, but it does not work out in every instance. True, leaders of prominent church, school and club organizations now concerned more than ever with social significances of the motion picture are good folk to tie to and it would seem that a showing to these influencers of public opinion should be encouraged. But it does not stop there.

The very meaning of exclusive indicates that there are a lot of people who though not qualified to attend these showings are going to bring powerful pressure to bear to be among those present. If a manager refuses to yield to this pressure he may be stepping on important toes. And if he does let down the bars to save possible complications, then it's a case of giving away a flock of admissions—the theatre's stock in trade.

So-o-o-, too many managers compromise by making their invitational lists very, very flexible. And now we have reports of campaigns including previews that run wild in attendance with platoons of folks on hand who won't do the picture a nickel's worth of good—and if the truth must be known will not hesitate to go out and pan the show.

There is no doubt but that the free list and pass situation contributes to the present excellent health of the box-office boll weevil. Immediate and rigid pruning of the special preview lists is recommended as a quick means of controlling this devastating blight.

AN INTERNATIONAL LINK

The comprehensiveness and widespread influence of the Quigley Awards Competitions are superbly illustrated in the findings of the Committee of Judges who voted the January Plaques to Rene Lebreton, of Paris, and Seth Field, of Ellsworth, Maine. One spot—an international playground, a cosmopolitan capital that shelters every shade of opinion; the other, a typically American county seat of 3,000 souls.

Poles apart in habit and custom, separated by the expanse of an ocean, these two communities are brought together in close bond by the accomplishments of their sons in the world of the theatre.

Countries may strive for commercial dominance, races war upon each other. But it is safe to say that showmen round the globe fighting shoulder to shoulder toward the same objectives are establishing a community of thought that is welding a reassuring link between nations.

NO DUES TO PAY

It has been repeated and repeated. We run the line in every membership application box, send out the information frequently in answer to inquiries. But it still needs retelling, so to every theatreman in this wide, wide universe who would like to join up is addressed the following:

No dues or money payments of any kind are necessary for membership in Managers' Round Table Club.

Every manager, assistant and publicist is eligible for membership which can be accomplished by filling in and mailing the blank that is run in the pages of this department.

In so doing your showman joins with the thousands of others here and abroad who proudly display their Club certificates and who regard the study of these pages as one of the most important and enjoyable high spots of the week.

No, there are no dues. But there is an obligation that members take upon themselves—to report frequently to Club headquarters their theatre activities which are chronicled in the Round Table pages for the information and benefit of the entire membership.

PERSONS AS WELL AS CAUSES

The ability to pick a proper spot in tieins with goodwill campaigns was referred to on this page recently as one of the distinguishing marks of showmanship. And while this spotting has of course to do with local organizations of influence it concerns, and deeply, persons as well as causes.

Individuals seated in high local place are important folk to tie to. The showman who keeps these outside contacts in good working order will rarely find his theatre "on the spot" in times of emergency.

NAME A DUCK. Seems that the famed Goo-Goo, the Penner duck, has taken a mate in "Collegiate" and Manager W. C. Ricord, Jr., Fox Stadium Theatre, Los Angeles, put together this fancy lobby-stopper to encourage patrons to help name the new arrival. Ricord says the ducks are real ones and that nearly 200 names were suggested.

Holtz Uses Gag Stunts To Plug "Opera" Date

Successful gag lobby stunt for "Night at the Opera" was used by Ray Holtz, publicist for the Bonham Theatre, Fairbury, Neb., with boy dressed as Harpo stationed at entrance with special sign reading "Make Harpo talk"—free tickets were offered to those who could make the stooge speak.

For street bally three boys dressed as the Marx Freres circulated throughout the city visiting various stores, where one of them would step out of one of his shoes and the other two with much commotion would retrieve the boot and run after the missing brother.

Tying in with the kiddie club Saturday ahead, Ray staged a parade, each member carrying a banner or card announcing the opening of picture.

Jeffries Hosts Kiddies

Another reported successful Christmas party for poor kids was that put on by A. B. Jeffries, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo., cooperating local newspapers paying cost of tickets and the theatre distributing candy for all kids attending. Film companies donated the reels, local prominents the transportation and a pleasant time was had by all.

Radio Contest Staged By Harmon in St. Louis

Homer Harmon, Shubert Rialto, St. Louis, Mo., just succeeded in tying in with the International Radio Club, which held its convention in Havana, Cuba, recently. Through the club, some fifteen cities sponsored blonde bathing beauty contests, selecting two girls to make the trip to Miami and on to Havana, spending a week there as the guests of the Cuban government and to compete for the title of "Blonde Queen of Radio for 1936."

Radio station in St. Louis broadcast fifteen times a day for two weeks asking for blonde contestants. Some 75 girls filed their entries at station in person and later appeared on stage in sets of 20's where finals were held few days following and two selected to make trip. Theatre came in for unlimited publicity both on air and in newspapers, which carried art on girls and stories.

Herman Manicures Them

For "Hands Across the Table" at the Embassy Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., manager Joe Herman promoted an attractive girl manicurist and paraphernalia which was stationed in lobby. To each lady patron a free manicure was given for two weeks ahead. Special folders were distributed by cooperating beauty salon with copy reading "make a date now to hold your hands across the table and see the picture at," etc., etc.

"Remember Our New Address"

Rydeen's Novelty Cards

By way of plugging his double feature bills at the Garrick Theatre, St. Paul, Minn., Bob Rydeen mails attractive government postcards with cut of large tinted pear at left side and right carrying copy "the year's biggest bargain in pears—or maybe it's pairs" followed with picture plugs. Another printed folder contained copy reading "We don't know the whereabouts of the most popular quins, but the most popular twins may be found at the," etc., etc.

Societies Cooperate On 'Pasteur' Opening

New York City high school students were advised of the Strand Theatre date on "Story of Louis Pasteur" through medium of booklets on the life of the famed scientist distributed by Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. Theatre credits were imprinted on back page.

Through special screening for heads of American Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, officials of that organization advised their entire mailing list of the picture and urging support of the members. Also effective was seat location card printed by theatre and mailed by the New York Medical Society to over 8,000 doctors on its mailing lists. Medicos were asked to leave cards with ushers when seeing the picture, for emergency cases.

Two contests were put on. One with the New York Mirror offered prizes for best 500-word articles on "How Pasteur discoveries affect my every day life." The other was with WINS on best answers to question, "Do you know how much of your health you owe to Louis Pasteur?" Newspaper tieups additionally included daily stories on Pasteur in Courier des Etats-Unis, the French newspaper printed over here.

Microscopes made up effective window displays with one said to be oldest in this country planted in Times Square location. Optical store chain also used the microscope flash, as did other stores of this nature spotted throughout the city.

Fashions Also Plugged

Fashion angle was plugged with the Fifth Avenue hookin on an Annette Pasteur dress and another using cut of Anita Louise for hair dress newspaper ad. Star's stills were tied in to displays at leading department stores on national knitting contest.

Front, designed and constructed by Manager Zeb Epstin and Sid Nagler, carried out the idea that this was the top Muni role of any in which he has appeared for Warner Brothers. Hand-tinted enlargements of star's various characterizations were spread across front with credits under each photo in cutout lettering.

In center (see photo) five-foot hand colored head dominated display with star and title in three-foot red and white cutout letters on blue background pegged out from the front. Scene enlargements were set in front and return frames.

Campaign was planned and executed by Irv Windisch, Strand Theatre exploiteer.

Kraska Plugs "Gulliver" With Recorded Program

For his "New Gulliver" opening at the Fine Arts Theatre in Boston, George Kraska distributed 10,000 heralds in greater Boston with the public libraries giving bookmarks in all branches. Special window displays were arranged in leading book stores in which copies of "Gulliver's Travels" were prominently shown tying in with picture and theatre. The heralds were attractively designed, front page showing the giant with feet spread and Lilliputians marching through, while inside carried critic comments.

George's first recorded concert program was a reported huge success. Dedicating it to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Conductor Serge Koussevitsky was invited with entire personnel of the ochestra, all of whom posed for pictures in front of theatre and these together with stories were planted in dailies.

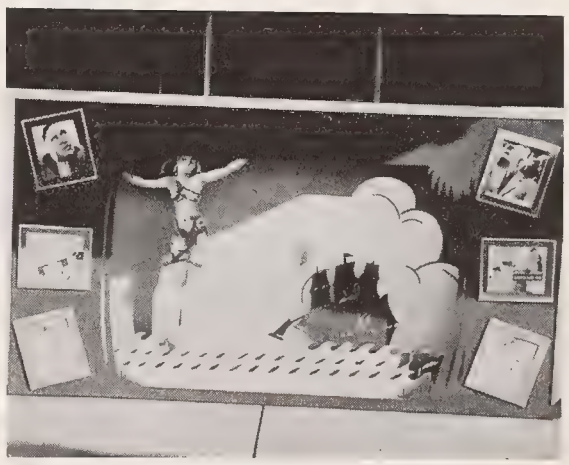
Schools Aid Jancke On "Two Cities"

Tying in with all schools in his county, Walt Jancke, Gem Theatre, Golden, Colo., furnished each English teacher with study guide on "Tale of Two Cities" and offered passes to student in each class writing the best review on the picture. These reviews were judged by the teachers, all of whom cooperated on the stunt.



Superintendent of schools agreed to dismiss high schools earlier so that students could attend matinee, and since only those with tickets were permitted to get out early, Jancke sent cashier over to schools in advance to sell tickets.

Thomason Describes Animation Equipment

Color, light, motion and sometimes sound, is the recipe given by Manager J. S. Thomason, Ritz, McPherson, Kan., for successful lobby or advance displays. Accompanying shot of stills of "Mutiny on the Bounty" illustrates one of his animations, with native girl moving as in a dance while boat rocked as though it were riding the waves. Stills were flanked on either side.

Thomason writes his equipment for most any kind of animation he uses includes a worm gear from an old electric piano for heavy animations, two worm gears from old projection arc lamp feeds, a mercury bulb-transformer and an oscillating electric fan, the latter for the light displays, which he has frequent occasion to use on different attractions.

"J. S." says that when there is not much detail to the display or if it is not a heavy animation, fan with blades removed is most simple to use.

Abramson Ties "Ghost" To Golden Gloves Contest

Capitalizing on the "Golden Gloves" contest current in Louisville, Ky., Max Abramson of Loew's Theatre secured an effective radio tieup for "Ghost Goes West." At the beginning of his program, Pete O'Donnell, sports editor of paper and sponsor of the bouts, told listeners about the picture and thereafter referred to the loser of each fight as "The ghost of so-and-so goes west."

For his street bally Max used man in Scotch costume with billing on his back riding through street on horseback. Lobby displays were arranged with leading hotels and specially worded postcards sent to prominent social organizations.

Tubbert Uses Novel Ballys To Plug "Ceiling Zero"

Borrowing two complete aviator outfits, including parachute pack, from local airport pilots, Bill Tubbert, Keith's Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., had two boys don the outfits and parade town with back banners reading "We just bailed out to see Ceiling Zero."

Another bally was promotion of huge fog beacon, which was placed on truck in front of theatre. Usher dressed in field attendant's uniform flashed the beam on all big buildingss around city. Truck bore copy "When it is Ceiling Zero time, this beam lights the way."

P. A. system was used in inner lobby to broadcast set of records of airplane effects. These were controlled by usher, who sat at replica of radio control room making announcements at intervals during the day.

Contests and Tieup With Four Schools Top Field's Entry

Shirley Temple dolls are as eagerly competed for in the smaller situations as they have been in the big spots, which Manager Seth Field found to advantage in putting together his Silver Plaque campaign on "Littlest Rebel" at the Dirigo Theatre, Ellsworth, Me. (pop. 3,000).

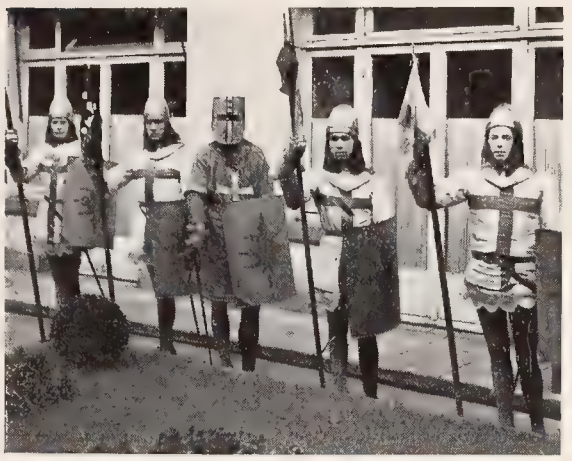
Editor of only available weekly paper was prevailed upon to come in on the letter idea in which the children were asked to express themselves on "How I would be a good mother to my Shirley Temple doll?" At first skeptical——for contests have not been successful in that spot—editor cooperated and Field reports hundreds of entries from all parts of the county. Doll was shown in lobby and winner announced at special school matinee.

Bowlers Cooperate

Bowling being the top local sport, Seth hooked in with operators of new alleys to reward members of league teams bowling highest above their average during week before picture with guest tickets. In exchange cards were spotted at alleys (see photo) and scores carried in bowling section of paper. Idea was given countrywide publicity as there are 24 teams from all parts of drawing area in two local leagues.

School Busses Promoted

Schools were covered more fully than before by Field, who offered in exchange for support from principals and teachers, a free one-hour show to pupils of all four grammar schools who on opening day had the best lessons, behaved best and marched to theatre with most complete attendance. Parade of course brought a lot of attention and for first time Seth was allowed to sell tickets in the class rooms direct to pupils.



Further cooperation on this was permission of schools' superintendent who allowed use of ten school buses to bring children from outlying sections to and from theatre. Bus-loads of children from nearby towns outside of local school zones also attended. Further school tiein was writing assignment for all classes in advance of playdates, on the starlet and picture. Cards were posted on school bulletin boards.

Field planted neat window displays in various stores on children's apparel and book tieups. In leading department store scene stills were attached to top of price signs at various counters, this reported as something new locally.

For the first time, manager used rubber stamp for imprinting on bags, napkins and envelopes, especially bags used for out-of-town deliveries. Heralds were placed in bags and packages at other stores. Window cards covered spots not having other displays, and in this way nearly every local store carried some kind of a plug for the picture.

Local library bought copies of the book to tie in with the date and made up displays for library counters. Announcements were made by orchestra leaders at the three dance halls where cards were posted.

Lobby display, newspaper advertising and outside billing were covered well with advertising money available and efforts of the staff which, according to Field, comprises besides himself merely a cashier, doorman and operator, the entire theatre personnel.

Paris Campaign on 'Crusades' Includes Ace Exploitation

French newspapers averaging only from six to eight pages in size do not generally give over-generous publicity to motion pictures. Thus the story and picture breaks secured by Manager Rene Lebreton and publicist Andre Agramon, of the Paramount Theatre, Paris, on "Crusades" were considered out of the ordinary. Campaign was voted the January Silver.

Reviews for instance were spread in some papers over three columns and such dailies as "L'Intransigeant" mentioned the picture six times in comments, news items and features. "Le Temps," said to be the most reserved publication on the Continent, contributed four enthusiastic mentions, as did "Le Petit Parisien," "Le Journal" and "Le Quotidien," other well-known of the many dailies published in the French capital.

Business and diplomatic papers also swung in line and the comic papers, such as "Le Rire" and "Savez-vous," cartooned it on hookups with local events. There are said to be some 50 papers in Paris, all of which commented upon the picture, and other publications having to do with food market reports and advice to the thrifty went for reviews on this occasion.

All in all, the total amount of publicity garnered on the Paris date has rarely been rolled up for attractions at the Paramount. Display advertising was in keeping.

Entire Building Decorated

Theatre front and other slants were not neglected, photos in adjoining column showing treatment of front and costumed men used as atmosphere. Different treatment may be noted of sculptured "crusaders" in bas-relief on columns with mahogany beams simulated over entrance. Program announcements were made up in the form of shields and scene stills planted liberally.

Entire facade of building was transformed to represent the battlements in the picture, the fortifications built atop the marquee also decorated with colorful banners and the title in giant lights. From the roof were suspended colored streamers duplicating the colors and ensigns of those carried by the Crusaders.

Studio Properties Exhibited

Another unit in the front exhibited some of the actual properties used in the production of the picture in Hollywood. Inside lobby and foyer were decorated with giant figures in armor, flags and banners. Armored figures carried battle flags with title.

The decorative shield idea was carried out for window display, these used in prominent spots with action stills and picture copy. Billing also was extensive with vari-sized posters and paper planted prominently.

To attract the children, colored paper cutouts, called "Game of the Crusades," were distributed with instructions given on construction of the battlements pictured. Reverse side carried map and story of the Crusades, with theatre credits and copy.

Display Doors Open Wide For "Bride Comes Home"

In keeping with their usual effective manner of lobby display advertising at the Warner Stanley, Baltimore, Manager Rodney Collier and ad head George Browning worked out a neat stopper for a set piece on "Bride Comes Home."

Accompanying photo shows the three stars in natural color blowups walking in through open doorway. Display is set against black velvet floor lights and filigree work in bottom in soft blue with copy panels set on either side.

Don Nichols, Broadway Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., tied local merchants up for a co-op page on "Midsummer Night's Dream." Each ad carried the "dream slogan" such as "every gift in our department is a dream," "a dream come true; buy," etc., etc. Public library distributed book marks, letters were sent to all club women and ministers calling attention to picture and high schools were approached and sold blocks of tickets.

Fifteen minute playlet was given over radio, opening night invitations were extended local prominents and floodlights used to give gala appearance to front. Newspapers were profuse in their writeups and special featured stories were included with art work.

"Wilderness" Gets Gala Opening in Worcester

Erle Wright and Harry Watts gave "Ah, Wilderness" a typical Hollywood opening at the Poli Theatre in Worcester, Mass. Sidewalk and lobby broadcast was given introducing celebrities as they arrived and there were plenty of them. Governor Curley and Mayor Mahoney attended, with the former making an address from stage and papers using stories and cuts on opening.

Florist came across with "Ah Wilderness" roses which were tagged and handed out at theatre by girls attired in period costumes. Drum and bugle corps led parade through downtown streets, ending up next to theatre where bandstand was erected and they did their stuff. All roads leading into Worcester had road arrows reading "direct road to Ah Wilderness." Graftonites who appeared in the picture were invited to make personal appearances at theatre and for street bally. Bannered auto of 1905 vintage with girl and boy in costume toured streets. Boxes in theatre were decorated with flags and one occupied by State officials had the State seal flags. Arrangements were made with schools to dismiss classes earlier to permit students to attend showing.

Grimes Stages Various Contests for "Mutiny"

Contests formed the high spots of Ken Grimes' "Mutiny" campaign at the Warner Theatre in Morgantown, West Va. High school art classes entered contest for best drawings of the Bounty as did woodworking classes and cooperating newspaper ran cuts of the ship with passes awarded those submitting best coloring job. Two weeks ahead theatre artist worked in lobby making large model ships which were later used as part of special display.

Oversized pass was carried through streets and presented to Mayor, six sheet pasted to sidewalk in front of theatre and through tieup with C.C.C., their trucks were bannered with picture copy (see photo). All employees wore imprinted chest ribbons, post cards were mailed to all school instructors and drawing sheets plugging "bounty" distributed to all grade schools.

Double truck co-op page was secured from cooperating merchants with large cuts of Gable and offer by stores of free photos of the star, college paper plugged essay contest for which ducats were given and various stores came through with neat window displays.

RADIO AS A BUSINESS BUILDER

Theatre Broadcasts and Tieups With Local Stations Are Proving Profitable, Round Tabler Asserts

by DAVE JONES
Adv. Mgr. Kerasotes Theatres, Springfield, Ill.

Many articles have been published in your column in the past few months in regard to radio as a menacing competitor. However, radio must be given the due consideration that it deserves as an advertising medium, which, properly applied, can be used to a great advantage by theatres.

We operate two popular price theatres, the Senate and the Strand, in a city of 75,000, on a combination first and second-run policy. In surveying our advertising problems we analyzed the situation to see just how we could get the name of our attractions and our advertising into every home in the city and the surrounding trading area of some 50,000 persons. Naturally the first medium was newspaper advertising.

In our city there are two dailies, one a morning paper and one an evening paper, both of which do an excellent job of merchandising. However, when we analyzed our coverage, we came upon the following situation.

Radio Also Reaches Non-Readers

In the city proper there are slightly over 8,000 foreign-born residents, the majority of whom can not read the American language, especially enough to appreciate some of the selling points of newspaper ads. There are also 1,000 illiterates who can not read or write at all. There are also 2,000 families on relief who are not allowed to take a paper, but who seem to find the money to take in a movie every week or two, especially at one of our houses where the price all afternoon is 15 cents. Due to their financial status, however, we consider the buying power of the entire family as equal to one person.

In addition to this, there are from one to three thousand transients in the city each day, due to the fact that this is the State Capital, and a certain percentage of these are more than likely to hear a radio in a hotel lobby, restaurant, tavern, shoe shining parlor or such. Taking a conservative figure, this shows that 15 per cent of the possible population remains untouched.

To reach this field, we decided upon radio as the medium, and so we set about reconditioning our organ which had lain idle for five years. We were able to obtain the services of a young man who had been an organist in this city, and who had played at the University of Illinois.

We selected the time 11:30 to 12 for our broadcast as it directly precedes our matinee opening at 12 noon. We open the box office at 11:30 and any one who wishes to view the broadcast, may do so. We also chose this time of day as we have a large listening audience of school children and about half the office workers, while they are at lunch. Also, there are no outstanding radio programs on the network at this time to give us competition.

The program is a strictly request program for anniversaries, birthdays, etc., wherein the names of persons are read over the radio, which creates good will.

We also have two vocalists, a young man and a young woman who alternate each day.

To create a little interest, we conducted a "Mystery Contest." The organist played a selection without announcing the title. Every third correct call received during the half-hour period at either theatre, was awarded a complimentary ticket. One day we decided to put a test on our listener strength, so we played the most popular song of the day, and we could not answer the phones fast enough. The next day we received a call from two gentlemen of the local telephone company who insisted that we cut out the program as we were completely disrupting their service. They had to change their schedules and put on a full force during the noon hour.

One-Third Listening In

They further stated that at least a third of the entire switchboard would light up at once, and due to the fact that there are 16,000 telephones in the city, we knew that we had at least 5,000 homes listening in.

The program was entitled "The Strand and Senate Serenade," and the advertising was limited to one plug on each theatre.

We discontinued the mystery contest and in its place we ran several types of contests including a contest question such as, "who are the three stars in 'Mutiny on the Bounty'"; or, "What is Joan Crawford's name in private life," etc.

Another type of contest that brought good results was when we offered a month's pass to the person who could write "She Couldn't Take It," the most times on the back of a penny postcard. Believe it or not, but one girl wrote this title 513 times.

We found the program to be greatly beneficial to us, both in good will and direct advertising. We added spot announcements on the station throughout the day, so as to get greater coverage.

As the amateur craze came along we naturally started our own "Amateur Hour." We sold the program to the Phillips Petroleum Co. Service Stations, whereby the entrants had to secure an audition blank from one of the Phillips 66 service stations, before they could enter the contest. We conducted our contest on Sunday afternoons at 2:30 so as to have the greatest coverage with our radio listeners, as the small stations do not get out very far at night, and they have terrific competition from the networks. We backed the amateurs up with a band from one of the local hotels and made quite a show out of it with the sponsor paying most of the cost. The winners were chosen according to the applause received in the theatre, which counted 50 per cent, and by the votes sent in by mail, which counted the other 50 per cent.

We ran the contests in groups of 10 and the two final winners (it was a tie), polled 6,000 votes in cards and letters. We made a tie-up with Quinn Ryan's Phillips 66 Amateur Show over WGN, whereby the winners were presented on his program. This netted us quite a bit of publicity, as Quinn Ryan and the mayor of our city are old-school day pals.

Ties In With Chicago Program

By special permission, this program was also rebroadcast by the local station. We also effected a tie-up with the Hotel Sherman, whereby they furnished the lodging in exchange for advertising and also presented them on their Amateur Show conducted by George Olsen and Ethel Shutta in the College Inn.

The railroad transportation was also promoted on an exchange for advertising basis, so the cost of sending the winners to Chicago, was nothing.

Another radio show that brought us quite a bit of business was a Barn Dance unit from this same station. This type of show is very popular in the Midwest, and we were able to run this show on our stage every Saturday night at seven for almost a year straight. This was a good medium to reach the rural sections and brought us a lot of new business in this particular field.

Another good radio-theatre tie-up (conducted by another theatre in this city) is an "Inquiring Reporter" type of program, conducted in front of the theatre every Sunday afternoon, with free tickets awarded to those interviewed.

The results, as stated in this article, were obtained from a hundred watt station, and there are two such stations in Springfield, both competing to the same audience.

It can readily be seen that radio, to us, has proven a great business builder, on a comparative low cost.

Some months back we had occasion to warn producers against too close cooperation with sponsors of national radio hours which could result only in selling listeners-in away from the boxoffice. At the same time we said there was a definite place for broadcasting that publicised individual dates and "this was indicated by the many campaigns put over by Round Tablers in which radio plays no unimportant part."

The well-written and interesting article on this page from ad man Dave Jones tells us what is being done at the Kerasotes Theatres with the radio as an extra advertising medium.

Saunders Creates Giant Animations

Theatremen up around Bridgeport say that the lobby of Loew's Poli is large enough to drill a company of the national guard, which no doubt accounts for the giant displays developed by Manager Matt Saunders. To right is illustrated an instance of this showman's recent efforts, an animated and illuminated advance for "Modern Times."

Display is approximately 12 feet long, eight wide and 14 high. Base is indented about two feet, covered by colored corrugated rolls of window dressing material and lighted from inside. Middle section with lettering is two feet high, cutout letters faced with metallic fastened to background of dark blue velour.

Upper or turret section sets on floor covered with black canton flannel, with strip light on all sides. Floor has a depth of eight inches. Lights reflect vari-colored rays upon revolving turret top and flashers are attached to transparencies on either end.

Animation in the turret top is supplied by slow speed turn-tables moving the outer section in one direction and the center section in the other. Center section is a two-foot circular drum mounted on two smaller circles acting as axles and resting upon turn-table. Circular opening is cut in the bottom of the larger circle.

Stills and cutouts are spotted on display with extra illumination supplied from ceiling fixtures above and from colored spots. Saunders has used this display idea on different pictures and says it is easy to arrange. Preparations may be altered to meet size of smaller lobby.

Various Stunts Highlight Grove's "Opera" Campaign

Special trailer copy was used for "Night at the Opera" by H. D. Grove, Fort Theatre, Rock Island, Ill., instructing patrons to look under seats for possible passes to see the picture. Each morning 10 passes were thumb-tacked under seats in various parts of house. Immediately after trailer was run lights were brought up for a minute while patrons hunted.

Small glass case containing assorted nuts was planted in lobby with gag copy, tickets awarded those coming closest to guessing correct number in case. Store plugged a Marx Bros. Nut Sundae and to clerk selling greatest number of them a pass was given. Securing permission from mayor, Grove projected the Marxian trailer on downtown building, which was tremendously successful. For his advance teaser ads, cuts of various Hollywood stars together with their comments on the picture were used.

Fox Guest Tickets Distributed by Wire

Tiein with local electrical equipment dealers made by Fred Schader, ad chief at Dave Idzal's Fox, Detroit, made possible wired invitation to 350 specially selected residents to attend "If You Could Only Cook", each wire good for one admission all paid for by merchant. Wires with Hollywood imprint, were signed by Leo Carillo.

Dealers and salesmen boosted the date which also was mentioned on dealers' regular radio program. Local cooking school was called by title of picture and many windows planted in retail stores handling the brands advertised. Ed Rosenbaum, Columbia exploiteer, worked with Schader on the campaign.

Courtesy Week Planted By Rubin for "Thanks"

To usher in "Thanks a Million" at the Tivoli, Michigan City, Ind., Harry Rubin inaugurated a "Courtesy Week" with newspapers cooperating. Courtesy banners were posted on store windows, thanks streamers on cash registers and leading paper gave a month's pass to most courteous clerk visited on certain day of reporter. Stories were carried in daily and all salespeople throughout town were "Thanks" conscious, the title being used by them at conclusion of each sale made.

Through courtesy of fire chief, window cards with copy "please do not park here—thanks a million" were planted on all fire plugs. Harry further announced an amateur night to be held at theatre with prizes and tickets to see picture awarded winner and runners-up. Classified ad contest was landed and for lobby display cutout girls were used each carrying one letter of title, this spread across entire lobby.

Now You Can Be Sure You Won't Bore Them!

BOREDOM is the worst enemy of the Box-office. Even your best friends will stay away in crowds when you become tiresome. The first principle of showmanship ought to be to avoid putting the customers to sleep. To keep them awake, eager, and coming back for more, get variety, sparkle, laughs, thrills into your program. And here's how.

B's Worst Enemy . . . Laughter is the strongest antidote to boredom. Nothing chases the glooms faster than a BUSTER KEATON Comedy. And Buster never did a better job than in "GRAND SLAM OPERA." Film Daily says it's "The best comedy Buster Keaton ever delivered."

Giving 'em the Air . . . There's a breeziness added to your program that gives the air to monotony whenever JOE COOK goes on your screen. Hilarity is hitting on high in "GIV 'IM AIR," with a laugh for every man, woman and child who ever turned on a loudspeaker.

Melody with Their Mirth . . . For songs and the spirit of youth, look to Educational's Musical Comedies, such as "THANKS, MR. CUPID," with NIELA GOODELLE, FRED LIGHTNER and NELL KELLY, and the Young Romances, such as "BEWARE OF BLONDES," with MARLYN STUART, ACKLAND POWELL.

New Star Names . . . Educational's star line-up, already the biggest in short subject history, keeps bringing you new big ones. Now it's BERT LAHR. Watch for his first one, "GOLD BRICKS." He's struck it rich in laughs. And another one to watch for is TIM and IRENE in a real button-buster, "JUST PLAIN FOLKS."

Human Interest . . . There's not a heart in your audience so hard that it can't be touched with "THE SEEING EYE." This "very human document" (Film Daily) will, according to Box-Office, "stimulate the emotional instinct of the most hardened movie audience" and bring the exhibitor "the gratitude of his community for showing it."

Sports Thrills . . . Imagine anyone sleeping through a hand-to-fin battle with a fighting swordfish! They've just got to sit up and thrill when you play "FISHERMAN'S LUCK," and "THE GAME OF JAI ALAI" shows all the terrific speed of the world's fastest game. Two more gems from The Treasure Chest.

Cartoonics . . . For good old, down-to-earth fun for the whole family, depend on Paul Terry-Toons. "THE 19th HOLE CLUB" is better than a highball after a hard game. And "HOMETOWN OLYMPICS" is a timely subject with a special appeal while the big games are on. Check two more winners for Frank Moser and Paul Terry.

Color . . . Get a touch of beauty on your screen that will waken admiration. "MANHATTAN TAPESTRY" catches the beauties of Bagdad on the Subway in all their natural colors. "THE LEGEND OF THE LEI" is colorful Hawaii at its best. They're Treasure Chest Productions.

LEFT-WINGING

TO the February issue of The Rotarian Mr. Ned E. Depinet of RKO contributes a sterling defensive, even if slightly euphemistic, discussion of "the position of the film producer," doing well and fairly by our industry.

However, Mr. Depinet says: " . . . As a matter of fact we are constantly under heavy fire from our left wing intellectual critics, not because we are monsters of iniquity, but because we are almost blatantly good. . . . "

They are indeed not "our" left wing critics, since the gentry under consideration approach entirely from the outside, with their ardent left-winging largely concerned with efforts to establish their own intellectuality, erudition and sophistication. These persons are few in number, slight in their influence upon the vast audience. It just chances that because their vociferations are heard mainly in the region of Times Square Mr. Depinet is especially aware of them.

The existence of these left-wingers, in both motion picture and literary criticism, in the columns of the metropolitan papers merely indicates how carelessly many of the affairs of even great papers, notable for their general conservatism, are administered. Motion picture and book reviewers are permitted extravagances of rabid radicalism, the advocacy of revolution and the like in terms that would put a responsible writer or editor in other departments immediately on the publisher's carpet, and would cause an instant reorganization of staff. Can you fancy for a moment the general news, editorial, or financial pages of the New York Times or Tribune putting forth the propagandistic opinions to be found variously in their dramatic and literary sections? You can not.

The left-wingers in the field of motion picture criticism do not really matter. Once in a while they get a gleam of the fact that their best efforts at radicalism of thought betray them as intensely unsophisticated. Like most professional radicals they are continually discovering and proclaiming as important concepts outmoded and found irrelevant by observers immune to the current infections.

The screen's left-wing critics are merely a few lads trying to be more important than their jobs.

THE READY RAVERS

SINCE Motion Picture Herald's reviews of motion pictures are written exclusively for the information of the showmen who play the product they are much less frequently quoted than those of some contemporaries. That makes our annoyance at the current advertising cliche about "rave reviews" impersonal. Meanwhile how much conviction of judgment is conveyed by raving. Some people rave very easily. Examination of the records reveals that the same people do all the best raving all the time. That is why when Motion Picture Herald and Box Office Check-Up seek to report ratings on stars and pictures they go to the showman and his box office.

IN New York anyway, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" is doing rather better with the customers than with the critics, who mostly damned it with faint praise. The picture played to over 18,000 persons its opening day at the Paramount, which was about a thousand above the theatre's record for an opening, and on Saturday—which was Washington's Birthday—it broke all attendance records for the house with an attendance of 22,000, also about a thousand above the prior record.

MR. WILTON A. BARRETT, of the National Board of Review, speaking before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, is quoted by Motion Picture Daily as saying: "Neither the Legion of Decency nor any other groups with an axe to grind have improved films one bit."

Cracks about axes should not be made by boys with old hatchets.

CONSIDERING the uplift drive for intellectuality in motion pictures, charges of underestimating the intelligence of the public, and the like, may one inquire what is indicated by the fact that the world's number one box office star is an infant and that the world's most sweeping sound sensation is "The Music Goes 'Round." Buyers are bosses.

IT took optimism to plant the tomato seed this Washington's Birthday, as required by tradition. The mallards have found open water in our Silvermine brook, and husky voiced crows are caucusing on spring plans.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

48 Bills

Along 13 different fronts the motion picture industry, chiefly the exhibition branch, has been legislatively involved since January 1, with 48 bills so far marked up in the state capitals. A number are taxation measures.

Dividing its attention this week, the industry was concerned also about Washington, where copyright and block booking measures were being aired in committee. Of 14 bills pending in Congress, six would ban block and blind booking practices.

A round dozen of local laws, too, were passed since the turn of the year. The story of the beleaguered industry, listing the enactments by states, starts on page 13.

Renewed Attack

The United States Government this week suddenly renewed its prosecution of distributors — principally Warner Bros., Paramount and RKO—for alleged conspiracy in the Fanchon and Marco matter in St. Louis, which case it abandoned 27 days ago in order to enlarge the list of defendants and broaden the scope of the complaint.

Attorney General Homer Cummings filed a new action in New York, naming 10 corporations and 30 individuals for allegedly restraining trade by refusing to deliver product to independent St. Louis theatres of Fanchon and Marco.

The case itself, and its significance, are reported on page 15; the complete text of the Government's petition starts on page 49.

Fox Fined

William Fox late last week was fined $235,082 in connection with a punishment order for contempt of court signed by Federal Judge William Bondy in New York. The court further directed that the former film executive be taken into custody by the United States marshall and be held until the fine was paid. Judge Bondy also assessed Mr. Fox $10,000 court costs which he directed should be paid by February 28 to Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine and Wood, attorneys for the Capital Company, plaintiff in a judgment action against Mr. Fox out of which the contempt citation arose.

Hirsch, Newman, Reass and Becker, Mr. Fox's attorneys, obtained an immediate stay of Judge Bondy's order pending an appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals. A hearing of the appeal probably can not be had before late in March.

The $235,082 fine would be paid to the Capital Company in satisfaction of the unpaid balance of what was originally a $285,000 judgment obtained by it against Mr. Fox for the latter's alleged liability on a defaulted lease on the Fox Theatre, San Francisco. Samuel B. Stewart, of Capital's counsel, sought to examine Mr. Fox last fall on his asserted inabiity to satisfy the judgment and when Mr. Fox failed to answer a subpoena for this examination he was cited for contempt. The former film executive was reported receiving medical attention in Toronto at the time and was offered an opportunity of purging himself of the contempt charge by submitting to the examination there. When he failed to do so the order fixing his punishment was signed by the court.

Under Judge Bondy's order Mr. Fox was to be held in custody either until the fine and court costs were paid or until Fox paid the court costs alone and submitted to the original order for examination concerning his resources. Mr. Stewart stated last week that he wanted to query Mr. Fox concerning the disposition that had been made of $15,000,000 allegedly received by Mr. Fox in 1930 for his Fox Film holdings.

Daniel Rosenblatt, of counsel to Mr. Fox, said that the latter is now under the care of a physician at Atlantic City and too ill to testify. He stated that Mr. Fox contends that the Capital judgment has been more than paid in full.

Stormy

Stormy sessions of the House patents committee on copyright legislation, which opened Tuesday in Washington, brought out the definite indication that exhibitors may abandon hope for relief in music taxes at this session of Congress.

Month-long hearings, the necessity for House and Senate agreement and other delays will prevent enactment of any legislation before Congress adjourns in April, observers said.

Gene Buck, president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, as the first witness, charged the existence of a conspiracy among the Society's "enemies," and attacked motion picture interests. See page 24.

Protests

United States army and navy department commanders in Washington stand to have the peace of their thickly-carpeted offices disturbed by a roar of protest from some 5,000,000 members of the American Federation of Labor against the use of Army and Navy forces in pictures without cost to producers and at the expense of lost employment to Hollywood actors and technicians.

Representative Connery in the House of Representatives warns Hollywood that action will be taken, legislatively, against them, if they do not cease and desist from the practice and use regular studio workers instead of the Government forces.

See page 62.

WPA Labor Peace

Labor difficulties which threatened the future of the WPA Federal Theatre program were composed this week with an agreement entered into with the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees, which brought the WPA wage more nearly up to the stage hands' scale paid by commercial theatres, including film houses. A statement said more than 9,000 WPA employees in some 20 states perform before 350,000 persons nightly. See page 67.

Decentralizing

Predicting eventual decentralization of the production branch of the industry, Samuel Goldwyn this week declared in that method lies the answer to the cry for better pictures and, hence, the solution to the double bill problem. What the United Artists producer has to say on the subject is related on page 65.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Earnings

Last year, RCA earned $5,126,873, Atlas Corporation netted $1,149,052, and Universal Pictures lost $677,185.

RCA, reporting to stockholders, disclosed the sale price of its 50 per cent RKO interest at $5,000,000, giving Atlas-Lehman, the buyers, an option for the remainder at $6,000,000.

Atlas Corporation's net income was partially from the sale of large holdings in Warners and Paramount, effected while it concentrated on RKO purchases.

The financial structure of the three corporations in its relation to earnings is explained on pages 63 and 64.

For the Theatre

Exhibitors and their projectionists shortly will receive the benefit of studied technical improvements from Hollywood's studios, a group of technicians and engineers having decided that a method should be devised for passing on to exhibition the results of technical experiments that will raise the standards of theatre operations in the projection booth.

This is the first general move to effect studio-theatre technical coordination, described on page 66.

Answers Suit

An answer to the action grought by Rubin Frels, former exhibitor of Victoria, Texas, under the Sherman anti-trust act charging conspiracy and asking triple damages amounting to $504,024, has been filed in the federal court at Dallas by the Jefferson Amusement Company. Trial is expected to come up in May. East Texas Theatres, Inc., and a number of major companies were named with Jefferson in the Frels action.

In its answer Jefferson denies all the allegations in the plaintiff's petition. It declares that in January, 1931, Jefferson concluded that Victoria presented a good opportunity for a theatre location, and at the time did not know Frels. The house was opened in April, 1931, Frels at the time operating the Victoria and the Uptown. Since Frels had licensed practically all of the product for the 1930-31 season, Jefferson had available only 41 films, being required to take 43 films from prior seasons.

Reviewing in detail the licensing situation for the seasons 1930-31 to 1934-35 inclusive, Jefferson sets forth that it licensed 970 first run pictures of the major companies and Frels licensed 865 films, but points out that if Frels had licensed films from several of the major companies during those seasons which had been offered to him, and which he refused, Frels would have licensed during the five-year period a total of 1,072 pictures from the majors.

For the same period, according to the defendant's answer, taking into consideration the product of all distributors, Frels licensed a total of 1,396 pictures, and Jefferson a total of 1,131. During the period, it is claimed, Frels refused to license a total from all companies of 291 pictures, of which 207 were the product of major companies. If he had licensed all the product available to him, the answer declares, Frels would have had a total of 1,687 pictures.

The defense contends in its answer that these figures prove Frels licensed more pictures than he played and was offered more than he licensed, both first and subsequent run, answering the plaintiff's charge that he could not obtain sufficient product. It is claimed that during the five-year period Frels licensed a greater percentage of the major companies' product than did Jefferson.

The answer declares also that in May, 1934, Jefferson opened the Rita, a second Victoria house, because oil fields were opened and the city's population had substantially increased, and that the action was taken entirely independently of any other of the defendants in the suit.

Adding Houses

Addition of theatres on the west coast to augment the Warner Theatres circuit is reported as explaining the departure from New York on Friday, last week, of Joseph Bernhard, general manager, and Gradwell I. Sears, southern and western sales manager of Warner. They will survey the coast situation with respect to filling in circuit breaks and strengthening key positions.

The circuit's 450 theatres are in 23 states, the greatest concentration being in Pennsylvania, where nearly a third of the houses are located. Recent reports indicate the coast holdings divided as follows: Washington 1, Oregon 2, California 12. Of the California theatres, Los Angeles has 3, Santa Barbara 3, Beverley Hills, Hollywood, San Bernardino, Fresno, Huntington Park and San Pedro 1 each.

Business Cheer

"Trail of the Lonesome Pine" at the Paramount on Broadway and "Follow the Fleet" at the Music Hall are turning in excellent box-office reports, "Lonesome Pine" aiming at a $50,000 total and "Follow the Fleet" indicating a week's return of $110,000. "Road Gang" opened to capacity business at the Strand Saturday, while the Rivoli, with "Modern Times," continued at a steady pace and was expected to end the third week with $50,000 or better.

Politics and Laws

Declaring it sees in block booking measures pending in Congress "grave danger of political censorship," the Legion of Decency on Wednesday threw its weight against the legislation.

A formal statement issued by the administrative board of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, following its midyear meeting in Washington, declared that the moral side of block booking was its concern.

Commending the producers for their cooperation in elevating the moral tone of the screen, the statement said:

"The Legion of Decency sees in legislative measures not a means of securing a wholesome screen but rather a grave danger of political censorship. One law may lead to another. The result in all probability would give us a bureaucracy or final court of morals for motion pictures."

"The Legion of Decency," the statement continued "regards public opinion as a much safer guide than would be any regulations made by political appointees in a federal agency. Since there has been a marked improvement in the moral tone of pictures effected through public opinion it seems reasonable to let the good work go on."

Favor Canceling

Members of the Independent Theatre Owners of America in New York at their last meeting endorsed Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new plan to cancel 10 features of this season's group in line with the distributor's effort to eliminate seasonal hangovers. While no resolution was mentioned, the majority of the exhibitors present approved the action.

John Benas, a member of the association's buying committee, told the members MGM was entitled to the concessions as the distributor from time to time has granted adjustments where complaints were justified.

Hearst vs. Mae West

The William Randolph Hearst newspapers editorially lambasted Mae West's new picture this week and followed through with a refusal to accept advertisements for the key city showings now in progress.

"Mae West's 'Klondike Annie' is a disgrace to everyone connected with it," editorialized the Hearst papers, adding: "Paramount and Will Hays' office should be ashamed to allow it to be shown to the public."

The Paul Block newspapers in the East acted similarly. They often do.

This Week in Pictures

ON WAY TO ISLAND VACATION. Gary Cooper, accompanied by Mrs. Cooper, arriving in New York en route to Bermuda for a holiday. The vacation follows completion of his role opposite Marlene Dietrich in Paramount's "Desire." (Police note: The copper has merely appointed himself a guard of honor.)

VIEWING FORTHCOMING PRODUCT. The Rev. Father Gerard B. Donnelly, S.J., with David O. Selznick, head of Selznick International Pictures and producer of MGM's "David Copperfield," which is considered for the Academy award. Father Donnelly is an unofficial representative of the Legion of Decency.

48 BILLS AFFECTING FILMS LAUNCHED IN 13 STATES

Taxation Is Chief Issue in Special Sessions; Six of Fourteen National Measures Concern Block Booking and Regulation

Under severe attack in both branches of Congress, the motion picture business since the first of the year also has been concerned with a mounting volume of bills in the 13 legislative sessions, five of which were extraordinary, called primarily for relief revenue purposes. State measures introduced involving the industry so far number 48, and there are prospects of more.

Dividing its attention between the state and national capitals this week, the industry's eyes were turned to the committee hearings on copyright legislation which started Tuesday and the hearings on the Neely bill to outlaw block and blind booking scheduled for Thursday. Recently the spotlight was turned on Washington hearings on restricting importation of alien actors.

Of 14 bills in Congress directly affecting the industry, six would ban booking practices, threatening regulation and control.

Probabilities of an increase in the federal admission tax are being discounted in Washington, chiefly because this is an election year.

Motion picture exhibitors were affected by legislation introduced in eight of the 13 states which convened in January. There has been a veritable avalanche of bills in Massachusetts, this state accounting for half of the aggregate 48. New York contributed 10 state measures.

It appears probable that state needs will compel special sessions elsewhere, and they are contemplated or discussed in Wisconsin, Texas, Michigan, Maryland, California, Florida, Arkansas and Pennsylvania, among others.

In addition, some dozen local ordinances of varying import were enacted since January 1. The state and local legislative situation since the turn of the year follows by states:

ALABAMA

(Special Session)

Governor Bibb Graves convened the legislature February 11 to provide revenue, and exhibitors are fighting a measure for a 10 per cent levy on "luxuries" and a three per cent sales tax, both to apply to theatre admissions. Administration measures, they were introduced by Representative Clint Harrison.

In the last session a proposal to tax theatre admissions was stricken.

CALIFORNIA

While no session of the California legislature will he held in 1936, unless Governor Frank F. Merriman calls a special session, there is a serious threat of new taxation and efforts are being made to untangle the state's relief problem.

The Governor has been giving serious consideration to methods of raising funds to meet the state's deficit of $60,000,000 and was lining up support for a gross transactions tax, which is supported by the Motion Picture Producers Association.

The proposal favored by the Governor called for a tax of one per cent on all transactions, and while supported by the organized industry, has caused considerable commotion in motion picture circles. It would mean that a film producer would pay one per cent on the purchase of every script, and would involve every purchase, from studio supplies and projection equipment to transportation and grease paint for actors. It would end only with the wearing out of the film and payment of the last tax on a theatre admission.

Motion picture accountants estimate the levy would necessitate increasing admission prices at least 10 per cent.

The Governor's tax conference this month opposed repeal of the sales tax and all except film industry representatives favored retention of the income tax, both of which are to be voted on in November. The producers' association proposed a gross transaction impost be substituted for these levies, should they be repealed.

DELAWARE

The only known proposal advanced in this state since January 1 was for new building regulations in Wilmington. Some of the independent exhibitors claimed the measure would "drive them out of business."

The new code would affect new theatres and rebuilding or remodeling. Drastic features are that seats shall be not less than 20 inches wide and every aisle shall lead to an exit door or to a cross aisle. The proposal includes other fire prevention measures.

No legislative session is scheduled this year.

In Miami, the city commission had under consideration a proposal by Commissioner E. G. Sewell to tax adult admissions. If such a tax were applied to only tickets costing 42 cents or more, the city could make collections on the basis of reports made in connection with the federal amusement tax, it was suggested.

ILLINOIS

(Special Session)

There is advocacy for increased state taxation to meet relief needs.

In Chicago, revision of the local fire ordinances is planned to conform to adoption of the 2,000-foot reel.

KENTUCKY

(Regular Session)

Senate Bill 272, by Senator Franklin Rives, would permit incorporated cities to decide for themselves whether opera, motion picture shows

Administration leaders insist they plan no new taxes against the industry when the legislature meets in May. Among expected bills is one sponsored by labor unions for the licensing of motion picture projectionists by an examining board, one to curb cash giveaways and a proposal to prohibit dog racing.

MASSACHUSETTS

(Regular Session)

Amid a concentrated, many-sided assault, the motion picture industry has scored decisively in the 1936 legislative battle in the Bay State, defeating three bills that would have found a vulnerable target in film theatres.

Sponsored by the Reverend Dr. Robert Watson, of the Lord's Day League, the measures sought to prohibit theatrical entertainment before 7 P.M. Sunday, to ban Sunday vaudeville, and to deprive theatres of their license if they permitted obscenity or profanity. This probably would have led to strict censorship. The bills were killed by the House committee on legal affairs, under the watchful eyes of exhibitor and industry representatives.

Bills are pending to legalize chance games and to ban them. One measure to prohibit "Beano" and like games had been reported for passage by the House legal affairs committee, but this week the House recommitted it to permit "Beano" at churches and charitable affairs. Amendment to limit prizes to $100 was proposed.

Other bills, favorable and unfavorable, would: prohibit higher admission scales on Sundays and holidays; regulate "scalpers" or resale of theatre tickets; ban dance marathons and the like; revise the Boston building code; regulate public dancing, including that in conjunction with theatres; permit stage dancing on Sunday; apply certain Sunday "blue laws" to holiday shows; ban shows of "low moral standard or containing subversive propaganda"; regulate or bar horse and dog racing; extend the scope of one day's rest in seven for employees; place licensed engineers in charge of refrigerating systems; require licensed firemen, oilers, steamfitters and the like.

Tax bills probably are foreshadowed in Governor James M. Curley's budget of $69,162,710, the largest in the codfish state's history.

Exhibitors rejoiced over the defeat of legalized Sunday bowling. Other bills would require display of the Stars and Stripes in theatres; create a commission to probe the New England Watch and Ward Society, self-appointed censors; establish state lotteries; enact "further legislation relative to protection against fires in theatres"; bar billboards from residential districts.

An upshot of recent stage censor troubles, there is a bill to prevent the Boston censor board from banning any entertainment without a full hearing. Children under 16 years would be barred from theatres unless accompanied by a person over 21 years, in a bill amending the ancient law in which the age is 14.

Passage of a pending bill directing investigation of real estate bond reorganizations was urged by Peter N. Borre, New England counsel for the Sabath Congressional committee, studying bond reorganizations nationally.

EXHIBITORS PAY 14 KINDS OF TAX

Big fellow or little fellow—your taxes are mounting.

Fourteen different varieties of tax are paid by exhibitors, computes the board of directors of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware. The board has instructed members to guard against the prospect of lower exemptions for federal admission taxes and to contact their representatives in Washington.

Frank W. Lovejoy, president of Eastman Kodak Company, declared that the company's taxes in 1936 will amount to more than $600,000 over 1935, and "for several years more our taxes will steadily increase even under existing laws."

MINNESOTA

(Special Session)

Legislature adjourned January 28 without enacting any measures directly affecting the industry.

MISSISSIPPI

(Regular Session)

A bill is pending to repeal the state 10 per cent amusement tax, introduced by Representative Homer Williams. Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and the Theatre Owners of Mississippi urged the move at a hearing. Governor White has pledged tax repeal; in that event theatres still would be subject to the two per cent general sales tax.

A censorship bill may be introduced.

MISSOURI

Battle lines already are forming for the session in January, 1937. Elimination of the one per cent sales tax, assessed on theatre tickets, and passage of a chain store tax are two of the planks in the gubernatorial campaign of William Hirth, farm leader. There is much sentiment, too, for a two per cent sales tax.

In St. Louis, the local projectionists' union is sponsoring an aldermanic measure for two men in a booth.

NEW JERSEY

(Regular Session)

Senator Horace G. Prall on Tuesday introduced a film censorship measure. Wide powers would be given a state board consisting of two men and a woman appointed by the governor. A fee of $2 would be charged for examination of each 1,200 feet of film, on all prints released in the state.

The pressing relief situation will prevent Governor Hoffman and the legislature from devoting much attention to other measures.

A bill is to be introduced calling for a referendum to legalize dog racing.

NEW YORK

(Regular Session)

Three bills amending the present law regulating the admittance of minors to theatres, and others providing for a six-day week for projectionists, theatre engineers and firemen, and prohibiting racial offenses on the screen are among the grist in the New York legislature.

A New York City circuit exhibitors' committee observing developments at Albany is studying the bills relating to minors with a view to possible compromise on one, as none of those introduced wholly meets with the industry's approval. Two others on the same subject are scheduled to be submitted.

All factions concerned recognize that the present statute barring children under 16 years from motion picture theatres unless accompanied by a parent or "authorized" guardian is impracticable and almost impossible of enforcement.

Senator Lazarus Joseph of the Bronx has brought in a bill permitting cities to license theatres where children between 10 and 15 years may be admitted to segregated sections under supervision of a matron or other conditions imposed by local law.

Assemblyman William T. Andrews would admit children under 16 during non-school hours to approved theatres and in segregated sections. Theatres would be required to employ a matron for each 200 children, and only films approved for children would be shown. A bill by Assemblyman Breitbart provides for special censorship of films intended for children under 16.

Buffalo exhibitors have petitioned Erie County representatives to press for defeat of the Andrews measure, declaring it would increase the burden on exhibitors.

One day of rest in seven for projectionists is asked in a pending measure, and another, by Senator N. A. O'Brien, would assure a six-day week for engineers and firemen employed in theatres. This is in the form of an amendment to the labor law and has been referred to the committee on labor and industry. The senate also has a bill requiring projectionists to come under the civil service.

Screen showings and publicity pertaining thereto offensive to any race or creed would be banned in a bill submitted by Assemblyman Breitbart. Two proposals would create a state commission to cooperate with the promotion of the projected world's fair in New York in 1939 and authorize a bond issue of $5,100,000 by the city of New York for the purpose.

In New York City attention is focused on the bitterly fought battle to restrain the city from collecting the two per cent sales tax from distributors on film rentals and to prevent the distributors from passing it to the exhibitors. Enacted some 15 months ago as a revenue measure for relief, the levy has not been demanded from the industry until recently. An action by the ITOA is scheduled for hearing March 6 in the appellate division of the state supreme court, and another by United Artists probably will be heard late in March. Exhibitors in New Jersey served from New York are assessed the tax, and Allied Theatres of New Jersey also plans court action.

Adoption by New York exchanges of the 2,000-foot standard reel, slated for adoption nationally August 1, hinges on amendments to

U.S. SUDDENLY RENEWS ATTACK ON DISTRIBUTORS

Ten Companies and 30 Individuals Named in New Anti-Trust Action Growing Out of the St. Louis "Conspiracy"

Doubts that may have existed in industry minds over the United States Government's continuation of distributor prosecutions for alleged conspiracy restraining trade in the St. Louis-Fanchon and Marco matter were dispelled with a jolt Tuesday when Attorney General Cummings filed new anti-trust charges in New York's federal courts against 30 individuals and 10 corporations, principally Warner Brothers Pictures, Paramount and RKO, named as representing total assets of $767,237,638 and 1,811 theatres.

Setting New York as the locale of the renewed prosecution—27 days after abandoning the old case in St. Louis courts—was as unexpected a move as the filing of the complaint itself. Evidently the Government moved its prosecution nearer the home offices to avoid the complaints of subpoenaed executives who protested being forced to stand by in St. Louis for long periods while their business affairs marked time far away in New York or Hollywood.

All the acts complained of in the original criminal indictment case, which was lost by the Government in a St. Louis jury trial, and in the subsequent equity action that was withdrawn last month, are mentioned in the new complaint, which, basically, accuses the defendants of conspiring to monopolize interstate commerce in motion pictures in a Sherman anti-trust law injunction suit. However, the new complaint is advanced by Government prosecutors as being "technically broader, based on more of the statutes involved." Too, the new suit names individual defendants, and besides complaining of conspiracy acts against Fanchon and Marco's Ambassador, Grand Central and the St. Louis theatres, also includes similar charges on behalf of the Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum theatres, all five theatres being in St. Louis.

Product Conspiracy Charged

The temporary and permanent injunctions sought are to restrain Warner, Paramount and RKO from allegedly withholding product, in an alleged conspiracy, from the thetres mentioned. An early trial will be urged by the Government.

The three distributor defendants are cited as controlling 46 per cent of all motion pictures produced in this country, Attorney General Homer S. Cummings signing the complaint, together with Russell Hardy and Walter L. Rice, his special assistants, who again will prosecute the case.

The St. Louis situation, which the Government seeks to relieve, is said to have developed to a point where not only has Fanchon and Marco been denied the right to buy films distributed by the defendant distributors, but houses controlled by Fanchon and Marco elsewhere have been denied product.

None of the individuals named as defendants in the new complaint was named in the original, and it was because the original complaint failed to name certain defendants necessary to the action that the Government suit was dismissed in January without prejudice, on a motion made by the attorney general.

The corporations named include: Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc.; the Vitaphone Corporation, Vitagraph, Inc.; First National Pictures, Inc.; Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corporation, General Theatrical Enterprises, Inc.; Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc.; Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, Paramount Theatre Service Corporation and the RKO Distributing Corporation.

The 30 individual defendants named are: Harry M. Warner, Albert Warner, Herman Starr, Abel Cary Thomas, Gradwell Sears, Joseph Bernhard, Maurice Silver, Andrew W. Smith, Jr., Lester Krieger, Clayton Bond, Roy H. Haines, Nat H. Brower, Robert Hicks, Byron F. Moore, of Warners; Adolph Zukor, John E. Otterson, Neil F. Agnew, Charles M. Reagan, Ralph LiBeau, Maurice Schweitzer, Carroll Peacock, Myke Lewis, of Paramount, and George J. Schaefer, Ralph Kohn and Samuel Dembow, Jr., formerly of Paramount; Ned E. Depinet, Jules Levy, Cresson E. Smith, Bernard J. McCarthy and Louis Ellman, of RKO.

Although action revolves around only from three to five theatres, the issue involves every theatre in the country, embracing as it does the distributors' bargaining practices in all their ramifications. The complaint petitions for relief from certain of these practices, asks that they be declared illegal by the federal courts and the defendants restrained from any further attempts in this manner to participate in the alleged monopolization of product, which, the Government contends, forces independent exhibitors out of business.

About 45 witnesses will be called by the Government.

Representing the Government in the new hearings, besides Mr. Hardy and Mr. Rice, will be Harold L. Schilz, William Benham, John S. Claggett, John Herberg and Grant Kelleher. Paramount will not bring on Samuel W. Fordyce or William R. Gentry from St. Louis. Louis Phillips of the Paramount home office legal staff will most likely handle the case for his company alone. Both Mr. Fordyce and Mr. Gentry represented Paramount in the criminal action last October and November, although Mr. Fordyce was ill during the civil case and was not on hand at any time.

Warner May Call Reed

Warner may call in former Senator James A. Reed, who with Frederick H. Wood, acted in both cases. Mr. Wood again will represent the company in the new hearings. Robert W. Perkins of the company's home office staff, who aided importantly in assisting Reed and Wood, is in Hollywood, and is expected back in time for the new hearing.

George S. Leisure of Donovan, Newton, Leisure and Lumbard, will probably represent RKO alone. It is doubtful that Jacob M. Lashly, St. Louis attorney, who worked on both cases, will be called to assist on the new action.

Temporary offices have been established by Government counsel in the new Federal Building, opposite the Municipal Building in New York. According to the Government men from Washington, permanent headquarters will be established in about a week or so in the same building to prepare for the hearings.

All Acts Complained of in the St. Louis Criminal and Civil Cases Are Brought Up in New and Unexpected Move

TEXT OF NEW U. S. SUIT ON PAGE 49

The complete text of the 24-page complaint filed by the United States Government against 10 corporations and 30 individuals in anti-trust conspiracy charges growing out of the St. Louis-Fanchon and Marco case, starts on page 49.

In the complaint, after describing the interrelation of the subsidiaries of the principal defendant corporations—Warner, Paramount and RKO—the Government listed the assets, capital and resources of the three groups as follows: Warner (as of August 25, 1934)—$168,342,026, with control of about 581 theatres; Paramount (as of December 31, 1933)—$405,604,978, with control of about 976 theatres; and RKO (as of December 31, 1933)—$193,290,633, with control of 254 theatres.

The defendants were described as being responsible for the production of 46 per cent of the motion pictures produced in this country beginning in 1932 and including those scheduled for production in 1936. To Warner was attributed 16 per cent., Paramount 17 per cent. and RKO 13 per cent. For comparison, the Government shows the following production by unrelated companies: Columbia 10 per cent., Fox 15 per cent., Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer 13 per cent., Universal 10 per cent. and United Artists 6 per cent.

NEWSREELS SET SPACE FOR LIVELY CAMPAIGN; REFUTE BIAS CHARGES

Estimated Footage to Be Shot Would Equal 66 Features, But Won't All Get on Screen; Must Divide Space Equally

The newsreel's camera head rears on the smoky horizon of the approaching campaign of the politicians for the presidency of the United States, a campaign that already shows tangibilities of outstripping in bitterness the Herbert Hoover-Al. Smith encounter on the stumps of this generation, and the Teddy Roosevelt-Taft setto of a quarter-century ago.

Charles Michelson, Democratic National Committee press agent, met last Sunday with newsreel representatives to plan the newsreel coverage of the Democratic convention in Philadelphia and the subsequent battle with the Republicans for votes.

John Ellwood, Republican National Committee press agent, then met on Monday with the newsreels to plan the coverage of the Republican convention in Cleveland and the subsequent battle with the Democrats for votes.

Both national conventions will be held in June and their adjournment with bands a-playing and full slates of candidates will be the signal for the newsreel cameras to start grinding on the scenes of the anticipated free-for-all. Until then the newsreels will busy themselves picturing the dog fights between various minority groups with the parties to obtain the nominations for their favorite sons.

Wild Charges Hurled

The newsreel this year more than ever before is "on the spot" in picturing the candidates and their platforms for the edification and enlightenment of the American public, in view of the violent attacks made against the newsreel in the past year as being "militaristic," "fascistic," "anti-militaristic" and "anti-fascistic," "pro-war" and "anti-war," "for labor" and "against labor," by all kinds and conditions of labor, radical, political and church groups. The publications of some of these groups, especially the "pink" elements, have been heaping calumny on the newsreels, perceiving in the reels a purpose of propaganda and unfairness which was not intended.

The newsreels, of course, take the position they are merely recording news events and are the newspapers of the screen, without any bias.

Industry opinion is that despite the fact that the newsreels will continue to adhere to their traditionally impartial policy, they may nevertheless be attacked as biased by those who have a political axe to grind. Early proof of this threatening situation came on Monday when the violently-New Deal New York Post, published by the Stern newspaper interests of Philadelphia and Camden, attacked both the newsreels and certain of the press for throwing "dirt" at the Roosevelt Administration.

Sees "Dirt Throwing"

This latest example of "political dirt throwing," boldly asserted the Post, came when Cardinal Mundelein, of Chicago, praised President Roosevelt when Notre Dame University gave the New Deal an honorary degree.

"Yet neither Colonel Bob McCormick's Chicago Tribune nor Colonel Frank Knox's Daily News published the Cardinal's statement and the newsreel companies were equally coy in cutting out the Cardinal's really remarkable indorsement of F. D. R. When responsible newspapers and film companies refuse to print spot news—it is news!" shouted the publishers of the Post.

In answer to the Post's charges, which were set forth on the editorial page, "founded in 1801 by Alexander Hamilton," and written by Jay Franklin, the newsreel managements in New York cited "the record" for evidence of impartiality in reporting speeches of sponsorship or anti-sponsorship of candidates.

BAR FILMS GLORIFYING CRIME, WAR, DIVORCE

Boycott of motion picture theatres where "crime, war and divorce are glorified" was voted by more than 500 delegates at the ninth annual conference of the Northern Baptist Conference at the Hanson Place Baptist church, Brooklyn, late last week.

Similar action, it was indicated, is to be taken at twelve additional conferences of the church throughout the country.

Vigorously denying that attempts are made at any time to control propaganda in behalf of or against political candidates, the newsreel managements agreed that while Cardinal Mundelein's remarks no doubt constituted material for a newspaper story, they did not make a newsreel picture.

The newsreel chiefs pointed out that while the constituents of the industry itself are fully aware of the dangers of picturing rank propaganda of such political nature, those on the outside are not.

Based on estimates already arrived at by Paramount Newsreel, the principal reels will expose enough film on at least nine of the most formidable political figures and candidates to equal the amount of film used in some 66 of its regular features produced in Hollywood. When it is realized that one out of every 3,000 ordinary aspirants for a screen career is lucky to get a screen test running even 50 feet, the enormity of some 500,000 feet divided among a dozen candidates may be appreciated.

No factotum for recognition at the polls will be allowed any "edge" whatsoever over a rival on American screens through the medium of the newsreel. To guard against even intimations of "favoritism," definite orders have been issued to the big camera crews assigned exclusively to the presidential battle that, "If a story is used presenting the candidate or speaker of one party for newsreel use, then similar footage must be given the opposition party." Too, if one party attacks another party the party attacked will be given equal footage for reply.

Looking over the "big guns" of all political parties from a strictly camera perspective,

Candidates Sized Up as Screen Types; Political Parties Show Cooperative Spirit; Dark Room for Both Convention Halls

which disregarded campaign slogans, platforms and electioneering potentialities, William Montague, one of Paramount Newsreel's editors, this week calculated for the Herald-Tribune News Service that right now four of the nine prominent persons in the presidential picture of 1936 would probably land contracts if they sought them in Hollywood. They are, in the opinion of Mr. Montague, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Alfred Emanuel Smith, Governor Eugene Talmadge and the Socialist, Norman Thomas. Each of these men is regarded by Mr. Montague, in the article which he wrote for the Herald-Tribune news service, as a "finished actor."

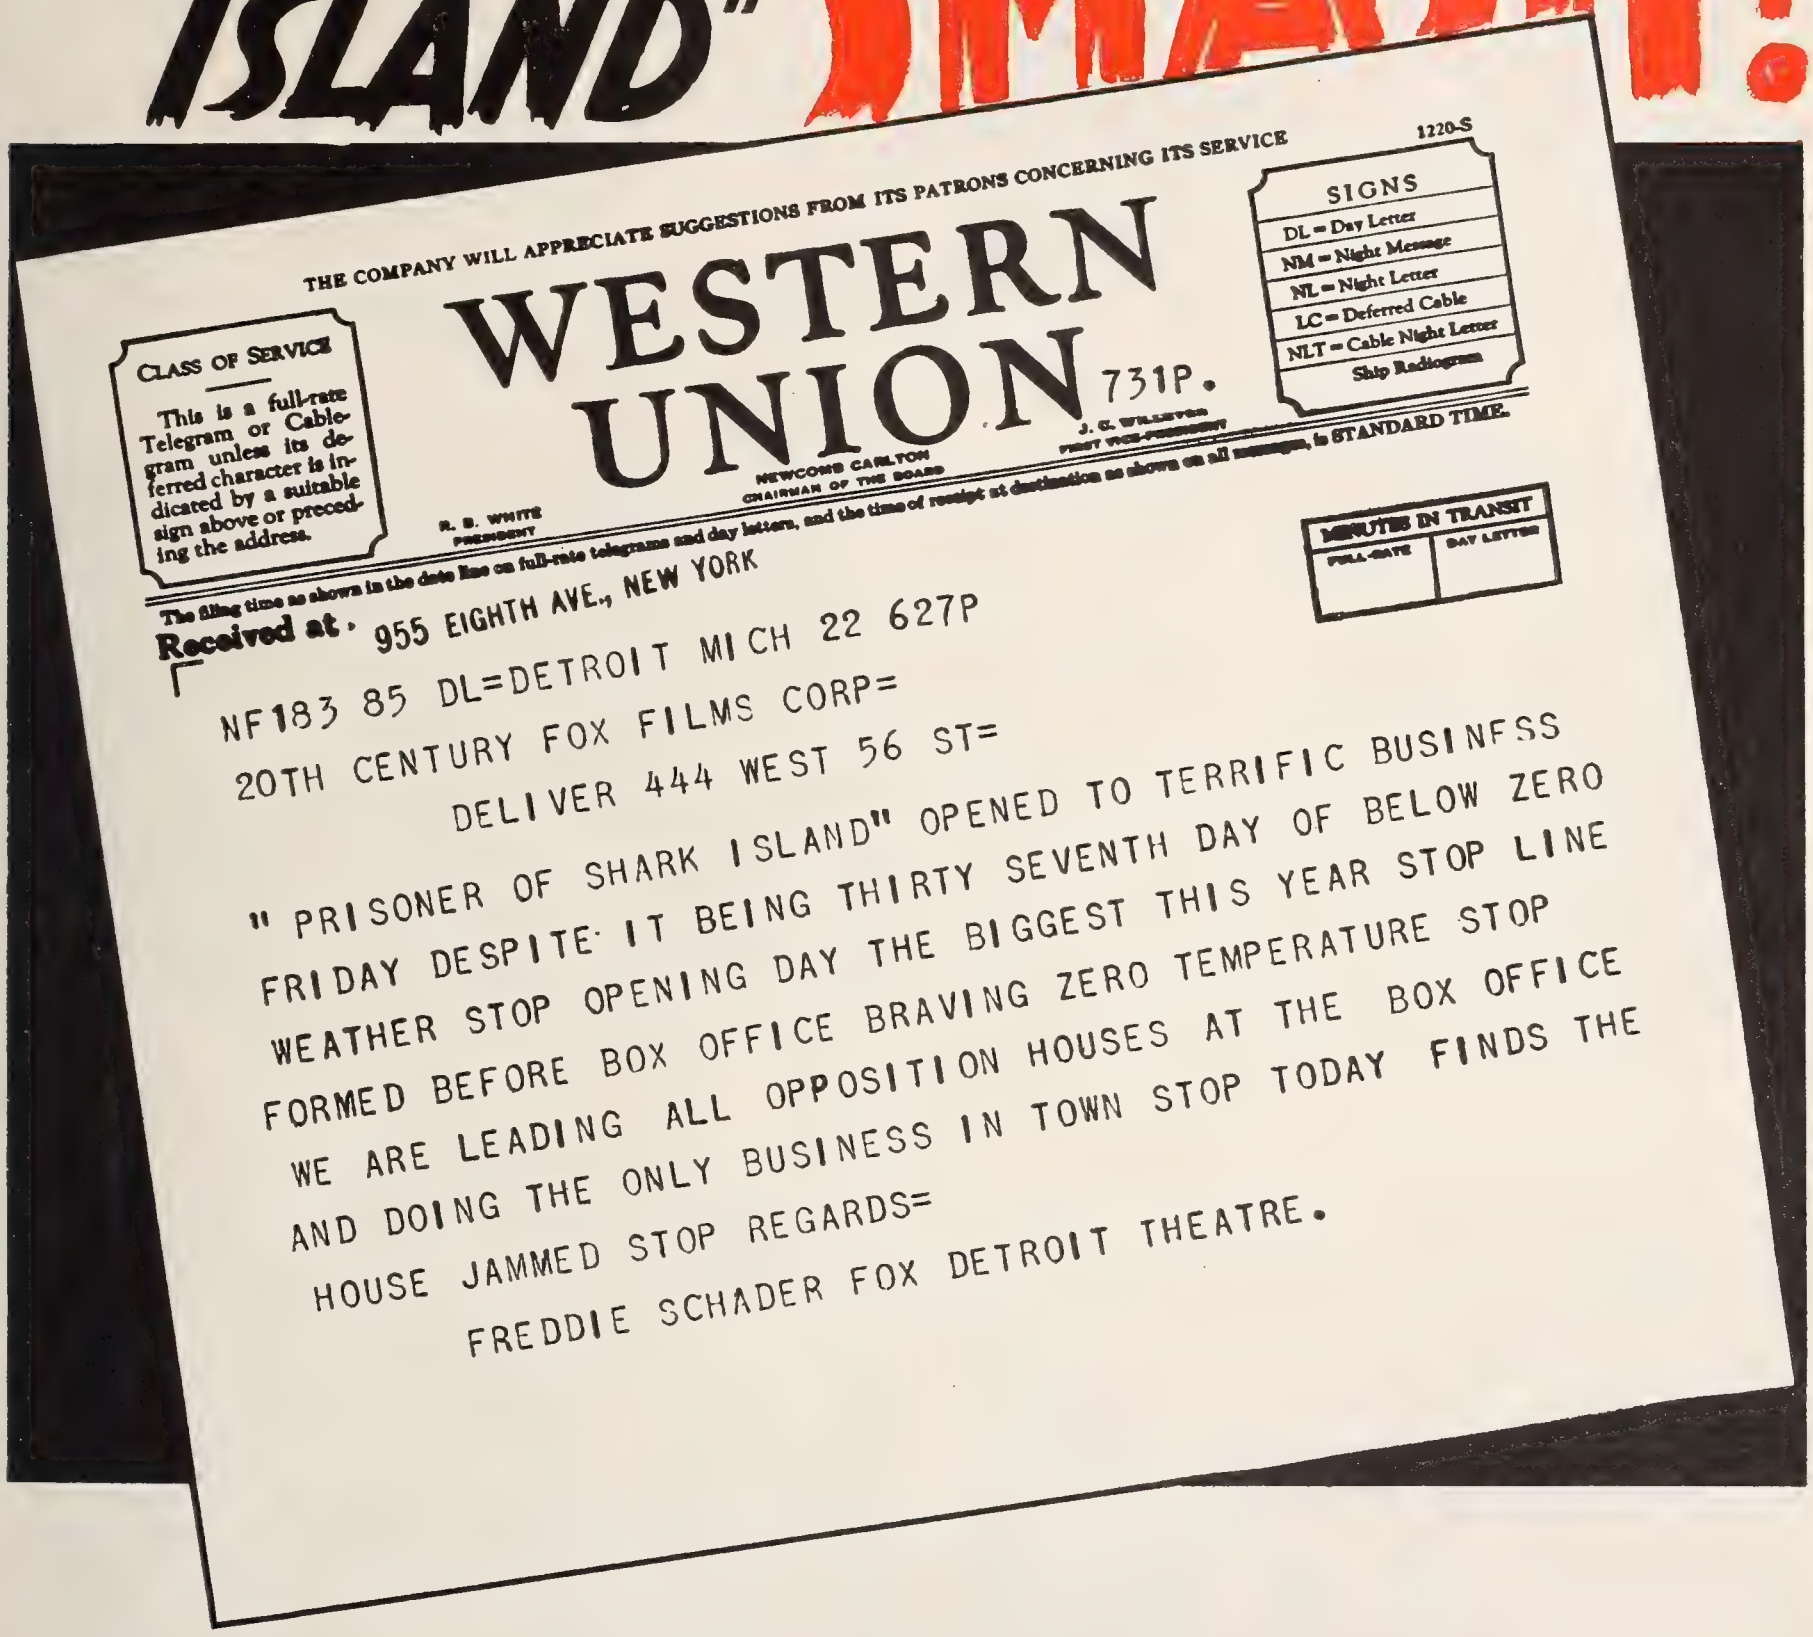
Senator Borah, as a newsreel actor, is rated by Mr. Montague as "a featured player." This means in newsreel language that the Senator is of the "grand old man" type reminiscent of the late William Jennings Bryan—and nothing more.

Next comes Senator Vandenberg. Mr. Montague sees him through the eye of the lens as "an old-fashioned Harding; a good businessman registering with picture audiences as 'solid.'"

The remaining three leading political figures are tabbed "amateurs" of various classes by Paramount's city editor. Of these, Herbert Hoover is regarded by him, camerawise, as making a real effort for a comeback and already overcoming many of the defects which marked his original debut before the newsreel lens. Some of the camera improvements Mr. Montague notes about Mr. Hoover: "He's now willing to pose. He's now affable toward cameramen. He's beginning to carry conviction on the screen."

Landon "Obliging"

Governor Landon's stage direction is cited as being poor, and he is very much in need of stage coaching. But, says Mr. Montague, he's very obliging to the newsreel photographers and eager to learn the technique of screen personality. Mr. Knox, on the other hand, right now is a little highbrow for the average theatre audience, although so strictly conservative as to make a decided impression with business executives—continuing the impressions of Mr. Montague.



The newsreel managements report that they will have an easier time covering the national conventions this June than in other years. The political parties, generally, are manifesting a spirit of cooperation which has not been equalled in other years.

Camera platforms, constructed of tube steel to insure safety and to avoid vibration, will be installed in convention auditoriums. These platforms, of course, will be situated in such positions as to afford cameras clear views of speakers and yet not to obstruct the vision of delegates.

In the basements of convention halls arrangements now call for special "studios" being constructed for each of the newsreels where editors can work, and where candidates, speakers and important visitors may be interviewed without the customary interruption and delay which has marked most of the conventions of the past.

Each of these convention-hall studios will also be equipped with a dark room for the developing and editing of film on the spot.

MINORITIES LOUDEST; RAMSAYE TELLS FORUM

Honest Censorship Movements Called Rather Awkward Expressions of Product Demand

"Most of those movements for censorship which are honest—not those of the political racketeers—are really expressions, rather awkward expressions of demand for product," Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, told the Philadelphia Motion Picture Forum, in session at the Bellevue-Stratford hotel in that city Monday. The Forum, headed by Mrs. Charles Trump Owens, is an organization of organizations, representing the heads of some eighteen reviewing groups working in social interest, in affiliation with the National Board of Review in New York.

Commonality Takes It

"It is to be observed," said Mr. Ramsaye, "that when we get what we want we do not concern ourselves so much about what the other fellow is getting. Now it so chances that the motion picture is so expensive that only the accumulated buying power of the masses, the great commonality can afford it, so it has to be made for them. The commonality, being what it is, is not very articulate. It just sits and takes it and says nothing.

"But we have various other social and intellectual strata which would also like to be served by the motion picture, despite the fact that they do not have the buying power to support a line of production. It also so happens that the minorities which make up these thinner upper strata are very articulate—the fewer the louder, in fact. They make a vast amount of noise, and sometimes their expressions are mistaken as the voice of the people, instead of just a few of the people.

"The tendency of these minorities is to strive by fair means or foul to have the motion picture industry made over to make movies for them. That is exceedingly unfair. The movies belong to the masses, and if people want to engage in intellectual pursuits and concerns they ought to be sporting enough to let the movies alone and do their playing and thinking in terms of the printed word.

"The yearning after motion picture treatments of their favorite themes and theses merely means that our intellectual minorities are as lazy as the masses which so love the automatic stimuli of the movies.

Exploding Shakespeare

"The pressures of the intelligentsia, the illuminati and the cognoscenti are a curse upon the screen. They are continually tempting the motion picture industry toward lofty attempts that are basic mistakes in trying to reach up beyond the masses for whom the screen is by destiny intended. The consequences are likely to be for a time expensive and troublesome. I do, however, enjoy the prospect that Mr. William Shakespeare, whom every one quotes and nobody reads, is very likely to be completely shown up and his traditional repute exploded by the simple process of showing what his stuff really was. Mr. Shakespeare today would be merely a good literary handy man in Hollywood, one of many. Time and the weak human desire to sanctify and glorify the past have made him great. If the screen makes him even slightly contemporary he is likely to be ruined. And the blame will be on our highbrows, and those whimsical folks who have thought to confer distinction on the screen by trying to wake the genius of one of the deadest men in history.

"Meanwhile the screen could do with much less attention from 'our better people.' Those who would do something for American life, the clubwomen especially, might well be concerned about seeing that a good apple pie could be had commonly, that the public taste in flowered chintzes is improved, that magenta flowers be kept apart from orange tints in the garden, that home life be made a life—there are infinities of things to be attended to if one must be engaged in tending to other people's business—besides the motion picture. The motion picture has been for years, and continues to be, all too convenient a springboard from which people may jump into newpaper publicity. It is not a major problem."

$111,355 Roxy Net For 29 Week Period

Operation of the Roxy for the 29-week period ended January 2 showed a profit of $111,355.50 before interest on funded indebtedness, arrears on taxes and depreciation, it was indicated in a report filed late last week with Federal Judge Francis G. Caffey in New York by Howard S. Cullman, trustee.

Approximately $309,000 in back taxes and penalties have been paid since June 14, 1934, the report added. All current taxes have been paid in full. Remaining back taxes and penalties to be paid total $45,143.12. A rise of 14 per cent in attendance for the 29-week term was also noted.

Mrs. Jeffrey Bernerd Dead in London

Mrs. Jeffrey Bernerd, wife of the general manager of distribution for Gaumont British in England, died in London late last week following an emergency operation for a kidney ailment.

Mr. Bernard, in New York to confer with company officials and to look over production in Hollywood later, will not be able to sail for at least three more weeks.

Warner had a turnout that taxed the capacity of the main ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria in New York at the seventh annual banquet and dance last Saturday night. More than 1,500 attended, it was estimated.

Independents Sue Distributors for Arbitrary Zoning

A petition was filed Tuesday in federal district court in Kansas City, Mo., by the firm of Ringolsky, Boatright and Jacobs, on behalf of a group of local independent exhibitors, asking for a temporary and permanent injunction to prevent large distributors and Fox Midwest Theatres from continuing the "arbitrary" zoning schedule set up by the circuit there last fall. The independents have been threatening for years to seek court action on zoning policies.

Plaintiffs are Emanuel Rolsky, operator of the St. John and National, and president of the Independent Theatre Owners; Edwin S. Young, Roanoke and Central; Charles Esterly, State and Prospect; Frank T. Mountjoy, Circle; H. F. Pautz and H. C. Rohde, Sun; Abe and Rosa Baier, Lindbergh; Saline Theatre Corporation (C. H. Potter), Baltis, Admiral, and Murray, and H. H. Barrett, Ritz.

Defendants are Fox Midwest Theatres Corporation, with its twelve Kansas City, Mo., theatres, and the following distributors: Paramount, Universal, Twentieth Century-Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Columbia, RKO, United Artists, and Vitagraph. Fox theatres involved are the Uptown, Plaza, Isis, Apollo, Warwick, Madrid, Rockhill, Waldo, Linwood, Benton, Gladstone and Vista.

The petition charges violation of the "restraint of trade" provisions of the Sherman anti-trust act, and asserts, in effect, that the zoning schedule removes subsequent-run-theatres operated by the plaintiffs from natural competition with Fox houses, which have choice of run in every zone.

In 1935, the petition avers, the defendants "unlawfully entered into and have ever since and are now engaged in a conspiracy, contract or combination in unreasonable restraint of trade . . . and of a monopoly, attempt to monopolize or combination or conspiracy to monopolize to an unreasonable extent a substantial part of the trade or commerce among the several states, having as its objects and purposes the following":

To exclude or restrain independent exhibitors from contracting for motion pictures to be exhibited in subsequent-run theatres in Kansas City, Mo., in competition with the subsequent-runs of Fox Midwest by grouping Fox theatres into a number of arbitrary zones based on the location of subsequent-runs operated by Fox, and by refusing to supply pictures to independents in such zones unless and until they have first been exhibited at one or more Fox Midwest subsequent runs;

To exclude or restrain independents from buying:

Until Fox Midwest has first choice as to the order in which motion pictures would be exhibited in the zones;

Unless independents would agree that pictures would not be exhibited at any other subsequent run theatres in these zones for a designated period of time after exhibition in Fox theatres;

To restrain and limit the right of distributor defendants to contract with independent or unaffiliated exhibitors;

To force independents to take such contracts as Fox Midwest and the distributors determined in advance would be allowed such independents, and to prevent them from bargaining in an open and competitive market for motion pictures.

DISSENSION IN HOUSE DASHES HOPE OF MUSIC TAX RELIEF THIS SEASON

President of ASCAP Raises Specter of "Power Trust" Force Behind Duffy Bill at Patent Committee Hearings

Dissension apparent in the House patents committee as hearings on copyright measures got under way in Washington Tuesday, and the prospect of protracted hearings and conferences dashed exhibitors' hopes of any music tax relief at this session of Congress.

Numerous conflicting interests, typified by three major copyright revision bills before the committee, accentuated the belief that it will be virtually impossible to obtain House and Senate agreement on any one bill by the time Congress adjourns, expected about April 15.

At the opening session Tuesday, the gaunt specter of a "power trust" lurking behind the motion picture and broadcasting industries was pictured as the force behind the Duffy bill, by Gene Buck, president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. On Wednesday he revealed experiments with wired radio in Cleveland as the basis for his charge.

The ghostly hand of the trust was seen by Mr. Buck particularly in those provisions eliminating the $250 minimum damage clause and providing that the right to produce a film shall include the right to exhibit it, which, it was believed, would give the music industry a tax only in production.

Deems Taylor, composer and music critic, said the $250 minimum penalty is "the rock on which ASCAP rests."

Sirovich Has Bill, Too

Congressman William I. Sirovich of New York, chairman of the committee and conducting the hearings, revealed himself as a friend of the music industry when he disclosed that he, too, had a bill. It subsequently was admitted that this measure was sponsored by ASCAP. Substantially, it would retain many provisions of the present law which theatre, radio and hotel interests want revised, and would keep the $250 minimum penalty for copyright infringements in event ASCAP music is used without a license. In the case of films, the statutory damages would be not more than $20,000, after suit.

Charging a plot by ASCAP's "enemies," Mr. Buck told the committee that Congress had been "sensitized by propaganda from the users of music," including in the charge the exhibitors, who, he declared, sought to have the right to produce merged with the right to exhibit so they would get lower film rentals.

With Rudy Vallee, Irving Berlin, George Gershwin, Mrs. Ethelbert Nevin, Nathan Burkan, ASCAP counsel, E. C. Mills, general manager, and others prominent in Tin Pan Alley waiting to be heard, the hearing was abruptly adjourned for the day when Congressman Ralph E. Church, Illinois, a committee member, reminded Mr. Sirovich he had neglected to obtain permission of the House to sit during its sessions and objected to further continuance.

Congressman Thomas O'Malley of Wisconsin also threatened to be a stumbling block to Mr. Sirovich, challenging statements by Mr. Buck that ASCAP never sought to collect from minor business places and declaring he knew personally of at least 10 cases in Milwaukee where tavern keepers had been made to pay.

Mr. Church also strongly criticized the chairman for hearing opponents of pending legislation before the proponents.

Mr. Sirovich said hearings would be held on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays of four successive weeks. This is ASCAP's week, March 3 to 5 will be devoted to the Authors' League, dramatists, newspapers and other writing and publishing interests, who oppose the Duffy bill. March 10 to 12 and 17 to 19 will give opportunity for testimony by film producers, distributors and exhibitors and other interests, including hotels.

Daly Bill Sidetrack Seen

At Tuesday's hearing no mention was made of the Daly bill which originally was considered to be the committee's version. With the submission of a bill by the chairman, it was indicated both the Duffy and Daly bills would be sidetracked. There are, too, at least two collateral bills before the committee.

The Sirovich bill eliminates the clause in the Duffy proposal joining the right to exhibit with the right to produce. It gives the copyright owner the right to synchronize his work for use in motion pictures, and provides that copyright shall apply to dramatizations or picturizations, whether or not based in whole or in part on works in the public domain, but if based on copyrighted material the consent of the copyright owner must be obtained.

A large group of industry representatives, in Washington primarily for the Pettengill block booking bill hearing scheduled to start Thursday, were among those in the crowded committee room when Mr. Buck made his charges against motion picture interests.

Charging that the Duffy bill had been written by a three-man interdepartmental committee after only an hour devoted to hearing the views of the authors and other interests last August,

ATTACK LAUNCHED ON CANADIAN GROUP

The 1936 session of the Canadian Parliament scarcely had swung into its full stride this week at Ottawa when an attack was launched on the Canadian Performing Rights Society, similar to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

Speaking on the floor of the House of Commons, William Esling, member for Kootenay West, described the Society's operations as a "pernicious racket" and said the country was suffering greatly from its exactions. He demanded legislation to curb the Society which, he declared, did not protect Canadian authors and composers but only foreigners.

Mr. Esling also demanded reduction in the music taxes paid by small amusement owners, including exhibitors. He expressed hope the Government would take steps to compel the Society to publish the list of compositions on which it claims copyright.

Sirovich Goes Into Action, Too, but Day's Session Abruptly Adjourns When His Right to Participate Is Challenged and that the measure was passed by the Senate when but 13 members were present, Buck told the House committee that it was not satisfactory to ASCAP on the two counts of elimination of the $250 damage minimum and the merger of producing and exhibition rights, and asserted that the latter, if retained in the bill, would prevent the United States from joining the Berne (international copyright) convention. He said the film industry also has its copyright and bicycling problem. However, he declared, the exhibitors were back of the proposal to merge production and exhibition rights.

Questioned by members of the committee as to ASCAP income, Mr. Buck estimated the 1935 "take" as "slightly more than $4,000,000," of which $860,000 was taken from motion picture theatres. Radio stations contributed $2,500,000 while grossing $90,000,000 from the sale of time, he said, and $197,000 came from 1,200 licensed hotels.

Suits for infringement are "rare," he told the committee, and in the 22 years of the society's life but $8,800 has been collected through suits. He did not say, however, how much has been obtained through compromises.

Radio Talk Indicates Rift

Indications of a serious rift among members of the committee were seen in the remarks made in an address broadcast over the National Broadcasting network last Wednesday night by Congressman Braswell Deen of Georgia, a member of the committee. He attacked ASCAP.

Experiments of the North American Company in the field of wired radio in Cleveland were revealed by Mr. Buck on Wednesday as the basis for his charge that the "power trust" was behind the Duffy bill. He saw the possible hold of the power interests in the provision covering dissemination of copyright works by wired radio, in which the programs, he said, consisted of records for which under the present law the creator gets but two cents.

"The basic interest of the power companies is to sell more power," he added.

Mr. Buck said he received $35,000 as president of ASCAP.

Mr. Burkan became involved in controversy with Mr. O'Malley over ASCAP'S collection activities and repeatedly hurled "challenges" to the committee to bring in witnesses who would substantiate charges that ASCAP "shook down" tavern keepers. Charges by Mr. Burkan that a federal judge in Wisconsin threw out 17 cases and threatened ASCAP's attorney if he did not withdraw them brought from Congressman Daly a threat to take up the matter on the floor of the House.

Mr. Burkan brought up the Government's pending suit seeking to declare ASCAP a monopoly, declaring the Government obtained a postponement of the trial last summer when it was shown that the broadcasting industry was "pirating" compositions, and asserted his inability to see why the Government should interest itself in seeing that licensees got better contract terms, which he said was the basis of the suit.

"Solid entertainment, due for healthy grosses wherever it plays. Maintains a fine sincerity that will send audiences away completely satisfied. Paul Kelly delivers a grand performance. Claire Trevor's acting is tops throughout!"

This production marks the debut of the combination of Mary Pickford and Jesse L. Lasky as a producing unit. The story chosen is an adaptation of a French play that enjoyed considerable Continental success. The screen play is by Stephen Morehouse Avery. Roland V. Lee, maker of "Three Musketeers," "Count of Monte Cristo" and "Cardinal Richelieu," is directing.

It is a comedy with a definite trend towards farce. A young actor, carrying on a flirtation with a married woman, makes a mistake and kisses another girl. Arrested and tossed into jail, his trial becomes the sensation of Paris. The girl, attracted to the youth who is being given reams of publicity, pays his fine. He becomes a great actor to forget his original flirtatious contact when the girl he kissed by mistake jumps up on the stage to kiss him publicly.

Francis Lederer, last in "The Gay Deception," plays the lead. The kissed girl who causes all the excitement is Ida Lupino, now in "Anything Goes." Countess Liev De Maigret, seen in several MGM pictures, is the other woman. Presented in feature roles are a group of comedy stars, Roland Young, Hugh Herbert, Joseph Cawthorn and Erik Rhodes. Among the principal supporting players are Donald Meek, Georgia Caine, Angie Norton, Eily Malyon, Ferdinand Munier, Murray Kinnell, Mischa Auer and Lois January. Others who will appear include Paul Irving, Lucille Ward, Emilie Cabanne, Phyllis Barry, Billy Gilbert and Harvey Clark.

The feature is being given elaborate production, presenting among other Parisian landmarks the interiors of two theatres, both front and back stage, an ice skating rink, as well as details of how rival French newspapers sensationalize a choice bit of seeming scandal.

The Country Beyond

(Twentieth Century - Fox)

Romantic Drama

This picture is being adapted from James Oliver Curwood's novel of the same title. It is a story of romance and drama and melodramatic thrills in the great north country. It is a story of the Northwest Mounties who get their man and one who also gets a girl. Filmed in the High Sierra country, it promises to be beautifully backgrounded entertainment in which Rock, the dog featured in "Call of the Wild," is again a hero.

To the established entertainment and exploitation worth must be added the importance of cast names. Rochelle Hudson, currently in "Show Them No Mercy" and to be seen shortly in "Everybody's Old Man" with Irvin Cobb, is the heroine. Robert Kent, a comparative newcomer, though seen in minor parts in several Paramount features, notably "One Hour Late" and "Four Hours to Kill," is the hero. Paul Kelly will be seen as a mounted police sergeant and Alan Hale and Alan Dinehart as a pair of fur thieves and smugglers whom Kelly and Kent are out to get, with Hale as the father of Miss Hudson. The next principal character is dog Buck, who carries on a wild and furious fight with a killer dog to save the lives of his mistress and her beloved. Listed among the supporting players are Andrew Tombes, Claudia Coleman, Paul McVey and Holmes Herbert.

It is the kind of story which, though promising to be packed with thrill and adventure, the producers urge should be sold from a standpoint that at the same time does not overlook the romantic love interest angle. For menfolk there is the lure of the more melodramatic contrasts and for the youngsters the appeal which the dog brings into the action, and so the necessity of assuring women that it also tells a charming love story is not to be ignored.

With story adaptation and screen play by Adele Commandini and Lamar Trotti, direction is by Eugene Forde and the feature will be a Sol Wurtzel production.

Angels in White

(B. F. Zeidman)

Romantic Drama

As the initial feature for his newly organized producing company, B. F. Zeidman has chosen a dramatic romantic theme which has for backgrounds scenes and incidents relating to one of the most difficult obstacles man had to conquer, the building of the Panama Canal. It is not a story of great engineering accomplishment, although for substantiating production effect much that reflects that atmosphere is incorporated. Rather it is a historical record that concentrates on the real heroes and heroines that made construction of the Canal possible, the doctors and nurses who faced peril and death to eliminate the scourge of yellow fever and make the Canal Zone a habitable place.

The story, fresh in theme, is an original by Karl Brown, who also is directing. Production details, in common with the trend marking all inaugural efforts, are being personally handled by Zeidman, whose record as an independent and associate major producer is familiar.

The cast chosen to tell the story is far better than average in adaptability to the various roles and in name value. Ian Keith and Tala Birell, who is featured in Columbia's "Crime and Punishment," will be seen in the leading roles sharing the story's romance, drama and heroism. Supporting players include Rollo Lloyd, featured in the forthcoming "Anthony Adverse," Ferdinand Gottschalk, Suzanne Kaaren, Lionel Pape, Ferdinand Munier, Warner Richmond, Harry Allen, Don Barclay, Nigel de Brulier, Snub Pollard and Taru Schimada.

The motivating subject matter many times having demonstrated its entertainment and exploitation worth, the novel background promises to lend a new and intriguing interest. Naturally serious in tone, the comedy aspects interluding the more dramatic phases are being counted upon to accentuate the theatric value of the basic theme.

I Married a Doctor

(Warner)

Drama

This production is an adaptation of Sinclair Lewis' "Main Street." It is drama of small town narrow mindedness, prejudice and social bigotry as Lewis portrayed it in that as well as several other novels. The screen play is by Casey Robinson, who did the adaptation of "Captain Blood." Direction is by Archie Mayo.

A source of potential exploitation and entertainment interest is seen in the teaming of Pat O'Brien and Josephine Hutchinson, who made such an impression in "Oil for the Lamps of China," in the leading roles. Supplementing the showmanship worth of their names, the supporting cast is studded with identities with whom the public is familiar, while several not so well known are introduced. Some of the more prominent to be seen portraying the Lewis characters are Margaret Irving, now in "Exclusive Story"; Guy Kibbe, featured in the forthcoming "Captain January" with Shirley Temple; Ross Alexander, Louise Fazenda, Ray Mayer and Siegfried Rumann. In the minor roles will be presented Olin Howland, Edith Elliott, Hedwiga Reicher, Fran Rhodes, Thomas Pogue, Janet Young, Harry Hayden, Alma Lloyd, Grace Stafford, Willard Robertson, Sam Wren, Dora Clement and Gaby Fay.

In the story O'Brien brings his bride, Hutchinson, home to his small midwestern town. Artistic by nature, she undertakes a campaign to beautify the main street and comes in contact with a young artist, Ross Alexander, who, first sympathetic to her ambitions, falls in love with her. Their association considered scandalous by the citizenry, a dramatic situation is built up. Even the coming of tragedy to two of the town's best loved characters does not seem to have any effect upon the residents. Denounced by Alexander's father, Rumann, the girl leaves the town. Time, together with the love her husband bears for her, causes the townsfolk to welcome her back.

Petticoat Fever

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Comedy Romance

As a stage play, both as a Broadway feature and stock company vehicle, this story enjoyed a considerable vogue. It is compounded simply of romantic and comedy elements that are of proved box office value. To these recognized showmanship contents is added a choice bit of casting promising to be of unique interest to exhibitors and patrons. After an absence of practically a year, the production returns Robert Montgomery to the screen. It pairs with him Myrna Loy, who has demonstrated that she hasn't lost any of the drawing power that "The Thin Man" won for her.

The locale is Labrador in the winter when the nights are six months long. A wireless operator keeping lonely vigil is super-thrilled when a beautiful creature drops out of the skies.

Montgomery is the wireless operator. Myrna Loy is the girl in the case and Reginald Owen in a characteristic role is her fuddy duddy admirer. A newcomer, Winifred Shotter, is the third part of the triangle. The principal supporting player is Forrester Harvey, with a trio of native Eskimos, Otto and Iris Yamaoka and Bo Ching, appearing in incidental atmospheric roles.

The picture is being directed by George Fitzmaurice, maker of the well remembered "Strangers May Kiss" and "As You Desire Me," as well as the more recent "Peter Ibbetson" and "The Dark Angel."

"TRAIL OF LONESOME PINE" A WOW!

Society Storming Colony, Miami Beach, as "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" Opens in Summer Weather

HOT OR COLD IT'S A HIT!

Broadway Street Scene as "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" Opens in Zero Weather

Paramount Technicolor Picture Smashes All Records in Miami Beach and Broadway Openings.

Within a single week, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," first big film drama in color, has smashed all time records in two key spots on the Atlantic Seaboard. Opening Monday in Miami Beach, the big Walter Wanger production had mobs fighting for admission to the high hat Colony Theatre. And Wednesday morning saw Broadway jammed as the New York Paramount gave New York its first glimpse of the Technicolor opus.

Critics joined with Florida society, with celebrities of the theatre, of the sports world, of the writing business, and with Mr. and Mrs. Fan to tell the world Paramount had a winner. And exhibitors all over the country had the home office haywire begging for prints. Follow up business at both houses continues strong. And it looks like Paramount has added another to the Paramount list of box office aces.

Miami Beach, Fla.—Feb. 18—There may have been a Moon over Miami last night. If there was, nobody noticed it. They were too busy fighting their way through the mobs on Lincoln Road, trying by a little straight arm stuff to muscle their way into the biggest picture opening this winter resort has ever seen . . . the world premiere of Paramount's all-color drama, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

Daniel Frohman, dean of Broadway producers, at "Trail" opening, Miami Beach.

The big shots of the sports world, the theatre, high society, not to mention a few hundred ordinary muggs like your reporter wrinkled their stiff bosoms, k.o'd their straw kelleys and had themselves one brawl of a time but it was worth it . . . as everybody from the moneyed top kicks to the little fellows voted without a single dissenting opinion that this big time action picture in color was aces, and set up a mark for the other boys in the picture business to shoot at.

New York Critics Praise Color Picture as Real Triumph for the Picture Industry

"The beauties of nature and those of Miss Sylvia Sidney are brought in realistic hues to the screen of the Paramount in this handsomely Technicolored production. Each scene is a painting wrought by the hand of the Master."

—Regina Crewe, New York American

"A tremendous advance in color photography. It is beautiful enough to shine as a milestone in the movies' technical march of progress."

—Bland Johaneson, Daily Mirror

"When to the story is added a cast of unusual merit and a richly beautiful color production, then it becomes a distinguished and worthwhile picture, commanding attention no less for its intrinsic entertainment value than as another milestone in the development of the cinema."

—Frank S. Nugent, New York Times

New York, N. Y.—Feb. 20—Old Weather Man slipped over a fast one and hauled the temperature down to the zero line yesterday. But the New York fans just buttoned up their overcoats, held their mitts to their ears and stood in line until they got what they wanted . . . and what they wanted was to see the world premiere of the first color drama, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

Before noon the New York Paramount had chalked up a new record for attendance and the fans were still streaming in. And did they like it? They did. As far as New York is concerned Paramount has topped off its recent series of box office successes with an even bigger winner.

N.Y.Paramount warms frost bitten fans with sinkers and coffee.

"The picture that opened at the Paramount Theatre yesterday before a record early morning audience marks the beginning of a new epoch in films. Henry Hathaway, the director who handled 'Lives of a Bengal Lancer' so expertly has kept the story moving at a lively pace."

—Kate Cameron, Daily News

"Accurate reporting compels the reporter to write that the audience love it."

—William Boehnel, World Telegram

"Utterly lovely are the colors in 'The Trail of the Lonesome Pine'. As a demonstration of outdoor photography in color it is an outstanding achievement."

Wanger's Production Would Be Box Office Even Without Color Novelty; Hathaway, Sylvia Sidney, Writing Splendid

Color is here. And prosperity too, for the theatres booking Walter Wanger's "Trail of the Lonesome Pine." You don't have to be a veteran in the business to remember what Irving Cumming's "Cisco Kid" did at the box office. That picture was the first outdoor talking picture. It gave the producers confidence that talking pictures were here to stay. Now comes "Lonesome Pine"... the first major outdoor talking feature in color—to prove that color is here to stay. . . . The picture would be a hit even in black and white, due to the uniformly high quality of its cast, direction and story.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

19 Films Start

Checking studio production programs over a two weeks period reveals that nineteen pictures have been started and nine finished. Two major companies, which had been comparatively quiet for several weeks, accounted for the big bulk of the new work, MGM starting five pictures and Paramount four.

First of MGM's quintet is "Moonlight and Murder," featuring Chester Morris, Madge Evans, Leo Carillo, H. B. Warner, J. Carroll Naish, Bruce Cabot and Robert McWade, under direction of Edwin L. Marin. "The Unguarded Hour" also went into work with Loretta Young and Franchot Tone in the leads and E. E. Clive and Robert Greig heading the support. Sam Wood is directing. Also started, both on the stages and on location, is "San Francisco." The cast includes Jeannette MacDonald, Spencer Tracy, Nat Pendleton, Ted Healy, Shirley Ross and Duncan Renaldo. W. S. VanDyke is directing. A fourth feature, "Absolute Quiet," will present Louis Hayworth, Ann Loring, Irene Hervey, Stuart Erwin, Lionel Atwill and Wallace Ford. George G. Seitz is directing. The last of the group, "The Mob," will feature Sylvia Sidney, Lionel Barrymore and Spencer Tracy. Fritz Lang is directing.

Three of the Paramount group are directly under studio auspices; the fourth is a Walter Wanger production. Titled "Big Brown Eyes," it will present Joan Bennett, Cary Grant, Isabel Jewell, Lloyd Nolan, Raymond Hargrave and Marjorie Gateson. Raoul Walsh is directing. At the main studio "Concertina," after suffering preliminary casting difficulties, went before the cameras. Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray are featured, supported by Alison Skipworth, George Barbier, William Frawley, Porter Hall, Lumsden Hare, Bradley Page, Siegfried Rumann and Mischa Auer. William K. Howard is directing "Border Flight" also started, with John Howard, Grant Withers, Robert Cummings, Frances Farmer, Roscoe Karns and Samuel Hinds. Otho Lovering is the director. "Poppy" will present W. C. Fields, Richard Cromwell, Lynne Overman, Elizabeth Patterson and Granville Bates. Edward Sutherland is directing.

Warner Launches Three

Warner started three pictures. In "Murder in Sing Sing" the cast is headed by Patricia Ellis, Craig Reynolds, Barton MacLane, Joseph Crehan and Joseph King. Nick Grinde is directing. "Two Against the World" will present Humphrey Bogart and Beverly Roberts in the principal roles. William McGann is directing. The cast for "Big Business" is headed by Guy Kibbee, Sybil Jason and Warren Hull. Frank McDonald directs.

At 20th Century-Fox "Human Cargo" started. It will present Claire Trevor, Brian Donleavy, Helen Troy, Alan Dinehart, Ralph Morgan, Rita Cansino, Ralf Harolde, Claudia Coleman and Morgan Wallace. Allan Dwan is directing.

"One to Two," featuring William Powell, Jean Arthur, Eric Blore and Johnny Arthur, started at Radio. Stephen Roberts is the director.

Republic started "Girl from Mandalay," which will feature Kay Linaker, Conrad Nagel and Donald Cook under Howard Bretherton's direction.

Invincible's contribution to the new work is "Brilliant Marriage," in which Joan Marsh, Ray Walker and Holmes Herbert will be seen. Phil Rosen is directing.

Columbia started "Bless Their Hearts." With Elliott Nugent directing, the cast includes Melvyn Douglas, Mary Astor, Edith Fellows, Donald Meek, Margaret Armstrong, Charles Arnt, George McKay and Olaf Hytten.

"Dracula's Daughter" went before the cameras at Universal. In it will be seen Otto Kruger, Margaret Churchill, Gloria Holden, Irving Pichel, Nan Grey, Ed Van Sloan, Claude Allister, Hedda Hopper and E. E. Clive. Lambert Hillyer directs.

On location Regal started "Captain Calamity." The cast features Marian Nixon, George Huston, Crane Wilbur, Movita, Vince Barnett, George Lewis, Roy D'Arcy and Barry Norton. John Reinhart is directing.

Completed Product

Columbia finished two pictures. The first, "Opera Hat," features Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur. The support includes George Bancroft, Lionel Stander, H. B. Warner, Emma Dunn, Ruth Donnelly, Mayo Methot, Douglas Dumbrille, Theodore von Seyffertitz, Jamison Thomas, Paul Porcasi, Franklin Pangborn, Christian Rub, Arthur Hoyt, George Meeker and Ann Howard. Frank Capra directed. In "Panic on the Air" Lew Ayers, Florence Rice, Wryley Birch, Edwin Maxwell, Gene Morgan, Benny Baker, Willie Fung and Si Jenks will be seen. D. Ross Lederman directed.

Sol Lesser also completed two. "The Show Goes On" will present Bobby Breen, Henry Armeta, Inez Courtney, Grant Withers, Richard Carle, Lucien Littlefield, Vivienne Osborne, Ann Doran, Clay Clement and Renee Whitney. Kurt Neuman directed. The second feature, "O'Malley of the Mounted," for 20th Century-Fox release, will present George O'Brien, Irene Ware, James Bush, Victor Potel and Stanley Fields. David Howard directed.

At 20th Century-Fox "Matron's Report" was finished. Jane Withers is starred, supported by Jane Darwell, Ralph Morgan, Sara Haden, Clarence Wilson, Harry Carey, Tommy Jackson, Betty Jane Hainey, Lillian Harmer, Donald Haines, Paul Stanton, Wally Albright, Jr., and Selmer Jackson. John Blystone directed.

PRIZE NIGHTS IN 4,400 HOUSES AS FIGHT TO CONTROL PRACTICE GROWS

Exhibitors of New York City Alone Awarding $3,000,000 a Year in Cash, Says Independent Circuit Operator

Bank Night—representing but one of the dozens of forms of chance games—now is serving to stimulate the box-offices of 4,400 theatres. In New York City alone, exhibitors are awarding cash for the various games at the rate of $3,000,000 annually, and still are undetermined whether the net result is worth it, with millions of dollars diverted from the industry to those sponsoring the chance game.

And the fight to dislodge the practice from exhibition practice continues in the courts and elsewhere:

Alabama owners were warned against continuing "lottery" contests.

Colorado is investigating a stunt whereby chance game ticketholders are insured of receiving their winnings even though they are not present at the drawings, as required.

Connecticut ruled out cash prize awards. Indiana, however, upheld the practice.

Kansas was preparing to move against cash awards.

Massachusetts owners will appeal a conviction.

Michigan courts acted against owners who failed to discontinue the games.

Missouri was preparing a court test, as large groups of owners discontinued various giveaway forms.

New York owners were awaiting court action.

Claude Ezell, general manager of Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., owner of Bank Night, is authority for the statement that 4.400 theatres now are featuring the game. While in New York last week he conferred with Roy Brauer, formerly a film salesman in Dallas, who sailed for Rio de Janeiro to open an office and supervise the company's activities in South America.

More than $3.000,000 is spent annually by Greater New York exhibitors on giveaways and games, it has been indicated by an important independent circuit operator. This is in addition to service charges theatre men have to pay distributing agents of the games. At the estimated rate of $10 a theatre, the service fee total for the 12 months is figured at $1,500,000.

Of the 650 theatres in the New York area, more than half are either featuring games or giving away dishes, perfumes and other novelties. In many instances they are doing both. The practice of giving away articles and monetary awards has reached a point where numerous theatres distribute something different every night in the week with the exception of Sundays.

In Birmingham local theatres have been warned by the police department that Jackpot Nights or any form of lottery contests will not be permitted. Contests of this nature, Police Chief Luther Hollums said, are in violation of a city ordinance.

In Bridgeport, Bank Night, Screeno and other giveaways are in violation of state gambling laws, City Court Prosecutor D. Harold Cotter has announced in ordering immediate termination of such games. Action of the prosecutor followed his order to all promoters of Bingo games that money prizes be eliminated.

In Indiana, however, the legality of Bank Night has been upheld by Special Judge Lenn J. Oare in the superior court in Elkhart.

In Topeka, Kan., on the other hand, Attorney General Clarence V. Beck plans to move against the use of Bank Night and other promotions of a similar nature, charging that complaints to his office indicated such schemes might become "rackets."

In Boston, a bill of exceptions has been filed with the clerk of the state supreme court by Attorney George S. Ryan as a step in appeal from the conviction of James Wall, manager of the Fellsway, Medford, on anti-lottery charges. A decision on the appeal of George Wilson, manager of the Hamilton, Dorchester, still is being held under advisement by Judge James Sisk. The two are parallel Bank Night cases.

Prize Night insurance companies are being scrutinized in Denver by the state. Assistant attorney general J. Glenn Donaldson has ordered two companies there, and invited theatre managers, to attend a hearing to be held at the statehouse in an attempt to determine legality and whether the state insurance laws cover the new practice.

Judge DeWitt H. Merriam of the circuit court of Detroit has issued an order directing Jacob Schreiber to show cause why he is not in contempt of court for using cash giveaways in spite of a permanent injunction granted by the judge on January 16. The order is returnable February 29. The injunction was obtained by the Temple-Sproat Company, operating the Roxy of the Ben and Lou Cohen circuit.

Following the announcement that Fox Midwest had stopped using Bank Night in 13 Greater Kansas City theatres on February 23, after two $1,000 pots were won on two successive nights, an action to test the legality of the game was filed in the state supreme court. Briefs covering issues in the case were to be submitted this week.

In New York the hearing on the two cases against Loew's for alleged violation of the lottery laws as a result of the use of Screeno in the Elsmere and Grand theatres was postponed until March 17 in special sessions court of the Bronx. Continuation of the cases was sought by Irving Greenfield, Loew attorney, because of an appeal pending on a decision of the appellate division of the Brooklyn supreme court.

Another hearing is set for February 28 involving the Paradise, de luxe Loew house in the Bronx, in a similar situation. A request for an adjournment likewise is expected to be granted.

New Loew Bond Issue Sold

An offering of $15,000,000 Loew's, Inc., 3 1-2 per cent sinking fund debentures at 99 and accrued interest was bought up Tuesday and the books closed. Dillon and Read headed the syndicate handling the issue. Proceeds, to the required extent, will be used to redeem, on April 1, $7,972,500 of the company 6 per cent 15-year debentures.

Circuits Planning N. Y. Expansion

At least seven independent theatre circuits in the Greater New York area are now engaged in negotiations to solidify their holdings with every important name circuit either discussing building plans or acquisitions of properties from their present owners.

The deals, regarded as at the peak for any one time in the territory, find Randforce, Skouras, Brandt, Isle, Jack W. Springer, Cohen and Seigel and Sam Cocalis bidding for properties to bolster their current operations.

While the various operators named are reticent about specific sites under negotiation, all admit deals are under way, with consummation expected as soon as an accord is reached on terms. The independent moves are in direct contrast to major circuit plans. Loew's and RKO executives state no new additions are contemplated to their present theatres. However, developments which may bring about a change in attitude leave the major companies open to negotiations.

Some of the deals are regarded by the unaffiliated theatre men as "self-preservation." Others are merely held to be expansive moves.

All seven circuits mentioned have made substantial acquisitions in the last year. Consolidated, which has built but three new theatres in the west Bronx during the past few months, has no plans for the new season, but circumstances which may be brought about by moves of other independents, principally invasion into Consolidated zones, will be met by Laurence Bolognino, vice-president of Consolidated.

Harry Shiffman, president of Isle Theatres, has a deal on for a number of houses; Max A. Cohen and Arthur Seigel, who took over the George M. Cohan Theatre recently, are dickering for a few theatres; George Skouras is seeking the Majestic, Jersey City; Randforce may build or take over a handful of Brooklyn projects. Mr. Cocalis, who operates a number of theatres independent of his joint circuit with Mr. Springer, has acquisition and building plans in work. Mr. Springer is also negotiating for several units.

Century and Prudential, two circuits which usually build their own theatres, have no plans for new constructions during the near future.

Dartmouth College Adds Motion Picture Course

The history of the motion picture is now being offered for the first time to the students of Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H., in a new course being sponsored by the departments of English and Archaeology. Projection and sound equipment have been installed in Dartmouth Hall and two-hour classes will be held weekly.

RKO Lawyers See Claim Reduction

The possibilities of reducing the $9,100,000 Rockefeller Center claim against RKO to less than a third of that amount are seen by counsel to the RKO trustees in the event opposition to the claim is forced into court through the failure of settlement negotiations, as at the same time this week it was learned that the contingencies under which Radio Corporation of America sold one-half of its interest in RKO to the Atlas Corporation and gave an option for the purchase of the remaining half could reduce RCA'S return on the transaction to as little as $3,700,000.

The Rockefeller Center nogotiations are being continued, however, and pending their outcome, hearings of the trustee's exceptions to the allowance of the claim in the amount recommended by Special Master Thomas D. Thacher are being deferred. The hearing which was scheduled for this week has been postponed to March 3 as a result.

The exceptions to the allowance of the claim would be made to the federal court by Donovan, Leisure, Newton and Lumbard, counsel to Irving Trust Company, the RKO trustee. Among other grounds for opposing the allowance of the claim will be an effort to show that the three-year rent liability limitation applies to the RKO leases with Rockefeller Center on which the claim is based. If counsel succeeds in proving this RKO would be liable only for rent for three years following the lease defaults, which would reduce the $9,100,000 claim to $2,900,000.

As the claim now stands, it is the largest in the unsecured creditors' group. Officials of Rockefeller Center state that they regard a final settlement agreement as "premature" at this time, and indicated that no commitment on a settlement of the claim will be made until material advancement on a plan of reorganization for RKO has been made. This may entail six months or more, in view of statements from reliable sources that little progress has been made on the development of a plan in recent months, thus leaving reorganization in a definitely elementary stage at this time.

A two-month extension of the agreement under which RKO and RCA are given a participation in operating profits of the Music Hall theatre in New York was agreed upon Tuesday and will be submitted to the Federal court for approval. The current agreement expires February 29 and the extension continues it to April 30.

The agreement allocates weekly and annual profit participations to RKO, RCA and Rockefeller Center under various scales of earnings. The agreement originated in September, 1934, when Rockefeller Center and RCA took over the Music Hall lease from RKO and assumed the operating management. It provides for a joint participation by RKO and RCA on an annual basis of $500 per week in the initial earnings of the Music Hall and an initial rent participation of $700,000 per year for Rockefeller Center. Provisions for additional participations for all three are made in the event of profits in excess of the initial requirements.

No split-up of the profits has been made since the agreement became operative and the participation of the three interests, consequently, have been increased by two-thirds since the end of the original agreement on September 1, 1935.

IN THE LEGISLATURES

the present city fire ordinance. This depends also on action by the state legislature to return the bureau of combustibles in New York City from the building department to the fire department. This measure, having passed the House, is pending in the Senate, it is understood.

In Newburgh, an ordinance legalizing Sunday film shows became effective February 9. Ordinances also were adopted creating a license board for projectionists and providing for their regulation.

NORTH CAROLINA

The Board of Aldermen of Sanford, N. C., has adopted an ordinance prohibiting any shows or amusement from 12:01 a. m. Sunday to midnight Sunday. The ordinance also prohibits shows and amusements between 11:30 p. m. and 5:30 a. m. during the week.

In Charlotte, N. C., an ordinance for the examining and licensing of projectionists has been brought before the city council. The measure would require projectionists to obtain a license at $2 from a board composed of the electrical inspector, the chief of the fire department and an employed projectionist to be appointed by the city manager. Theatres that fail to comply would be closed.

OHIO

(Special Session)

A holdover measure from the last session is the only bill affecting the industry pending in the present legislature. This would require two projectionists in every booth. Cleveland is the only Ohio city now requiring two projectionists.

In December the legislature passed a bill continuing the three per cent gross receipt tax until March 31, 1937. The Ohio tax commission has warned that amusement licenses must be applied for immediately under the admission tax law, under penalty of from $25 to $100. All tickets are subject to tax, regardless of admission price. The law in effect last year exempted admissions 10 cents or less.

A recent bulletin of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio pointed out that the New York City and Ohio retail sales tax laws are quite similar as to what constitutes a taxable retail sale. Notwithstanding a tentative opinion of the tax commission that film rentals were exempt from taxation, the organization has advised exhibitors to create a special reserve fund by setting aside, in cash, three per cent of their film rentals since January 1, 1936, in case the tax commission and the courts should rule that film rentals are subject to the sales tax. Such a levy will cost Ohio exhibitors $250,000 a year, it is estimated.

Another legislative action, previously passed but still pending as to definite application, is the preferred playing time bill, enacted in April, 1935, prohibiting designated playdates. Attorney General John W. Bricker ruled the measure unconstitutional and Governor Davey accordingly refused to sign it. It automatically became law without his signature last July 16th. RKO Distributing Corporation brought suit against the attorney general and certain county officials in Columbus attacking the validity of the law. The case still is pending in the circuit court, and until finally disposed of the defendants have agreed not to attempt to enforce the law.

In Cleveland, the only prospective measure affecting the industry is a daylight saving bill, which the industry opposes.

OREGON

No legislative session this year.

In January a referendum resulted in defeat for a state sales tax proposal.

RHODE ISLAND

(Regular Session)

The industry is not affected here. No adverse legislation is expected.

SOUTH CAROLINA

(Regular Session)

Two chain store tax bills have been introduced. Industry observers are watching developments, as they may strike at circuit theatres.

TENNESSEE

Exhibitors narrowly escaped a luxury tax last spring, and the matter is considered certain to come up at the 1937 session or in case Governor Hill McAlister should call a special session, but this is not likely.

TEXAS

The only development reported was that citizens of Denton voted 983 to 962 in favor of Sunday films in a special election.

VERMONT

(Special Session)

A day after the House voted, 246 to 6, to pass a 10 per cent admission tax bill, the Senate killed it by a vote of 25 to 5.

The legislature adjourned January 24.

VIRGINIA

(Regular Session)

Apparently sponsored as part of the nation-wide "Save Vaudeville" campaign, a bill introduced by Senator Aubrey would exempt theatres from "additional taxation" if they included stage shows in their programs.

In Roanoke, the new license tax code has increased the theatre tax. The law now imposes a levy of $150 on houses of 450 seats or less and $200 for houses seating more than 450. An additional charge of five cents a seat also is levied. Charles M. Broun, representing National Theatres Corporation, has appeared before the council to protest the increase.

Schaefer-Universal Negotiations Reported

Negotiations are understood to be in progress looking toward employment of George J. Schaefer, formerly vice-president and general manager of Paramount, by Universal, Standard Capital, expected to exercise its option to buy control of Universal, is carrying on the conversations. It has been authoritatively denied that Mr. Schaefer is to succeed James R. Grainger as general sales manager.

Young Suit March 10

March 10 is the date set for argument in the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court on the $2,000,000 suit against RKO-Pathe Pictures filed by James Young, claiming that "What Price Hollywood" is based on his book entitled "What Price Sex in Hollywood."

S.E.C. Reports Stock Shifts in Four Companies

Transfers of stock holdings in Twentieth Century-Fox, Universal, Columbia and Consolidated were revealed in the semi-monthly report of the Securities and Exchange Commission made public in Washington, D. C., on Tuesday.

S. R. Kent's Berkshire Finance Corp. in September disposed of 2,842 shares, reducing its holdings to 100 shares. Chase National Bank in August acquired 387,377 shares of common and disposed of 1,549,507 shares of A common. Chase National also acquired 774,754 shares of $1.50 cumulative preferred, and at the close of the month held 7,381 warrants for old Class A Fox stock.

Holdings reported for August showed William Goetz, Beverly Hills, to have 214,643 shares of Twentieth Century-Fox common and 55,284 shares of $1.50 preferred, while Darryl F. Zanuck was shown to hold 183,980 shares of common and 21,946 shares of preferred.

Other details of the Twentieth Century-Fox report showed that in November Seton Porter, New York, acquired one share of common, bringing his holdings to 251 shares, and disposed of one share of $1.50 cumulative preferred, bringing his holdings to 500 shares. In September, John R. Dillon, New York, acquired one share of common, apparently to qualify as a director; Wilfred James Eadie, New York, acquired 125 shares, apparently to qualify as an officer; Mr. Eadie also was shown to have disposed of 500 shares of A common and to have acquired 250 shares of $1.50 preferred, and Mr. Dillon acquired one share of $1.50 preferred and the Berkshire Finance Co. disposed of one share.

In October, H. Donald Campbell was reported as the holder of one-fourth share of common and one-half share of preferred.

Reports for other film companies showed that during December Albert Warner acquired 166,000 shares of six per cent optional convertible debentures in Warner Brothers' Pictures, bringing his holdings at the end of the year to 1,731,333. He disposed of 4,000 shares of common during the month, reducing his holdings to 59,260 shares.

Receipt of reports on Columbia Pictures Corp. covering several months was also announced by the commission. In a report for December, Jack Cohn was shown to have disposed of, by gift, 5,089 shares of common through voting trust, reducing his holdings to 32,544 shares, while Harry Cohn sold 300 shares, reducing his holdings to 69,238 shares.

A report for November shows that through a stock dividend, Harry Cohn received 509 shares of common and 23,179 shares through voting trust certificates, and Nathan Burkan received 12 shares of common. Still earlier reports showed that Harry Cohn disposed of 1,100 shares of common through voting trust certificates in October.

Reports on Consolidated Film Industry showed that in December the Setay Co., Inc., New York, disposed of 1,900 shares of $2 cumulative participating preferred, and at the end of the year held 2,098 shares of the preferred and 155,673 shares of common. In November, the company disposed of 2,100 shares of preferred and in October of 700 shares.

A report of the effective registration in April of Universal showed R. H. Cochrane to hold 22,746 shares of common and Samuel Sedran, New York, four shares.

OPERATORS PRAISED BY COMMISSIONER

There is no record of a single loss of life in New York City, a city of some 7,986,368 persons, resulting from a fire that developed in connection with the operation of a motion picture machine, Commissioner Davidson of the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity said this week in discussing the new and more stringent system of examining applicants for motion picture operators' licenses, which went into effect early in 1934. The department has been in charge of licensing the operators since 1908.

Fox Sales Heads Meet in Chicago; Sussman Promoted

Plans and product for the coming season were discussed by Twentieth Century-Fox sales executives headed by John D. Clark, general sales manager, in a three-day conference terminating Sunday at the Congress hotel, Chicago. Appointment of William Sussman to succeed E. C. Granger, resigned, as eastern division manager, was announced. Both men addressed the meeting.

Mr. Sussman has been assistant to Mr. Clark since 1926, his experience dating from 1920, when he joined the Famous Players-Lasky company in the statistical department. No successor has been named to the assistant's post.

Plans for reissuing the Will Rogers pictures were discussed by Mr. Clark, who said that demand for these is heavy. The first, "A Connecticut Yankee," will be released in April.

Charles E. McCarthy, advertising manager, told of special campaigns prepared for "The Country Doctor" and "Shark Island" to start soon in newspapers and magazines. "The Country Doctor" was screened Sunday morning.

In attendance, from New York, were John D. Clark, E. C. Grainger, William Sussman, William J. Kupper, J. A. Clark, Charles E. McCarthy, Edward Collins, Harry H. Buxbaum, Joe Lee, Clarence Hill, Irving Maas, Jack Bloom, Roger Ferri, Felix Jenkins and Martin Moskowitz.

District managers present were Herman Wobber, San Francisco; Tom Bailey, Boston; Ward Scott, Kansas City; Edgar Moss, Philadelphia; Harry Ballance, Atlanta; George Roberts, Cleveland; Jim O'Loughlin, Toronto.

These branch managers attended: Clyde Eckhardt, Chicago; M. A. Levy, Minneapolis; J. H. Lorentz, Milwaukee; Lester Sturm, Detroit. William Gering, field representative, also was there.

John D. Clark went on to Hollywood following the conference.

Otterson Settles Studio Business and Returns East

John Edward Otterson, president of Paramount, this week made William LeBaron permanent studio head, extended his contract, welcomed Frank Lloyd to the studio's producer ranks, extended Henry Hathaway's contract and left Hollywood for New York to continue conferences with Winfield Sheehan on the product which Mr. Sheehan will make for the company.

Ernst Lubitsch and Boris Morros, two of the company's other producers, arrived in New York from the coast studios for vacations.

It now appears that the company will have 62 features in 1936-37.

Kent Claim Granted

And the while Mr. Otterson and the producers were attending to the business of supplying product, matters pertaining to the reorganization were subjects of court activity. Sidney Kent's claim of $65,000 for salaries having been granted, along with a Chase National Bank claim and two others favoring theatre companies. Too, a court ruling barred suits brought by Samuel Zirn.

According to present assignments, Paramount will have 62 films on the 1936-37 list, with A. M. Botsford heading the list from the standpoint of quantity with 12. Winfield Sheehan is down for 10, and Cecil B. DeMille's activities will be greatly increased. William LeBaron will also make six, as will Harold Hurley. Arthur Hornblow, Benjamin Glazer, Frank Loyd and Ernst Lubitsch are down for four each, and Paramount will have another six "Hopalong Cassidy" action films by Harry Sherman.

Sidney R. Kent's $65,000 claim against the company was allowed in that amount plus interest of more than $7,000 in an order signed by Federal Judge Coxe last week. The court's order stipulated, however, that the proceeds are to be held in escrow until recovery actions instituted by the trustees in bankruptcy of Paramount against former officers and directors of the company have been disposed of. Mr. Kent is made a defendant in one of the actions which are still pending in the New York supreme court.

$20,454 to Chase Bank

Judge Coxe also awarded $20,454 to the Chase National Bank for its services to Paramount as trustee under three indentures.

Federal Judge Caffey also approved the special master's report allowing the claim of the Circle Theatre Company and the Lincoln Square Realty Company of Indianapolis against Paramount for $371,099. The claim is based on Paramount's two-year guarantee of rent on the Circle and Indian theatres, Indianapolis.

The suits pending in the New York state court against 12 banks formerly identified with Paramount financing will have to be withdrawn as a result of a denial by the United States circuit court of appeals of a motion for an appeal by Samuel Zirn, attorney for former Paramount Publix bondholders, from a United States district court order directing Mr. Zirn to withdraw the state court actions or be held in contempt of court.

Retiring Loew Issue

Dillon, Read and Company, sinking fund agent for Loew's Inc., in New York, has called $247,500 principal amount of the company's 15-year six per cent sinking fund debentures for redemption April 1 at 101.

SALUT

"Astaire and Rogers are still the dancing tops . . . As the starring team of 'Follow the Fleet' they repeat the brilliant and successful performances they gave together in 'The Gay Divorcee', 'Roberta' and 'Top Hat'. . . They are simply delightful."

—Kate Cameron, N. Y. Daily News

"Chalk up three in a row for filmdom's favorite dancing team . . . With each succeeding picture they are under the increasing burden of topping their previous superlative contributions. 'The Gay Divorcee' was the final word, it seemed. Then came 'Top Hat'. And now 'Follow the Fleet'."

—Regina Crewe, N. Y. American

"The season's best musical comedy . . . An admiral's salute is due Miss Rogers and Mr. Astaire, with a general broadside of approval for Mr. Berlin, Miss Hilliard, Mr. Scott and Miss Allwyn."—Frank S. Nugent, N. Y. Times

"A comedy hit! . . . Spirited, gay, tuneful and handsome, it is complete entertainment . . . With Irving Berlin tunes, Astaire-Rogers dances, lively comedy and a spirited cast, it is thoroughly diverting . . . Add another hit to the already impressive list of Astaire and Rogers."

—Bland Johaneson, N.Y. Daily Mirror

"Delightful entertainment. The fact that Astaire dances should be enough in itself to recommend the picture, but it has other outstanding attractions. There's Astaire's dancing partner, Ginger Rogers. There are seven elegant song numbers by Irving Berlin. There are Harriet Hilliard and Randolph Scott. And there are gay comedy situations, handsome sets, a general air of frivolity and, of course, and most important, the Astaire-Rogers dance routines."

E!

—Rose Pelswick, N. Y. Evening Journal

"One of the comforts of the cinema season . . . Some of the best Berlin music and the most delectable Astaire-Rogers dancing . . . The score and the dancing are at least up to the enchantments in this field supplied by 'Top Hat'." — Richard Watts, Jr., N. Y. Herald-Tribune

"Filled with tuneful songs, brilliant dancing and good comedy—ingredients which make it 'tops' of its kind . . . Astaire's comedy is remarkably adroit, his dancing breath-taking . . . Miss Rogers' comedy work and dancing are superb . . . Mr. Berlin's score is easily the best he has yet composed for the screen."
—William Boehnel, N. Y. World-Telegram

"That first dancing team of the screen, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, trip gayly across the Music Hall screen in 'Follow the Fleet', which is their latest and perhaps liveliest film . . . A production as elaborate and more entertaining than the popular 'Top Hat' . . . Irving Berlin's new score, with half a dozen songs worth hearing again and again, is far superior to his 'Top Hat' numbers . . . The picture keeps the Astaire-Rogers combination right on the top."—Eileen Creelman, N.Y. Sun

"The new Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers picture is head, shoulders and feet above the gaudy spectacles which usually come drifting eastward from the Coast studios."
Thornton Delehanty, N.Y. Post

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Recalling the trail of broken chairs, smashed windows and outraged egos that marked his last film venture, the news wires report that the movie colony in California is half aghast at the story that Max Baer may be given the boots and saddle of a movie cowboy.

Leo Morrison, the great Baer's agent, is quoted as swearing that Maxie is hot to don the spur and chaperajo livery of the cow operas, that his wife has given permission, and that a deal with a producer (yet unamed) is "on the fire."

Mr. Morrison refuses to tell with whom Maxie is dickering, and inquiries made by reporters at Paramount's studio, important producers of westerns, brought nothing more than a blank look at the mention of Baer's name, it being generally conceded that whoever signs Max may also have to hire a battalion of United States Marines to keep him on the reservation, for the heavy fighter is accepted in Hollywood as "a guy who's always shadow-boxing mentally."

Baer stood the Metro Culver City lot on its head while making "The Prizefighter and the Lady" with Myrna Loy, two years ago, when he is reported to have smacked the unapproachable Irving Thalberg a thump on his narrow back, and called him "Pal."

"Hi, Babe," he saluted Joan Crawford.

Presented to Lupe Velez, he seized her about the waist, tossed her to the ceiling and made a neat catch.

"I'll tell Johnny Weissmuller," shrieked Lupe. "Aw, who the hell is Weissmuller," retorted Maxie, as he tossed her again.

MGM is currently building a new commissary at the Culver City studio. A steam shovel is being used to excavate. Last week the shovel operator stopped George Cukor, director, and Leslie Howard, actor, outside the "Romeo and Juliet" set and asked if he might go in and look for a while as he is greatly interested in Shakespeare. Mr. Cukor pointed to a sign on the stage door which read: "No Visitors!" mentioned that they were then shooting a very difficult scene, and politely explained that onlookers distracted the artists.

The following day, Director Cukor passed the excavation, was startled to see a sign on the studio steam shovel informing passersby: "No Visitors allowed! Difficult Excavating Going On. Onlookers Distract the Workers."

Thank Beau Broadway for the Hollywood golf story about Fred Stone and two motion picture producers who set out in a threesome at golf when a stranger approached them. "Would you care to make it a foursome?" the stranger asked.

"Certainly," said Stone, and they began to play. No one said anything, not even a word of introduction, until the fourth hole, when one of Stone's friends drove on to the green. So did Stone. The other two finally got on the green and the four met in a group.

"I'm stymied," said the stranger.

"I'm Goldfarb," said one of the producers. "Glad to meet you."

We never knew 'till John Chapman told us, where the phrase, "His name is mud" came from. It seems that the original goat was Dr. Samuel Alexander Mudd, whose adventures are depicted in Twentieth Century-Fox's new "Prisoner of Shark Island." He was the innocent medico who, without knowledge as to the identity of his patient, treated Booth's injured leg after Booth had shot Lincoln. The leg was injured when Booth jumped to the stage. Dr. Mudd was taken for a ride to prison.

Dave Rubinoff, NBC maestro and violinist, hereafter will think twice before complimenting ambitious servants in his employ. The reason: Departing from his Central Park penthouse the other morning he extended the new housekeeper a very generous compliment upon her care of his apartment. Rubinoff, upon his return a few hours later, was just in time to catch the zealous domestic about to give his $100,000 Stradivarius a thorough brush scrubbing and a nice new coat of furniture polish.

We can understand why motion picture press agents feel that they're here today and gone tomorrow.

The 1,500 residents of Tangier Island in Chesapeake Bay who were ice-bound for weeks without food or medical attention are happy again, their plight having moved a sympathetic government and folk on the mainland to drop food out of the skies, from airplanes, like modern manna from Heaven. Later, a blimp landed on the island and unloaded more.

Captain George McL. Baynes, now with Erpi, remembers another expedition to the island when the expeditioners were not treated as friendly as those who brought the food and medicine. Back in 1920, Captain McL. Baynes, then head of the old Kinograms Newsreel, dispatched a cameraman to Tangier Island to picture the inhabitants and their life. The news cameraman, one Gus Rickarby, alighted on the island, was promptly seiged by the Tangiereens, his camera and equipment taken from him, and he then was sent back into choppy Chesapeake Bay, in an open boat, to make his way back to the mainland. They resented his "intrusion."

California's tourist business, Dan Thomas says, runs to $134,000,000 a year, compared with the movies' piddling $98,000,000 spent there on production. We insist, however, that there are more than 134 times 98 million-dollar blondes in Hollywood alone.

The opening of "American Holiday" last Friday night as the WPA's first commercial stage production on Broadway brought to Times Square, via Whitney Bolton, the story of the difficulties experienced by Tom Adrian Cracraft in designing sets for this and other WPA stage plays.

It seems that the government warehouses are full of bedticking, left over from the Spanish-American War or something. Every time Tom puts in a requisition for fabric or scenery, he gets bedticking. He asked for red velvet drapes the other day and got bedticking. He asked for canvas for a background and got bedticking. He asked for muslin for stiffening and got bedticking.

Tom got weary of being stuffed with bedticking and wrote a little note to the WPA in Washington:

> "I find that I can use bedticking to good advantage and have no personal dislike of it, but I think you ought to know we are having a difficult time trying to keep the actors from going to sleep on the bedticking in the scenery."

Strange for the falsifications of Hollywood is the frank note struck the other day by Winfield Sheehan on the subject of cows.

Mr. Sheehan, who has a farm in the California movie-making section, known as "Hidden Valley," is reported by Mr. Hearst's Louis Sobol to have recently engaged a neighbor from an adjoining farm in a discussion of cows, the neighbor expressing a strong preference for Guernseys, the while Mr. Sheehan shrugged his shoulders and insisted that Jerseys were the only kind to own. Sheehan proceeded to explain in detail and at great length the finer points of Jersey cows. It was a discourse that would warm the cockles of the heart of the most scientific cattle fancier, and ran on and on, until the neighbor stopped the speaker with a query that grew out of sheer amazement: "How come you know so much about cows?" he asked.

"I had our research department look it up," admitted Production-mogul Sheehan.

Samuel Goldwyn was interviewing the New York press the other day on the superlatives of his United Artists pictures, in his gorgeous suite in the golden Waldorf-Astoria hotel. Sammy was waxing most eloquent when from the bathroom could be heard the voice of Sammy, Junior, singing "The Music Goes 'Round," in Columbia's picture.

Goldwyn has finally decided to produce "The Goldwyn Follies." (Starting with Anna Sten?).

"Sophistication is out for me and the other United Artists producers," Mr. Goldwyn told the reporters. "Personally, I'm making pictures of the great outdoors." And in the next breath he announced "The Princess and the Pauper," "These Three" (from "Children's Hour"), and "Goldwyn Follies."

Maybe Mr. Goldwyn is going to make "These Three" as a western—with Kate Smith?

Little Lord Fauntleroy

(United Artists - Selznick)

Comedy Drama

This picture is the story of a kid from Brooklyn. It tells of a thoroughly human youngster, one hundred per cent regular fellow, who was pretty good in a gang fight; had a bootblack for his pal; thought the neighborhood grocer the greatest guy on earth, and loved his mother with the same sincere affection every boy has for his dearest friend. It tells of a youngster whom fate elected to yank out of happy surroundings and set down in a tradition-encrusted manor house of age old English aristocracy to become Lord Fauntleroy, heir presumptive to the title The Earl of Dorincourt.

As conceived, prepared, acted, directed and produced, it is a valuable piece of screen merchandise. In every way it is potentially promising of being entertainment at least as important to exhibitors and theatre goers as was "David Copperfield," the picture that introduced its star, Freddie Bartholomew.

It is a picture that intelligently and expertly blends most of the theatrical values the public has demonstrated it understands and appreciates. Its sentimental heart interest is full, rich and warm, without ever a trace of syrupy sentimentality. The comedy is human, homey humor of real living persons. The drama captures the complete spirit of pathos. The melodrama is real melodrama; the contrast of conspiracy humanly realistic and without vestige of hokum. Always it is intriguing, inspiring, interest-holding. For once and all, it completely shatters the delusion that Lord Fauntleroy is an old lace and lavendar creature.

Briefly, Dearest, Ceddie's widowed mother, is informed by Havisham that her son is the future Earl of Dorincourt. Giving presents to Mr. Hobbs, bootblack Dick and The Applewoman, his friends, he leaves Brooklyn for England. There's many a teardrop when, upon landing, Ceddie is forced to separate from Dearest and go to live with the Earl of Dorincourt, a cantankerous, cadaverous symbol of British nobility. From then on for several reels it's almost exclusively Ceddie and the old warrior Earl. He expected an American brat. Instead he finds a real boy, one whom he is proud to find worming his way into his crabbed old heart. In Ceddie he is a being fully worthy in mentality, deportment and ambition to carry on the proud old Dorincourt heritage. An imposter appears. Minna sems to have all the necessary legal documents to prove that her nincompoop offspring, Tom, is the rightful heir. The Earl's chagrin is the apex of disillusionment. But the advent of Tom is hailed as a marvelous manifestation of justice by Dearest who is living only to have her boy back again.

But back in America, Mrs. Hobbs and Dick, reading about the scandal and seeing pictures, recognize Minna and Tom as a pair of typical Brooklyn chiselers. Somehow, the pair arrive in England with Ben and proof that Minna is Ben's wife and Tom their child. The denouement is fast and complete. The fraud exposed, Ceddie is established as Lord Fauntleroy and his cup of happiness runs over when the Earl, recognizing Dearest as a worthy mother of a worthy son, brings her to live with them.

Previewed in Grauman's Chinese Theatre before an audience brought to the theatre by the combined lure of "Modern Times" and a preview. Under the spell of the story of Fauntleroy, the great acting of Bartholomew, C. Aubrey Smith, Dolores Costello, Guy Kibbee and the rest of the large cast in the picture, it seemed to forget all about Chaplin as it acclaimed a new screen idol.

Don't Get Personal

(Universal)

Romantic Comedy

Although the reunion of James Dunn and Sally Eilers, together again here after several separate castings, probably constitutes the exploitation factor of major usefulness, the fact that "Pinky" Tomlin, showing marked improvement as an actor, sings a number of his highly personalized songs and contributes a vital measure of the comedy which is the picture's chief entertainment element, calls for emphasis. Promotion for the picture, with no suggestion of tremendous magnitude or power, can safely promise frothy, modern, amusing entertainment, an hour of light and generally pleasant pastime.

Basic material is of familiar pattern but treatment is fresh. A bit of imbibing by all hands, purely for comedy purposes, may be an item for exhibitor consideration in some localities. New York City, London, Ohio, and the highway between provide the locale. At times the humor verges on slapstick, again on drawing room farce, incident and dialogue dividing the burden equally.

Dunn and Tomlin are disclosed at opening as college graduates who have come to New York in a dilapidated Model T, gone broke seeking work, and auctioning their services to the highest bidder in a sidewalk audience attracted by Tomlin's singing. Miss Eilers, a London, Ohio, daughter of wealth who has come to the city to prove she can make her own way in the world without parental financial aid, and failed, stimulates the bidding in a spirit of helpfulness and the young men's services are knocked down to her, unexpectedly, for five dollars, which happens to be her last. Food is purchased immediately with all but thirty-five cents of the money and then Miss Eilers directs her acquired escorts to drive her to London, where, she tells them and they decline to believe, her father is a capitalist competent and willing to provide them with necessary employment.

Dunn and Miss Eilers are mutually attracted but Dunn insists he'll accept no favors, pretends he considers her a nuisance, quarrels with her incessantly on the journey. Numerous complications arrest their progress. They run out of gas, push the car into a ditch, promise to work for a farmer whose horses pull it out, make various blunders in doing so but wind up that evening drinking applejack and dancing square dances with the farmer's family. Next day he gives them the necessary motor fuel to proceed. A storm forces them to take shelter in the kennels of a dog race track, and the following morning, after a love spat, the girl leaves with the car, is towed to her home by a truckman.

Dunn and Tomlin follow. Dunn fights with the girl's father, Tomlin accepts a job from him and plots to bring Dunn to his senses by announcing the immediate wedding of the girl and a local suitor. Dunn obtains employment as a telephone linesman. The wedding procession starts, Dunn switches off the lights, carries the girl away in his Model T, as Tomlin and her father, who owns the telephone company, have planned—Weaver, New York.

Gentle Julia

(Twentieth Century - Fox)

Comedy

Presenting Jane Withers, whose legions of followers rapidly are growing, in one of Booth Tarkington's best known stories, this picture is a sound combination of amusing entertainment and easily adaptable exploitation. An all-family attraction, it is nevertheless unique and exciting comedy, stacking up not only as exceptional juvenile entertainment, but also holding considerable interest for adolescents and grownups. Following the trail of homey, neighborly, intimately familiar small town life which such recent pictures as "Ah Wilderness" and "Alice Adams" have demonstrated that the theatre-going public is in a mood to accept, the picture is the story of an impish miss, wise beyond her years and consequently pretty much of a pain in the neck to all but one of the many folk, young and old, with whom she came in contact.

To maintain the position in the scheme of things which Florence Atwater (Jane Withers) has made for herself, the young lady has much with which to contend. To brother Herbert and his playmate, Henry Rooter, she's just a "girl" and as such a pest to be endured. Knowing, however, that she can take ample care of that pair whenever necessary, Florence's chief mission in life is to break up the budding romance between her adolescent sister, Julia, and Mr. Crum. Florence, just by looking at Mr. Crum, can tell that he is a phoney. As much as she hopes to bust up that affair, she wants to engineer another so that her pal, Noble Dill, bright but bashful reporter of the town's daily doings, will have the inside track for Julia's affections.

She is a successful bother to all concerned. She gets Noble in dutch with Grandpa Atwater; several times drives Julia to the verge of distraction; gets Crum into a mood whereby he gladly would wring her neck; makes life a very uncertain thing for Herb and Henry, all of which is gleeful entertainment for any kind of audience. As the picture rollicks along toward the climax, it begins to look that Florence can't do much about the Julia-Mr. Crum matter. Although she has managed to plant seeds of suspicion in Grandpa's mind, things don't move fast enough to suit her. Forcing Herb and Henry to let her print a sensational story anent Mr. Crum in their amateur neighborhood paper, she sets the stage for the final fireworks. When they see it, enraged Crum has no difficulty in persuading humiliated Julia to elope with him. To forestall this, Florence rounds up Noble, and they lead a comic chase caravan to the minister's home, where as the service is interrupted Grandma Atwater arrives with the facts that reveal Crum in his true false colors and Noble takes his place at the altar while Florence is enshrined as a heroine in the heart of everyone but Crum.

Previewed in the Alexander theatre, Glendale, first-run suburban theatre. The audience found the picture's entertainment quality a full repayment for the inconvenience and discomfort caused by a torrential downpour.

Road Gang

(First National)

Drama

Exceptional exploitation is called for in showmen's handling of this picture, for it is sheer drama, of the type that borders on brutality in spots. The action naturally is in the direction of the male element of audiences, so that campaign concentration necessarily is toward the womanfolk.

The film, as the title implies, deals with prisoners and unspeakable conditions under which some convicts are made to serve their sentences and live their lives. Contrasted with this is romance, capably handled by those concerned but not in a strong enough manner to offset the motivating theme.

Inasmuch as it has been some time since prison stories enjoyed a vogue, especially during the period immediately following "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang," and inasmuch as news stories frequently are cropping out from different sections of the country dealing with jail breaks and the conditions under which convicts are forced to live, exhibitors should be entirely familiar with the type material presented here.

With that to serve as a topical exploitation basis, there is the fact that the production as a whole is an action drama, providing one surprising thrill after another and with slight romantic love interest complications accenting the tensity of the drama.

For cast names there are Donald Woods, Carlyle Moore, Jr., Kay Linaker, Henry O'Neill and Joseph Crehan. Louis King directed.

The picture opens with an expose of a southern state's crooked political regime by Woods, correspondent for a Chicago newspaper. After refusing a bribe in the form of a soft job with the politicians, Woods finds himself sentenced to a prison farm on trumped up charges. His paper is denied the truth of the whole matter and only his fiancee, Miss Linaker, keeps her faith in him.

Living in unspeakable surroundings with men that are more like animals, and subjected to terrible cruelty, Woods fights to avoid going mad in face of the tortures. His pal, sentenced with him, breaks under the strain, and is electrocuted on a wire fence as he tries to escape.

Following a visit to the farm by Miss Linaker, through whom he tried to smuggle out a story to expose the conditions of the prison, Wood is tortured and sentenced to another prison, in a coal mine, from which men seldom return alive.

Through the assistance of his fiancee, however, Wood notifies his editor in Chicago and the aid of the attorney general is enlisted. Following several gripping sequences, in which the prisoners unite to aid Woods, he is allowed to present his facts before the court and as a result the political dictator is ruined, conditions are improved in the prisons, and the hero is romantically united with Miss Linaker as he journeys to Chicago and the city desk.—Baehler, New York.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by Louis King. Story by Harold Buckley and Abem Finkel. Screen play by Dalton Trumbo. Release date not set. Running time, 63 minutes. P. C. A. Certificate No. 1752. Adult audience classification.

Love Before Breakfast

(Universal)

Comedy

Built upon the premise that a man and a woman can't get along either with or without each other, this picture stacks up as the kind of attraction for any kind of audience. Nicely produced, set in a semi-sophisticated atmosphere, the yarn is motivated by a well grounded series of uniquely contrived situations, which, with action and dialogue expertly blended, result in the picture stepping along at a fast pace. Wholesome, while having just enough of that intimate romantic quality to keep interest continually pepped up, the yarn concentrates on fun.

As it goes, Kay Colby and Bill Wadsworth are very much in love, so much so that to keep the ardently inclined business tycoon Scott Miller at a safe distance, she endeavors to pursuade Bill to forego an Asiatic trip for the company. Bill, looking to his future, is determined to sail. On the same boat Scott is shipping one of his current flames, Contessa Campanella. His idea is that Bill and the Contessa will fall in love and the way will be clear for him to land Kay.

But the plans are only partly successful. Kay, getting wise to the skullduggery that Scott has practised, becomes the woman whose fury knows no scorn. Though Scott is always getting her out of difficulties, he gets no thanks until Kay gets a cable that Bill is going to marry Contessa. Then she capitulates to Scott. In order to give Bill and Kay a fair break, Scott orders him back. Burnt up at Scott's arranging of people's lives, even though her mother tries to cool her off, Kay now wants nothing to do with Scott. A yachting party is arranged for the foursome, Kay, Bill, Scott and Mrs. Colby. Kay kicks over the traces, preferring to undergo hardships in the company of Bill while the rest enjoy life's luxuries. Action stepping up to a faster pace, Scott is compelled to wallop Kay to save her after she had fallen into the ocean, and, as she still battles adamantly to have a little say in the matter, carries her up to the captain of his boat, who marries them as they still squabble with each other.

The kind of show that's all fun, there never being a serious moment in it, even though there are occasional bits of drama to contrast the dominating hilarity, a campaign that accentuates that quality and has the power to convince audiences that the show will afford them plenty of laughs, looks to be the angle which, in addition to the publicity naturally accruing to the principal names, will most effectively sell it.

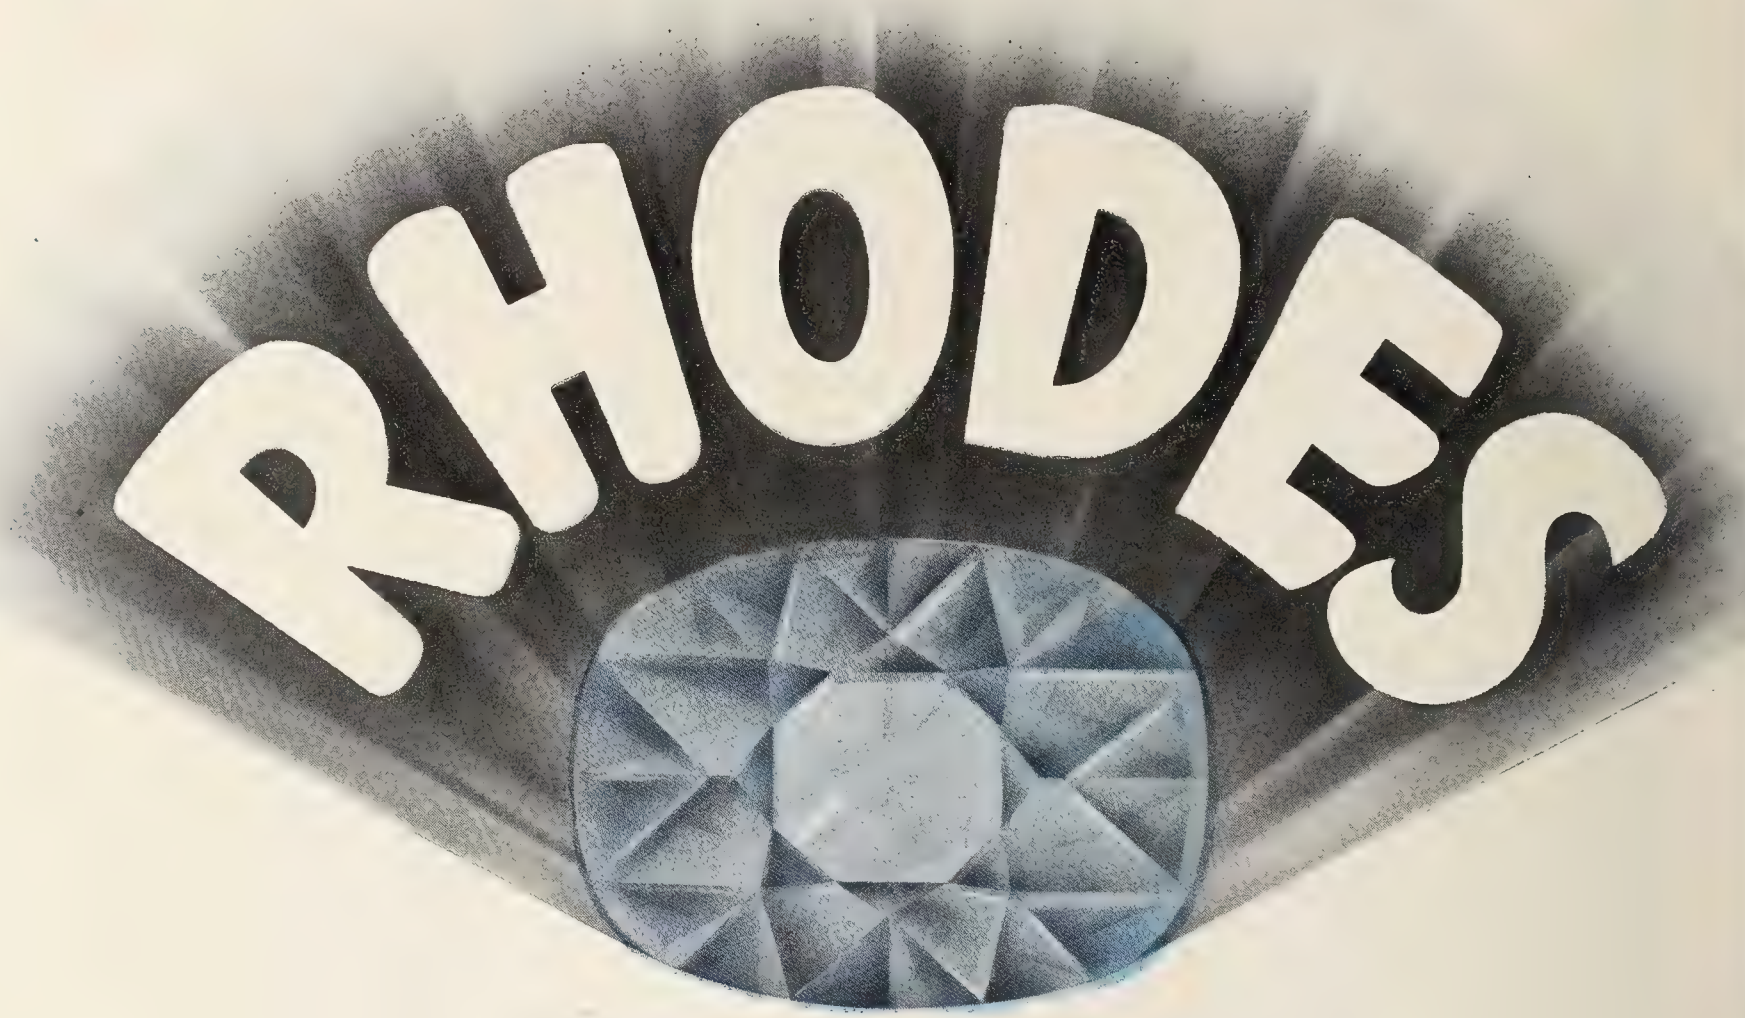
These Three



(United Artists - Goldwyn)

Drama

In this adaptation of a widely discussed novel and stage play, the theme of the original work has been eliminated and in the place of that questionable subject and for screen entertainment purposes creating a sounder premise, an amazing dramatic situation has been made the basis for the motivating plot. While four adults are directly concerned as the objectives of the plot, it is created, carried on and brought to completion by two children. In those roles excellent performances are contributed by Bonita Granville, who played the part of Mary on the stage, and Marcia Mae Jones. Nevertheless the picture is not a children's attraction.

for teen age girls. Dr. Cardin falls in love with Karen and it is evident that Martha also has a silent affection for the doctor. Little Mary Tilford, a lying, vicious child with a sadistic tendency to practice cruelties, mental and physical, on her school mates, has been a thorn in the side of Martha and Karen. One night, though the occasion is innocent, the child sees Cardin in Martha's room. A bit later, Martha's hairbrained aunt, Mrs. Mortar, whose presence in the school has added nothing to its dignity or efficient operation, is given her walking papers. A woman in whom self-pity is highly developed, she accuses Martha of two-timing Karen, and her remarks are overheard by Mary.

The child, disciplined by the teachers for a minor infraction, runs away to her grandmother's home, and makes Rosalie accompany her. Styling herself the victim of persecution, Mary tells Mrs. Tilford a fantastic and horrible story about conditions in the school as they concern Martha, Karen and Cardin, and forces Rosalie to substantiate her lying statements. Upon the advice of Mrs. Tilford, parents remove their children from school. Though the trio plead with the old dowager to understand the truth of the matter, she is adamant. Suing for slander, they lose their case, to be mocked and derided by the moralistically rigid New Englanders.

As tragedy comes to Martha when she sees that Karen is coming to believe that there might be something to the stories about Carlin and Martha, flighty Mrs. Mortar returns. Then when Martha tells Karen to take Carlin or she will try to, the chums separate. Aboard a train carrying them away from New England, Mrs. Mortar lets go remarks that make the whole case clear to Martha. Returning, she gets hold of little Rosalie and, takes her to Mrs. Tilford's home, where the whole truth comes out. With Mary proved a lying brat, Mrs. Mortar seeks to do everything possible to atone for her sin to Martha, who wants only the satisfaction of having the world know that her character is pure and unsullied. As Mary gets the punishment she deserves, the finale has Karen joining Carlin in Vienna.

Spy 77

(First Division)

Drama

Espionage intrigue and a romantic theme form the basic elements of this production. With the World War as a background the motivating story centers around an Italian woman, a member of her country's secret service, and an Austrian officer, who, when cashiered out of the army for having secret military documents in his possession, enlists under an assumed name in the Austrian secret service. Love for the Austrian prevents the Italian spy from disclosing the Austrian's identity when she discovers him in Rome on an espionage mission. The Austrian however considers love for his country comes before his love for a woman and accomplishes his mission.

The plot is stereotyped in its handling of World War espionage and differs from the usual only in its ending, which finds the Austrian escaping from Italian soil at the expense of the life of the woman he loves. The action is slow for the most part, with occasional sequences of activity. The acting is good but the cast is comparatively unknown and presents a selling problem. Greta Nissen plays the Marchesa Marcella Galdi, the gallant but misguided Italian spy, Carl Diehl, the Austrian officer, and Don Alvarado is Valenti, the chief of the Italian secret service. Esme Percy as the traitor performs excellently.

The Marchesa and Diehl are dining when Valenti arrives and escorts the Marchesa home informing her that the Austrian secret service is becoming aware of their presence. Destroying incriminating papers they prepare to leave. Diehl arriving at his apartment finds a delegation of the secret service, who searching his apartment find important military documents. Although innocent, the documents having been planted by Valenti, Diehl, as is customary to Austrian officers, is given the opoprtunity to blow his brains out. Diehl however re-enlists in the army under an assumed name.

Applying for duty with the secret service Diehl is recognized but is given a chance to clear his name. Sent on a mission to Italy, Diehl bails out when his plane is attacked by anti-aircraft guns. He escapes but is wounded in the arm. Later in an Italian hospital Diehl meets the Marchesa again; she allows him to escape. The Marchesa and Diehl meet again in Rome. He with the aid of an Italian traitor impersonates an Italian aviator and is entrusted with secrets to be delivered to the Italian operative on the Austrian frontier. The Marchesa, aware of his deception, tries to stop him as he prepares to fly to Austria. She hangs to the cockpit of the plane as it leaves the ground but Diehl pushes her off. Diehl arrives safely in Austria, clears his name, and discloses the leak in the Austrian secret service.—Mooney, New York.

The Leathernecks Have Landed

(Republic)

Military Melodrama

The deep, full bag of exploitation tricks relating to promotion of pictures built on military service (not war pictures per se) can be turned inside out in box office behalf of a picture that charts the roistering, brawling course of a U. S. Marine half way around the world and from popularity with his buddies through dishonorable discharge and subsequent heroism to reinstatement. Starting in a Cuban jail, the scene moves immediately to Shanghai, thence into the Chinese interior where the disgraced Leatherneck is engaged in gun running, finally back on board ship Philippines bound.

The gun-running episodes parallel reported current conditions closely enough to give the picture timely pertinence.

Lew Ayres as the swashbuckling Marine is the sharply outstanding player. Isabel Jewell as the girl provides the sole feminine interest. Jimmy Ellison, Ward Bond and Maynard Holmes are the too rugged individualist's buddies. J. Carrol Naish and James Burke handle the dirty work.

Private Woody Davis of the U. S. Marines, star Don Juan and barroom battler of his company, involves his buddies, "Mac" MacDonald and "Tubby" Waters, in a brawl which terminates with their arrest by Cuban authorities. Their release obtained by their commanding officer, they are lectured on return to shipboard, Davis declaring himself reformed henceforth. Arrived at Shanghai, MacDonald declines to accompany him ashore. Waters goes along. In a barroom Davis fights with Drenov, a Russian gunrunner, and Waters is killed by a bullet intended for Davis, dying in the arms of "Brooklyn," a blonde from that place whom they have met in the saloon. On his return to the foreign settlement, where the Marines are quartered, Davis is dishonorably discharged.

Returning to the barroom, seeking Drenov, Davis meets "Brooklyn" and together they go to the dock to attend final rites for the murdered Waters. Davis stays in Shanghai, looking for Drenov, who is finally located by "Brooklyn." Davis traces him to the warehouse where he is employed as a truck driver and, in a fight, shoots and kills him. Owners of the warehouse, who turn out to be gunrunners, catch Davis in the act and give him Drenov's job, by the terms of which he accepts personal responsibility for smuggling, through a blockade established by the Marines, to bandits in the interior.

Succesful in this, he arrives at the outpost where a bandit leader is supposed to obtain the smuggled munitions by means of a fake raid on the transport company headquarters. Before the raid, Brooklyn arrives with news that authorities have found Drenov's body and are tracing his murderer. Simultaneously the Marines arrive to guard the post and it becomes evident that Davis' operations will bring about the death of some of his former buddies. As the raid takes place he manages to deceive the bandits to the extent of placing his supply of machine guns in possession of the Marines. A furious battle ensues, in which Davis and others are wounded, but his courage and devotion to his country have been established and, on recovery, he is reinducted into the service, as "Brooklyn" plans to meet him in the Philippines.—Weaver, New York.

Musical Comedy

Showmen have a natural exploitation hook upon which to hand their campaigns in the song, "The Music Goes 'Round and Around," that crazy, catchy piece that swept the country a few weeks ago. Farley and Riley and their Onyx Club Band introduce it in the picture in its original version.

The picture, as a whole, isn't a pretentious one by any means, but its production values are excellent. It concerns itself during its first two-thirds of running with Harry Richman, his facetious crowning and singing. Rochelle Hudson and Walter Connolly are the other important names in the cast.

Victor Schertzinger directed, and his later sequences appear to be better than the earlier ones, for during the early reels the action continually slips back and seems always to lose momentum. With the arrival of Farley and Riley, and their song, things immediately pick up and move on to a rapid climax.

Romance predominates over the comedy and music presented, for the most part, with Richman and Miss Hudson as the lovers. Richman's vocal talents are given full play, and his singing of "Life Begins," "Susannah" and "Rolling Along" is in keeping with anything he has done before, and is particularly reminiscent of his "I Love a Parade."

The story, in brief, concerns a Broadway star, Richman, and a troupe of showboat actors, whom he brings to Broadway under false pretenses, only to lose them, and nearly the heroine, when they realize their serious efforts are looked upon as superb comedy and farce.

Tiring of his life as a Broadway star and needing a vacation, Richman deserts New York and finally winds up in a small town in Mississippi. Here he meets the showboat run by Connolly and is hired as an actor by Connolly's daughter, Miss Hudson.

Finding life on the river much to his liking, Richman saves the boat, unknown to his newfound friends, by paying off various debts, but falling deeper in love with Miss Hudson all the while.

Suddenly Richman, after several vocal moments, decides to bring the whole show to New York for incorporation into his new revue.

Before opening night Miss Hudson discovers Richman's secret and learns he is really the big star as well as that she loves him. When the curtain goes up it is a different story and the players resent the laughter that greets their serious efforts and leave the show. Richman searches for them, finally locating Miss Hudson back on the boat with her father.

Exhibitors might do well to remember when preparing their campaigns that Harry Richman is well known on Broadway and in many cosmopolitan cities, but that in many a town he will be a newcomer to many.—BAEHLER, New York.

The Trail of the Lonesome Pine

(Paramount-Wanger)

Color Romance Drama

Several weeks ago the HERALD published a survey of the then-in-work "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," Walter Wanger's Technicolor and modernized picturization of the John Fox, Jr. classic of mountain folk drama, romance and tragedy. Seen as finished product at the Westwood Village theatre, the picture spoke for itself. It convinced the SRO preview audience that it is one of the most important pictures. not simply because it is a color picture in which the art of intelligently and expertly applying hues and tints approaches perfection, rather more because of the depth and power of its motivating human interest heart touching story, the high quality of acting provided by principals and support, finesse of direction and worth of substantiating production features.

This is not just another color picture. The color in "Lonesome Pine" is planned color. As an embellishing but nevertheless integral adjunct to oldtime melodrama keyed right up to a modern pitch, it fills no other function than what is expected of carefully prepared and delivered dialogue, intelligently developed and directed action and logically knitted coherence in theme composition. Considering from any other viewpoint, mainly that of exploitation novelty, this demonstration of the entertainment and commercial value of color application might lead to a misconception of the picture's dual worths.

Marked by accomplished and artistic performances on the parts of Sylvia Sidney, Henry Fonda, Fred MacMurray, Fred Stone, Nigel Bruce, Beulah Bondi, Robert Barrat, Spanky MacFarland and Fuzzy Knight, the picture tells a story of throbbing elemental drama, romance and tragedy. Into the fastnessess of the Kentucky mountains, where for generations the clans Tolliver and Falin have considered their feuding a holy war, comes engineer Jack Hale. Saving the life of wounded Dave, he wins the friendship of Judd and Melissa, arouses strange emotions in the heart of June, and becomes the idol of little Buddie.

Into the midst of a simple people who know no law other than the fervent one of vengeance expressed in the creed "a life for a life," he brings a wealth to the Tollivers and Falins which they are incapable of comprehending and opens the vista of a new life to the Tollivers. A "foreigner," he encourages June to leave her mountain home and go to school, while thus winning her affection, he becomes the enemy of Dave who, bent on wrecking vengeance upon him, is saved from the Falins when both, first battling among themselves, combine to fight off the attack of the Falins. A victim of the Falin fury, his construction camp is wrecked and fired, his workers terrorized. With June in Louisville, little Buddie is the victim of a diabolic Falin bombing. The sequences ensuant upon the child's burial, giving Fuzzy Knight opportunity to hit the high spot of his career, have elements to stir the most tender emotions. Making peace with Buck Falin, Dave is treacherously shot by a Falin. In the tragedy that sears the hearts of Judd and Melissa, June vents the full torrent of her emotions upon Hale, only to have the dying words of Dave carry into her heart the full significance of the handshake between Judd and Buck.

The picture gripped the attention of the preview audience. Ninety per cent of the preview spectators did not know what they were going to see. The title flash didn't seem to arouse much initial enthusiasm. But before the picture was helf a reel old, the audience was whipped into the full spirit of its mood. Many times they applauded and at the conclusion the picture received the greatest burst of applause heard in years.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Hit and Run Driver

(MGM)

Superb Safety Subject

Superbly staged, intelligently conceived and purposefully produced, Number 5 of the "Crime Doesn't Pay" series rates high among the short product of recent release, a subject inviting, commanding, extensive exploitation and more than worthwhile for its own sake, financial consideration aside, as a major item in the drive-safely literature of the period and as a builder of screen prestige. Like the Reader's Digest article, "— And Sudden Death," it should be put before the eyes of every driver and pedestrian in the world. It teaches the same lesson, to both, and in many respects more graphically than the printed page can teach it.

As to structure, the subject has the form of a detective story, faithfully yet dramatically built upon facts of record. A young man and woman afoot on a country road at night are run down by a motorist who ignores their pleas for help and escapes, invents an alibi, changes tires, installs a new windshield and believes his car cannot be identified. Detectives use modern methods to trace bits of broken glass, tire marks, finally a lens from one of the victims' spectacles to find the car, locate the owner and break down his alibi. All is done in thoroughly practical and dramatic manner, with proper but not exaggerated emphasis on phychological aspects powerful in their effect on observers.

Cooperation of motor clubs, safety councils, newspapers and other influences on the side of safe driving should be forthcoming automatically. Favorable audience reaction may be counted upon as a foregone conclusion.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Movie Melodies on Parade

(Paramount)

Musical Novelty

Andre Kostelanetz and his orchestra, aided by a mixed chorus of fourteen voices, perform the hit song numbers from ten or a dozen motion pictures, going back as far as "Monte Carlo" and coming into fresher memory. In some cases memorable scenes from the pictures are faded in to give color and background. Mary Eastman signs the only solo. Perhaps because orchestra and chorus are stiffly staged and an elaborate formality of presentation prevails throughout, the subject is a bit less lively than the nature of its content suggests.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Framing Father

(RKO-Radio)

Pattern Comedy

Handicapped to some extent by material frayed by almost continuous use over two decades, Ford Sterling's vigorous efforts to put snap and momentum into the familiar routine wherein substantial citizen's son's association with torch singer sweetheart is credited to parent by mistake with violent marital and publicity complications before identities are untangled for the happy ending. Marjorie Gateson as the wife, Kenneth Howell as the boy and Dorothy Kent as the girl try equally hard, but the result is commonplace program material. Leslie Goodwins directed from a screen play by Charles Roberts and himself.—Running time, 16½ minutes.

Not Now

(Paramount)

Reliable Cartoon Comic

Betty Boop's trusty pup Pudgy carries the burden of humor this time, giving battle to a nine-lived cat and innumerable feline family connections in a rippling sequence of ground and lofty encounters that drew deep-seated laughs on a long and varied program at the Paramount theatre on Broadway. The interest is steady and mounting, the animation excellent. A fit frolic for the film bill.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Down the Ribber
(RKO-Radio)
Effective Comedy

Relying for laughs on soundly humorous dialogue by Al Boasberg, who also directed and appears in the picture, Leon Errol gets a good deal more out of this comedy than is commonly his average. A major portion of the action takes place in a motor club's headquarters where Errol, known as a practical joker, goes to report the theft of his automobile and is made the butt of many and varied gags framed for his benefit by members of a "ribber's club" to which he seeks admission. Fully half of the footage is consumed by sustained banter that is sure-fire laugh material in the ears of car owners, probably in other ears as well. He turns the tables on his tormentors, a little feebly but reasonably, for the fadeout. Kitty McHugh is the only feminine member of an extensive and capable cast. Made of much more substantial stuff than a majority of recent short comedies, the subject will stand up under exploitation.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Moscow Moods
(Paramount)
Russian Musical

Yasha Bunchuk and his Cossacks, instrumental and choral, perform a number of familiar Russian numbers, including "The Volga Boatmen" and "Dark Eyes," in a rich setting, a banquet hall of Empire days. The singing is superb, as is the orchestra support, and the conductor plays an original composition on the cello. Strictly Russian and almost entirely classical, the subject calls for a certain degree of care in programming lest its distinctly ornamental value be wasted. In a balanced program it should give good account of itself.—Running time, 11 minutes.

The Lucky Corner
(MGM)
Average Our Gang Comedy

Setting no new highs, or lows, for the staple Our Gang series, this one hinges upon the juvenile efforts of Spanky and his associates to drum up business for a sidewalk lemonade stand operated by a friend and opposed by his business enemy. A street parade in which a phonograph is used to provide band music supplies the high point for laughs. After that there is a good deal of slightly overstretched slapstick, winding up, as usual, with the kids in command of the situation. A regulation stanza in the long box-office song of Our Gang. —Running time, 16 minutes.

Winged Pageantry
(RKO-Radio)
Ornithological Novelty

Number 4 in the Struggle to Live series presents in routine manner informative, adequate shots of various species of marine birds in their nesting season. Pelicans, gulls, gannets, cormorants, puffins and murres are shown with eggs and young, careful narration giving ample relevant data without striving for humorous effect. The subject is pleasantly, painlessly educational, an orthodox item with which to supplement any program.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Collie
(Paramount)
Interesting Topical

Depicting the various breeds of collie and touching lightly upon the special qualities of each, the narrator takes the observer to a sheep range and devotes the major portion of the subject to an exhibition of canine shepherding given by an experienced dog and its instinctively imitative whelp. Various difficult assignments are given the veteran, such as cutting out five sheep from a flock of hundreds, driving them through designated lanes into a three-sided pen set in the open prarie, controlling them by eye alone, and the younger dog brings the flock into the fold for the night. The canine cunning portrayed holds interest steadily. —Running time, 10 minutes.

Felix the Cat and the Goose That Laid the Golden Egg
(RKO-Radio)
Timely Color Cartoon

Although no political or propaganda attitude toward it is taken, direct disbursement of funds to the needy is made the basis of a fast, competently constructed color comic that presents three characters high in juvenile favor, Felix the cat, Captain Kidd and the goose that laid the golden egg. The goose, working with Felix, is busily engaged in laying golden eggs which the cat grinds into coins and distributes freely to the poor on application. Captain Kidd steals the bird, sails away with it on his pirate ship, is pursued by Felix, who defeats him in hand-to-hand battle and recovers the generous fowl. Coloration is admirable, humor well rounded, points well made.—Running time, 7⅓ minutes.

Paramount Pictorial No. 8
(Paramount)
Balanced Diversion

Art, sport and entertainment are admirably blended in this edition of a screen magazine helpful to weak features, decorative to any program. The designing of a typeface by Frederick W. Gowdy, whose artistry is a typographical tradition, is traced from pencil sketch to completed font, affording persons who merely read a swift, enlightening glimpse into the background of modern printing symbols. This is followed by arresting shots of 18-foot sail boats that carry a fantastic area of canvas in sprint competition marked with risk and thrill. One of the gentlemen who imitate the sounds of animals and birds for radio program purposes, and most realistically, closes the subject informatively and with humor. The release is one of the best of a dependable series.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Important News
(MGM)
Able Impersonation

Chic Sale's impersonation of a small town editor who knows what his readers want and gives it to them is less spectacular and more convincing that many of his more celebrated characterizations. Having given his streamer to a Government report of an impending frost, he puts the personally witnessed gunning of a gangster by G-men in the obituary column, is ridiculed by his cronies but commended in type by the publisher of a metropolitan newspaper as the perfect journalist. A commentary on newspaper judgment as it is practiced in America, it is also a pleasantly entertaining subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Vamp 'Til Ready
(MGM)
Pattern Domestic Comedy

In the ancient but reasonably honorable wifey-teacher-hubby-a-lesson pattern, Charlie Chase and Zeffie Tilbury do the usual thing in not very unusual manner with the usual result. Chase's somewhat mouse-like wife feigns illness and impersonates her livelier twin sister to test his faithfulness, lures him to a party, proposes various adventures, is rebuffed and resumes her own identity in time to hear his confession and forgive. All very much as Sidney Drew did it when Charlie Chase was in rompers, and every comedian in between has done it at least once.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Finer Points
(Paramount)
Fine Dog Study

For huntsmen and dog lovers, with plenty to interest others, this Grantland Rice Sportlight presents the bird dog in action and out, pointing, recovering, a superb study of canine instinct and training. Ted Husing's narration is competent, free of sports jargon and only lightly touched with humor. Useful to a program in the effective way of D. W. Griffith's frequently interpolated animal closeups in pictures of yesteryear, the subject warrants wide exhibition.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Airhoppers
(MGM)
Instructive Novelty

Pete Smith glibly explains the glider rider, his mental as well as his mechanical processes, while remarkable shots of the motorless planes taking off from mountain tops, stunting over yawning chasms, competing in flight tricks are run off in slightly stunning succession. Without Smith's narration the subject would be good. With it, it is something more than twice as entertaining. A comedy finish is achieved without violence to the topical integrity of the presentation.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Release Date Not Set

Toeplitz Productions, headed by Ludivico Toeplitz in London, and producers of "The Beloved Vagabond," has not yet arranged for the American distribution rights to the picture although it was previously reported it would be handled by Gaumont British in this country.

FILMS NOT AFFECTED BY WISCONSIN NRA

Exchanges and exhibitors will not be affected by the state NRA law in Wisconsin controlling trade practices.

The Wisconsin supreme court has declared constitutional the 1935 Wisconsin Recovery Act.

The governor may proceed to authorize codes so long as their provisions "bear a reasonable relation to the elimination of unfair methods and practices," but the codes may not, however, go so far as to "deal with the whole subject" of establishing hours of labor, wage scales and working conditions.

It was declared by Fred M. Wylie, who represented the state in arguing the test case before the state Supreme Court, that only industries doing an intrastate business will come under the provisions of the WRA, and, largely because of this aspect, exhibitors and distributors in Wisconsin have to date made no effort to secure a code for their industry. It is generally conceded by exhibitors that the film business is an interstate business, and as such provisions of the WRA would not be binding. Inasmuch as the industry has not petitioned for a code, it does not function under this act.

" 'Little Lord Fauntleroy' is greater than 'David Copperfield'. I have never been so thrilled by the performance of any human being as by the portrayal of 'Ceddie' given by Freddie Bartholomew. 42. Louis Ellman, who is a resident of Chicago, Ill., and from July 1, 1932 to some time in 1935, was branch manager at St. Louis, Missouri, of RKO Distributing Corporation.

43. The aforesaid individual defendants have participated in conducting the business and affairs of the respective corporate defendants above named in connection with the trade and commerce among the several States in motion pictures hereinafter described. They have participated in, authorized, ordered, and done the acts and things hereinafter alleged and other acts and things to petitioner unknown.

44. The Vitaphone Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc., Vitagraph, Inc., Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, and General Theatrical Enterprises, Incorporated are members of a large group of affiliated corporations subject to the control of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. Said corporations together are engaged in producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures. These corporations when hereinafter referred to collectively will be described as the Warner group.

45. Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, and Paramount Theatre Service Corporation are members of a large group of affiliated corporations subject to the control of Paramount Pictures, Inc., a corporation under the laws of the State of New York. Said corporations together are engaged in producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures. These corporations when hereinafter referred to collectively will be described as the Paramount group.

46. RKO Distributing Corporation is one of a large group of affiliated corporations subject to the control of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, a corporation under the laws of the State of Maryland. Said corporations together are engaged in producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures. These corporations when hereinafter referred to collectively will be described as the RKO group.

47. The value of the asets, capital, and resources of the several groups above named have been as follows:

Warner group (as of August 25, 1934)	$168,342,026.33
Paramount group (as of December 31, 1933)	405,604,978.47
RKO group (as of December 31, 1933)	193,290,633.59
Total	$767,237,638.39

48. The several groups of corporations above named during the period when the acts and things herein alleged occurred, have owned, leased, operated, or otherwise controlled many hundreds of motion picture theatres located in the several States of the United States, and principally in the large cities and metropolitan areas, approximately as follows:

Warner group	581 theatres
Paramount group	976 theatres
RKO group	254 theatres
Total	1,811 theatres

49. Each of said groups has exhibited in said theatres the pictures produced by its own group, by the other two groups named, and by other producers.

50. A very large part of the supply of motion pictures in the United States, especially feature pictures, has been produced by the defendant corporations or by corporations affiliated with, or controlled or used by them as instrumentalities in that regard, in studios in the State of California and elsewhere, by photographing scenes, including dramas and other subjects, on negative film, and developing and arranging the negative film, and printing large numbers of positive prints or copies in laboratories in the State of California and other States.

51. There have been in the several States, and especially in the large cities thereof, many motion picture theatres, owned, leased, operated, or otherwise controlled by persons and corporations (hereinafter called Exhibitors) who have been engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures at said theatres, by projecting the images recorded upon said positive prints upon screens, accompanied by the reproduction of synchronized sound effects.

52. Motion pictures are of three kinds: features, shorts, and news reels. Feature pictures are the longer and more elaborate pictures, in which the widely known and admired players appear. They are the more remunerative pictures. They are indispensable in the conduct of the business of Exhibitors.

53. The total production of first-class feature motion pictures in the United States has been as shown in the following tabulation:

	Season 1932-1933	1933-1934	1934-1935	1935-1936	Average	Percent of average
Warner	52	54	48	54	52	16%
Paramount	59	57	52	65	58	17%
RKO	45	41	42	42	43	13%
Columbia	26	35	37	40	35	10%
Fox	44	47	45	58	49	15%
Metro	44	39	44	51	45	13%
Universal	26	35	36	36	33	10%
United Artists	16	15	24	20	19	6%
Total production	312	323	328	366	334	100%

The figures for the season 1935-1936 are for pictures to be produced during the period August 1, 1935, to July 31, 1936, according to announcements made by the respective producers.

54. The average percentage of first class feature motion pictures produced and distributed by the Warner, Paramount, and RKO groups during the seasons shown above has been approximately 46 per cent of the total production.

55. Continuously for many years last past the defendant corporations have been engaged in making contracts with Exhibitors, for exhibition by, and shipment and delivery to, said Exhibitors of the aforesaid motion pictures at the theatres referred to in paragraph 51, the several defendant corporations making said contracts directly and immediately or through other corporations or agencies acting in their behalf, affiliated with, or controlled or used by them as instrumentalities in that regard. In pursuance of said contracts motion pictures have been shipped and transported from the aforesaid laboratories and other places to Exhibitors located in other States. After use by Exhibitors in one State said motion pictures have been shipped to Exhibitors in other States.

56. The Ambassador, New Grand Central, and Missouri theatres are motion picture theatres located in the City of St. Louis, Missouri. The Exhibitors who have been conducting the motion picture exhibition business at said theatres have been regularly and continuously engaged in making contracts for motion pictures in the manner aforesaid. Said Exhibitors were making contracts, in the manner aforesaid, with Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., The Vitaphone Corporation, First National Pictures, Inc., Vitagraph, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, and RKO Distributing Corporation, for motion pictures, especially feature pictures, for exhibition at the Ambassador, New Grand Central, and Missouri theatres, until approximately the months of February, March, and August, 1934. In pursuance of said contracts, motion pictures have been transported and shipped from the laboratories and other places aforesaid to the City of St. Louis for delivery to said theatres, in the course of the trade and commerce among the States aforesaid.

57. In the manner and by the means set forth herein, within the Southern District of New York, the defendants and others to the petitioner unknown (said defendants and others being hereinafter described as conspirators), in violation of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies" (26 Stat. 209), have made contracts and are engaged in a combination and conspiracy, in restraint of the aforesaid trade and commerce among the several States in motion pictures, and are attempting to monopolize said trade and commerce. The following described acts, and many other acts, means and methods to the petitioner unknown, have constituted the means and methods of affectuating, and have been and are being committed by the conspirators for the purpose of effectuating, and as a part of, the aforesaid contracts, combination, and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce, and the aforesaid attempt to monopolize trade and commerce:

58. The conspirators caused the cancellation of so-called franchises, to wit, contracts which provided for a supply of motion pictures for use at the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres for many years. Said franchises and the cancellation thereof are more fully described in paragraphs 59 to 74, inclusive, of this petition.

59. Sometime during the years 1927 or 1928, the St. Louis Properties Corporation, which was the owner of the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres, leased the theatres to Skouras Super Theatres Corporation. The Ambassador and Missouri theatres were leased for a period of twenty-five years, and the New Grand Central was leased for a period of ten years. Annual rentals were stipulated in the lease or leases.

60. Approximately fifty percent of the stock of Skouras Super Theatres Corporation was at that time, and has since been, owned by Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, Paramount Theatre Service Corporation, Paramount Pictures, Inc., or a corporation affiliated with or controlling them. The remainder of the stock of Skouras Super Theatres Corporation was owned by Skouras Bros. Enterprises, Inc., a corporation, all or almost all of whose voting stock, at the time of the cancellation herein described, was owned and held by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

61. The Paramount corporations referred to in paragraph 60 hereinabove, and Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., by virtue of their ownership of the stock of Skouras Super Theatres Corporation and Skouras Bros. Enterprises, Inc., were able to, and together did, dominate and control Skouras Super Theatres Corporation.

62. On Aug. 1, 1928, Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, or a corporation affiliated with or controlling them, entered into a contract with Skouras Super Theatres Corporation, whereby Skouras Super Theatres Corporation was granted a license to exhibit at the Ambassador and Missouri theatres the feature photoplays, short subject photoplays, and each etition of the Paramount News (with minor exceptions), released by the Paramount corporations for distribution to motion picture theatres in the United States during the period of twenty-five years commencing August 1, 1928.

63. The contract also granted to Skouras Super Theatres Corporation the right to the first run of the pictures, that is to say, to make the earliest public exhibition thereof in the City of St. Louis in the theatres named.

64. On Dec. 7, 1928, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., entered into a contract with Skouras Super Theatres Corporation, whereby Skouras Super Theatres Corporation was granted a license to exhibit at the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres, the feature motion pictures released by or for Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., during each of the annual motion picture seasons for twenty-three years beginning with the 1929-1930 season.

65. The contract also granted to Skouras Super Theatres Corporation the right to the first run of the pictures.

66. The contract provided, in effect, that if Skouras Super Theatres Corporation should lose control of the theatres, the person, firm, or corporation acquiring control thereof should assume the obligations and have the pictures provided for by the contract.

67. On Dec. 7, 1928, First National Pictures, Inc., entered into a contract with Skouras Super Theatres Corporation, whereby Skouras Super Theatres Corporation was granted a license to exhibit at the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres, the feature motion pictures released by or for First National Pictures, Inc., during each of the annual motion picture seasons for twenty-three years beginning with the 1929-1930 season.

68. The contract also granted to Skouras Super Theatres Corporation the right to the first run of the pictures.

69. The contract provided, in effect, that if Skouras Super Theatres Corporation should lose control of the theatres, the person, firm, or corporation acquiring control thereof should assume the obligations and have the pictures provided for by the contract.

70. On Dec. 7, 1928, The Vitaphone Corporation entered into a contract with Skouras Super Theatres Corporation, whereby The Vitaphone Corporation agreed for the term of years specified in the above described contracts with Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and First National Pictures, Inc., to furnish to Skouras Super Theatres Corporation synchronized scores, dialogue and sound effects to accompany and to be used in conjunction with the exhibition of the pictures provided for in the above described contracts with Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and First National Pictures, Inc.

71. Skouras Super Theatres Corporation defaulted in the payment of rents required under the above described leases for the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres. St. Louis Properties Corporation, the owner and lessor, demanded possession of the theatres.

72. On July 28, 1932, Skouras Super Theatres Corporation vacated and delivered the theatres to St. Louis Properties Corporation.

73. Thereupon Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. and the Paramount corporations, by virtue of their dominion and control of Skouras Super Theatres Corporation, caused that corporation, on July 28, 1932, to enter into a contract to cancel, and caused that corporation to cancel, the above described contracts for motion pictures between Skouras Super Theatres Corporation and Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., First National Pictures, Inc., The Vitaphone Corporation, and the Paramount corporations.

74. The cancellation of the contracts was made for the purpose of preventing any subsequent lessee of said theatres except Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., or a corporation affiliated with or controlled by it, from procuring for use at said theatres the pictures provided for by said contracts.

75. For the purpose of opposing and preventing the establishment or continuation of the motion picture exhibition business at the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres by any person or corporation except Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., or a corporation affiliated with or controlled by it, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., acquired a large number of bonds of the owners of said theatres secured by mortgages or other liens upon the properties containing the said theatres. The acquisition and use of said bonds is more fully described in paragraphs 76 to 80, inclusive, of this petition.

76. In August, 1932, a receiver was appointed by the District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri for the properties and buildings containing the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres. Committees representing bondholders owning bonds secured by mortgages and other liens on said properties were organized to represent the interests of the bondholders.

77. Thereafter Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., purchased approximately $375,000, face value, of bonds secured by said properties.

78. Thereafter Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. submitted to the bondholders' committees plans for the reorganization of the indebtedness secured by said properties and offers for the acquisition, directly or indirectly, of said properties and theatres by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. Said plans and offers were refused.

79. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., attempted to intervene in the receivership proceedings in the District Court to oppose and prevent the approval by the court of plans for the reorganization of the indebtedness and affairs of the owners of said properties relative thereto which had been submitted to the court. The attempted intervention was made by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., because the bondholders' plans for reorganization did not contemplate or provide for the acquisition, directly or indirectly, of said properties by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. The District Court denied the right of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., to intervene and overruled the objection lodged by it against the reorganization plan.

80. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., purchased the bonds and opposed the approval of the reorganization plan, as aforesaid, not in good faith, but solely for the purpose of coercing and compelling the owners of the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres to accept the plans of reorganization referred to in paragraph 78, and to transfer the possession and control of said theatres to Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., or to a corporation affiliated with or controlled by it, and to exclude and prevent any other person or corporation from engaging in the business of exhibiting motion pictures at said theatres.

81. The conspirators endeavored to intimidate, coerce, and compel the owners of said theatres, their representatives or agents, to transfer the possession and control thereof only to Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., or to a corporation affiliated with or controlled by it, and to refuse to grant a lease or leases for said theatres, or the possession and use thereof, to any other person or corporation; and endeavored to intimidate, coerce, and compel prospective lessees to refrain from leasing said theatres and engaging in the aforesaid trade and commerce among the several States in motion pictures (1) by threatening to acquire control of and to engross the entire supply of motion pictures which was available and necessary for use at the aforesaid theatres, (2) by threatening to prevent any lessees other than Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., or a corporation affiliated with or controlled by it, from acquiring any of the motion pictures which were available and necessary for use at the aforesaid theatres, (3) by threatening to cause said owners great injury, loss, and damage if said theatres should be leased to, acquired or used by any other person or corporation than Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., (4) by threatening to cause injury to any other lessee of said theatres by any and all means, including injury to any other lessee in his business, trade, reputation, and property in the exhibition of motion pictures at said theatres, (5) by threatening to spend, use and lose a large sum of money if necessary, and to use the entire resources of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., to so injure any other lessee, (6) by threatening to engage in the business of exhibiting motion pictures at St. Louis in competition with any other lessee of the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres, and to conduct said competing business in a malicious and unfair manner, that is to say, by engaging in any and all acts and practices of unfair com-

ALLIED'S POLICY ON LITIGATION

The committee on litigation of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors and the board of directors have adopted the following declaration of policy in matters of litigation involving and/or sponsored by independent exhibitors:

"That litigation which is national in character and which affects directly the interests of the independent exhibitors generally be undertaken when necessary by the national organization [of Allied States] and its general counsel [Abram F. Myers].

"That such cases as are brought to our attention by affiliated regional bodies in good standing may receive the attention and advice of the general counsel as a consultant; in addition, in such cases as involve principles of law important to independent exhibitors in general, the general counsel may, where deemed advisable, lend his specific personal aid provided all expenses are borne by the regional association invoking such aid."

petition which would cause, and for the purpose of causing, injury, loss, and damage to any Exhibitor at said theatres.

82. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. and General Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., on March 2, 1934, May 31, 1934, and August 17, 1934, entered into contracts with Mid-City Realty Company, whereby they leased the Shubert-Rialto Theatre in the City of St. Louis until September 14, 1935, for the exhibition of motion pictures. On August 29, 1935, General Theatrical Enterprises, Incorporated, exercised an option to extend the lease on said theatre to September 14, 1936.

83. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. and General Theatrical Enterprises, Incorporated, on Aug. 17, 1934, entered into a contract with Southern Real Estate & Financial Company, whereby they leased the Orpheum Theatre in the City of St. Louis until September 14, 1935, for the exhibition of motion pictures. On April 18, 1935, General Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., exercised an option to extend the lease on said theatre to Sept. 14, 1939, with the right to close the theatre at any time during the term.

84. The Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum theatres are not motion picture theatres. They were designed and had been used for stage shows. They are obsolete, small, and not suitable nor appropriate for the exhibition of motion pictures. They were and are without necessary and proper facilities, equipment, appointments, and conveniences of motion picture theatres. They had long been vacant and disused when leased by General Theatrical Enterprises, Incorporated. They are not as equally desirable for the exhibition of feature motion pictures as the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres. They are not theatres of the same type or character as the Ambassdor, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres. They are not theatres of a better type or character than the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres. They are theatres of an inferior type and character.

85. The Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum theatres continuously from the time when the above described leases were made until December 14, 1935, have been operated at great loss, to wit, in excess of $48,000, and they are still operated at a loss.

86. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. and General Theatrical Enterprises, Incorporated, leased the Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum theatres for the purpose of destroying the motion picture exhibition business of any lessees of the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres, and enabling them to acquire those theatres for themselves.

87. The aforesaid contracts leasing the Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum theatres were made and the theatres were operated by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. and General Theatrical Enterprises, Incorporated, not for the purpose of enabling them in good faith to engage in the motion picture exhibition business at those theatres, but primarily for the purpose of preventing any lessee of the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres from acquiring the motion pictures necessary to conduct the motion picture exhibition business at those theatres, and for the purpose of carrying out the threat to engage in the business of exhibiting motion pictures in competition with any other lessee of the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres, and to conduct said competing business in a malicious and unfair manner, as aforesaid.

88. The conspirators disparaged to the owners of the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres, their representatives, agents, and others, the lessees and prospective lessees of said theatres and their representatives and agents with regard to their credit and business reputations, and with regard to their ability and experience relative to the business of exhibiting motion pictures.

NEW CLEARANCE FOR MUSICALS

The growing popularity of pictures based on song hits, or featuring new musical numbers, has injected a new element into the clearance situation, according to leading San Francisco exhibitors.

Robert A. McNeil, in charge of theatres for the Golden State Theatre and Realty Company, is leading a drive for a revision of clearances in the San Francisco territory, with the hearty support of other theatre owners.

"I saw the preview on 'The Music Goes 'Round and 'Round'" he said, "and enjoyed it very much, but I could not help thinking that by the time the picture gets to my suburban theatres, the valves in the horns will be all worn out and instead of the music coming out, it will probably back up."

89. The conspirators arranged and agreed among themselves that Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., The Vitaphone Corporation, Vitagraph, Inc., First National Pictures, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, and RKO Distributing Corporation would refuse to enter into contracts for, or to furnish, motion pictures for use at the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres to any person or corporation except Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., or a corporation affiliated with or controlled by it.

90. In pursuance of the aforesaid arrangement and agreement, and especially to enable Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., to acquire, hold, and control all of the motion pictures necessary for use at the aforesaid theatres and which might otherwise have been available in the course of trade and commerce among the States to any lessee of said theatres, and for the purpose of preventing the lessee or lessees of the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres from procuring an adequate or any supply of motion pictures in the aforesaid trade and commerce for use at said theatres, the conspirators have refused to enter into contracts for or to furnish motion pictures for use at said theatres except to Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., or a corporation affiliated with or controlled by it.

91. In pursuance of the aforesaid arrangement and agreement Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation and RKO Distributing Corporation have entered into contracts granting to Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., or a corporation affiliated with and controlled by it, the right to exhibit at St. Louis all motion pictures distributed by them in the aforesaid trade and commerce among the States.

92. For the purpose of continuing and further effectuating the aforesaid arrangement and ageement, the conspirators have refused to enter into contracts for, or to furnish, motion pictures in the aforesaid trade and commerce among the States, for use at the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres to any person or corporation except Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., or a corporation affiliated with or controlled by it, during the motion picture season of 1935-1936, that is to say, during the period from on or about August 1, 1935, to July 31, 1936.

93. For many years Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, or companies affiliated and acting with them, have been entering into contracts with corporations affiliated with lessees of the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres, for motion pictures for use at other theatres operated by corporations affiliated with said lessees, including the Manchester and Balboa theatres at Los Angeles, California, the Strand Theatre at Long Beach, California, and Studio-Phoenix theatre at Phoenix, Arizona.

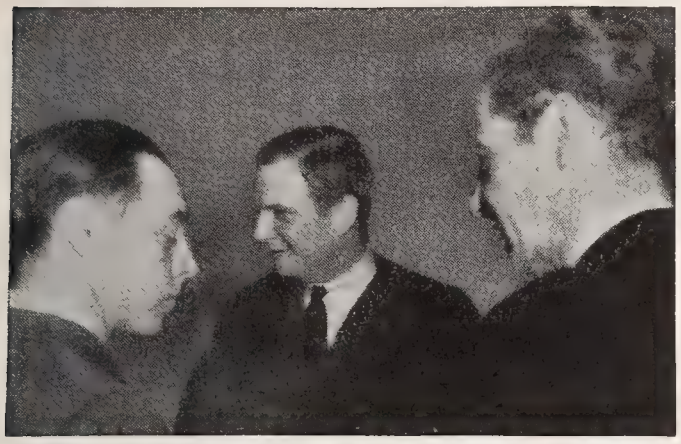
94. For many years Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., or companies affiliated with or acting for that corporation, have been entering into contracts with a corporation affiliated with lessees of the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres, for motion pictures for use at other theatres operated by corporations affiliated with said lessees, including the Roxy theatre at New York City, New York.

95. For many years RKO Distributing Corporation, or companies affiliated with or acting for that corporation, have been entering into contracts with corporations affiliated with lessees of the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres, for motion pictures for use at other theatres operated by corporations affiliated with said lessees located in the western states of the United States.

96. For the purpose of injuring and intimidating the lessees of the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central, coercing and compelling them to discontinue the exhibition business at said theatres, and to cease to engage in trade and commerce among the States in motion pictures for use at said theatres, the defendant corporations have threatened to refuse and have refused to enter into contracts with corporations affiliated with said lessees for pictures for use during the 1935-1936 season at the theatres referred to in paragraphs 93, 94 and 95, operated by said affiliated corporations.

97. The refusal to enter into contracts with said lessees, as aforesaid, has greatly and irreparably injured, and will continue to greatly and irreparably injure, them in their property and business, and will disable them from continuing to engage in the motion picture exhibition business at the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central and other theatres and in the trade and commerce aforesaid.

98. Because of the aforesaid contracts, combination, conspiracy, and attempt to monopolize, and the acts of the defendants in this petition alleged and described, the lessees of the Ambassador, Missouri, and New Grand Central theatres have been unable to procure an adequate supply of appropriate motion pictures in the aforesaid trade and commerce among the States for use at said theatres, and have been compelled to discontinue the business of exhibiting motion pictures at and to close some of said theatres for long periods of time.



99. Because of the inability to procure pictures, the lessees of said theatres have suffered the loss of large sums of money, and the public has been greatly and irreparably injured by

CANDID CAMERA SHOTS OF WELL KNOWN PEOPLE AT MARCH OF TIME PREVIEW IN NEW YORK FEB. 11th

John Martin, March of Time Editor and Managing Editor of TIME, talks over the new release with Ned Depinet, President of RKO Distributing Corporation.

IMPORTANT!

REVIEWS—NO. 2 FOR 1936—U. S.

NEW YORK SUN—The current MARCH OF TIME deserves applause This edition is certainly the best, a remark I've probably made when reviewing each issue, so surely and rapidly does this editorial newsreel improve.

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS—Progress of Russia's second Five Year Plan . . . Hartman's Solution delightfully demonstrated . . . and amazing scenes of Father Divine's No. 1 heaven in Harlem . . . comprise the three interesting and graphic episodes in the new MARCH OF TIME.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY—Extremely good, with expert use of the camera, is the sequence on Father Divine . . . who dominates a vast group of disciples centered in New York's Harlem.

VARIETY—Per usual, high-grade. Again MARCH OF TIME shapes up as sturdy subfeature material.

NEW YORK TIMES—. . . up to the series' usual high standard.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD—. . . The release rates high in its succession.

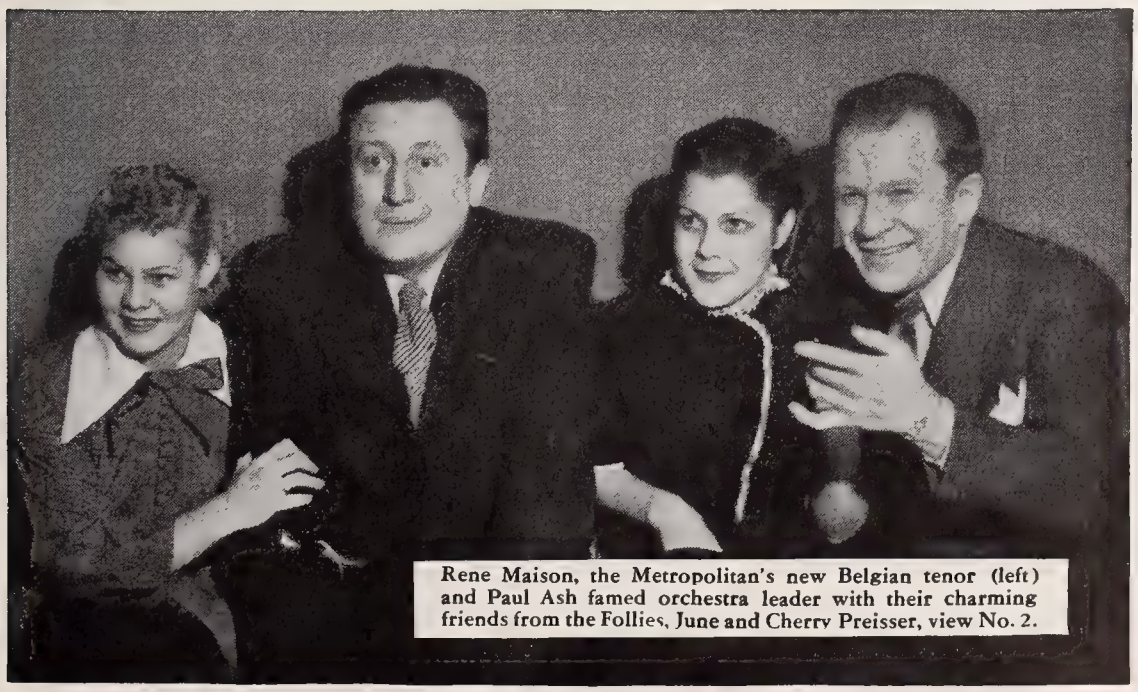
CHARLOTTE NEWS—The screen has produced only two real literary inventions: a little mouse that runs out of an inkbottle, and a dramatic method of presenting news THE MARCH OF TIME. The TIME product today gives continuity, spells out a story, tells why.

SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW—. . . continues to provide finer audience-pleasing stuff than more feature pictures than you'd care to remember.

REVIEWS—GREAT BRITAIN

GLASGOW SUNDAY MAIL—MARCH OF TIME . . . almost yanked me out of my seat. Terrific is just a mild way of describing this strong and meaty fare.

NEWCASTLE SUNDAY SUN—MARCH OF TIME . . . cuts a new path through the jungle of everyday subjects and ideas. No rush to report weddings, sports, parades and floods, but a leisurely reconstruction of some outstanding events with the argument clearly pointed.



MANCHESTER EVENING CHRONICLE—When the first issue was shown . . . the management received hundreds of letters asking when the next issue would be shown.

DAILY DISPATCH—THE MARCH OF TIME, certainly the most sensational short feature ever seen on the screen.

EXCLUSIVE EXPLOITATION

Each month more than 4500 theatres show a new issue of The March of Time. Backing up their local effort is a powerful selling campaign that reaches millions—costs these theatres nothing. This month for an example:

the restraint and elimination of trade and commerce among the States in motion pictures for use at those theatres.

100. Unless this court grants prompt and effective injunctive relief, as hereinafter prayed for, the defendants will continue to restrain and eliminate the aforesaid trade and commerce in motion pictures, the lessees of the aforesaid theatres will continue to be unable to procure an adequate supply of pictures, will be compelled to discontinue entirely and permanently the business of exhibiting motion pictures at said theatres, and will suffer the loss of further large sums of money, no one will be able to engage in the business of exhibiting motion pictures at said theatres except Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., the owners of said theatres will be compelled to convert the theatres to other purposes or turn them over to Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., on terms and conditions dictated by that corporation, the defendants will entirely succeed in their purposes and objects, and the public will be further and irreparably injured by the restraint and elimination of trade and commerce among the States in motion pictures for use at the said theatres.

101. All allegations in this petition include the present tense except where otherwise stated.

Prayer

Wherefore, petitioner prays:

1. That writs of subpoena issue directed to each of the defendants, commanding each to appear and answer, but not under oath (answer under oath being hereby waived), the allegations of this petition, and to abide by and perform such orders and decrees as the court may make in the premises.

2. That the court order the defendants to show cause at a hearing to be held on a day certain to be hereafter designated why a preliminary injunction should not issue as herein prayed.

3. That the court upon such hearing issue its preliminary injunction (for which application is hereby made) enjoining and ordering the defendants, their officers, agents, and employees, pending the final hearing of this cause (1) not to enter into any contracts, arrangements, agreements, or understandings with Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., or any other defendant, or any other person or corporation affiliated with, controlled by, or acting for that corporation or any other defendant, relative to motion pictures, in pursuance of, or which may effectuate, or tend to effectuate, the aforesaid contracts, combination, conspiracy, and attempt to monopolize; (2) not to perform, and not to require any other person or corporation to perform, any contract, arrangement, agreement, or understanding among them which may effectuate, or tend to effectuate, the aforesaid contracts, combination, conspiracy, or attempt to monopolize; (3) not to engage in, perform or maintain any of the other acts, conditions, or things described in this petition for the purpose of carrying out and effectuating the aforesaid contracts, combination, conspiracy, and attempt to monopolize; (4) to do all acts and things which may be necessary and appropriate to eliminate effectively the aforesaid restraint of trade and commerce among the States in motion pictures, and to establish a condition relative thereto in harmony with law; (5) not to do any act or thing which may prevent, or tend to prevent, the elimination of such restraint.

4. That the court upon the final hearing of this cause, order, adjudge and decree that the defendants have made contracts and engaged in a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce among the several States in motion pictures, and have attempted to monopolize said trade and commerce, in the manner and by the means hereinbefore described, in violation of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies"; that the preliminary relief prayed for be made permanent; and that the defendants and their officers, agents, and employees be perpetually enjoined, individually and collectively, from further engaging in, carrying out, maintaining, and extending the aforesaid contracts, combination, conspiracy, and attempt to monopolize, or any other of like character or effect, and particularly from further employing any of the above described means or similar means of carrying out the aforesaid or any similar contracts, combination, conspiracy, or attempt to monopolize.

5. That petitioner have such other, further, and general relief as the nature of the case may require and the court may deem proper.

6. That the petitioner recover its costs.

MPTOA's Board Meets March 5; Allied Date Set

The national convention of Allied States Association will be held in Cleveland's Hollenden hotel, June 2d to 4th, H. M. Richey acting as general chairman. Subjects of importance that are pertinent to the conduct of the exhibitor's business will be included on the program.

Intention to attend the annual board meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America on March 5th and 6th at Miami has been announced by twenty-two officers and directors. Members thus far announced as certain to attend are Ed Kuykendall, M. A. Lightman, W. S. Butterfield, Walter Vincent, Edward G. Levy, Fred Wehrenberg, Hugh W. Bruen, E. M. Fay, L. C. Griffith, Sidney B. Lust, J. H. Michael, Jack Miller, Lewen Pizor, E. A. Schiller, John C. Stapel, Judge Roy L. Walker, Charles E. Williams and R. X. Williams, Jr.

Forty-five independent exhibitors, representing a split in the Connecticut MPTO, were to meet in New Haven on Wednesday to discuss future policies, which were reported as possibly including an affiliation with Allied.

C. E. Huish has resigned after three years as president of the Intermountain Theatre Owners Association, recently affiliated with the MPTOA, because his private business interests left him insufficient time to carry on the work of the organization in a manner he deemed adequate.

Members of an executive cabinet elected to aid Nathan Yawmins in administration of Allied affairs in New England are: William H. McLaughlin, Walter B. Littlefield, Frank Perry, A. Bendslev, Edward Ansin, Charles F. Hodgdon, Irving Issacs, Daniel Murphy, Morris Pouzzner, George Ramsdell, Philip Smith and William A. Viano, all of Massachusetts. E. J. Bolen and Richard Flora will represent Maine. J. E. Charboneau and Warren Nichols have been elected for New Hampshire; Allard M. Graves and Andrew Tegu for Vermont; John D. Findley and Martin Toohey for Rhode Island. Arthur King Howard will continue as New England business manager.

Robert Menches has been re-elected president of the Akron, Ohio, ITOA, with W. P. Hart first vice-president, Charles Stalder second vice-president, J. G. Deetjen secretary, Robert Paulus assistant secretary and Al Ploenes treasurer.

Stories of a coming merger between the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and the ITOA were going the rounds on Broadway again. Indications were that Harry Brandt, on his return from Florida, would confer with Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the TOCC, relative to an amalgamation.

'Came the Dawn' Era Returns In Store's Early Day Show

Gaby Deslys, Wally Reid and Even Fatima on Program

An experiment in presenting films of the came-the-dawn era that may be widely extended was undertaken this week at James McCreery and Company, large New York department store, with a program of films dating back to the early stirrings of the motion picture.

This is the first time, said the company, that an entire program of old silent films has been shown "just for fun," devoid of any historical, scientific or technical study objectives. The idea, of course, was to attract customers to the store.

The shows were presented free in the auditorium of the store, with music thumpily pianistic, strictly of the period. The program the first half of the week consisted of "Infatuation" with Gaby Delys, vintage 1915; "Blue Waters," a Norma Shearer work of about 1921; "Iola's Promise," featuring Mary Pickford, and "Journeys Through Film Land," a two-reeler showing glimpses of the Talmadge sisters, Gloria Swanson, Thomas Meighan and others of the pre-war era.

The bill for the second half of the week was "Old Heidelberg," an ambitious film of royalty and war starring Wallace Reid and Dorothy Gish; "The Arcadian Maid," an ancient production starring Miss Pickford; a pre-historic Chaplin, and "Parade of the Past," a compilation of newsreels and documentory films showing Fatima, the Sally Rand of the World's Fair of 1893, also the inauguration and funeral of President William McKinley, William Jennings Bryan in an arms waving movement, Thomas Alva Edison, and others in the news of the '90s.

The entire show was staged by Stone Film Library, Inc., which claims to have the most complete library of old films. Miss Dorothy Stone, president of the company, said a series titled "Twenty-five Years Ago," is in preparation, showing developments that came to a climax in 1911. This is intended for national release in theatres.

Miss Stone said the showings at the McCreery store were to demonstrate whether sufficient popular interest in early-day films existed to warrant similar exhibitions, in tieups with departments stores or elsewhere.

The nucleus for the Stone film library was the purchase by her father, the late Abram Stone, of 10,000 feet of negatives dating from 1893 to 1900.

An intriguing collection of photographs of early day film players and still scenes is on display in one of the windows of the McCreery store. These photographs, from the Bert Ennis collection, are of such stars as Wallace Reid, Dorothy and Lillian Gish, Miss Pickford, Chaplin, Rudolph Valentino and Maurice Costello, as they appeared 25 years ago. The display includes two photos from the Ennis collection showing the first indoor studios in Fort Lee, N. J., and Hollywood.

TWENTY-FOUR YEARS PRODUCING SERIALS

With the current announcement of its serial schedule for next year, Universal continues to be the oldest active serial producing company in the industry. On the completion of the coming program, Carl Laemmle's organization will mark its 24th season in the action-thriller group.

Scheduled for next year will be one picture starring Buck Jones, tentatively titled "The Phantom Rider." The others are "Ace Drummond," newspaper strip which carries the name of the American Ace, Captain Eddie Rickenbacker; "Jungle Jim," drawn by Alex Raymond, creator of the strip "Flash Gordon" now appearing in many daily papers, and "Secret Agent X-9" also adapted from a newspaper strip.

Clue Club Contest Ends

The Clue Club Contest, arranged between Warner Brothers, Black Mask Magazine and the Furness-Bermuda Line, ended this week and awards to the theatre managers who submitted the best campaigns in the contest will be made shortly. The contest was started as a promotion stunt for the Clue Club series of mystery features produced by Warners. The judges in the contest are Major Albert Warner, Epes Sargent, exploitation editor of Variety, and Cyrus F. Judson of the steamship company. The prizes are two round trips to Bermuda.

Schultz Acquires Franchise

Nate Schultz of Selected Pictures in Cleveland has acquired the northern Ohio First Division franchise and has moved into the First Division in the Film Building. He will continue to distribute Selected pictures, however, along with First Division product. Lee Chapman, First Division salesman, remains with the organization.

F. & M. to Represent Film Stars

Fanchon & Marco Agency of Hollywood, through John A. Schultz, eastern associate, has completed negotiations for the exclusive authorization to represent Dolores Del Rio, Joel McCrea, Douglas Montgomery, Nils Asther, Carl Brisson, Ralph Bellamy and Edward Arnold for their personal appearances throughout the country.

To Distribute Serials

Monarch Pictures Corporation of Pittsburgh will distribute the three Weiss serials for the current season in western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

WEATHER REPORTS FOR THE STUDIOS

The office of The Motion Picture Producers Association has been providing weather reports to studios the last few weeks. As forecasts are given for several days in advance, studios have been able in many instances to arrange shooting schedules so as to catch the best light conditions. The reports are drawn under the supervision of Dr. Irving P. Krick of the California Institute of Technology, and special attention is given to the weather as it affects photographic values.

The chief value to studios is that these forecasts are given for all the locations surrounding Hollywood, as well as for Hollywood itself.

Stebbins Quits Firm To Open Own Company

Arthur W. Stebbins has resigned as director and chairman of the board of Stebbins, Letterman and Gates of New York and Stebbins, Letterman and Gates, Ltd., of Los Angeles to re-enter the insurance business in Los Angeles on his own.

Associated with him will be Cosgrove and Company, Inc., one of the largest insurance brokerage firms west of Chicago.

Columbia Names Executives

Columbia Pictures in Hollywood this week promoted H. A. MacDonald, former comptroller, to the newly created post of assistant studio manager. R. J. Abshire, former auditor, takes over Mr. MacDonald's former duties. Vincent L. Martin, formerly with the California State Sales Tax Division, was appointed assistant to William Holman, studio manager.

Audio Contract Extended

An additional contract has been entered into between Audio Productions and Associated British Film Distributors, Ltd., whereby the latter will distribute throughout the United Kingdom "Air for the G String," "Ave Maria," "Brahms Waltz," "Dance of the Hours," "Liebestraum," "Craters of the Moon," "Old Faithful Speaks" and "Ride Along Dude," subjects included in the Musical Moods" group and the "Thrilling Journeys" series.

Green In New Post

Howard J. Green has taken up his duties as an associate producer at the Columbia Studios in Hollywood. He was signed a month ago to the new contract by Harry Cohn following several writing asignments. His first picture will be "Taxi Please."

Diamond Appoints Star

Edward A. Diamond, distribution manager of Cinepix in New York, has appointed Alan E. Star to head the non-theatrical division of the company to start a distribution service in schools, churches and clubs.

Motion Picture Herald
Rockefeller Center
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

We are so enthusiastic over the results obtained through our recent advertisement of "Custer's Last Stand" in the Motion Picture Herald that we feel impelled to write to you about it.

We have long considered Motion Picture Herald an excellent advertising medium but the results - direct results in actual sales - that we can trace to our advertisement far exceeded our greatest expectations.

Our advertisement appeared in the issue of December 14, 1935. Two days after publication, we began to receive telegrams and letters of inquiry from exhibitors who wanted to book the serial. At that time, we had not awarded franchises in all territories and we have no hesitancy in telling you that the evidence of interest in the serial - as shown by these hundreds of messages - aided us materially in closing contracts in some territories.

We have never before seen such concrete evidence of the value of any advertising medium. The letters and telegrams are continuing to arrive, even at this late date after the advertisement and you will be interested to know that the writers include several circuit bookers, first run exhibitors and, of course, several operators of neighborhood theatres in small towns.

Within the last few days, we have received several cable inquiries from abroad and so, it seems certain, at this date, that this advertisement in Motion Picture Herald will have paved the way for a world-wide distribution on this serial.

Very truly yours,

STAGE & SCREEN PRODUCTIONS INC.

Robert Mintz
President.

WAR ON ARMY-NAVY IN FILMS IS EXTENDED

Actors Guild and Labor Leader in Congress Charge Players Deprived of Needed Work

The United States Government stands to hear a roar of protest from some 5,000,000 members of the powerful American Federation of Labor against the loss of employment suffered by Hollywood workers as a result of the use of official army and navy personnel and equipment in motion picture production without cost to the studios.

Entering the fight this week in behalf of Hollywood actors and technicians were the Screen Actors Guild, of Hollywood, and Representative William P. Connery, former actor and at present a labor leader and Democratic member of Congress, from Massachusetts.

Representative Connery warned Hollywood producers that they had better refrain from privately using Army and Navy forces for filming, or else Congressional legislation will be employed to prevent it.

The Central Labor Council, of Los Angeles, which last week brought the fight into the open, on behalf of the Hollywood workers, dispatched their secretary, J. W. Buzzell, to Washington to protest formally to the military departments of the Government. President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, likewise is studying intervention with the view of placing the strength of his organization behind the studio employees.

Branded Unfair Competition

The Screen Actors Guild stamped the practice as "undemocratic and unfair competition of the Government." Such "unfair competition" by the military branches "is encouraged and applauded by the Government," the Guild complained, citing two most recent illustrations in Warner's "Sons o' Guns" and Columbia's "U. S. Smith." The Smith picture, the Guild pointed out, is being shot at the United States Marines' base at San Diego, with members of this branch of the service appearing on the screen in formation, in background and in action shots. "The reason for their use," it was said, "apparently is to give the picture 'production value' without costing the studio a penny in salaries. The same story was produced at Universal by Producer Saxe as a silent film about 1928, and in the original motion picture workers were used extensively."

Hollywood has been especially active in recent months on military or military-romance stories, among them "Follow the Fleet," RKO; "The Leathernecks Have Landed," Republic; "Shipmates Forever," Warner; "Annapolis Farewell," Paramount; "Westpoint of the Air," MGM; "Flirtation Walk," Warner; "Professional Soldier," Twentieth Century-Fox; "Thunder in the East," United Artists; "Miss Pacific Fleet," Warner.

Producers are saving $1,000,000 in wages by the use of military men instead of Hollywood workers, according to the oppositionists.

Although no bill prohibiting the practice has been introduced in Congress, such legislation probably would be in the nature of a rider to the Army and Navy appropriation bills and likely would effect control of such military participation by forbidding the War Department from using any of its money to pay personnel or finance loans of equipment for the making of pictures.

Guards in German Uniforms

At Warner Brothers' Burbank studios, the Screen Guild cited "a more obvious violation of fair competition" in "Sons o' Guns." There, it was said, some 200 members of the 160th regiment of the California National Guard are acting, costumed as German soldiers, displacing an equal number of "needy motion picture workers." Furthermore, the Screen Actors Guild complained, "a large number of these National Guardsmen have regular employment elsewhere, from which they have secured leaves of absence to accept work on the picture.

"For this work, the soldiers prepared their (filming) routines during their regular drill periods (in their regiment) before they went on salary at the studio," it is charged.

During the use of Government forces in production, the Guild pointed out, "The Government feeds the military, pays their wages and furnishes the equipment to the studios without cost, and, therefore, we taxpayers are losing two ways: we are denied the right to work because the studios are able to obtain free labor, and we have to pay the salaries of our competitors.

"Too, the general public has to pay at the box office for the picture that it contributed to produce.

"The studios use the alibi that they are exploiting the Government forces, that they are after the 'real thing.' The only real thing they are after is to have Mr. John Public foot the labor bill so that the same studios in turn can sell it back for millions of dollars and profit."

Cite 100% Actor Pictures

Citing the capabilities of Hollywood's workers to reenact war scenes, the Screen Actors Guild pointed to their 100 per cent employment in such outstanding productions as "The Big Parade," "What Price Glory," "Farewell to Arms," "Cavalcade," "All Quiet on the Western Front," "The Volga Boatman," "Viva Villa" and "Cleopatra."

"All the uniforms and equipment that have been used in military pictures are rotting and lying idle in the costumers' storerooms, while the Government has taken their business away from them.

"If the Government wants to let the public see what is being done in the military field, they have the newsreels to exhibit their accomplishments," advised the Guild, which continued: "If it is necesary for the public to see a military picture for educational purposes, the proper procedure would be for the Government to produce the picture and exhibit it free of charge, give it to schools, churches, libraries, et al."

The Screen Guild apparently forgot that in advocating the practice of free shows by Government agencies they in turn were approving of what exhibitors might charge to be unfair competition to theatres.

Military technicians in Hollywood are suffering unemployment, too, the while official army or navy experts advise producers in maneuvers, the Guild declared, warning the Government that "As an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, methods of gaining respect for the Guild's views are possible—if not by arbitration, then by more drastic action."

Apparently all other groups involved have benefited through Army or Navy cooperation in films except the workers in Hollywood—the producers received from the Army and Navy forces valuable authentic atmosphere, equipment and personnel; exhibitors presumably benefited accordingly in the higher exploitation standards accruing thereby; the Government's forces received considerable favorable propaganda publicity.

Dismissal Sought in Pathe-Spear Suit

On the ground that a suit for $1,000,000 filed by Ivan I. Spear, operating as the Century of Progress Tour Bureau, fails to state the cause of action, Pathe News moved for dismissal in the U. S. District Court in Chicago. The suit charged breach of an arrangement with the father of the Dionne quintuplets. Also named as respondents are S. S. Kresge, F. W. Woolworth, NEA, Scripps Howard, Dr. Allen Defoe and others.

New York Film Critics to Present Awards

At a reception at the Ritz Carlton hotel Sunday afternoon, the New York film critics will present their recently announced awards for the best picture, best performances and best direction of 1935.

The awards will go to RKO's "The Informer" as the year's best picture; Greta Garbo, for her work in "Anna Karenina"; Charles Laughton, for his work in "Ruggles of Red Gap" and "Mutiny on the Bounty," and to John Ford, for his direction of "The Informer."

Court Reserves Ruling in "Lonesome Pine" Case

Justice Collins in New York supreme court Wednesday reserved decision on the application of the Trail Company for a temporary injunction restraining Paramount from exhibiting "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

Louis Phillips of Paramount counsel disputed the plaintiff's contention that the picture invaded certain dramatic rights which it claims to own. Paramount said it has owned the essential film rights to the play since 1915.

Tribute to Grainger

A testimonial dinner to E. C. Grainger, recently resigned as eastern sales head of Twentieth Century-Fox, will be given by friends and associates at the Astor Hotel in New York March 9.

$5,126,873 RCA NET; ATLAS GAINS $1,149,052; "U" LOSES $677,185

Each Quarter Shows RCA Gain Over Same Period in 1934; All Outstanding Debentures Redeemed; Sales of Holdings

Earnings statements of three large corporations related directly or otherwise to the motion picture were made known this week as follows:

RCA—the parent of RKO, NBC, Victor, Photophone and of RCA communications systems—increased its income $877,609, from $4,249,264 in 1934 to $5,126,873 in 1935. Price paid for RCA's 50 per cent in RKO by Atlas-Lehman was disclosed as $5,000,000, the price of the option for the remainder having been set at $6,000,000.

Atlas Corporation netted $1,139,052 in 1935, partly from sale of some of its Paramount and Warner holdings, the while it concentrated on the larger RKO purchase.

Universal Pictures, Inc., reported a net loss of $677,185 for 53 weeks.

The report of Universal Pictures Company, Inc., and subsidiaries was a preliminary statement for 53 weeks ended Nov. 2, 1935, subject to audit. The net loss of $677,185 was after taxes, depreciation, amortization and other charges.

In the year ended Oct. 27, 1934, Universal reported consolidated net profit of $238,792 after charges and federal taxes and after providing for a non-recurring loss of $178,296 on account of settlement of notes receivable and $10,000 for estimated loss on funds in closed banks, equal after annual dividend requirements on eight per cent first preferred stock, to $4.79 a share on 20,000 shares of seven per cent second preferred stock.

RCA Gain Each Quarter

Each quarter of RCA's net in 1935 showed a gain over the corresponding quarter of the previous year.

Gross income of RCA from all sources in 1935 amounted to $89,228,898, compared with $78,756,994 for 1934, an increase of 13.3 per cent. Cost of operations, including cost of goods manufactured and sold, the cost of operating communications and broadcasting services, advertising and selling expense, research and development, and administration, amounted to $78,885,740. In addition, the items of interest, depreciation, amortization of patents and good will and federal income taxes amounted to $5,216,286.

"During the year," the report said, "RCA redeemed all its outstanding debentures, amounting to $4,255,000 (of which $255,000 was included in current liabilities at December 31, 1934), thereby effecting an annual saving in interest charges. Also during the year the amount of $5,812,990 was paid in 'A' preferred stock dividends covering arrears to Dec. 31, 1934, and the regular payments for the first three-quarters of 1935. The fourth quarterly payment was made on Jan. 1, 1936. The corporation reduced its notes and contracts payable after 1935 in amount of $1,020,000, thereby effecting a further saving in interest charges. The total of these cash payments amounted to $11,087,990.

"No dividends were paid in the year on the 'B' preferred stock and the accrued dividends on this stock at the end of March, 1936, will exceed $17,000,000. Although the earnings for 1935 reflected substantial improvement over 1934, they were still short of meeting the full dividend requirements on the 'B' preferred stock."

"During the fall of 1935," RCA said it "sold its entire holdings in Electric and Musical Industries, Ltd. (E.M.I.) and one half its holdings in Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation (RKO). The sale of the E.M.I. holdings was furthered by the desire of the British company to follow the current trend toward the repatriation of British industry. This sale realized $10,225,917 in cash. In the case of RKO, a banking group (Atlas-Lehman) paid RCA $5,000,000 in cash for one half of its holdings in RKO together with an option on the remainder at $6,000,000, until Dec. 31, 1937, subject to possible adjustment.

The report said "the improvement in the corporation's cash position and earnings in 1935 provided a new approach to the study of plans for a revision of the corporation's capital structure" as proposed in a plan submitted by Joseph P. Kennedy, and previously reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

RCA Investments

Investments of RCA reported in the earnings statement, as of January 1, were $10,312,336, including $7,215,747 securities of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and sundry investments in and advances to associated companies, at cost less reserve of $3,690,438, amounting to $3,096,589. At the end of 1934, the RKO investment then held was carried at $14,644,614, the EMI investment at $13,189,432 and miscellaneous investments at $3,160,961, after reserves of $4,006,009.

Total current assets were $53,606,578, including $31,474,065 cash compared with $15,073,921 one year ago; $1,999,242 United States Government and other marketable securities, with a year-end value in excess of cost; $10,329,277 inventories and $9,803,994 receivables, compared with $41,163,706 current assets at the close of 1934, comprising cash; $8,605,537 marketable securities, $8,784,281 receivables and $8,669,967 inventories.

Current liabilities were $11,317,138, including a $2,700,000 mortgage due on March 25, compared with $6,913,283 at the end of 1934.

Earned surplus stood at $12,401,099 on December 31, 1935, compared with $13,518,354 a year before. Reserve for contingencies stood at $2,358,346, after net credits of $22,274 in 1935, against $2,336,072, and general reserve was $6,965,495, compared with $12,325,512 at the close of 1934.

Investment in Paramount Cut

Disclosure that the investments of Atlas Corporation, in Paramount and Warner Brothers securities were appreciably reduced during 1935 was made in the annual report of the investment company to its stockholders.

The largest reduction in the Atlas Paramount holdings resulted from the sale by Atlas of its controlling interest in the Blue Ridge Corporation to Harrison Williams, investment operator. Blue Ridge held 300,000 shares of Paramount stock. Certificates of deposit for $454,000 of additional Paramount securities which were listed by Atlas at the end of 1934 were exchanged for securities of the reorganized Paramount during 1935. The new Paramount securities are still held by the company.

Atlas also disposed of $800,000 of Warner Brothers Pictures debentures during 1935. It was reported that this practically eliminates Atlas as a Warner investor.

The most appreciable Atlas gain in film securities during the year was, of course, the Atlas-Lehman purchase of 50 per cent of the RCA holdings in RKO. This comprises $2,128,597 of RKO debentures and 263,493 shares of common stock.

In the report, Floyd B. Odlum, Atlas president, who is a Paramount director, said that it is not the policy of the corporation to manage businesses.

A suit by an Atlas stockholder is pending against officers of the company in the local courts alleging that the Atlas underwriting of Paramount stock was a speculative excursion rather than an investment, and charges Mr. Odlum with an ambition to become a dominant factor in the film industry.

Directors of Atlas voted a dividend of 40 cents on the common, an increase of 10 cents a share over the initial dividend paid last September. The current dividend is payable March 16 to holders of record February 29. Consolidated report for 1935 shows net asset value of $15.25 a share on the common, compared with $10.66 on December 31, 1934, an increase of 43 per cent. As of February 17 net assets were equal to $16.82 a share.

Mr. Odlum, in a letter to shareholders disclosed total net income for 1935 applicable to the capital stock of Atlas, of $10,843,150. Income from dividends, interest and miscellaneous, of Atlas and consolidated subsidiaries totaled $2,776,784. Net profit on sales of securities, applicable to the capital stock, was $11,062,748. After deducting expenses, interest, provision for capital stocks of subsidiaries and deduction of federal income tax, consolidated net income was $10,843,150, equal to $2.36 a share on 4,259,616 shares outstanding.

Consolidated surplus and unrealized appreciation account shows that net unrealized appreciation over consolidated costs of investments totaled $14,864,783 as of Dec. 31, 1935. Consolidated surplus, including $33,647,490 capital surplus and unrealized appreciation totaled $53,764,777 as of Dec. 31, 1935.

Consoliated net assets applicable to the capital stocks of Atlas Corporation totaled $75,514,670, after giving effect to payments and reserves totaling approximately $6,015,000 and after deducting the cost of $1,934,597 for 168,216 shares of common stock acquired during the year and held in the treasury. On December 31, 1934, consolidated net assets applicable to the capital stocks of Atlas totaled $58,524,812, and on June 30, 1935, they were $59,767,647.

Total assets as of Dec. 31, 1935, were $103,928,679, compared with $110,517,809 on Dec. 31, 1935, and with $110,713,250 on June 30, 1935.

Color Overcomes Three Additional Problems: Kalmus

Walter Wanger's production of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," a product of the experimental laboratory as the subject establishing the relation between color and the outdoors, is marked by the Technicolor interests as a color feature to lessen fears of industry economists with color production facts.

Dr. Herbert Kalmus, president of Technicolor and in charge of furthering the color movement, in citing the problems overcome by "Lonesome Pine," a Paramount release, pointed out this week that: (1) it was produced on schedule, ending within the period normally required for black and white; (2) printing problems have been reduced to the point where only two days more are required than for printing black and white; and (3) that color may now be used in any shade of intensity.

Lighting, makeup and set decoration remain the principal causes for color production questions.

The picture business now cannot sidestep color, any more than it was able to evade interior lighting, five-reel features and sound, observed Dr. Kalmus, before he left for Hollywood the other day. Color today has reached a point where it may no longer be viewed as a bugaboo, representing endless extravagance to the film industry, and somewhat of an involuntary morphiate inducing headache and listlessness in theatre audiences, Dr. Kalmus added.

As for audience "headaches," Dr. Kalmus pointed out that 18,000 tickets had been sold during the picture's opening day, last week, at the Broadway Paramount; a figure which was said to top all premiere sales at that house by approximately 1,000 admissions.

As for printing, the executive claims that the two days longer than straight black and white are required for color balancing.

Focally, also, color can do anything that a black and white camera can do, the Doctor added. He clearly infers, if color doesn't project in exactly the right mixture on the screen it's not the fault of color. It may be due to one or several things which the Doctor now corrals under the general caption of "Studio Problems."

Lighting, for instance, is a studio problem. When a producer makes a color picture he must be sure that he is feeding at least one-third more "juice" into his lamps than he does when photographing in black and white.

Make-up and set decoration are other matters for which Dr. Kalmus holds the producer directly responsible in the filming of a color picture.

Ohio Censor Cuts Listed

Eliminations by the Ohio censor board for January amounted to one-quarter of one per cent of the total number of reels reviewed, it was revealed in Columbus this week. Of 661 reels, eliminations were ordered in but 16. During the week ending January 23, there were only two eliminations in 120 reels reviewed.

DECENTRALIZED STUDIOS PROPOSED BY GOLDWYN

Advises Breaking Away from Involved Large Corporations to Independent Operation

Samuel Goldwyn is urging producers to decentralize, to break away from the involved large corporations and make pictures independently.

Independent production, on a basis such as that of the member-producers of United Artists, will influence and radically change the present methods of the industry, according to Mr. Goldwyn, who is in New York from Hollywood prior to sailing for London March 4.

The tendency in production, Mr. Goldwyn said, will be in the direction of decentralization. The makers of films, he believed, are beginning to realize that they can function more profitably if they break away from the complex financial structure of the large companies. The recent entrance of such producers as David O. Selznick, Walter Wanger and Jesse L. Lasky into the independent field under the distribution banner of United Artists, he considers a potent sign of that trend.

"Every United Artists producer," Mr. Goldwyn said, "works for himself. He has his own business, complete in itself, and does not have to stop to consider a far-flung organization of stockholders that may be behind him. He can devote himself entirely to making motion pictures. And therein lies the healthy future of the industry."

In independent production of this type, with the producers devoting themselves to a few selected top attractions instead of "mass production," lies also the answer to double featuring, Mr. Goldwyn believed.

"I am sure the public would rather see one good picture than two inferior ones," he explained. "The trouble is there aren't enough big pictures. The exhibition field can absorb 200 costly, elaborately produced and major caliber pictures a year."

Samuel Goldwyn was to be guest of honor at a luncheon Thursday at the Hotel Lombardy, New York, by the Association of Foreign Correspondents, at which he was to discuss international aspects of motion picture production.

Grants Examination In Pathe-Casey Suit

Justice John E. McGann in the New York supreme court this week granted the application of the Pathe Studios, Inc., for an examination before trial in connection with its suit for breach of contract against Patrick J. Casey. Also named as defendants were E. B. Derr, Charles E. Sullivan, Clinton J. Scollard and Pat Casey Enterprises.

The complaint alleges that Mr. Casey was appointed agent of Pathe Studios in November, 1930, to purchase in his own name for Pathe's account and with funds provided by Pathe the film dialogue and music rights to "Lonely Wives" and "The House of Glass." It also charges that Mr. Casey, without Pathe's consent and contrary to instructions, took title to the properties in the name of Pat Casey Enterprises as a conspiracy to defraud the plaintiff. Pathe claims it paid Mr. Casey $58,250 and he failed to hand over the rights to the material.

Mr. Casey has entered a general denial and further says this action is not brought in good faith, but to annoy him and discourage him from the prosecution of a stockholder's action which he had previously filed against the plaintiff.

Seek to Expedite British Releases

Abolition of the lapse, averaging from three to six months, between pre-release showings of pictures in London's West End and general release in the provinces, is the aim of Alexander Korda and United Artists believed brought into early practicability by a deal recently completed giving the company a substantial interest in two hundred theatres controlled or shortly to be controlled by Oscar Deutch. United Artists has a similar interest in approximately fifty houses operated by C. J. Donada.

"Now that we are to have the cooperation of 250 theatres we can adopt the immediate release system," Murray Silverstone, UA.'s managing director in England, said. Crediting Alexander Korda as the sponsor of the idea, Mr. Silverstone said, "A great deal of public interest is built up in a picture during its making, and this is further stimulated by the advertising, publicity and reviews it receives when shown in the West End. Six months later, when it reaches the provincial theatres, most of this publicity has been forgotten. Why should all this carefully built-up enthusiasm be wasted?

"Just now it is like telephoning a girl and saying, 'Get all dressed up—I'm taking you to the movies—six months from now.'

"United Artists intends to abolish this cold storage. In the future all the big films we handle will go to the provincial centers immediately after the West End run—and the first picture to benefit by this new policy will be 'The Ghost Goes West'."

Incidentally, Mr. Silverstone pointed out, one of the ultimate results of the industry's adoption of this quicker release system may be the wiping out of the double-feature program and the so-called "quota" picture.

RKO Rent Suits End

Following a settlement reached with landlords whereby RKO will pay a year's rent in lieu of cancellation of a 10-year lease, all subsidiary companies which have been in the Bond Building in New York, this week moved to the RKO Building in Rockefeller Center.

STUDIO TECHNICIANS TO AID PROJECTION

Academy Committee Studies Exhibition Reactions to Improvements to Determine Procedure

The machinery now being constructed for studio-theatre coordination eventually will give Hollywood's production scientists, studio technicians and engineers an influence over technical matters in exhibition, especially in the projection booth, for the first time on a national scale.

Heretofore confining their efforts to an occasional suggestion or communication to exhibitors and their projectionists on exhibition technicalities, Hollywood's engineers, banded together in the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, hold that technical factors, such as sound volume, screen illumination and excellence of music reproduction, have a very definite reaction upon theatre receipts. Therefore, they will seek to impress upon theatre owners everywhere the importance of heeding their suggestions for improvements, through a wholesale contact between Hollywood and theatres that will function regularly.

Members of the research council represent Columbia, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, RKO Radio, Twentieth Century-Fox, United Artists, Universal and Warner-First National. Specifically, they set out, some weeks ago, "to enlist the assistance of theatre managers and projectionists in the Council's campaign for better pictures, technically, upon the screen."

Bulletins for Exhibitors

The method for accomplishing this at first will embrace the issuance and widespread distribution of a series of information bulletins outlining at first in a general way the technique of recording and photography, to be supplemented by expressions of the Council's own views as to how motion pictures may be presented to best advantage.

The idea indirectly offers some possibilities for extending the business of theatre equipment manufacturers and dealers, for the Academy intends passing on to the managers "information which would help you to periodically modernize your equipment to take advantage of" advances being made from time to time in recording and photography, "thereby improving the screening of your pictures."

Representatives Named

The Academy's plan is not new in its formulative status, having been the subject of consideration since last July. The present, however, has brought it to the point where reactions from exhibition are being studied for the guidance of the Council in setting down an actual method of procedure.

At the request of the Academy's subcommittee on studio-theatre coordination, all other technical committees and groups working under the sponsorship of the Council have appointed representatives to meet with the subcommittee to determine upon a definite program for improving theatre technical conditions and to effect coordination.

Representatives appointed thus far by the various Academy subcommittees to participate in this program are: Sound recording subcommittee, Carl Dreher and Thomas Moulton, with Lawrence Aicholtz, alternate; screen illumination, John Aalberg and Gordon Chambers, with Hollis Moyse, alternate; camera department, John Arnold and Ray Wilkinson, with Virgil Miller, alternate; Reel-length, J. M. Nickolaus; editorial department, Harold McCord; film preservation, Harris Ensign; committee on improving release print quality, L. E. Clark and A. J. Guerin, with K. F. Morgan serving as alternate.

Membership of the whole studio-theatre coordination subcommittee is composed of Franklin Hansen, chairman; Gerald Best, George Groves, E. H. Hansen, John Livadary, Wesley C. Miller, S. J. Twining and Gordon S. Mitchell, who manages the Academy's Research Council.

Basically, the Research Council says the studio technical departments of the large producers devote considerable time and money to obtain a definite technical effect which, in the final analysis, depend upon its treatment in the theatre to reach the public for whom it is intended. The Council believes, therefore, that some method should be available through which information on these effects might reach the theatre—through which the Council might explain these effects to the theatre manager, and through which the manager might be able to direct his problems and advice to the studio technicians as to how the Academy further may improve product technically from the exhibitors' standpoint.

The Academy says it is willing to appropriate a sum of money in order to carry out its plan, but it will not continue unless there is a similar desire for closer coordination on the part of the theatre managers and projectionists.

Studio Setting for Naked Truth Dinner

Kleig lights and other impedimenta of a film studio will provide the setting for the annual Naked Truth Dinner of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers March 14th in the main ballroom of the Hotel Astor. A concealed camera will make pictures of the party which will be screened at midnight.

Scheduled for appearance on the regular weekly dinner program of the organization for Thursday were Freddie Bartholomew, John Corney, radio player, and R. M. Brinckerhoff, cartoonist.

Lennox Pawle Passes

Lennox Pawle, long an actor on the legitimate stage and on the screen, died late last week in Hollywood of a cerebral hemorrhage. He was 63. Mr. Pawle recently completed the role of Mr. Dick in "David Copperfield."

Sanctions Help Sustain Italian Picture Market

In spite of restrictions limiting Italian importation of films to 25 per cent of previous levels, American exports to that nation have been maintained through fortuitous operation of sanctions instituted by members of the League of Nations. Motion pictures reaching Italy from outside sources can come only from the United States, Germany, Austria and Hungary, under existing circumstances, and this country provides a substantial majority of this product.

Commenting on this condition, Mario Luporini, United Artists distribution representative in Italy, in New York this week pointed out that American product is enjoying an additional advantage through application of a dubbing system worked out by himself. In computing film footage imported the Italian government had measured and included as part of the quota the sound track, apart from the film itself. Now importers re-record the sound in Italy, eliminating importation of sound tracks and gaining an equivalent allowance for actual film.

The government's efforts to build up Italian production, according to Mr. Luporini, are meeting with success. This year Italian producers will turn out fifty features, as against thirty-two last year. The goal is one hundred features a year by Italian producers, which would supply about one-third of the amount required by Italian exhibitors, leaving two-thirds to be contributed by American and other sources. Although Italian producers may obtain financial aid directly from the government, they must also submit scripts, casts and other material to a bureau which must approve it prior to production.

All Italian theatres are required to exhibit Italian-made product, sometimes accepting as admission voluntary gifts of iron, steel or other useful materials.

Work is progressing steadily on an eleven-stage studio in Rome.

Censors Are No Aid To Pictures: Barrett

Censorship problems facing the industry were discussed last week by Wilton A. Barrett, executive secretary of the National Board of Review, at the weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at Jack Dempsey's Restaurant off Broadway.

"Neither the Legion of Decency nor any other groups with an axe to grind have improved films one bit," Mr. Barrett said. "What accounts for the fine lineup of films is the fact that the boys on the Coast have learned that the finest pictures they can make pull the patrons into the box-office.

"All attempts to hamper the industry have not contributed one iota to the fine pictures this year," he added. It is not true, he said, that all artistic productions have been "flops" financially.

Mr. Barrett also stressed the importance or producing films appealing to juveniles who, he said, are the adult audience of tomorrow.

WPA PACT WITH UNIONS STARTS U.S. STAGE SHOWS TOURING 146 CITIES

Stagehands' Pay Is Based on 96 Hours at Prevailing "Security Wage" of $103.40 Subject to Local Adjustments

With the serious threat of labor difficulties out of the way, the Works Progress Administration federal theatre project is proceeding satisfactorily, Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, national director, said this week.

On Monday federal theatre officials entered into a written agrement with Louis Krouse, assistant president of the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees, and James Brannan, president of Theatrical Protective Union No. 1, the New York stagehands' union, which bases the stagehands' wage on the scale of hours. The pact started off a dramatic touring company in 146 cities and towns in the Southeast.

Stagehands are to work 96 hours at the prevailing "security wage" of $103.40 a month, "the hours to be adjusted to suit production schedules and prevailing conditions of the trade," according to the agreement. The IATSE obtained a concession that department heads, or No. 1 men, will be rated as assistant supervisors, at about $130 a month. Shows on tour will use local stagehands.

At the WPA-operated houses in New York, the stagehands will work 96 hours in two weeks. Mr. Brennan explained this would amount to a wage of $51.70 weekly, compared with the $75 paid to stagehands in commercial theatres. On the four-week basis, the WPA wage amounted to about $24 a week.

Four Different Wage Levels

The question of salaries for stagehands in touring shows was further complicated because the territory served by the federal theatre is divided into four groups, each with a different wage level. This has been solved by making flexible the number of performances the stagehands will work in different localities. But even under this plan, the wages paid stagehands will be less than the scale in effect at commercial theatres, including motion picture houses.

Underlying the argument was the cry of both theatre owners and officials of various theatrical unions that the New Deal's theatre projects constitute open competition with private enterprize. The stagehands' union objected on the ground the federal shows are a "commercial propositition" which might undermine admission scales and wage standards. By negotiating an agreement the IATSE placed itself on record as demanding the union scale.

The labor difficulties had threatened to prevent or at least delay the touring plans of "Jefferson Davis," which is scheduled to start a tour of Southern cities beginning at Richmond, Va., next week. A total of 146 cities and towns are on the itinerary. While it was announced the show will not play the larger cities where it would compete with established theatres, nothing was said of the competition to motion picture houses in the smaller situations.

On its tour, 'Jefferson Davis," a play of the Civil War, will be sponsored by the United Daughters of the Confederacy, and admission will be charged. In New York it had a three-day run at the Biltmore theatre at a scale of 55 cents to $1.10 a top.

This was the first instance of serious labor trouble in the Federal Theatre program, according to Mrs. Flanagan. She said that if relief were the only object she would favor the full union scale. She believed, however, that the project deserved concessions by the union because "it looks toward a permanent self-sustaining enterprise."

"With over 9,000 theatrical people on its payroll from coast to coast, with companies in some 20 states performing before audiences totaling 350,000 nightly, with admission shows opening in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago and San Francisco, as well as Peoria, New Haxen and Westchester County, N. Y., with touring companies starting through New York state, California and the southeast, the federal theatre is now a going concern," Mrs. Flanagan said.

Administrative Setup Completed

"The administration setup throughout the country is now complete; the legal difficulties of admission, touring and amusement tax are adjusted."

She also said that with more than 4,000 persons on the New York payroll, that region has "probably reached the peak of employment," and that "by March 15, as smaller centers complete their setup, we expect our employment figures to top 10,000." Plays are being performed by 158 active theatre units throughout the country, she added.

Injunction proceedings to stop permanently the national federal theatre program are planned by Bernard Brookes, New York stage producer and organizer of the newly formed Theatre Protective League. Mr. Brookes said his counsel in the capital was conferring with the office of Harry L. Hopkins, federal relief administrator. He wants the Government to release the federal theatre funds to established producers who need financing, permitting them to rehabilitate the theatre without any Government producing activity. He contended that by entering the theatre field the Government has discouraged private enterprise.

Commenting on the start of the federal theatre project in Syracuse, N. Y., last Wednesday night, Chester B. Bahn, motion picture and drama editor of the Syracuse Herald, observed:

"While the surface purpose of the Syracuse federal theatre project, in kind with similar enterprises throughout the country, is relief through work, analysis of the local setup indicates that it may be something more—Government in show business deliberately and commercially, with the final establishment of a subsidized national theatre. . . .

"Not the least interesting of the aspects of the situation will be the reaction of Syracuse's 'film row.' Obviously, local exhibitors, already reliant upon double features, giveaways, Screno and Bank Nights as box office stimuli, face dangerous competition—just how dangerous will be determined by the calibre of the stock troupers and the quality of their plays."

Long snarled in red tape, the program generally is digging out. Several companies presenting stock plays are being prepared to tour upper New York state. In some towns the WPA is reported to have compelled exhibitors to rent their theatres for a day on the threat of opening dark houses in opposition.

Conditions in the federal projects have improved greatly in recent weeks, said Ralph Whitehead, executive secretary of the American Federation of Actors. Remarking that the story in the HERALD February 8th did "not express his true sentiments at the time as the situation has changed a great deal," he continued:

"Mrs. Flanagan has been kind enough to listen to the complaints of the American Federation of Actors and to put many reforms into effect. I myself have been permitted to make changes in administration. As assistant national supervisor on vaudeville, circus and musical comedy, I feel now that everything humanly possible is being done to keep the projects alive and in good order.

Reiterates Film Attack

"All this, of course, does not change the statement that motion picture magnates have virtually locked out stage shows and are making a great mistake in not cultivating their talent sources. And vaudeville has been the greatest developer of talent, it is conceded by almost everybody. . .

"The American Federation of Actors wants stage shows to return to our picture theatre stages not only because it would mean jobs for performers and others, but because it would bring new life to our entire show business—in particular, the Hollywood studios."

William P. Farnsworth, New York attorney who succeeded Sol Rosenblatt as administrator of the NRA motion picture code, has been appointed an executive officer in the Washington office of the Federal Theatre.

Federal officials at Boston withdrew the WPA presentation of the play "Valley Forge" from remaining scheduled performances after a selectman at Plymouth, Mass., termed the play "not even fit for adults."

WPA PAYS WARNER'S RENT ON A THEATRE

The first tangible benefit to the motion picture industry from the Federal Theatre Project is reported from Hartford.

Warner pays $800 a week rent on a closed 4,000-seat house in the Connecticut city. The circuit figures it still is ahead because keeping the house open would reduce business at nine other Warner houses. Sunday night is the only time the city can absorb the extra seats provided at the State.

The WPA, having been unable to wrest the Parsons from the wreckers for its repertory theatre, wlll use the State at a rental of about $400 a week on Wednesdays, Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays.

With only 1,000 seats offered for sale by the WPA, Warner figures it can garner $400 by opening the State Sunday nights, thereby erasing entirely an $800 expense item.

FAST RECOVERY MADE FROM FIRE AT ELSTREE

Charge of Obsolete Sound Equipment Challenged; GB-KRS Action Is Dropped

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

The up-to-the-minuteness of British studio equipment and operating methods is reflected in the fact that less than 24 hours after the British & Dominions studio at Elstree had been reported a raging furnace, not only had the studio telephone line been restored but that the office organization there was fully functioning with the aid of, among other amenities—brand new central heating.

This little incident is illustrative of the spirit in which B & D tackled what, in all respects save the absence of personal injury and of any loss of negatives, was by far the biggest disaster which the British production industry has suffered.

The outbreak of fire, when it was discovered in the early Sunday hours, had obtained a grip which, in the apparent absence of a fully adequate water pressure, had made it seem inevitable that the whole of the British & Dominions studio and possibly the adjoining British International Pictures plant would be totally destroyed. As a matter of fact, the damage was limited to the three B&D stages and the three BIP stages forming part of the same studio block. The main BIP block, separated by an alleyway, was unaffected, and the flames were kept from the oil-storage tanks.

It was therefore possible for BIP to announce the following day that its own production schedule would be uninterrupted and for B&D to state that its immediate objective would be to hire space in other studios for the productions of its tenants at Elstree. Before the day was out, it was plain that, making allowance for the loss of sets and costumes, there would be no interruption of production which could not be overtaken by revised schedules.

Readjustment Plans

The chief readjustments of production plans are as follows:

Capitol Films, which was using B&D space, booked space at Worton Hall, also a Western Electric plant, while the fire was still raging. Capitol will complete the Clive Brook-Helen Vinson "Love in Exile" there. It lost all its costumes and a big set in the fire.

Herbert Wilcox Productions transferred "The Three Maxims" to the Consolidated (old Whitehall) studio, losing only three days.

The Elisabeth Bergner "As You Like It" continued in BIP space.

Paramount British will complete a picture, half-finished at B&D, at the Joe Rock studios.

Paul Soskin's "Two's Company" had been completed, so far as sequences scheduled at B&D were concerned, and its transfer to Consolidated had been arranged before the fire.

Soskin Productions, so far as its own independent productions are concerned, may delay schedules sufficiently to permit some of these subjects to be made in the new Amalgamated studio, which is in the earliest stages of construction.

British & Dominions itself has no subjects scheduled for immediate production.

Not a foot of negative actually shot has been lost, although some difficult matching may be necessary in the case of half completed films.

All the financial loss involved is covered by insurance, and the total amount payable by the insurance companies is likely to be considerably over the £500,000 ($2,500,000) of structural loss.

"Consequential loss" policies, providing for compensation for loss of production time and for such continuing overheads as salaries may add, with special policies covering cameras, and lighting and other equipment, another £250,000 to the total.

Equipment Dispute

Statements last week by Bernhard Gardner, the new European chief of RCA, to the effect that a big percentage of British theatre sound equipments was obsolete and beyond modernization came as an unwelcome surprise to exhibitors, but they have had a sequel which somewhat reduces their terrifying effect.

R. M. Hatfield, Western Electric executive in London, has come out with a flat denial of the general assertion, thus: "So far as Western Electric is concerned . . . from the beginning we have deliberately designed and developed equipment so as to be able to incorporate in it from time to time such changes of components as might be required to get the best advantage out of the progress in sound recording." He instanced "noiseless recording" and "wide range" as two improvements "neither of which rendered W. E. reproducing equipment in the slightest degree obsolete in its entirety."

There remain various other sound equipment concerns to be heard from

GB and the KRS

News that the action by Gaumont British Super Cinemas, Ltd., against the Kinematograph Renters' Society had been abandoned emerged in the form of a statement that one of the distributors sued individually had been notified of the fact that the action would not be pursued. There is no official statement from either organization, but that the GB does not propose to continue the fight can be taken as a definite fact.

The actions involved the KRS as a trade association, its constituent members as trading companies and the principals as individuals. The allegations were restraint of trade and conspiracy in connection with the KRS decision to refuse bookings for the H&G theatres through Gaumont-British or through the subsidiary which GB formed to take over H&G Kinemas, Ltd., original owners of the theatres.

Withdrawal of the action means that a vast amount of money which seemed earmarked for the lawyers will be kept in other hands, but it also means that a trade situation of some complexity has been created. The KRS has a resolution on its books that it does not recognize the GB investment in the H&G theatres as a legitimate purchase; it also has decided that the situation is unaffected by the formation of Gaumont-British Super Cinemas, Ltd. Its members are willing to trade with H&G Kinemas, Ltd., but that company has gone out of existence, the legal owners of the theatres now being Gaumont-British Super Cinemas, Ltd.

No doubt a way will be found out of these difficulties—probably by GB—but at the moment it seems scarcely far-fetched to describe the Hyams halls involved in the dispute as "Five Supers in Search of An Owner."

It is understood here that C. M. Woolf may join the board of directors of Union Cinemas, in which his financial associate, J. A. Rank already is interested.

Alabama Anti-Picket Law Is Upheld

In a test case reviewing the conviction of John M. O'Rourke under the Alabama anti-picketing law, the court of appeals has declared that the statute is not a violation of the Constitutional guarantee of freedom of speech and has affirmed the lower court's sentence of $1 and costs. The case came up from the Jefferson county court. Plaintiff was charged with picketing the Ritz theatre in Birmingham, displaying a sign stating that the stagehands employed were non-union and the management had refused to employ union labor.

Powers to Present "Reg'lar Fellers"

P. A. Powers is to present a new series of cartoons based on the newspaper comic, "Reg'lar Fellers," for distribution by Celebrity. The arrangement was effected by Charlie Giegerich, of Celebrity, and Gene Byrnes, cartoonist. Like the "Comi-Color Cartoon" series, "Reg'lar Fellers" will be produced under directorial supervision of Ub Iwerks.

Deitch In New Post

J. J. Deitch, Tri-States booking manager in St. Louis, accepted the position of buying and booking manager for Warner Brothers in St. Louis this week. He has been with Paramount for 11 years, for the last three years in Des Moines. Herbert W. Wangle, his assistant, succeeded him in the Des Moines post.

Jones Gets Fine Arts Medal

Robert Edmond Jones, noted stage designer now designing the color for "Dancing Pirate," new Technicolor feature being made by Pioneer Pictures, has been awarded the Fine Arts Medal for work in his field by the American Institute of Architects.

Paramount's "Peter Ibbetson" Acclaimed In Soviet Russia

Paramount's production of "Peter Ibbetson" has been widely acclaimed in the Union of Socialists, Soviet Republic, according to word received from Paramount's office in Warsaw, Poland. Mr. M. Czaban, manager in the Warsaw establishment, has been in receipt of a letter from Mr. Loy W. Henderson, Charge d'Affaires ad Interim, of the Embassy of the United States at Moscow. In this letter Mr. Henderson thanks Paramount for sending them the picture and goes on to say:

"This film was shown on various occasions to the members of the staff, members of the diplomatic corps and high Soviet officials and all who have seen it appreciate its high quality. The exhibiting of films of this type in the Soviet Union does much to raise the prestige of American films not only in the Soviet Union but also in the minds of officials for foreign governments whose good opinion may at times be valuable to the film industry."

Anatole Litvak to Hollywood To Direct "Sahara" for Wanger

Anatole Litvak, continental director, who has been signed by Walter Wanger to direct "Sahara" starring Charles Boyer, left New York Monday for Hollywood. Mr. Litvak revealed that his contract with Mr. Wanger called for one picture due to the fact that he has a commitment with the Pathe Studios in Paris for another picture which must be placed in production in July.

"Business conditions in Paris," Mr. Litvak said, "showed a slight improvement. Attendance at most theatres is on the upgrade. In production the producers are somewhat limited due to their productions. The population of Paris cannot be compared with the English speaking countries and for that reason producers are limited. In technical developments Hollywood is easily two years ahead."

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Still-Snowed-In, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

The mercury has been hovering around zero, up and down (mostly down) for about thirty days, and it has been snowing all day, and some guy on the radio has just advised us that a severe blizzard is on its way down from Valley City, North Dakota, and for us not to go swimming in the Elkhorn until we hear from him again.

There's no doggone sense in paying a man a salary to furnish us with that kind of weather. Somebody ought to give him a drink. Last night we had reindeer steak for supper and that night we dreamed that a polar bear chased us up a telephone pole.

Our oil burner is kept working overtime to keep the water hot in the radiators while we are out shoveling snowdrifts.

Someone once said that what this country needed was a good five cent cigar, and the rag-weed variety we are smoking inclines us to agree with that statement. Having nothing else to do besides shoveling snowdrifts, we have invented a new kind of thermometer, two of 'em in fact, one for winter and one for summer. On the winter one we have shoved the zero mark up thirty degrees and on the summer one we have shoved it down twenty degrees, and these thermometers ought to go on the market as the biggest sellers of the century.

One of our winter thermometers hung in the lobby of a theatre would undoubtedly increase business, and our summer one would preclude the necessity of a cooling system. A limited amount of stock in this invention will be sold, mostly for cash.

We were going to tell you some more about "The Beautiful Snow" but then, you know about that already.

The other night our housekeeper went to see the show and when she came home we asked how she liked the picture and she said, "Oh, it was just another picture," and that decided us to stay at home. "Just another picture" has about the same draft at theatres as a smallpox sign, and "just another picture" is probably one of the reasons why there is so much argument against block booking.

We went to a banquet recently and, from the advance notice and the price we paid, we supposed we'd get roast turkey and huckleberry pie, but instead they brought us a plate of pork and beans and a dish of bread pudding. And then again it snowed all the next day.

We braved fifteen below the other night to go to the Moon theatre and see "Stella Parrish," with Kay Francis, Paul Lucas, Ian Hunter and Sybil Jason. We were expecting to see "just another picture," but we were very agreeably surprised. If you exhibitors want to see a good story well played by a capable cast you better get this one and play it. There is no lally-gagging in it, and Paul Lucas and Ian Hunter put such sincerity in their work that you will be surprised.

The work of little Sybil Jason will rank well up to the top with some other popular juvenile stars. Kay Francis reminds us to quite an extent of Irene Rich, to whom we referred once as "That womanly woman of the screen." Miss Francis does not have to resort to a lot of gaudy makeup to make herself look beautiful; she would look beautiful if she had on an apron and was washing dishes in the kitchen sink. Paid critics may not give this one a three star rating, but this criticism is gratis. Thanks, Miss Francis, for your splendid work.

There are probably more marriages performed in St. Joseph, Michigan, than in any two cities of its size in the Union. Chicago looks to St. Joe for marriages like Hollywood looks to Reno for divorces. If it weren't for St. Joe, what would Chicago do? And if it weren't for Reno what would Hollywood do? Then again, if it weren't for Hollywood what would Reno do? Jevver think of that?

We've got a kitten in our house that puts in more time chasing its tail than some alphabetical worker puts in raking leaves.

Whether it's true or not, we don't know, but we have been told that the Government is going to put seamstresses in all the public schools to sew on buttons and sew up rips in the scholars' pants. We are for that stronger than a skunk, and we are going to join the public school, for we are getting darned tired of having to stuff hay in the seat of our pants to keep this cold weather out, and—

There is no use in talking, it's a sign of advance
When they will sew up the rip in our every-day pants.

We realize that it is a disagreeable subject, and we dislike to refer to it, but the fact is that the past six weeks have been so cold and the snow so deep that attendance at the theatres has been reduced almost to the vanishing point. People will not venture forth in sub-zero weather and wallow snowdrifts to see a picture show, no matter how good, but even so, we have this satisfaction to console us, this extreme weather will not prevent the captains and lieutenants of that "shelterbelt" from drawing their salaries. There is never any great loss without some small gain, and while we are regretting the present conditions don't forget that better times are "just around the corner" and that we want you to come up sometime to a duck dinner, and "You bring the ducks."

The sportsmen over the middlewest will be disappointed when they go out to shoot pheasants next summer, for there won't be any. With the ground covered by two feet of snow and the mercury ranging from ten to thirty below, this weather has been the death of thousands of them.

People report finding dead pheasants by the dozens all over the country. The scarcity of feed and this cold weather and snow has about cleaned up all of them.

Last night a blizzard was reported on its way from Alaska and before it struck we went down to the Moon and saw two features, "Two in the Dark" and "Freshman Love." Both well worth seeing.

Frank McHugh was the principal player in "Freshman Love." He gave his usual excellent comedy performance and he was ably assisted by Joseph Cawthorn. We don't know whether Cawthorn came from Germany or Arkansas, and it don't make much difference, we are glad he came from somewhere, and we wish the producers would give him more to do. Whenever they put him in a picture he is "the life of the party."

Just as the weatherman said, the blizzard struck last night and the mercury in the thermometer jumped down to 30 below with a high northwest wind which kept our oil burner working in three shifts, all three working at the same time. Gosh, now would be a good time to have our winter thermometer working. The highway department is keeping their scrapers in the sheds waiting for the snow to stop drifting.

Those of you, if any, who are depending upon that Townsend Old Age Pension of $200 a month had just as well forget about it, for you are not going to get it. The Government and the various states will no doubt pass some kind of a pension law but it will not be $200 a month, and whatever is passed will be bound up with so much red tape that but few of the deserving aged can qualify for it.

We are in favor of pensioning the deserving aged. We will be willing to pay our taxes for that purpose, but we are decidedly opposed to taxing the working class to pay a pension to the hobo who has tramped the country all his life and panhandled his living out of people who have worked to build the country up.

The red tape requirements will preclude any who have anyone upon whom they can depend, anyone who has a dollar or who ever had one, and there will be enough bureaus of various kinds to handle the matter which will eat up about all the fund.

Maybe we don't know anything about it, but why can't a hammerhead guess on it as well as smart folks? There is one thing, however, that we do know, and that it that we have said quite enough already.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

SUPERIOR HANDWORK RECOGNIZED

From a theatreman who "forgot" to sign his name comes a prayer that separate Quigley Awards be given for subsequent-run campaigns. The writer claims men in his situation are handicapped, that the first-runs have budgets allowing them to do things impossible for the subsequents.

If in the two years of the Quigley Competitions, no Plaque, no First, no Honorable Mention had been voted to theatremen in the subsequents, then there would be right good reason to heed this request. And while Plaques and Sheepskin Certificates have not been awarded overwhelmingly to entrants other than first-runs, the record shows clearly that second and even third-run campaigns that cost about a quarter have taken plenty of bows and more than once stolen the spot.

The Quigley Awards flourish because they encourage the theatreman to strive for a higher grade of showmanship for which he often gains worthwhile, practical recognition. That managers in spots similar to our correspondent's have through these Competitions advanced themselves is stressed and sincerely for the encouragement of those who feel checked by the confines of their situations.

Sure we know that regiments of managers do miracles with a couple of bucks and a handful of fingernails. And it's a pleasure to note that the Awards Judges also recognize this superior handwork so often.

THEY ALSO TAKE IT

The boy knows because he's toiled around circuits quite a few years in an executive capacity. And therefore we cocked a wide ear when this visiting Round Tabler spoke up about district and zone supervisors.

"Too many managers," sez he, "take too much to heart if not too seriously what their district bosses do or say, when in numerous instances these executives are merely passing along some of the what-ho they have been handed from the Big Chief. Of course there are times when personal feelings creep into the picture but in most cases the supervisor's storming is impersonal and passed along more as a matter of routine than a desire on his part to pull a Simon Legree.

"In all my experience," continued the visiting brother, "I have found few real bad boys among the district heads. If they seem hardboiled then managers might remember that supervisors are on a tougher spot and often have to put on the whip stunt under orders or else——.

"You could do worse," he concluded, "than tell the members that the manager who is doing his job sincerely and doing it the best he knows how may have lots to worry over but not so much as he might think on how he stands with his district or zone supervisor."

Well, laddies, these be brave words indeed, and in the opinion of this department a not unreasonable defense of a class of showmen who take their share of pokes on the chin along with the men under them.

The unhealthy tension to which all theatre manpower is subject is often due to a constant demand upon all concerned with exhibition, high or low, for day-in and day-out results. It would be futile to lay all box office failures at the manager's or supervisor's door but there is too much of a finger-pointing at these worthies when grosses bog down.

The answer is in short that supervisors, no less than other groups similarly situated, believe in a "live and let live" policy of operation. It may also be said that when they are accused of riding men unjustly the bearing down too often is caused by pressure from more powerful hands.

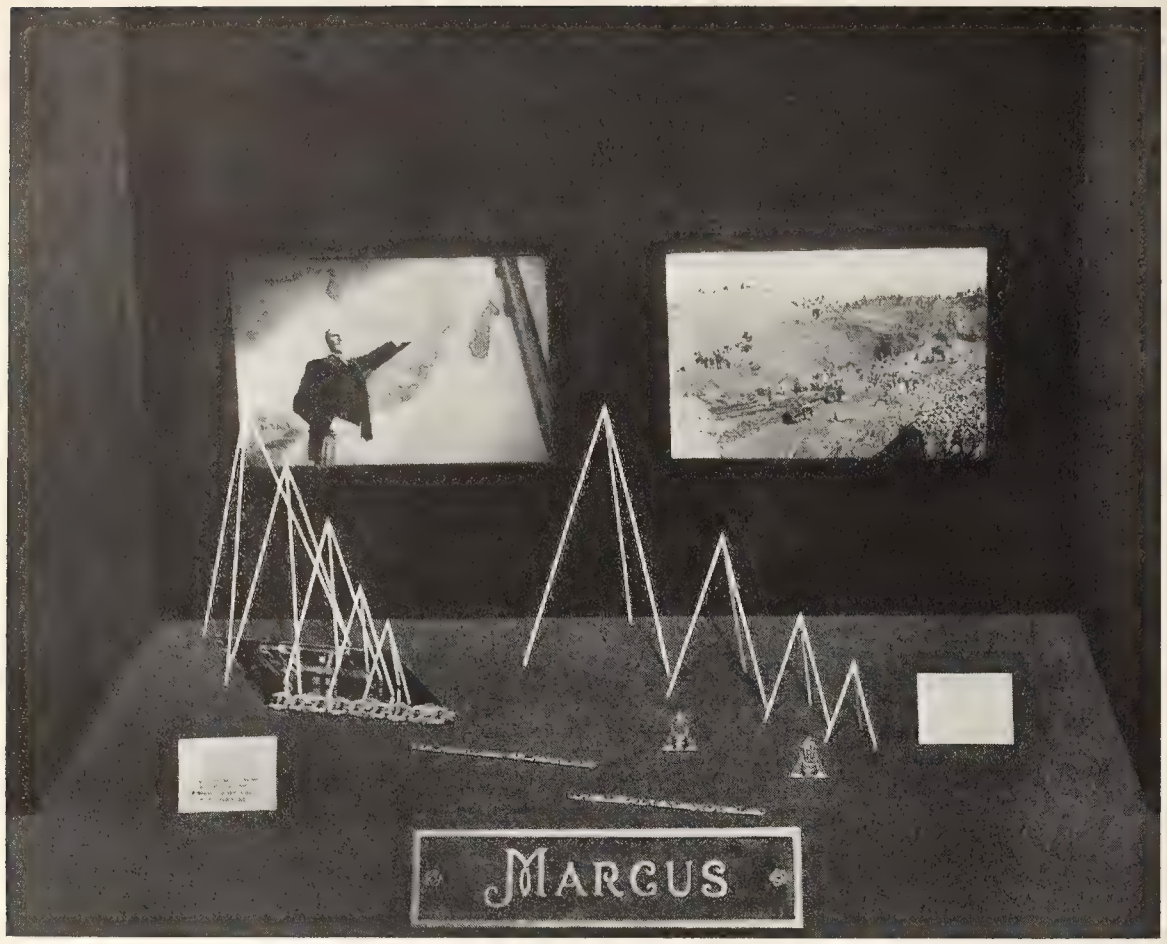
HORSESENSE ABOUT REFUNDS

There's a heap of horsesense in the refund bulletin issued by George W. Coleman, Chief of Service at Manager J. C. Goodwin's Scollay Square Theatre, in Boston, and from which we have quoted on a following page. Especially is to be commended the reference to that "warm smile when handing back the money".



Millions of words have been spilled about the box-office value of the friendly bow in handling refunds and in other direct contacts with the paying customers. Yet more millions of words may be written and well studied because the business of smiling, earnestly applied, has never yet failed to return steady and highly attractive interest.

Reported recently by the American Psychological Association is a study of creative work of 1,264 persons which reveals that 35 is the golden age of man's productivity, the exceptions being poets and astronomers.

Evidently those psychologists don't read the Round Table.

DIAMOND WINDOW. Above unusual display on GB's "Rhodes," was planted in window of exclusive Fifth Avenue jewelers as advance for date at the New York Roxy Theatre. In addition to rare jewels, flash featured stills showing Walter Huston as Rhodes and scene of African diamond mine against velvet background. Theatre credit card down front announced opening.

Hill and Hoppe Build Amateurs

Lot of returns from recently inaugurated amateur program involving houses of St. Louis Amusement Co., is reported by M. L. Plessner, circuit ad head, the idea building strong under supervision of Leto J. Hill, general manager, and Wm. Hoppe, Jr., west side zone chief.

Best amateurs from each house appeared on weekly air program, time given by station, and winners chosen by vote were organized into unit for paid engagement at all houses of circuit. Hoppe is M.C. on the program and known as "Colonel Bill."

Unit is called after circuit and radio station with other similar groups planned by Hill if interest holds up. Plessner promoted a big splash on this in local paper, said to be one of largest spreads accorded theatre presentations.

Rhymed Double Truck Sells "Strike Me Pink"

From F. A. Rohrs, U. A. branch manager, Charlotte, comes a report on the excellent campaign put over by Manager W. H. Eubanks, at the Richmond, Rockingham, N. C., top gag being double truck co-op page with each participating merchant's ad in rhymed copy. F'rinstance, furniture store ran this:

"It's leap year, young ladies,
Let's all shout with joy.
We'll furnish the home
If you furnish the boy
Make the boy take you
To see "Strike Me Pink"
We can fit up your house
From parlor to sink."

At bottom of page a pink tea was announced for matinee between two and three for women patrons, local girls in pink serving. Pink cakes were promoted, all merchants dressed windows in same color and pink heralds distributed.

Finney Organizes Club On "Africa" Serial

Press book put out by Ed Finney's Republic ad department on the serial "Darkest Africa" features a Young Explorer's Club with prizes of bicycles, cameras, etc., available to members. Contest slant attached is nationwide.

Other smart national tieins arranged by Bill Peirce have been made with Remington Rand, National Biscuit, Young America, and Ingo-Bike Company, the juvenile weekly giving back page of recent issue to announcement of tieup.

Joe Lee Inaugurates Basketball on Stage

For houses having stages with sufficient space, theatremen will no doubt be interested in the slant recently inaugurated by ole "Doc" Joe Lee, skipper at the Brooklyn, N. Y., Paramount—basketball games on the stage each Friday night, starting at 10:30, after the last feature, same admission price covering regular show and game.

The idea originated with Al Reid, of Fabian Theatres, operators of the Paramount, Reed working with Lee in lining up a series of games between recognized professional teams and among those listed are the House of David, Philadelphia Hebrews, Alabama Pitts, etc. First game was between the Brooklyn Jewels and New York Violets, played in two 15-minute periods.

Teams Wear Special Outfits

In addition to the contest angle, Joe did not neglect the spectacle slant to give the event that necessary touch of showmanship. With this in mind, both teams were attired in special outfits and played against a black plush cyclorama background. Lee spent some extra money to install regulation baskets, electrical scoreboard, rigged up special lighting and now has chemist experimenting to whiten or silver the ball so that passing can be followed easier.

Ushers were stationed in aisles to return balls out of bounds in the auditorium, but as the Paramount stage lacks only a few feet of regulation and players being highly skilled, ball was rarely out of control.

Lee advertised the game widely, broke the sport pages in advance and newspapers covered it fully the day after. Attendance was reported double the usual Friday take, due to the extra and novel attraction, and Lee says the idea can be adapted to houses with less stage space than the Paramount.

Tieins Helpful For "Spy 77" Date

Nationwide tieups for First Division's "Spy 77" arranged by ad head Al Friedlander include hookin with fan magazine running illustrated fictionization of story. American News Co., distributors, carried three-color posters on the tiein on 2,000 delivery trucks in various cities.

Friedlander also reports Postal Telegraph cooperation for heralds in pick-up and outgoing messages to tie in with local dates. Star head cuts in department store ads were also promoted by theatremen on various dates.

February Deadline

Deadline for all entries in the February Quigley Awards competition is midnight, Saturday, March 7. Campaigns to be considered eligible for the plaques and mentions must be at Quigley Committee headquarters by that time. Please send entries in as soon as possible and note new address. —A-MIKE

Department Store Window Tiein on "Pine"

Ace Drives Put On For "Pine" Openings

Under supervision of Paramount ad head Bob Gillham, much coverage was obtained for openings of "Trail of the Lonesome Pine" in Miami and New York.

In the Florida resort center, advance was centered around world premiere at the Miami Beach Colony Theatre and fact that picture was first all-outdoor color production. Interviews with author, George Ade, Dr. John Oliver La Gorce, National Geographic Magazine editor, famed expert on color photography and other celebrities brought many newspaper breaks including photos of the premiere.

Top bally stunt was tieup with Hialeah track on a "Lonesome Pine Handicap" plugged with posters in trolleys, busses, mention in programs and spot announcements on the p.a. system at the track, the special race run on day of opening. Color and other highlights of picture were given boosts on local radio programs.

Opening night was very "hollywood" with top names in attendance with spots, and floods used to light up front of house. Advance showing for local critics was arranged so that reviews broke night of opening and stories were sent out over the various wire services for national coverage.

Big Ads for N. Y. Opening

For the date at the New York Paramount, series of 600 and 1,000-line ads were used ahead with copy stressing the color angle. Outside tieups were varied and included Cinema Shop window in Macy's (see photo), pipe display at Wally Frank, Franklin Simon sports window, Marcus jewelry display and color windows in many Nu-Enamel local stores.

Store Aids Spencer For "Mutiny" Date

Through cooperation of local chain hardware store in Hamilton, Ontario, C. T. Spencer at the Capitol for "Mutiny" secured model displays in all their stores four weeks ahead. Windows were devoted to stills with picture and playdate mention. Additional publicity breaks were garnered by Spencer, who discovered that a direct descendant of Lt. Bligh of "Mutiny" fame was a resident of Hamilton, papers carrying stories, with gentleman in question lending theatre an old picture of the ship.

Smalley Theatre Head Arranges Rubinoff Date

Continuing his policy of playing big stage names at various of the circuit's theatres, W. C. Smalley, president and general manager, Smalley Theatres, forwards account of recent personal appearance of Rubinoff in Johnstown and Norwich.

Engagement was front-paged in all papers and followup publicity was also in keeping, with cut of star and two-column full story breaking in Norwich. Business was tops, duplicating success of Paul Whiteman personal in same houses last summer.

Mr. Smalley also reports running other stage names and radio acts, cash nights, stage weddings, etc., with sufficient success to combat the severe snow storms in that sector.

Lie Detector Used On "Captain Blood"

Mike Chakeres, Regent Theatre, Springfield, Ohio, for his "Captain Blood" date borrowed a lie detector from local police which was placed in lobby during engagement. Patrons leaving theatre were asked if they could truthfully say they did not think the picture one of the greatest they had ever witnessed. A money back offer was made, but there was no "takers."

For "Obsession" special invitations were extended to ministers and letters mailed to P.T.A., men's and women's clubs, all stressing fact that author had attended school in Springfield.

Airplane Stunt Plugs "Zero" for Young

A novel airplane stunt to publicize "Ceiling Zero" was used by Leo Young, Strand Theatre, Portland, Maine. Two thousand cards for each letter in title were dropped from bannered plane flying over city, the letters "C, E and I" being first thrown out and the remaining letters in groups of three at intervals of 15 minutes. To first six persons presenting themselves at theatre with complete set of 11 cards spelling out title, free trips were given and to next six, guest tickets were awarded. Stunt brought plenty of publicity for Leo.

For his lobby a peep-show machine was installed containing stills and title cards, patrons were invited to step up and see a free preview. Young arranged with local pilot to go to Boston to pick up the print, photos were taken of plane landing at field in Portland and run in dailies. Contest was also planned with schools for model airplanes, which were displayed in lobby, members of local airport acting as judges with tickets going to winners.

"And It Comes Out—"

Aspirants in Hamilton, Ontario, who were able to sing, dance, whistle or play an instrument to the tune of "Music Goes Round" were invited by Manager Sid Scott to do their stuff on the stage of the Tivoli. Ten dollars was offered as prizes and Sid covered all music shops with half-sheet cards on the gag.

Proper Handling of Refunds Described by Service Chief

There are two classes to whom the theatre must at times give refunds. One class consists of those the theatre welcomes but for various reasons ask or demand their money back. The second class is made up of patrons not welcomed by the theatre, namely intoxicated or disorderly persons, shifters, etc. Let us deal with the former.

The primary purpose of the chief usher should be to take the curse off the refunding process by not giving the patron the impression he is going through a terrible ordeal. . . . The chief should consider refunding as a business transaction which is in one sense as important as the purchase of a ticket. . . . To refuse or to handle discourteously or carelessly a reasonable request for "money back" is not consistent with the principles of the theatre staff. . . .

Therefore, it is a good and necessary policy to handle refunds cheerfully. Use the transaction as another way to build up good will. . . . Give the patron a warm smile while handing back the money—express your regret that he was unable to stay. . . tell him sincerely you hope to see him back again soon—

From bulletin for Chief Ushers written by George W. Coleman, Chief of Service, Scollay Square Theatre, Boston, and reported by Manager J. C. Goodwin.

WHAT MORE CAN I SAY?

I'm Stumped! How am I going to write an ad on the new Chaplin picture? The newspaper critics haven't left anything for an ad-writer like me to say!

They've stolen my stuff with the N. Y. World-Telegram saying, "it's the funniest picture in years . . . Chaplin is still supreme . . . my only advice is to go and laugh yourself sick."

The N. Y. Post calls it "the season's motion picture event . . . highest rating, EXCELLENT."

And the sober N. Y. Times thinks it's "a rousing, rib-tickling, gag bestrewn jest in the best Chaplin manner." Everyplace I look somebody else is writing a column or a review about how funny and what a hit "Modern Times" really is.

So-o-o-o, there's nothing for me to do but say that Charlie Chaplin's "Modern Times" starts Friday, and suggest you come early to avoid the crowds.

Inquiring Reporter Gag Sells "Way Down East"

Three days ahead of opening of "Way Down East" John Burhorn, Gayety Theatre, Chicago, had inquiring reporter rove streets asking old timers if they had seen the original play and what their comments were. To those sending in best letters, tickets were awarded. Cooperating newspaper gave stunt plenty of publicity.

Staff Goes Pirate On "Captain Blood"

Not only the usherettes and doorman but the lobby too was given that pirate treatment at the RKO Palace, Columbus, Ohio on "Captain Blood" where long gangplank was placed across the outer lobby (see photo) leading to the main entrance door to theatre.

Large blowup of one of the stills was planted in center of lobby setpiece, surrounded by model ships with picture credits above. Local weekly tab used shot of usherettes in costume as front cover design and the dailies also gave the display a number of breaks.

Entire setup was arranged by Columbus RKO publicist, John L. Barcroft working with C. Harry Schreiber, manager of the Palace and RKO city manager.

Costumed Staff and Lobby Gangplank

Moss Uses Nut Stunts For "Night at Opera

Some ace gag stunts topped Dick Moss' "Night at the Opera" campaign at the Imperial Theatre in Long Beach, Cal., one of which was dummy dressed up and placed in outer lobby with card reading "I'm the only guy in town who is not going to see (picture title here), but then I'm only a dummy." Another stunt was street car barker made up to resemble Groucho with glasses, mustache and cigar.

Barrel was placed in front of theatre with cutout of the three Marxes shown emerging with "It's a barrel of fun" copy and in lobby announcement card was prominently displayed offering tickets to those coming closest to guessing correct number of laughs in picture. Through tieup with local radio station, daily announcements were made, druggist featured a Marx Brothers nut sundae and entire staff wore sashes.

Press Sheet Offered On "March of Time"

For latest issue of "March of Time" press sheet has been created by Ralph Rolan, vice-president in charge of advertising with lots of useful information packed into four pages.

Exploitation ideas, publicity stories, sample one-column ads, billing, etc., are set down so that busy theatremen can see what they have to sell in the newest issue. Cooperating on the press sheet were A. K. Mills, publicity; Al Sindlinger, exploitation, and Miss Mary Losey, members of Rolan's department.

Sculptured Temple Figure Tops Bangkok "Curly" Front

Ahead and during run, leading Bangkok department store tied in by offering a five per cent reduction on sales to anyone presenting star photo together with store's newspaper ad. Photos were distributed befor by store and theatre, with store reporting extra business as a result.

Tieup was arranged by L. B. Steedman, 20th Century-Fox manager in Singapore at that time and now stationed in Bombay.

JOHN McMANUS' "PINK" WINDOW TIEUP AND AL HAMILTON'S SMART LOBBY SETPIECE ON "GOES"

Balducci's Snowbirds

This snowy siege we've been having meant only one thing to Tony Balducci at the State in Fulton, N. Y., and that was an opportunity to chase around town and plant snowbirds in conspicuous spots which he did successfully and profusely.

"Send Us Your Face Photo!"

Special Front Built For "Littlest Rebel"

R. D. Leatherman, Rialto Theatre, Denison, Texas, constructed a special front for his "Littlest Rebel" date, background of which was done in solid white and color scheme carried out in red, white, blue and confederate gray. Predominating figures were framed heads of Temple and Boles blown up and done in brown and green. The appliqued title shield was bordered in blue and backed out in red.

Endorsements From Overseas

DENNIS C. WALLS,
Manager, New Oxford,
Manchester, England

The Quigley Award Contests are to me a great incentive to think hard and deeply on how to pull 'em in and "pull off" an Award. Over here in England the Quigley Competitions are greatly esteemed and though it is only a short time since I was fortunate enough to secure an Honorable Mention, I say without hesitation from the congratuations and press notices that my reputation is certainly enhanced.

ROBERT BORIS,
Manager, Scala,
Brussels, Belgium

It certainly was with pride and great satisfaction that I received the Honorable Mention awarded to me for my exploitation campaign on "Bride of Frankenstein."

I gave your Award a place of honor on the wall, right over my desk, where it has been and continues to be the envy of everybody connected with the film business in Brussels.

Here is hoping that in due time the Quigley Competitions will become an internationally recognized encouragement for all ambitious and up-to-date showmen.

Coffee-Doughnut Tieup By Westfall in Lobby

In addition to putting over a swell coffee-doughnut tieup in the lobby of the Haven, in Olean, N. Y., F. M. Westfall secured a full page story on his stunt in the Salesgrams, house organ for General Foods.

Theatre ran trailer few days ahead and block ad was placed in newspapers urging public to attend. Radio hookup was planted in lobby, where coffee was served, and over this went steady stream of comment from those who had partaken of the beverage. Copies of booklet "how to make good coffee" were distributed, as were handbills, and grocers around town plugged the stunt. Accompanying photo shows how Westfall displayed the merchandise.

Shakespeare Week Planted By Le Tempt at Texas

In dignified old English type at top of co-op page, Homer Le Tempt, Texas Theatre, San Antonio, announced a proclamation by the Mayor on the inauguration of a "Shakespeare Week" in connection with the "Dream" opening there. Flanked on either side of statement were endorsements calling for film's support from city Archbishop and state chairwoman of clubs here.

Below masthead was oneline streamer carrying theatre and playdates and below was merchants' ads, each of which contained a quotation from Shakespeare.

Auto Dealer Aids Nutter On "Anything Goes"

Al Nutter, Opera House, Millinocket, Maine, for "Anything Goes," tied up local auto dealer who carried cards in his windows reading "Anything goes at the Opera House, but the new blank goes best all the time." Al's sign shop painted a set of oversized musical notes of cardboard stock, one letter of the title was painted on each note and these interspersed with smaller notes covered with star cutouts. These suspended by wires were hung in lobby, attracting considerable attention.

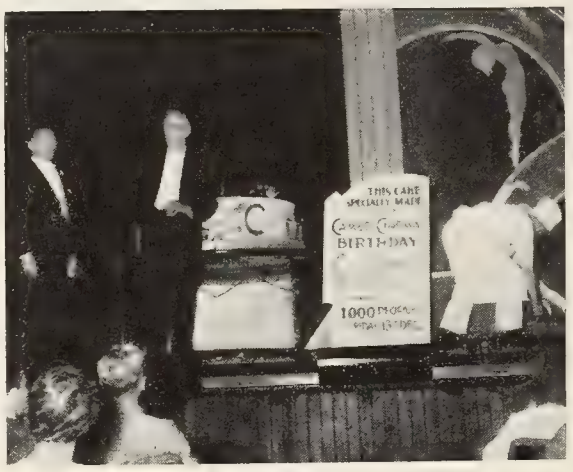
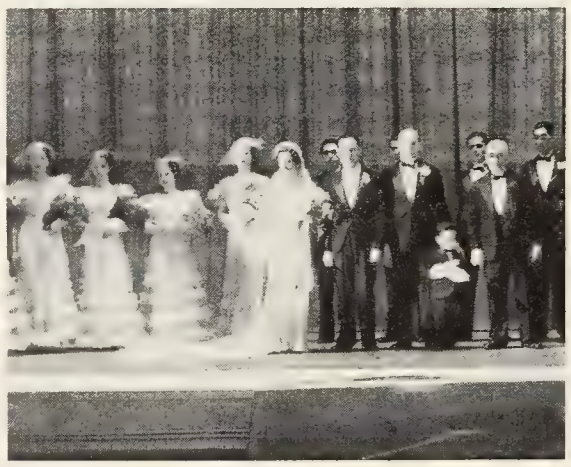
Binnard Animates "Blood" Display



Boys in the field are seizing upon the opportunities for display on "Captain Blood" and among those recently reported are some from Manager Birk Binnard, Metropolitan, Baltimore, illustrated in accompanying photo. Ted Sokolove is house artist.

Title was painted on sail in background, sail anchored at four corners and blown by large fan concealed at left side. Figures fencing in front were five feet high, blown up and hand painted. Ship deck and rear constructed of beaverboard, with rope, treasure chest planted for realism. Ships in background were animated, rolling with the waves.



Color scheme: Sail, white and lettering, red. Figures, ships, etc., in natural color and date in black. Amber spot on sail, blue spot on foremost of ships and red spot on those in rear.

Mayor Cuts Cake for Levy

Allison's Bridal Party on Stage

Binnard's Animated Lobby Display

Theatre Celebrates First Anniversary

When the Cameo Cinema, Durban, South Africa, celebrated its first anniversary, Woolf Levy, director, promoted what he reports the largest birthday cake ever made locally for giveaway to patrons. Cake served over 1,000 and to those coming closest to guessing correct weight, tickets were awarded. Cake was cut on stage by His Worship the Mayor.

Special colored program was gotten up for the occasion containing message signed by Levy thanking patrons for their attendance during year. Merchants' ads paid for printing and distribution.

To boost "Supernatural," following his trailer, Woolf used an amateur ventriloquist dressed as a skeleton seated at box draped in black with crystal and green lights flashing on him. The man spoke in two voices, one as a male commenting on the picture and then as a female offering to tell fortunes during each performance.

Stage Wedding Planted By Allison and Rodis

George Allison, manager De Luxe Theatre, New York City, assisted by Ted Rodis, put over a reported first-time stage wedding in his neighborhood. Leading merchants donated gifts to the lucky bride and groom including flowers, furniture, complete bridal outfits, etc. Accompanying photo shows party on stage.

Merchants plugged the wedding in their ads and stores, theatre was decorated for the occasion, circulars and heralds were distributed, local celebrities attended and newspapers gave the stunt some nice publicity.

Plantation Ball Held For "So Red the Rose"

A plantation ball was put on at leading hotel by Sam Roth, State Theatre, Harrisonburg, Va., in connection with the opening of "So Red the Rose." Window next to theatre was devoted to display of Civil War relics and exhibit of Confederate money, guns and brick from historically-famed McLean house in Appomattax.

Parade of local boy scouts with band was held few days ahead, advance screening was held for clergy, doctors and leading merchants, and children presented script over radio. Bill Smith assisted on the campaign that got city-wide coverage.

MIND "THE PERSONAL TOUCH"

British Roundtabler Blames Lack Of Personalization in Operation For Various Theatre Weaknesses

by HARRY B. HARRIS

General Manager, Exchange Kinema Lincoln, England

After all the wailing and gnashing of teeth during the past years, about our many and varied problems, it seems one of the things the industry most needs is to put its own house in order. Strange as it may seem, this is where the independent holds a trump card, which has only been played in the minority of instances. This trump card is "The Personal Touch," which is a most vital asset to the exhibitor whose interest extends beyond the current month's profit and loss account.

How often have you sat in someone else's theatre and: Longed to get a finger on the sound control buzzer in order to cue it into its proper volume? Longed to be able to advise the operators that in quiet parts of the film their conversation was distinctly audible to those seated near the box?

Longed to instruct the attendents in the handling of a torch, explaining that a beam of light on the floor is much more effective than in a patron's face? Longed to tell the proprietor that 20 or 30 advertising slides may mean good revenue to him, but means torture and boredom to his patrons.

Longed to Instruct Operators

Longed to give certain operators a lesson or two in "How to burn in carbons and keep the arc fed up?" Longed to climb on a seat near the secondary gas or exit lighting and turn it out, in order to stop an annoying flicker caused by old fittings and dirty pipes?

Further: Wanted to stretch one's legs out at the interval and discovered that this was a most difficult feat, except at the end of a row? Been directed to a seat so near the screen that you wondered whether the management had themselves ever tried to get interested in a film whilst sitting in the same place?

Had the unique experience of hearing music from the kinema cafe mixed with sound from the screen every time the cafe door was opened? Been distracted by change dropping on a chocolate tray just at a tense moment in the picture? Had to rise so often to let other patrons pass that one regretted the remarks coming from behind could not be relayed to the manager's office?

Annoyed by Snoring

Seen the light in, and heard the opening and shutting of, the staff room door, with annoying regularity? Seen a patron sound asleep and listened to his snoring for some time before personally waking him, the staff evidently thinking that they were not allowed to?

Had all interest taken from the picture by the shuffling and giggling of youths and young girls who imagined it was clever to make themselves seen and heard? Wanted either to criticize or congratulate when leaving at the end of the show, but could see no one but the doorman?

So I could go on enumerating things that should not be, and which I have personally experienced at one time or another.

It only remains for you to add to my list all the other experiences you must have had, and it will easily be realized what a serious matter it is.

One Real Remedy

There is only one real remedy, and that, I consider, is "The Personal Touch." I remember about 12 years ago being commissioned by the principal of a circuit of super kinemas to give him a detailed and confidential report of how his theatres were being run, and to his amazement the job occupied about three weeks of my time, and in spite of the fact that supervisors, assistant supervisors, etc., were on the pay-roll, my report, when completed, ran into nearly twenty closely typewritten pages.

The reason? Well, my explanation was that "The Personal Touch" had been pushed completely into the background in favor of a sort of military system of management.

I am not attempting to put myself on a pedestal as a superman, but it was with the greatest satisfaction that I eventually found my criticisms being taken notice of and my suggestions, being adopted, without any so-called "re-organization" of staff.

I would say, let us put our house in order by cultivating and encouraging that Personal Touch, without which we should certainly be a nation of robots . . . and when that is done we shall be ready and better equipped for tackling the many other problems with which the exhibitor is continually being saddled.—From FILM RENTER, London, England.

LOBBY ADVANCE. Some of the neat lobby art used by Manager Sam Gilman, Loew's, Harrisburg, Pa., ahead of his showings on "Rose Marie" and "Strike Me Pink". Nice job of selling.

Adams' "O'Shaughnessy's" Circus Front

Adams Builds Circus Front On "O'Shaughnessy's Boy"

Youngsters up in Regina, Saskatchewan, Can., got quite a kick out of Manager J. C. Adams' circus front at the Metropolitan on "O'Shaughnessy's Boy," what with 'Main Entrance' lettered over outer foyer (see photo) cutout clown atop marquee and varicolored flags for extra decoration.

Adams landed prominent window in downtown store on boys' clothing with large poster for background and tieup stills with copy spotted all through the display. Radio was also employed with convener of local women's council on special broadcast stressing the picture's highlights.

Ladies Receive Flowers At "Splendor" Opening

To the first 500 ladies attending opening of "Splendor" at Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, Jack Lykes promoted roses for giveaway. For street bally local auto dealer loaned new car with sign on either side reading "Ride in splendor in the new Blank car and see," etc., etc. Liveried chauffeur drove car in which man in full dress, top hat and trimmings was driven about town in business section.

Through tieup with local radio dealer, special blowup of Miriam Hopkins standing by radio surrounded by stills from picture. Largest men's clothing shop devoted window display to latest styles with card reading "you will find splendor in our clothes."

Somers Inaugurates Major Bowes Day

With the personal appearance of a local boy in the Major Bowes Amateur unit playing the Warner Ohio Theatre, Sidney, Ohio, Manager B. Somers set about inaugurating a Major Bowes day. Mayor Laughlin cooperated and presented the keys of the city to the unit during their stay in Sidney, an appreciation dinner was held and attended by president of the merchants' association and other notables, and through Somers' efforts in planting the stunt so successfully, excellent newspaper breaks were secured.

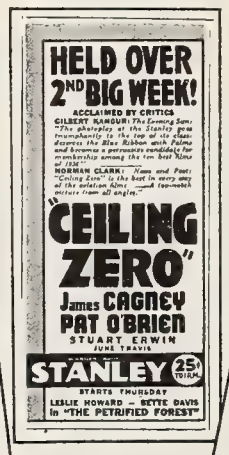
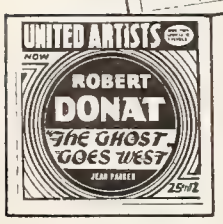
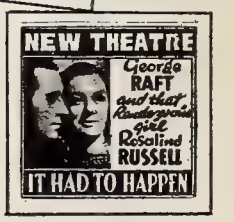
REPRESENTATIVE NEWSPAPER ADS







WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Allied

SHRIEK IN THE NIGHT, A: Ginger Rogers, Lyle Talbot—Here is an old picture that pleased the customers on a double bill. Good print. You won't go wrong by playing this on a weekend with western.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Columbia

BLACK ROOM, THE: Boris Karloff, Marian Marsh—A pink-tea mystery affair that at no time makes the patron forget his past due taxes. Columbia has given it good production but the story is not convincing and has few genuine thrills. Not the worst of its type and certainly not the best. Fair audience reaction.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

CASE OF THE MISSING MAN, THE: Roger Pryor, Joan Perry—Our patronage endorsed this as one of the best program pictures we had played in weeks. The story has an original twist that brings a great deal of action into the film.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ESCAPE FROM DEVIL'S ISLAND: Victor Jory, Florence Rice—A thrilling picture that departs from the beaten track of program entertainment and has strong mass appeal. Our patrons heartily enjoyed it, and its title made it a good boxoffice attraction. One seemingly calm patron chewed his thumb nail almost into the quick when Jory and Norman Foster made their escape from the island.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

FEATHER IN HER HAT, A: Pauline Lord, Louis Hayward—The slow tempo and British atmosphere of this picture did not please our patronage, and business would have suffered had it not been for a strong supporting feature. Pauline Lord gives a stirring performance and is assisted by an able cast, but the film belongs in the class picture category.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

GRAND EXIT: Ann Sothern, Edmund Lowe—This is one of those sleeping powders. Edmund Lowe very indistinct due to his fast talking. Too bad there are so few sound engineers. If I were one I'd make it a point to sack everyone who could not take pains to enunciate and articulate plainly. Pat O'Brien has this same fault, and so have many others. Columbia seems to have poor recording and "Grand Exit" is a poor piece of entertainment. Pass it up. Played February 11-12.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

GUARD THAT GIRL: Robert Allen, Florence Rice—A good program picture that pleased on a double bill. Columbia has the knack of giving their pictures titles that have punch and strong appeal to the family patronage.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SHE COULDN'T TAKE IT: George Raft, Joan Bennett—This one rates extra playing time. Too bad we haven't Walter Connolly in more pictures; he is plenty good in this one. Played January 18-19.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

SHE COULDN'T TAKE IT: George Raft, Joan Bennett—Very good picture. I believe it would have done good business if it had not been for the blizzard and extreme cold weather.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SHE MARRIED HER BOSS: Claudette Colbert, Melvyn Douglas, Michael Bartlett—A smart picture with a good mass appeal. The versatile Miss Colbert collects a few more laurels. In commenting on picture merit many of us forget the all important factor of direction. Columbia is fortunate in this respect. They seem to be all aces. Running time, 89 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

SHE MARRIED HER BOSS: Claudette Colbert, Melvyn Douglas—This deserves all the complimentary adjectives that an ambitious press agent could think of. Gay entertainment with never a dull moment. Perfect audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas.

SHE MARRIED HER BOSS: Claudette Colbert, Michael Bartlett—In spite of 30 below zero we did better than average on this one. Many came the second time. I would like to play more of this star's pictures. In my opinion, she is one of the best. Played January 31-February 2.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

SUPERSPEED: Florence Rice, Norman Foster—An average program picture that received a marvelous audience response. Personally, we cannot account for the unusually good reaction as the film is not so outstanding.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

TOO TOUGH TO KILL: Victor Jory, Sally O'Neill—A very good action picture. Story interesting and star and whole cast fine. Good satisfaction. Played February 6.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

WESTERN FRONTIER: Ken Maynard—Good western that seemed to please. Business poor because of sub-zero weather.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kansas. Small town patronage.

First National

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown—Good. Running time, 83 minutes. Played December 23-24.—Louisville Theatres, Inc., Louisville, Miss. General patronage.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown—Must report like most other exhibitors on this one which is very good. Recommend it any time. Running time, 83 minutes. Played February 1-2.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

BROADWAY HOSTESS: Winifred Shaw, Lyle Talbot—A large overdose of Wini Shaw. She sang at any time and place with or without reason. The audience was drugged with it, in a coma when the picture finished.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CAPTAIN BLOOD: Errol Flynn—One of the finest pictures ever put on the screen but the weather at 30 below kind of spoiled things but it's a good picture and will do your house good. Running time, 120 minutes. Played February 10-12.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

I FOUND STELLA PARISH: Kay Francis, Sybil Jason—A mighty pleasing picture, good story and good acting, which we always expect from Kay Francis. Paul Lukas is unusually good. Ian Hunter is rather hard to understand. And don't forget Sybil Jason. That little lady will go places. She is already a very close second to Shirley Temple. A very satisfactory picture. Running time, 84 minutes. Played January 25-26.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

IN CALIENTE: Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien, Edward Everett Horton—Fine picture. Played too old. Horton and O'Brien turn in fine job. Del Rio good but not liked here.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA: Josephine Hutchinson, Pat O'Brien—Fine production. Business not so good but picture is fine.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—This easily heads the class of West Point or Annapolis dramas, and when we have said that what more is there to say. We got the weather breaks on this, after a real cold spell. The weather moderated when this was shown and it pulled the week out of the red.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Ross Alexander almost as good as Powell, and John Arledge was excellent. Thanks, Warner, for a very fine picture. It can't be beat for this type show and at present time this is the kind of picture that is drawing best for me. Hurry, Warner, with Ross Alexander's new picture "Boulder Dam" and with Powell's "Colleen."—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keel-

er—Good. Running time, 109 minutes. Played November 25-26.—Louisville Theatre, Inc., Louisville, Miss. General patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Can recommend this very highly. If you've got it, be sure and play it and give it your best days. Played January 25-26.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

G. B. Pictures

BORN FOR GLORY: Barry Mackay, John Mills—This is a good big picture and well acted. The only fault our patrons had was they could not understand the dialogue. Played February 7-8.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

THIRTY-NINE STEPS, THE: Robert Donat, Madeleine Carroll—If all British pictures released in this country were as lively and entertaining as this mystery-melodrama there would be a brisk competition between foreign and native factions over here. Robert Donat continues the vivid impression he made in "The Count of Monte Cristo" and finds himself surrounded by an unusually well chosen cast. The picture has a multitude of clever touches that cannot help but make it the outstanding picture released thus for by GB. Our patrons were intrigued by the title and came in profitable numbers. Everyone was pleased.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AH, WILDERNESS: Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery, Eric Linden—About the most realistic and best story of New England folks yet given us. It's a great picture with a superb cast in top form. We only regret to state business fell below our hopes, due somewhat perhaps to the snow storm. Played February 9-10.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

AH, WILDERNESS!: Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery, Eric Linden—This is the most outstanding comedy drama of all time. Everyone liked this picture. You can give your personal recommendation and the picture will certainly hold you up. Running time, 98 minutes. Played January 9.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine. Town and country patronage.

AH, WILDERNESS!: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore, Eric Linden—Fine entertainment. It has everything necessary for mass appeal. Business above average and everyone happy. Mickey Rooney is a swell kid and no trouble in understanding his talk. Let's have more with this entire cast. We have our comedy teams, now let this be a cast team. Well, MGM, what do you say? Played February 8-10.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March—Better picture than expected after reading reports in this column. Can't see why it rated one of the 10 best. It was not that good. "Dark Angel" pleased much better and was a better picture from box office point of view.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Very entertaining, comical and lots of laughs. No business. 25 below zero. Must have kept them at home by the stove. Good for Sunday. Running time, nine reels. Played January 25.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

BONNIE SCOTLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Picked this one off the shelf, although there was no particular reason for it being there, and gave its pulling power a real test in subzero weather. Results satisfactory, everything considered. One swell show that made the cash customers forget their chilblains and coal bins. Running time, 82 minutes. Played February 13-15.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell—An excellent musical that has everything and will please everyone. This is the type of show that pleases because it is real entertainment.—D. B. White, Ritz Theatre, Fernandina, Fla. General patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936, THE: Eleanor Powell, Jack Benny—The best musical yet. Running time, 103 minutes. Played November 4-5.—Louisville Theatre, Inc., Louisville, Miss. General patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936, THE: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell, Robert Taylor—We played this a return engagement for two days. We played this picture three days in November and had requests to bring it back, and it pleased all we got in, but we struck the worst snowstorm this country has seen for 50 years and did not do the business we would have done on that account. I call it the best picture we have had in years.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—Here is one for the men and boys, also the lady Gable admirers. Three weeks of near zero weather make it hard to judge the drawing power of any picture. Many regulars keeping the home fires burning. Running time, 89 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

ESCAPADE: William Powell, Luise Rainer—Not so hot. Just a picture without any draw. Running time, 88 minutes. Played January 23-25.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Dear, Alberta, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—Musical production with patriotic flavor. Pleased all. B. O. fair in spite of zero weather. Running time, 79 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—Very good. Was caught with blizzard weather on this fine show. For consistently good shows you have to hand it to Metro. Played February 8-9.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

HIDEOUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—A very nice picture all the way through and we had many complimentary remarks on it. The role of the farmer's daughter and wife were splendidly played. The title of this picture is a decided drawback, as many feared it was a gangster picture of the usual sort. Book this one. Played February 7-8.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. City and country patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne—The best Joan Crawford picture in some time. Brian Aherne was also splendid in this. It is peppy and fast moving with lots of fun, good romantic interest and a wow of a finsh. Business a little better than the cold weather average we have been having.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

I LIVE MY LIFE: Joan Crawford, Brian Aherne—Every patron, child and adult, found this to be one of the finest pictures Joan has made and there was not a single dissatisfied comment. Above average business.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny—Played this on Friday-Saturday and did a great business. Jack Benny and Ted Healy make a great pair, and picture is not cluttered up with love pash. Will fill the bill on midweek or Sunday-Monday spot.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Clark Gable, Charles Laughton—Good. Running time, 133 minutes. Played November 28-29.—Louisville Theatre, Inc., Louisville, Miss. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Charles Laughton, Clark Gable—Ran three days and didn't make expenses. It is no doubt a wonderful picture, as to cast, photography and historical setting, but had been shown all around me all the way from two months to several weeks and that, combined with zero weather, left me hoping I would never hear of another of these high class productions. If a picture does not pay expenses an exhibitor is better off if he doesn't exhibit it. This seemed to please the men fairly well but the ladies did not like it. It is too cruel to be entertaining. The ocean views are wonderful, however. Running time, 133 minutes. Played February 7-9.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Thetare, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone—Broke all records for straight picture program and gave the patrons 100 per cent satisfaction. Here is a production any theatre should take pride in offering its patrons. Running time, 133 minutes. Played January 19-22.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—The very few Marx Bros. fans thought this one O. K. I am most decidedly NOT an admirer of these supposed comedians. I didn't make expenses on this one so it is evident that Marx Bros. are not favorites here. Running time, 96 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Same old cut and dried formula. Fine for the youngsters. Some more matured fans called it drivel, while others ate it up. Running time, 79 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Good show to poor business. Cold weather keeps them at home. Running time, nine reels. Played January 26-27.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

PURSUIT: Chester Morris, Sally Eilers—Fine action picture for Friday and Saturday run. Seemed to please all classes. Running time, 60 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell, Rosalind Russell—It's tops for a picture. It has about everything that makes for entertainment, action and clever dialogue. More power to Rosalind Russell. She sunk her teeth into this role. If she gets the breaks she is going places. She has a keen sense of expression in getting the comedy over. The audience had words of high praise for her work in this picture. She was definitely a hit.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell, Rosalind Russell—A thrill-packed drama of the World War that went over big. This one has enough excitement, thrills, romance and comedy to please any audience, any time. Running time, 91 minutes. Played January 29-30.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—This picture is every bit as good as MGM said it would be. Liked even better than "Mutiny on the Bounty." Running time, 126 minutes. Played January 30.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine. Town and country patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—A wonderful production. Mammoth, colossal, etc. You will have to see it to appreciate the size and quality of it. All that saw it were more than satisfied. Acting great. We are buried in snow and ice in this country. Country roads blocked, railroads stopped, business paralyzed and has not broke box office records. Played February 9-10.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

VAGABOND LADY: Robert Young, Evelyn Venable—A nice little program picture that gave general satisfaction. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 11-12.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

VAGABOND LADY: Robert Young, Evelyn Venable—Very good comedy melodrama full of laughs. Running time, eight reels. Played January 10-11.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Monogram

CHEERS OF THE CROWD: Russell Hopton, Irene Ware—Fair program picture for double bills. Hopton not so good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

KEEPER OF THE BEES: Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness—Did fair business and pleased most of the customers though it is not as well made or recorded as the Gene Stratton Porter stories by RKO.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kans. Small town patronage.

TRAIL BEYOND, THE: John Wayne—Fine little picture. Played on double bill and it went over fine. Noah Beery, Jr., very good. Am looking forward for "Stormy," Universal picture featuring, Noah, Jr.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

BAR 20 RIDES AGAIN: William Boyd, Jimmy Allison—Another good Cassidy story. Beautiful photographic work throughout. Played February 7-8.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BAR 20 RIDES AGAIN: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—The third "Hopalong" picture which equals and even tops the first, and the first was perfect! A great series of pictures that deserves to be shown in every situation. "Bar 20" is not just another western, but an outstanding action drama laid in the west. We were very happy to read that Paramount has contracted for six additional "Hopalong" pictures. Played February 7-8.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Jack Oakie, Burns and Allen—Paramount's attempt to assemble a flock of stars on the screen without anything for them to do will put their next "Broadcast" at the lowest allocation.—D. B. White, Ritz Theatre, Fernandina, Fla. General patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Claudette Colbert and Fred MacMurray give a good exposition on how to be "scrappy," but still be happy. I have yet to see a poor or even mediocre Colbert picture, and this is no exception. We played it in sub-zero weather to a small crowd and much distraction due to wrong markings on the reel headings, but it's still a mighty good picture. Played February 9-10.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—A fine comedy drama that can be depended on for a snappy show. Drew a few extra folks in as well. Played February 12-13.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Fred MacMurray, Claudette Colbert—Again Paramount rings the bell with this pair of popular stars. I didn't rate it with "Gilded Lily" and "Hands Across the Table," but most of my patrons liked it better. Miserable below zero weather smacked the gross a terriffic blow. Running time, 83 minutes. Played February 9-11.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

COLLEGIATE: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie—Fair. Running time, 81 minutes. Played January 22-23.—Louisville Theatre, Inc., Louisville, Miss. General patronage.

COLLEGIATE: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Ned Sparks—A swell bunch of nonsense, fun, music, dancing and pretty girls. With Penner and Oakie running an exclusive girls school, you get an idea of just how screwy the plot could be. Pulled well and was well liked. Running time, 81 minutes. Played January 24-25.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

CORONADO: Alice White, Lean Errol—A hodgepodge of nonsense, fun, music and romance that clicked as a preview with our patrons. Just a program picture that would be difficult to sell alone, but should give satisfaction in any situation where the lighter type of production is favored. Running time, 75 minutes. Played February 7-8.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Thetare, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

CORONADO: Johnny Downs, Leon Errol—This boy, Johnny Downs, is a great little entertainer. His tap dancing and songs are okay. In this he has the best opportunity to date but still deserves better. A nice picture, though, and one that will please. Played February 11.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

CORONADO: Betty Burgess, Johnny Downs—A dandy picture with the wrong name (it doesn't mean anything). Made me money, but if it had a name suitable to the picture, would have doubled. Played February 5-6.—E. H. Smothers, Dixie Theatre, Camden, Tenn. Small town and rural patronage.

CRUSADES, THE: Henry Wilcoxon, Loretta Young—The usual DeMille extravaganza that has evidently lost its appeal. Excellent story and photography that will please those who may be induced to attend. Played February 9-10.—J. R. DeLand, Park Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. Small town patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—This was the first Colbert film we have shown since "One Night" and it proved that Claudette is still Public Sweetheart No. 1. Possibly our excellent trio of supporting shorts had something to do with it, but, anyway, more of the boys voiced their approval than on any other program of the season. Colbert, as usual, is at her best. Nuff sed! Played February 8.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

NEVADA: Larry Crabbe—An average good western dressed up as only Paramount does it. Certainly it would seem all westerns could at least boast of the splendid scenic backgrounds that are in turn excellently photographed in all Paramount outdoor stories. Played January 31-February 1.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NEVADA: Larry Crabbe, Kathleen Burke—Good western. Running time, 60 minutes. Played February 12.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

SMART GIRL: Ida Lupino, Kent Taylor—Good programmer for double billing. Stars good but unknown. Some smart comedy in this one. Used Friday and Saturday. Business punk. Running time, 74 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott—A nice kind of picture that did fair business. Running time, 83 minutes. Played January 30-February 1.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

THIS WOMAN IS MINE: Gregory Ratoff, John Loder—This program picture is an insult to your patrons even if they aren't particular. A dull, foreign made film. Audience response only fair.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas.

TWO FISTED: Lee Tracy, Grace Bradley—A kindergarten story. Lee Tracy as a reformer insulted the intelligence of our patrons. Grace Bradley was miscast. She should be limited to a dancing girl part. Roscoe Karns poor as a prizefighter.—D. B. White, Ritz Theatre, Fernandina, Fla. General patronage.

VIRGINIA JUDGE, THE: Walter C. Kelly—Played to fair business in the face of terrific opposition. Paramount may be congratulated for their consistency in producing pleasing pictures. I have yet to play one that completely failed to please. Played February 11.—J. R. DeLand, Park Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. Small town patronage.

Republic

DANCING FEET: Eddie Nugent, Joan Marsh, Ben Lyon—A light semi-musical that will please a not too discriminating audience. The story is fair but the direction very poor. However, the dance sequences will redeem an otherwise sorry picture. This was sold to me as a special and I am glad that weather conditions would not permit me to advertise as such. Played February 12-13.—J. R. DeLand, Park Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. Small town patronage.

HITCH HIKE LADY: Alison Skipworth—A mighty good story, good direction, good acting but very poor recording. We hope that it was the particular print that we received for it is really an excellent picture deserving of a higher rating than the average program picture, but when the audience must strain their ears to understand what is being said it spoils even the best pictures. Played February 7-8.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

MELODY TRAIL: Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford—This is a splendid western. Good riding, good comedy, great singing. This man Autry has personality, voice and everything to please the people and they begin to ask for his pictures. That is going some these days. Played February 7-8.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

SINGING VAGABOND, THE: Gene Autry, Ann Rutherfurd—Our patrons enjoyed this musical western and we received no complaints. It is as well produced as the previous Autry films.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

$1,000 A MINUTE, A: Roger Pryor, Leila Hyams—One of the best comedy features of the year. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 27-29.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

RKO Radio

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray, Fred Stone—Best show for Miss Hepburn and no business. That's that. Play it Sunday. That's the proper day for it. Running time, 11 reels. Played February 7-8.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray—Katie does not do so well here and she talks herself to death in this picture. I did not find anyone who liked it and in making the picture they traveled around a good deal and got nowhere. Running time, 99 minutes. Played January 25-26.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE, and WEST OF THE PECOS Richard Dix—Both of these are better than average westerns. "Arizonian" was the better produced picture though "West of the Pecos" outdrew it probably because of Zane Grey's name.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kans. Small town patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Carol Stone—Good picture. Did fair business under adverse weather conditions.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kans. Small town patronage.

GRAND OLD GIRL: May Robson—A show that is different. Played late after release. Business fair in cold weather. 20 below zero. Running time, eight reels. Played February 5.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

HIS FAMILY TREE: James Barton, Maureen Delany—A mighty good comedy program picture. A real Irish comedian and a very good cast. Funny story. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

HOT TIP: Zasu Pitts, James Gleason—Excellent family entertainment that is strong enough to solo any day of the week. Good audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas.

I DREAM TOO MUCH: Lily Pons, Henry Fonda—A great picture. Of the kind we have seen no better. Wonderful singing. Fine acting and interesting story, making a fine entertainment for those that appreciate music and good acting, but in my town it was one of the worst flops at the box office. No fault of the show. People just won't come to musical pictures with songs sung in foreign language. Others have flopped, too. Played February 2-3.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—Ginger did her best with this, but a hideous disguise that she wears too long and poor handling all the way through makes us wish she would stick to the Astaire-Rogers combination. However, she has a lot of followers, and could easily become a star in her own right with good stories and direction. The picture played to average business and received neither favorable nor adverse criticism. Played February 9-10.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—Splendid entertainment. Played one week after "Top Hat," which is tops, and was pleased with results. Some liked it better, and that's going some.—R. T. Swanson, Opera House, Ely, Minn. General patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—Ginger Rogers without Fred Astaire seems to fall a little flat. Not that this is not an entertaining enough picture, for it is, and was well liked by a big majority of our patrons, but many comments were noted that indicated a preference of these two as a team. Fair business in spite of cold weather. Running time, 87 minutes. Played February 7-8.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—One of their best pictures. Pleased and drew well.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart—It pleased and did good business.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, THE: Preston Foster, Dorothy Wilson—The cold weather stopped them from coming out to see this one. We ran this three nights and failed to gross film rental. However, this was not the fault of the picture. Our country roads are all blocked and so had to depend on our small town patronage. Played February 8-9.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

MUSS 'EM UP: Preston Foster, Margaret Callahan—Played this two days before release date and was unable to get even one bit of advertising. However, in this cold and blizzard period it doesn't make much difference. The picture features Preston Foster as "Tip O'Neil," a private detective, and while the story is strangely familiar, Foster's characterization as the detective is refreshingly different. Pleased. An excellent program picture. Played February 12-13.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Did not think it was quite as good as "Kentucky Kernels" though it did good business.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kansas. Small town patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson, Guinn Williams—The principal selling point to this western is the huge cast of well known and not so well known stars of the horse operas. Other than that, it is just another western, but it pulled and pleased, so maybe I'm wrong. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 31-February 1.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SHE: Helen Gahagan, Randolph Scott—For a fanciful drama, this held their interest. There must be a field for this kind of a story judging by the success of this story when first published. The picture is well done, on a lavish scale. We could not judge the drawing power of this because it was the coldest Sunday of the year when this was shown.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhod patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—Did not prove the box office attraction it deserved, but those who came were well pleased. Abel was quite a different D'Artagnan than Doug. Fairbanks and quite as effective. A splendid cast in a beautifully mounted production, but apparently not what our patrons care to see. Running time, 96 minutes. Played February 2-3.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—It's too bad such a fine production went entirely to waste with us. Absolutely an excellent picture but failed at the box office pretty badly. Some top ranking stars would have helped drawing power but could hardly have done any better in the roles. Great musical score throughout. Played February 5-6.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Walter Abel, Paul Lukas, Margot Grahame—Did a little better than average business. Good picture for larger towns, although it seemed to satisfy our patrons. Played February 8.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Edward Everett Horton—Wonderful picture. Good business. Horton was very good, as were the rest of the cast.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: See report on "The Arizonian."—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Supreme

BRANDED A COWARD: Johnny Mack Brown—If you are playing westerns, don't overlook this one as it is one of those rare westerns with an excellent story. I played to a small audience due to a downpour of rain but the reaction of those attending was very gratifying. Played February 7-8.—J. R. DeLand, Park Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. Small town patronage.

BRANDED A COWARD: Johnny Mack Brown—This western could have been very good with a little more sensible story. Brown and his brother are left when outlaws headed by the "Cat" kill their parents. Next scene shows Brown grown man. He devotes his life in search of the "Cat." In the last reel Brown is shown in combat with the "Cat." The "Cat" is wounded and Brown discovers that he is his Brother, who was left with him when his parents were killed. Can you beat that for a story? Fine acting by Brown wasted by a story that even the kids complained about. Wish Brown would make a western for RKO because with the proper stories he would be my best bet for westerns. He is well known in our state because of his football at U. of Alabama. Running time, six reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BAD BOY: James Dunn, Dorothy Wilson—A good picture, but not one that will make them rave. Reminds me of a "True Story" with no background. Caused no criticism and very little compliment. Running time, 56 minutes. Played February 3-4.—E. H. Smothers, Dixie Theatre, Camden, Tenn. Small town and rural patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S SECRET: Warner Oland—Stands well up in this series. Our folks like the Chan stories and this is a good one. Played February 14-15.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S SECRET: Warner Oland—When in doubt, book a "Chan" and you can't go far wrong. These features seldom fail to please. They are not specials by any means, but they all pack plenty of entertainment. Running time, 71 minutes. Played February 4.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

DRESSED TO THRILL: Tutta Rolf, Clive Brook—Just a film. Too draggy. Pass it up if you can. Running time, eight reels. Played January 27.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

GAY DECEPTION, THE: Francis Lederer, Frances Dee—Very good and pleased everyone. Cleverly directed and had many laughs. Leads are excellent in their respective roles. Running time, 76 minutes. Played February 7-8.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

GAY DECEPTION, THE: Francis Lederer, Frances Dee—Everyone enjoyed this "Cinderella" type of romance. It is a real treat. The same old report that it was too cold to do much business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

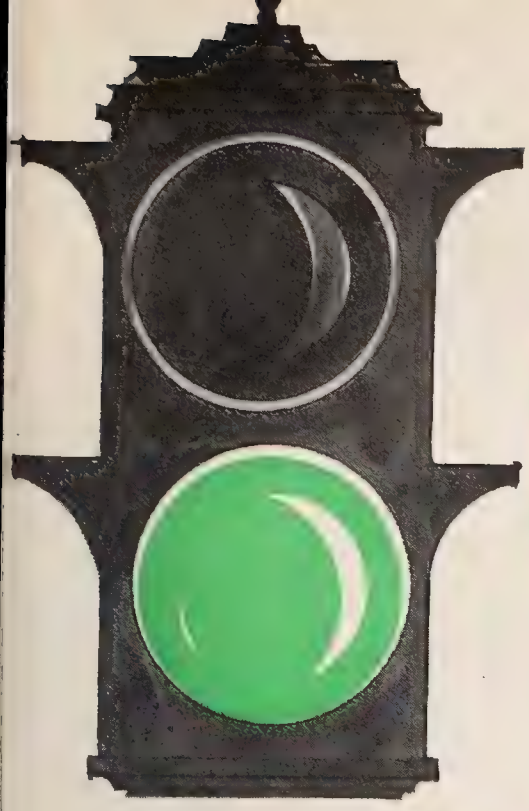
IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—Marvelous. Running time, 84 minutes. Played December 18-19.—Louisville Theatre, Inc., Louisville, Miss. General patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers, Bill Robinson—Pulled a record business, of course, and the general opinions expressed clearly indicated this to be the finest of all the beloved star's pictures. Running time, 84 minutes. Played January 26-28.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye, Jack Oakie—The old familiar back stage theme, which even a splendid cast, clever chorus numbers and catchy music could not raise above a fair rating. Failed to pull and those who turned out were only fairly enthusiastic. Personally, I thought it good entertainment, but not of sufficient value to merit the ballyhoo Fox has used to put this over. Running time, 87 minutes. Played February 5-6.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple—Extra good. Running time, 73 minutes. Played January 27-28.—Louisville Theatre, Inc., Louisville, Miss. General patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles—Another charming picture from this little star who becomes a better dancer in each feature. An obvious story of Civil War vintage made an ace attraction by its star. Played February 2-3.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.



LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple—Certainly a most pleasing production. Snow nor winds nor sleet nor blizzards nor below zero temperature can keep them away when Shirley plays. Shirley surely covers up a multitude of duds. She's one out of a billion and never need fear competition—if Fox is wise. Played February 4-5.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MAN WHO BROKE THE BANK AT MONTE CARLO, THE: Ronald Colman, Joan Bennett—Average entertainment that pleased.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

METROPOLITAN: Lawrence Tibbett, Virginia Bruce—This one did not disappoint my patrons; they didn't come. Failed to gross film rental. Felt that I should refund admission price to those that did come. Worse than "Here's to Romance," and it was bad. No more grand opera for me. Played to 43 adults, 6 children. Running time, 79 minutes. Played February 10-11.—E. H. Smothers, Dixie Theatre, Camden, Tenn. Small town and rural patronage.

METROPOLITAN: Lawrence Tibbett, Virginia Bruce—Ran Robert Benchley's "How to Sleep" before this picture and it certainly did the trick, as most of the audience did that very thing. Can see possibilities in the city but not in this locality. Played January 29.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine. Town and country patronage.

METROPOLITAN: Lawrence Tibbett, Virginia Bruce—Seventy-five per cent of the pictures have a sleeping potion effect on me but "Metropolitan" kept me wide awake throughout the performance. To give adverse personal criticism on this production would be labeling myself as "ignorant." It seems the teaching of music in public schools has not the slightest effect on the scholars in developing their desire for good music. Therefore, naturally, those of adolescent age would not select "Metropolitan" as their film fare. I tried to have our Senior Class take this picture as a benefit show but they selected a programmer instead. "Metropolitan" is a picture that deserves the highest praise from every theatre whether it is a success at the box office or not. As one of my patrons remarked, "I'd rather pay one dollar any time to see that picture." From the very beginning to the last flicker "Metropolitan" is interesting entertainment; and, as to what the picture did for me, well, I am pleased to say that it did above average business in very bad weather, and thanks to my people for supporting this fine production. I am glad I was born amongst such environment. Running time, 80 minutes. Played February 6.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

PADDY O'DAY: Jane Withers, Pinky Tomlin—Jane Withers is again presented in a picture of little more than program worth. She's good enough to deserve a real production and supporting cast. Why not a Jane Withers musical? She sure can put over a song and dance. Played February 7-8.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PADDY O'DAY: Jane Withers, Pinky Tomlin—A family entertainment, indeed, with laughs and a tear once in a while. Good for Sunday. Running time, eight reels. Played January 15.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

PADDY O'DAY: Jane Withers, Pinky Tomlin—Each succeeding picture featuring this grand little trouper has shown increasing business for us. This is her best to date and gives her every opportunity to show her varied talents. Her refreshing personality fills a spot long needed in picture fare and our patrons look forward to each new release. Hope Fox will give her vehicles worthy of her talents. Running time, 76 minutes. Played February 9-11.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

PADDY O'DAY: Jane Withers, Pinky Tomlin—Not nearly enough Withers in the picture. Rather disappointing. And they would bring in a dirty crack about a woman having a baby when they should know on such pictures we have a large children attendance. Mothers don't like such dialogue when their little girl is sitting with them. Running time, eight reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

REDHEADS ON PARADE: John Boles, Dixie Lee—Even as a preview offering they walked out on this one. No wonder, there is nothing to it. Leave it on the shelf and do yourself and your patrons a favor. Running time, 77 minutes. Played January 24-25.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

REDHEADS ON PARADE: John Boles, Dixie Lee—I want to take exception to reports published in the Herald rating the picture as just fair. We played this feature in sub-zero weather to a small but well pleased audience. Several went out of their way to say how well they liked it. Don't be afraid to boost it; it will please 90 per cent. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 18-19.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

SILK HAT KID: Lew Ayres—Good little picture that pleased and satisfied our patrons. All right for small towns, but not so good for larger theatres. Played January 25.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Fred Allen, Ann Dvorak—Dick Powell has always been a very welcome visitor to my theatre. He is the one and only. Great entertainment. An outstanding production. Played January 21-22.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers, John McGuire—This girl is a coming star. She sure can put the picture over. Shirley Temple better look out or this Jane Withers will beat her to the destination. Give us more like it, Jane. Boys, step on "Paddy O'Day" if you have it coming. Play it up to the kiddies and they will bring the adults. Running time, eight reels. Played February 2.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

THUNDER IN THE NIGHT: Edmund Lowe, Karen Morley—Mystery drama above average to poor business. 16 below zero kept them from seeing this very good show. Running time, seven reels. Played January 18.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

THUNDER MOUNTAIN: George O'Brien, Barbara Fritchie—A good western that keeps the audience on the edge of the seats. A regular Zane Grey. Running time, seven reels. Played January 30-31.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Rochelle Hudson, Henry Fonda—To an oldtimer who remembers the stage play which was the great success of its day, or its many ways, because it kept repeating year after year, this picture version is a treat, and others must have thought so too, because this did a good average on a cold Sunday when we expected below average business. It also did a little above average the Monday after. I would say that judging by modern standards it is fine entertainment for the masses, and if the classes can't find this to their liking then I am sorry for the classes. Go the limit and try to bring them in to see this.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Henry Fonda, Rochelle Hudson—One of the best pictures of the year, according to my patrons. This one was made for the small town, with just about an all star cast, and the quilting bee, the skating party with its old time games and singing, the comedy and pathos, with the grand climax of the breaking up of the ice, make this old-time drama one that pleased old and young alike. Running time, 84 minutes. Played February 5-6.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

WHISPERING SMITH SPEAKS: George O'Brien—A departure from his chaps and saddle for the railroad. Good weekend picture, a little overdrawn in some sequences. The audience seemed to like it and that is all that matters.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

YOUR UNCLE DUDLEY: Edward Everett Horton—A neat little programmer that should be okay as such anywhere. Horton is as usual excellent. Doubled with "Charlie Chan's Secret," the show drew fairly well and pleased generally. Played February 14-15.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

YOUR UNCLE DUDLEY: Edward Everett Horton—I think Horton is a great actor. I wouldn't miss any of his pictures, but evidently my patrons do not agree with me. Played to very poor business. Picture okay where Horton is appreciated. Played February 1-3.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

United Artists

BARBARY COAST: Miriam Hopkins, Edward G. Robinson, Joel McCrea—A fine production. Very fine work by all the cast, including Harry Carey's good work. Why don't we see more of him? Brian Donlevy also got plenty of attention from our customers. Many patrons asked us who he was. See he has a small part in Cantor's new picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

DARK ANGEL, THE: Merle Oberon, Fredric March, Herbert Marshall—A beautiful picture of limited appeal in this situation. Pulled fairly well and pleased those who did come out. In situations where real acting is appreciated this might be tops, but our patrons prefer more action and less emotion. Played January 29-30.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SPLENDOR: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—Good. Running time, 77 minutes. Played December 25-26.—Louisville Theatre, Inc., Louisville, Miss. General patronage.

STRIKE ME PINK: Eddie Cantor—Fine production. Cantor scores again with an excellent picture supported by a fine cast. I didn't play Cantor's last two pictures but am sorry now that I didn't because he seemed to make a big hit with the audience. This picture will really stand the advertising. Played three days to good business. Rita Rio's stock will soar after this is played because she really turns in a fine performance and patrons are asking her name, etc. She can dance to suit me any day, and I think she made more of a hit with my people than Eleanor Powell did in "Broadway Melody." Sally Eilers was very good, as was Ethel Merman. Parkyakarkus was good, much better than expected. Many wanted to know who Gordon Jones was. He was real good and he's another one my patrons will welcome back. Brian Donlevy good but not as impressive as in "Barbary Coast." Kept looking for Cantor to change to blackface and do a song but he never got around to that. So much entertainment in this that he didn't have time for it, I suppose. Buy this picture and advertise it big and you won't be sorry. Thanks, U. A., for the early date. Running time, 11 reels. Played February 15-17.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

AFFAIR OF SUSAN, THE: Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell—A fair comedy feature to poor business. Running time, seven reels. Played January 29.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes, Jean Arthur—Good picture from Uncle Carl and the best part of it is that it is different, out of the beaten track. Pictures usually run in cycles. Like "follow the leader." Originality deserves encouragement. Running time, 88 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

FIGHTING YOUTH: Charles Farrell—A good story well told. Interesting throughout. Only average drawing power despite its onetime top drawing star. Why be obstinate? Can't the Farrell-Gaynor team be reunited in a real story by someone who knows the type they need? Played February 4.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FIGHTING YOUTH: Charles Farrell, June Martel—A very good picture for anyone. It will entertain the most critical. Good for Sunday. Running time, nine reels. Played January 12.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

FIGHTING YOUTH: Charles Farrell, June Martel—The same old football junk; rolling around and then the impossible. Farrell is not the type for such a story. Business average owing to this being my serial night. Played February 7.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

HIS NIGHT OUT: Edward Everett Horton, Irene Hervey—An excellent comedy. Horton plays his part so very well that you suspect he must be that way naturally. This picture has plenty of hearty laughs and the small crowd who braved the subzero weather enjoyed it greatly. But the 27th consecutive day of zero weather with the cash customers staying home by the fireside has gotten us down to where we were unable to laugh, but we did smile and that's something.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Alice Brady—Just a fair comedy that seemed to be satisfactory to our patrons. Not so funny as some exhibitors think it. Better for larger towns than for the small country places. Played February 1.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—Ladies and gentlemen, here is a picture. It's one of those occasional pictures that your patrons know in advance through the grapevine system that it's good. Get behind it with all the guns you have. We struck that state's worst blizzard with it but will bring it back soon as possible. Running time, 13 reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

OUTLAWED GUNS: Buck Jones—Poor show. The main trouble is that too much of the picture is dark. You can't see anything but just darkness. Our people want to see the picture, not a night so dark you can see nothing but darkness. Played February 15.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

STONE OF SILVER CREEK: Buck Jones—An average Buck Jones. For me this star always means a good crowd. On this one had to buck zero weather. Played February 5-6.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

Warner Brothers

FRESHMAN LOVE: Patricia Ellis, Warren Hull, Frank McHugh—Fine program fare. Good cast. Warren Hull has a voice which reminds one of Carl Brisson, but of course he is not as good as Brisson. Patricia Ellis not as good in this as in previous pictures. George E. Stone good. So was Walter Johnson.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, Jane Froman—We never saw Pat O'Brien so depressed as he is throughout this film. Title and trailer are misleading as there's more classical singing than jazz in this one. Only fair although it introduces some good talent. Seemed mostly an advertisement for Witmark's Music Publishing house. Played January 31-February 1.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, James Melton—An excellent drama, featuring a new, and very good, singer, James Melton. Hard boiled Pat O'Brien is good in his usual role and Jean Muir is excellent. Wish they would give her more and better parts. Pleased my patrons. Running time, 89 minutes. Played January 22-23.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, James Melton—Not an outstanding picture and hardly up to the ballyhoo. The singing of "Aida" by Melton is the best part of the picture. Pat O'Brien is hardly up to his usual standard. No complaints, however. Played January 31-February 1.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. City and coutnry patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, Jane Froman, James Melton, Jean Muir—Chose this one for our first holiday show in several years. Result: 100 per cent satisfaction. Need I say more? No—but I shall anyway. This one runs the gamut of music from jazz to opera, shows New York night life at its best and worst; has the backbone of a Mildred Cram novel, just the right amounts of laughs, the good-looking and silver-voiced Melton, crooning Jane Froman, Pat O'Brien, Frank McHugh, and well, just about everything it takes to make a swell production! Played February 12.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

FEMININE INVASION: New World of Sport Series—A very good sport subject dealing with the fair sex athletes.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HOI POLLOI: The Three Stooges—A crazy comedy, but one that got plenty laughs.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SALESMANSHIP AHOY: Four Star Comedy—They ought to be ashamed to charge for junk like that. I couldn't look a kid in the face after palming this off as a comedy. It's terrible. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Gerber Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

STAR GAZING: Radio Rogues—A pretty good comedy with some good imitations by the Rogues.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TETCHED IN TH' HAID: Barney Google Cartoon—This is a very good cartoon, excellent coloring and will please the old folks as well as the young. Running time, one reel.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

TETCHED IN TH' HAID: Barney Google Cartoon—This all color cartoon, the first of the new "Barney Google" series, seemed to meet with good response from the audience. Applause as the title flashed put it in the "Popeye" class.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theathe, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Educational

AMATEUR HUSBAND, THE: Ernest Truex—Not half bad; got quite a few laughs. Running time, two reels.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

FLICKER FEVER: Frolics of Youth—Good comedy all the way through. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

GANGSTERS OF THE DEEP: Treasure Chest—A fast action, interesting deep sea fishing reel. The Treasure Chest series is considerably better this year than last. Keep it up!—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

KISS THE BRIDE: Tuxedo Comedies—Here is another good one that will make the audience laugh. It's O. K. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

LITTLE BIG TOP, THE: Frolics of Youth—The best and cleanest two reeler that we had for some time. A slant on a circus. It is a knockout. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

MAYFLOWER, THE: Terrytoon—A fail cartoon. Better than some in this series at any rate.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND MELODY: Musical Comedies—A swell comedy with some real dancing and lots of laughs. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

NINETEENTH HOLE CLUB, THE: Terrytoon—A little better cartoon than most Terrytoons.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

ONE BIG HAPPY FAMILY: Tuxedo Comedy—A fair comedy. A few laughs at any rate.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

RHYTHM OF PAREE: Musical Comedies—The kind that makes an exhibitor bite his fingernails. Not a cackle in a carload. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

YE OLD SAW MILL: Tuxedo Comedies—Too silly to be entertaining, but got by. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ALIBI RACKET: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—Very interesting subject on Crime Doesn't Pay.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

BEAUTIFUL BANFF AND LAKE LOUISE: FitzPatrick Traveltalk—A beautiful travelogue in lovely natural color.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DESERT DEATH: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—This "Crime Doesn't Pay" series is going over mighty well here. This one is excellent. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

FATE'S FATHEAD: Charles Chase—We find Chase comedies universally good and this one is no exception. Running time, two reels—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

FOLLIES OF 1936: Our Gang Comedy—A swell subject for any house. As good and better than many features. Our Gang stake a Follies show of real merit.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HOLLAND IN TULIP TIME: PitzPatrick Travel Talks—Wish we could get more shorts like this. A beautiful picture.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. City and country patronage.

HONEYLAND: Happy Harmonies—Fine colored short. One of the best in a long time. This and RKO's "Toonerville Trolley" are the tops.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

PERFECT TRIBUTE, THE: Chic Sale—A marvelous character impersonation of Lincoln by Sale. Timely booking makes this subject more effective. We played it February 9-11. The ladies "enjoyed" a nice little cry over "The Perfect Tribute." Many favorable comments. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

SOUTHERN EXPOSURE: Charley Chase—We consider this the best comedy Chase had made during the past season. Our patrons seemed to agree with us, too.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

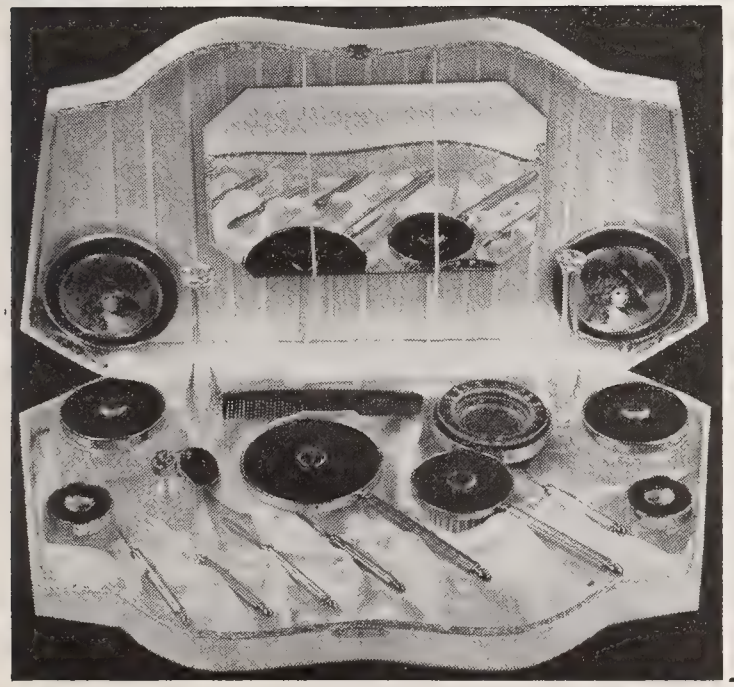
TREASURE BLUES: Todd and Kelly—Extra good comedy. Keeps you laughing all the way through. Running time, 22 minutes.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

MOLLY MOO COW AND RIP VAN WINKLE: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—This is the first entertaining short subject that I have played from RKO and it is excellent. Running time, one reel.—J. R. De Land, Park Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. Small town patronage.

OLD SPANISH ONION, AN: Ruth Etting—One of the best I have had from RKO. Most of their shorts are terrible. If they make any good ones, they have been careful not to let me get hold of it. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

PICKLED PEPPERS: Blonde and Red Head Series—Funny and exciting. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.



QUIET FOURTH, A: Smart Set Comedies—Ok for a weekend. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

SCOTTY FINDS A HOME: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Dandy one-reeler all in natural color. Running time, one reel.—Rurolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Fine colored one reeler. Advertise it and get the children and they will tell the adults about it. RKO, why not make another one with these characters? This one was fine.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Paramount

CAVALCADE OF MUSIC, THE: Headliner—A good band number showing briefly but well the advance of music throughout the years.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FOLLOW THE LEADER: Isham Jones and His Orchestra—One of the best band shorts we have played.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

FOR BETTER OR WORSER: Popeye Cartoon—Our patrons get a big kick out of this amusing rough-house cartoon.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MUSICAL MEMORIES: Color Classics—An exceptionally fine color classic, the music being oldtime ballads. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

SYMPHONY IN BLACK: Duke Ellington and his Orchestra—As unusual a short as the Duke's famous rhythm. The double exposures made in illustrating the various parts of the symphony are a bit different from anything we have seen before. It's almost a phenomenon to see and hear a colored orchestra play anything other than "hot" music. Give your patrons a treat and book this one. Running time, 10 minutes. —J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

Universal

BRING 'EM BACK A LIE: Sterling Holloway—While this is far from being good it is an average Holloway comedy. Running time, two reels—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

JOLLY LITTLE ELVES: Cartune Classics—Very nice colored Cartune.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

MY GIRL SALLY: Sterling Holloway—Universal insists this is a comedy. We still think they're fooling. Not one good laugh.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SPEEDY JUSTICE: Mentone Musical—Not as good as some of the other vaudeville shorts that Universal has released. Only fair.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

TELEPHONE BLUES: Universal Comedies—Clever singing and dancing. Very good. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BORRAH MINNEVITCH AND HIS HARMONICA RASCALS: Melody Masters—Excellent if you don't have to look at Minnevitch. A clown that can be nothing but silly. Running time, one reel.—J. R. De Land, Park Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. Small town patronage.

DOORMAN'S OPERA: Broadway Brevities—Johnny Broderick, Charlotte Arren and Company in a revusical short which rates a bit above the average. Includes several star personality acts, the prize-winner of which is the satire on grand opera. Your'e bound to like this one. Running time, 21 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

EGGS MARKS THE SPOT: Pepper Pot—Paul Whiteman's piano playing, crooning and comely "Ramona," the Three X Sisters, Sims and Bailey and others. This one will appeal to your radio fans and music lovers alike. Plenty of stars crowded into one reel makes a plot impossible, but your audience will enjoy it. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

$50 BILL: Broadway Brevities—A very good little revusical. Miss Whitney's tapping, the Marsh rendition of "I Feel It In My Bones," the dance routines by the Twelve Aristocrats, everything is excellent. But the trapdrum sequence by the ambidextrous Jack Powell is the highlight of the show. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

FLOWERS FOR MADAME: Merrie Melody—An excellent color cartoon featuring animated flowers with fire as a menace.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GUESS STARS: Radio Ramblers—Excellent imitations of Maurice "Shovel-Ear," Rudy Vallee, Ben "Boynee," Rubinoff and others, correlated by the tough-guys antics of a public enemy. This one got a hand at each show. Something rather unusual for a short subject here. Nuff Sed! Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

KEYSTONE HOTEL: Ben Turpin, Ford Sterling—Glory be! Here is an oldtimer with action and everything. Ford Sterling, Ben Turpin, Marie Prevost, Chester Conklin. They threw pies and chased policemen and a good time was had by all.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LITTLE DUTCH PLATE: Merrie Melody—Very good colored cartoon.—Runing time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

LITTLE DUTCH PLATE: Merrie Melodies—Very good. Running time, one reel.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

MERRY OLD SOUL, THE: Merrie Melodies—Another colored cartoon that pleased. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

MILLER'S DAUGHTER, THE: Merrie Melody—A pleasant enough cartoon filler.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

PHIL SPITALNY ALL GIRL ORCHESTRA: Melody Master—One of the always good "Melody Masters," featuring an all-girl orchestra that is plenty good. Pleased.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

P'S AND CUES: Pepper Pot—Fine one-reeler of its kind but not so many of my customers care for pool. Tie up with your local billard parlor when you play this. The men trying to be funny in this almost ruined the whole thing. Would have been better had they not been in it at all.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

REGULAR KIDS: Meglin Kiddies—This is one of the best shorts I have run. These kiddies are all tops. Beautiful colors and an all-around good short. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SPRINGTIME IN HOLLAND: Broadway Breveties—Nice colored subject. Running time, two reels.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

Serials

Mascot

MIRACLE RIDER, THE: Tom Mix—Pretty fair serial. On chapter nine now. It's about like the rest of the episodes. Wish none of the serials were over 12 chapters. My patrongs become tired out with them when they are too long. One with 10 episodes would suit me better. Too much shooting and no hitting in this serial. Also the star gets out of trouble too easy. Why must the stars be left each week in such a situation that it seems impossible to come out alive, then next week the situation is somewhat altered by incidents which were not revealed before. In other words the ending the week before is not always shown the same way in the next chapter. A good serial would have just as much drawing power (personal opinion) if the chapters would end without showing so much impossible danger involved. Why not have it somewhat like Universal's "Collegians" were? I would like to really see one serial that was diffrent, one that did not have to fool the people by making them think something would happen that never does. Then, perhaps, somebody besides the children would be interested in it.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Union Protection Sought

Cleveland theatre owners have announced they will try a uniform protection plan this year modeled after the one used during 1933-34. When that agreement expired Jan. 1, 1935, distributors each set up individual protection schedules. The 15-cent houses were most effected when the old schedule expired, being pushed back an added two weeks in most cases.

Take Over Indiana House

The pooling arrangement between the Warner circuit and Balaban and Katz on the Paramount in Hammond, Ind., has been concluded and Warner will take over immediate operation of the house, it is reported. Harry Mintz, resident manager at Hammond, will have charge of the theatre under S. L. Stein, district manager for Warner Indiana houses.

Hal Roach Personnel Changes

Hal Roach, head of the Hal Roach Studios in Hollywood, has appointed Syd VanKuren superintendent of all technical and construction departments at his plant and Hugh Huber, former auditor, has been named assistant secretary and treasurer.

TOP PICTURES GIVING CHICAGO DATE PROBLEM

Delays Up to Three Months After Release Brings Protests From Independent Groups

by BILL CROUCH
Chicago Correspondent

Never in the last several years has so much good product been available for Chicago's Loop theatres as today. Balaban & Katz has more big pictures ready for release than any time in five years. In some cases pictures are slated for showing from two to three months following release dates, a unique situation.

"Ah Wilderness," current at the Chicago, opened eight weeks behind release date and several others scheduled for downtown showings will be played as far behind release. The Roosevelt theatre with "A Tale of Two Cities," current, has the following pictures booked: "Trail of the Lonesome Pine," "Rose Marie," "Klondike Annie," and "Wife Vs. Secretary." According to present schedules this will bring the last named picture into the Loop about 90 days behind schedule.

This situation is not at all pleasing to the independent theatre men, who are anxious to get a faster release on pictures. The long runs in the Loop have held up product and with business now at a peak good pictures are much in demand.

The Chicago censor board has been swamped for a few weeks with foreign films. An average of about one a day has been the run lately, the most ever to be brought before the board. In many languages, including French, German, Swedish, Spanish, Polish and others, the films have caused a great amount of work for the censors as it is necessary to have a translation on each film.

The International House, the Julian theatre (Swedish), the Praga theatre (Polish), the Kino theatre (German) and the Sonotone theatre are the users of most of this product in the Chicago territory.

The opening of the Charlie Chaplin picture, "Modern Times," was the greatest opening since the last Chaplin picture, which holds the house record at the United Artists theatre.

Playing ten shows on Saturday and nine every other day the picture is packing the house at all performances: Under the present arrangement standouts do not have to wait much longer than 35 minutes as the show runs only 103 minutes in its entirety.

The house opens at 8:30 a. m. On Sunday morning when the picture went on at 9 o'clock the house was practically filled.

Opening on Washington's Birthday the house grossed in the neighborhood of $8,500 for that day and approximately $15,000 for the weekend —the average gross for a whole week is near the $17,000 mark.

Good weather helped all Loop theatres.

Gary Cooper and his wife, Sandra Shaw, stepped off the Chief the other morning to spend a few hours before taking the Century to New York. Cooper is en route to Bermuda for a two months vacation. His next picture probably will be "The Texas Ranger," a Paramount picture. While here he was informed that the local censor board after much palaver had given his latest release, "Desire," a clean bill-of-health.

The Palace theatre is dropping stage shows permanently. Since the house was opened ten years ago stage attractions usually have been the main attraction. "Follow the Fleet" is the first picture to go in under the new arrangement.

Other RKO houses in the Midwest are considering the same plan of running only film shows. This is a tough blow to vaudeville in this area as the RKO houses have been among the most important users of stage talent for years.

Clyde Eckhardt leaves this weekend for either Florida or Hot Springs for a month's vacation. Eckhardt just returned from Washington, D. C., where he attended to some important Government business.

Aaron Saperstein is expected back next week from a month in Florida. He advised friends here that he would have returned sooner but was suffering a bad case of sunburn.

Admission scale for the Charles Chaplin picture was raised from 65c to 75c at the United Artists theatre. Four to six weeks is the expected run of the picture.

Negotiations are now for the release of the picture following the United Artists engagement. So far B & K has made the best offer.

The Warner Club of Chicago held an elaborate Washington Birthday Party and Dance Friday night, Eli H. Arkin was in charge, assisted by Herb Wheeler, Charlie Ryan, Harry Turrell, Bill Biltgen, Jimmie Gaur, Charlie Hogan, Max Slott and Tom Gilliam.

Sam Morris, of the Chicago American, is having his Saturday preview page syndicated. It now appears in the Detroit Times, Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph and Milwaukee Wisconsin News. Other deals are now on for using the page, which is an unusual Hollywood feature.

Ricardo Cortez, portrayer of screen gangsters, was appearing at the Chicago theatre in person. Just to give him the inside information about gangland, this reporter took Cortez down to the police showup. Gunmen, bank bandits, murderers and others paraded before the audience and Cortez found the real gangster (Chicago style) was as vicious looking and acting as the screen counterparts he has played.

The International Film Bureau, with an office at 59 East Van Buren street, has been established by Wesley Greene, manager of foreign film programs at the University of Chicago for three years. The purpose will be distribution of foreign language and instructional films to schools, language groups and other organizations commonly regarded as "non-commercial," as well as to theatres interested in foreign product. An advisory board consists of Professors Otto F. Bond and William Kurath of the University of Chicago and Clifton M. Utley, director of the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations and radio news commentator.

The International Film Bureau is an outgrowth of experimental work carried on in a limited way by Mr. Greene while on the staff of International House, the $3,000,000 club for students given to the University of Chicago by John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

The new organization has become mid-west representative of Franco-American Film Corporation for the handling of "Maria Chapdelaine," and has concluded an agreement with Lenauer International Films, Inc., of New York for the Illinois and Wisconsin rights to "Crime et Chatiment."

Mae West, en route to New York, stopped over for a day to confer with Emanuel Cohen and Ben Piazza. As a result of the conference, and several telephone calls from William Le Baron, Paramount production head in Hollywood, Mae changed her plans and took the Santa Fe Chief back to Hollywood to discuss a new contract with Paramount. It is understood, however, that if the Paramount deal fails, Miss West will form a Mae West Productions company with Mr. Cohen and make her own pictures with probable release through either Columbia or Paramount.

Walter Brown of Ross Federal Service have returned to his office following a week in Nebraska and Iowa. He spent several days in Omaha at the Ross Federal office there.

John Joseph, after a week in New York, is back at the RKO theatre office making plans for the opening of "Follow the Fleet."

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 10.—(A) In calculating resistance of projection circuits, what various things must be considered? (B) When the positive carbon of a high intensity arc fails to feed forward, what is wrong? (C) Name one source of negative electrons and negatrons. (D) What is the effect of an oversized positive carbon?

Answer to Question No. 6 (New Series)

Bluebook School Question No. 6 was: (A) Explain the manner in which work is performed by electric current. (B) Where and under what circumstances are link fuses permissible in theatres? (C) What paper is indispensable to economical maintenance?

The following did from excellent to very well: S. Evans and C. Rau; G. E. Doe; B. DeVietti; A. F. Sprafke; P. and L. Felt; W. C. Brown; J. R. Prater; J. R. Hickman, Jr.; P. Howard; H. C. Goodman and N. N. Gray; W. Limmroth; C. Loft; G. Thompson; O. L. Daris and F. Simms; F. H. and L. Klar and T. H. Morton; A. L. Long and J. T. McGuire; N. R. Tomlinson; Nic Granby; L. R. Spooner and G. Johnson; R. Marks, D. J. Rosen, B. L. Mathew and C. T. Davidson; H. J. Billingsworth; G. N. Guidotti, F. L. and N. Saylor; S. Myers; O. J. Maxwell and T. R. Baston; T. L. and G. Daniels; H. D. Lilly, B. M. Saunders; W. Lane; L. H. Hunt; T. H. E. Richman; D. Howard; M. and J. Devoy; R. Mills and N. J. Perkins T. R. Fanning and W. Burns; H. T. Granger; I. B. Bancroft; K. H. Langtrie; D. Anderson and B. H. Thaller; H. K. Abernathy and R. Tomkins; B. I. Jennings; W. L. Sanderson and T. F. Little; H. B. M. Maulding; J. T. Raleigh and B. J. Thomas; B. W. Stokes; B. R. Shepherd and W. Jones; K. L. Knight and L. Henderson; W. L. Simmons; J. Jenson and V. Sanders; S. G. Sanders and G. Sargent; H. W. Howard; J. Gillespi; D. L. Slinger and B. T. Henkle; S. B. Fisher; M. O'Connor; S. E. Gay; R. L. Bersottu and G. S. Phillips; D. McGee and N. E. Olliver; N. Rivera; J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleigh; T. T. Golley; J. G. Schofner; C. Hawkens; C. L. Sexton; F. N. Maclane; T. S. Brown and L. D. Miller.

There are many excellent answers to Section A. W. C. Brown says:

"Water flows from higher to lower levels. Electricity flows from higher to lower potentials. In each case where movement takes place there is loss of energy and useful work may be done. In the case of water it is expressed by the equation: Work done equals weight of water times A minus B, where A and B are the two levels. Similarly in the case of electricity, P equals quantity times pressure (potential), or P equals IE, where P is Power in watts, I is current in amperes, and E is potential difference."

That is one way of telling it. J. R. Prater says:

"Work is performed by electricity when voltage (pressure) causes volume (amperage) to flow against electrical friction. In this case, as in water turning a wheel, pressure is consumed, not volume."

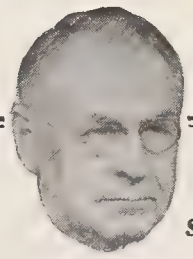
P. Howard says, "In an electric circuit there must be pressure to cause current to flow. If there be electric friction in the circuit, then work will be performed as the current flows, and in this process pressure will be consumed. To obtain additional work, either the pressure or the volume, or both, must be increased."

M. and J. Devoy say, "Exactly what occurs when work is performed, even the scientists do not as yet know certainly. However, we know that work is performed by the consumption of voltage, which is the same in effect that steam or water pressure is in a pipe. The work usefully performed, then, is equal to the amount of pressure consumed, less the electrical friction the current meets with in the feeding circuit and the waste incurred by the machine in producing the power."

(B) C. Loft says, "A link fuse is a short wire of fuse metal, to each end of which a suitable copper clip is attached. It must not be used in a theatre without consent of the authorities, and then only in a metal or other approved metal cabinet equipped with a self-closing door. Its use is permissible nowhere in any theatre except in the projection room."

Evans and Rau say, "Link fuses may be used only where the authorities allow them, and then only in an approved cabinet to prevent possibility of setting fire to inflammable materials. In many localities their use is prohibited. In other places their use is permitted or required for certain purposes inside the projection room, this for the reason that it is very difficult to 'boost' them by means of a shunt without the trick being detected by inspectors."

J. R. Hickman says, "Link fuses are permissible only for projection room circuits where such practice is okayed by the authorities. They must be mounted in approved metal cabinets. It is difficult to boost them without having the trick detected when they are inspected."



(C) P. Howard says, "A bookkeeping system is indispensable in projection rooms. The projectionist should list those various repair parts and other articles used from time to time. Over an extended period this will disclose the exact operating cost, a desirable thing to know. It very naturally tends to lead to more economical operation and places the projectionist in position to state facts and figures, rather than more or less hazy ideas."

W. C. Brown says, "The paper help that is vitally necessary for economical maintenance consists of keeping a written record or bookkeeping system of parts and equipment with their cost and life record. By doing this, different makes of parts, operated under identical conditions, may be compared as to their life, quality and cost. This provides a means of selecting parts and equipment in a more economical way and thus reduce the operating expense. Every alert and reliable projectionist will do this both in fairness to the management and his own conscience."

A. F. Sprafke says, "This question seems indefinite. Even though the question refers to a certain section of the new Bluebook, still I believe that in fairness to all the school contributors, questions should be so asked that the meaning is clear without reference to any book. As Section C reads, it might refer to a trade journal, some form of report blank or many other things."

I appreciate Brother Sprafke's viewpoint. However, it must be remembered that, as I have before said, the questions are based upon the Bluebook. Each week in the "school" is a new question referring to instructions given in different sections of the book. Here is what H. C. Goodman of Clemson, S. C., thinks of it, the note accompanying their answer to a question:

"Your Bluebook School is wonderful. Mr. Gray [N. N. Gray, his associate] and myself are more than glad to be with you and yours. The new Bluebook was a Christmas present."

"Dancing Feet" and Show Lead in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 18.—One cheerful spot in a dull week that still felt the sting of winter and tied-up traffic, was the Earle. With the stage combination of Bebe Daniels, Ben Lyon, Toby Wing and Sammy Cohen, to lure in the customers, the house grossed $24,000 and would have hit higher were it not for the continued bad weather break. The film was "Dancing Feet."

Starting its grind showing on Wednesday, Chaplin's "Modern Times" got off to a good holiday start, playing to 1,941 more admissions than "City Lights," which played at the same house (Erlanger) five years ago, on its first day. Business took a nosedive yesterday in face of snow and sleet storms, but the week should gross well.

"The Ghost Goes West" topped the house average a trifle with $9,000 at the Aldine and was held a second week. "Every Saturday Night" took a fall at the Fox and was yanked after five days. The $11,500 taken by "The Milky Way" at the Stanley was only so so.

Total first run business was $78,800. Average is $77,900.

Estimated takings for the week ending Feb. 13:

"GHOST GOES WEST" (U. A.)
ALDINE—(1,200), 40c-55c-65c, 7 days. Gross: $9,000. (Average, $8,160)

"ROSE OF THE RANCHO" (Para.)
ARCADIA—(600), 25c-40c-50c, 7 days, 2nd run. Gross: $2,200. (Average, $2,800)

"DANCING FEET" (Republic)
EARLE—(2,000), 25c-40c-50c, 7 days. Stage: Bebe Daniels, Ben Lyon, Toby Wing, Sammy Cohen. Gross: $24,000. (Average, $14,000)

"EVERY SATURDAY NIGHT" (20th-Fox)
FOX—(3,000), 40c-55c-65c, 5 days. Stage: Gomez and Winona; Popeye, the Sailor; Cass, Mack, Owen and Topsy; Ed Ford and Whitey. (Average, 7 days, $14,000) Gross: $8,000.

"STRIKE ME PINK" (U. A.)
KARLTON—(1,000), 25c-35c-40c, 7 days. Gross: $2,700. (Average, $4,000)

"CEILING ZERO" (W. B.)
KEITH'S—(2,000), 30c-40c-50c, 7 days, 2nd run. Gross: $2,900. (Average, $4,000)

"THE MILKY WAY" (Para.)
STANLEY—(3,700), 40c-55c, 7 days. Gross: $11,500. (Average, $14,000)

"YOU MAY BE NEXT" (Col.)
STANTON—(1,700), 30c-40c-50c, 7 days. Gross: $5,500. (Average, $7,000)
